

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3732.
NEW SERIES, No. 836.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 3, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.]

The Hibbert Journal.

JANUARY NUMBER NOW READY.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

Eugenics and Politics. F. C. S. SCHILLER.
Self-Sacrifice. PROF. J. B. BAILLIE.
The Advantages and Disadvantages of Authority in Religion. MISS M. D. PETRE.

The Scottish Church Question. SHERIFF R. L. OER, K.C.

The Value of Confessions of Faith. WILLIAM A. CURTIS, B.D., D.Litt.

Ought there to be a Broad Church Disruption? Rev. HUBERT HANDLEY, M.A.

The Failure of the Church of England. Rev. A. W. E. BLUNT.

Changing Religion. J. ARTHUR HILL.

Bergson's Philosophy and the Idea of God. HENRY C. CORRANCE.

Syndicalism in France and its Relation to the Philosophy of Bergson. Rev. T. RHONDDA WILLIAMS.

The Johannine Apocalypse. Rev. J. F. SYMES, M.A.

Certainty in Mathematics and in Theology. CHARLES W. COBB.

The Universities and the Training of the Social Worker. MISS ELIZABETH MACADAM.

Survey of current Social Work and Literature, Discussion, Signed Reviews, &c.

Super Royal 8vo. 2s. 6d. net; post free, 2s. 9d.

Subscription, which may commence with any Number, 10s. per annum, post free.

LONDON:

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW VOLUME!

Now is the time to start subscribing to

"YOUNG DAYS."

Our Young People's Own Magazine.

Edited by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT, F.R.S.L.

CONTENTS OF THE JANUARY NUMBER:—

A Tale of a Tail told by Two. (Illustrated.)

Tony Bear's Christmas Tree.

To Greet the New Year. (Full-page Picture.)

The Lost Heir of Mound Hall. Chap. I.

Pluck. (Poetry.)

Temperance Ideas.

The Value of Song. (Poetry.)

Mother Nature's Children. (Illustrated.)

The Boy at the Top of the Hill.

Young Days' Guild Work.

Where, O where are our Little Coats?

(Poetry and Pictures.)

The Coward.

The Camel's Complaint. (Poetry.)

Puzzles and Puzzlers.

Editor's Chat, &c.

PRICE ONE PENNY MONTHLY.

Annual Subscription, by Post, One Copy, 1s. 6d.

Published by

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

GOLDEN GRAINS

THOUGHTS OF MANY MINDS.

Compiled by LADY AGATHA RUSSELL,
with a Preface by FREDERIC HARRISON, Litt.D.

Royal 16mo. Cloth, 2s. net.

Published by JAMES NISBET & Co., Ltd., 22, Berners
Street, London, W.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.

January

4. Rev. J. CYRIL FLOWER, of Sale.
11. Rev. Professor PHILEMON MOORE, of Carmarthen College.
18. Rev. Thomas Paxton, of Bradford.
25. Rev. ROBERT F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D., Assistant Minister of Ullet Road Church, Liverpool.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO. PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, BISHOP'S STORTFORD.

Head Mistress: Miss ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: Miss ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

Next Term begins on January 21, 1914.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M. Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—
Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road
Maida-vale, W

INTERNATIONAL GUILD (London

Branch), Hostel for Women Students,
3, Brunswick-square, W.C. (near British Museum and University College).—Full Board from £19 to £26 for a term of 13 weeks.—For particulars apply to Miss E. S. WILLIAMS, 3, Brunswick-square, or Miss C. WICKSTEED, International Guild, 6, rue de la Sorbonne, Paris.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only.

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church)
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for January 4:

Morning: Our Future and our Vanguard.

Evening: What of the Night? The Morning Cometh!

NOW READY.

Roan, gilt edges, 1s. 3d. net, by post, 1s. 4d.

UNITARIAN POCKET BOOK AND DIARY FOR 1914.

With List of Ministers and Congregations.

Paper covers, 3d. net, by post, 3½d.

DIRECTORY OF MINISTERS AND CONGREGATIONS, 1914.

Paper covers, 1s. net, by post, 1s. 2d.

ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK, 1914.

Cr. 8vo. 200 pp., gilt top, 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 9d.

JOHANNINE THOUGHTS:

Meditations in Prose and Verse suggested by Passages in the Fourth Gospel.

By Dr. JAMES DRUMMOND.

BOOK ROOM, Essex Hall, Essex St., Strand, W.C.

CHURCH, SCHOOL & HOME

Editor—Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

Monthly, 3d. by post from Mr. Lewis Lloyd, 67, Church-road, Moseley, Birmingham. Can also be obtained from H. Rawson & Co.,
Manchester, the Liverpool Booksellers Co.,
Liverpool; or from Essex Hall.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, January 4.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. Dr. MORITZ WESTON.
 Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. C. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON; 12, New Year Communion; 7, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A. 6.30, New Year's Sermon to the Young, "The Call of Christ."
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11 Mr. F. COTTIER; 7, Mr. A. J. HEALE.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Roslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11, Rev. F. HANKINSON; 7, Young People's Service, Mr. CARL LOOP.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Mr. JOHN KINSMAN.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.A.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Mr. E. CAPELTON.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. A. J. HEALE; 6.30, Mr. SORESENSEN.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. J. CYRIL FLOWER.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DARLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worpole Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. McDOWELL.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. AUSTIN.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOXTON, Halliwall-road Free Church, 10.45 and 6.30.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Church-gate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN ROW, 10.45 and
 STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, B.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EVESHAM, Oat-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. E. WILLIAMS.
 GEE CROSS, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45, Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.; 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 PRESTON, Unitarian Chapel, Church-street, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. M. ROWE.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.; 6.30, Rev. J. W. COCK.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREAE.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Dudley Institute, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIR, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

DEATHS.

ASPLAND.—On Christmas Day, at Pasadena, California, Sydney, the beloved husband of Kate Aspland, elder son of the late A. S. Aspland (Middle Temple) and brother of Mrs. Günther, 50, Park Hill-road, N.W., aged 63.

BAKER.—On December 28, at South Bank, Ilminster, Anna Matilda, third daughter of the late John Baker, solicitor, aged 73.

CADMAN.—On December 24, at South View, Gatley, Cheshire, Eliza Jane, the beloved wife of the Rev. W. G. Cadman.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds of MSS. carefully and promptly copied.—Miss KENNEDY, 20, County Grove, Camberwell, S.E.

LADY seeks re-engagement as Companion, or Companion Help. Elderly lady preferred. Good needlewoman.—C. M. S., 163, Kyverdale-road, Stamford Hill, N.

TRAINED NURSE, masseuse cert., experienced, requires visiting cases. Highly recommended.—Miss RUSH, 55, George-street, Portman-square, W.

YOUNG DUTCH LADY, student, certificated tutoress, French, German, Mathematics, Geography, Physics, &c., possessing certificate for English and plain needlework, wishes to go to England or America as a governess or a housekeeper's assistant.—Apply, Miss A. S. BERGSMAN, Mantgum, Netherlands.

PULPIT SUPPLY.

Rev. A. LANCASTER, 64, Stockbridge-road, Padiham.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

1914	3
NOTES OF THE WEEK	3
FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE	4
MAN AND ENVIRONMENT	5
THE SUPREME ADVENTURE	6
ROUND ABOUT A POUND A WEEK	7
DIRECTORS OF THE SOUL	8
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Wild Animal Entertainments	9
Bergson and Religion	9

Chapels where Mark Rutherford Preached	9
Political Resolutions at Church Meetings	10
The Victims of the Dublin Strike	10
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—
An Ethical Prayer Book	10
A Plea for Tradition	10
The Meaning of Mediæval Art	11
The Old-Fashioned Woman	11
The Primitive Church and Reunion	11
Publications Received	12

FOR THE CHILDREN :—
A New Year's Letter	12
MEMORIAL NOTICES :—
Mr. W. E. A. Axon	13
Mrs. W. G. Cadman	13
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Christianity and the Religions of the World	13
Pauperism in London	14
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	14
NOTES AND JOTTINGS	15
OUR CHESS COLUMN	16

* * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.

1914.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR to all our readers, with much fruitfulness in whatever labour of thought or practical human service they may be engaged. We have no new policy to announce; our desire is simply to go on doing the work to which we have set our hands, only to do it better. We have provided a common platform for men and women, who approach the deep problems of life from different points of view. We shall continue to do so, for in this atmosphere of freedom and mutual respect we make a real advance in the knowledge of the truth. We have used plainness of speech about our own religious convictions, in face of disintegrating criticism and a sceptical temper which refuses to make up its mind. We shall continue to do so, for freedom as we understand it is simply an opportunity of enriching life on its positive side and building it up in loyalty to goodness and the love of GOD. We have acted as a channel of communication and a record of news for a group of religious communities, which are bound together by close ties of spiritual friendship, by memories of a past-ennobled by sacrifice, and by common hopes and aims for the future. And we shall continue to do so, for these communities have deserved well of the commonwealth; they have made a distinctive contribution to the religious life of our country, which has given a sense of largeness to their effort, even when their numbers have been small; and it is with them that our own life is most closely bound up. Whatever merits we may possess are their creation. Our faults of temper or policy are entirely our own. We set before our readers this aim for the coming year, that they may feel deep, think clear, and bear fruit well. Our desire for ourselves is that we may be partners with them in this high enterprise.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

LAST Sunday evening the Archbishop of Canterbury preached a notable sermon in Canterbury Cathedral, no doubt with the full consciousness that he was speaking at the same time to the higher mind and conscience of the nation. He warned his hearers against mere anger and contempt in the midst of changing social conditions and controversies which create sharp lines of division among men. Everyone, he said, needed to guard against the danger zone of mere anger or contempt for those upon the opposite side. The warning applied equally to the eager enthusiast, and to those who were content to walk quietly in more old-fashioned ways. Scorn for one another's opinions must be replaced by the desire to understand. Contemptuousness, as Christ himself taught, was an attitude of utmost peril to the soul.

THE most remarkable passage in the sermon dealt with the increasing power of organised labour "Can any clear-headed observer doubt," the Archbishop asked, "that the real power and governance of the country in years that are not far off will rest, indirectly at least, with the organised industrial forces of English manhood—or possibly manhood and womanhood together? It is a force capable, I unhesitatingly believe, of carrying into practical effect the very noblest ideals. It is in no sense an irreligious force. But the giant is young, and his powers are undeveloped, and the use of his great prowess is unfamiliar to him as yet. He has to feel his way. And what has the Church of the living God to say to all that? Missing the greatness of what among Western-born races is really a world-movement, critics have fixed their eyes upon some local political programme, some little stir of the strong muscles, and have denounced or belauded that as if it were the essential policy, the abiding thing. Take a larger view. . . . Is the Church of Christ—I use the words in the very largest sense—is the Church of Christ equal to her opportunity? At least she can look with reverence and hope upon the great group of facts and associations wherein ideals are being fashioned and resolves and prayers are finding voice on behalf of what men mean to be the bettering of the world."

* * *

MR. ROBERT BRIDGES has almost converted us on the subject of the Poet Laureate by the quaint and pleasant use he has made of his office. On Christmas Eve he sent a poem to the King, and of course the royal command for its publication was issued immediately, so that in a true sense he has sent it to us all. And the delightful thing about it is that it has not a trace of the old courtly poetry, with its high-flown compliment and stilted phrase. It is a simple and sincere English song about Christmas, written in the alliterative metre of "The Vision of Piers Plowman," which will gladden many hearts. May Mr. Bridges enrich our Christmas joy for many years to come with this

Heav'nly music

Angels' song comforting/as the comfort of Christ

When he spake tenderly / to his sorrowful flock.

The only suggestion we have to make is that future Christmas poems should be made available for the whole press at the same time. The vast majority of newspaper readers, who never see the Times, have surely some claim to consideration in these matters. After all the Poet Laureate is a national institution.

* * *

THE Kikuyu controversy pursues its eager way in the columns of The Times, and many of the leaders of the Church of England seem to be going the surest way to precipitate a crisis. Last Monday the Bishop of Oxford wrote, "I doubt if the cohesion of the Church of England was ever more seriously threatened than it is now." Referring to the support which the Evangelical portion of the Church is giving to the "open Communion" at Kikuyu he says, "I feel quite sure that to the great mass of High Churchmen such an open Communion seems to involve principles so totally subversive of Catholic order and doctrine as to be strictly intolerable, in the sense that they could not continue in a fellowship which required of them to tolerate the recurrence of such incidents." These are not the words of a peace-maker, except upon terms which he knows beforehand that men of evangelical or liberal views will refuse to accept, for they involve a complete surrender to the strictly sacerdotal position.

* * *

THE Bishop of Oxford's letter is followed in the same issue of The Times by one from Canon Sanday. It may be described as a plea for peace by blurring the lines of the controversy. He points out that the Church of England is not a perfectly logical structure. In the process of growth it has come to include divergent tendencies. His contention is that "the Church of England—nay Christendom—needs us all, and that we cannot afford to spend our time in squabbling." But we fear that the question at issue is far too serious to be dismissed in this gentle deprecating manner. The High Church doctrine about the priesthood is in its very nature exclusive, and like all exclusive doctrine it breeds fierceness of temper and intolerance. Hitherto the atmosphere of compromise in the National Church has been possible because no large body of the clergy has been deeply concerned about sacerdotal grace, in the strict sense of the term. They have cared for their official position and their authority as the only properly accredited teachers of religion, and if these things were granted them they have been willing to recognise considerable divergence of policy and opinion within their own ranks, and even to tolerate the uncovenanted mercies of dissent. But as soon as the sacerdotal claim is pressed home and men believe in the priest at the altar as the sole dispenser of the chief grace of religion, the limits of compromise have been reached and we have come to the parting of the ways.

* * *

THE Home Secretary has refused to interfere with the sentence passed recently on Mr. T. W. Stewart for blasphemy. We should like to have some explanation of his reasons. The petition to which we referred last week was one of great weight. It was not the expression of popular clamour or of sentimental pity for a man who has received a severe sentence, but of the clear convictions of a large body of men who represent much that is finest in the intellectual and religious life of the country. No one will suspect them of sympathy with obscene or disgusting language. It is a case in which a natural feeling of distaste for the whole subject has not been allowed to interfere with the high demands of freedom and equity. It is clear that the matter cannot be allowed to rest where it is. The next step must be taken in the House of Commons.

* * *

IN a letter to the Manchester Guardian last week on the subject of the Blasphemy Laws, Professor Geldart points out that prosecutions were fairly frequent from the seventeenth century to the date of the Reform Bill. Between 1832 and 1883—the date of the famous Bradlaugh prosecution—there was only a single case. Then for a quarter of a century the law seemed to be obsolete until it was revived in the case of Boulter in 1908. Since that time there have been four convictions. Professor Geldart's comment on these facts is as follows:—

"This recrudescence of prosecutions for blasphemy is an extremely disquieting symptom. It suggests that there is a diminution in the public, or at any rate in the official, mind of the value set upon freedom of speech, and that the police believe that their efforts to secure convictions for blasphemy will be viewed with favour."

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE.

OF all the good gifts which the year brings to us none is worthier of our gratitude than a good book, and in the small company of the good books of 1913 we can think of none so deserving of pre-eminence as the "Life of Florence Nightingale." It is not only a fine piece of literature, fit to be placed beside Sir EDWARD COOK's other great biography, the "Life of John Ruskin." It is also the revelation of a noble character, set in surroundings of extraordinary fascination, so that private interest is closely commingled with the larger issues of national life. Few people will be able to read it without real enlargement of mind, or fail to understand what one of her intimate friends meant when he called FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE "a pillar in CHRIST's Kingdom of Love and of this state of England."

In the preface to the second edition of his "Life of Lord Macaulay" Sir GEORGE TREVELYAN refused to make any terms with the critics who complained that he would have done more honour to MACAULAY's memory if he had passed over everything which savoured of intellectual narrowness, or political and religious intolerance. Criticism of this kind, he says, implies a serious misconception of the biographer's duty. "I had no choice but to ask myself, with regard to each feature of the portrait, not whether it was attractive, but whether it was characteristic." Sir EDWARD COOK has accepted all the hazards of the same honourable method. Instead of weaving his narrative round the fancy sketch of the popular heroine which lay ready to his hand, he has cut himself free from the entanglements of sentimentality. "The Lady of the Lamp" hardly appears in these pages. In her place we have the full-length portrait of a woman of genius, conscious of her own vocation, masterful in temper, impatient of delay, sometimes unreasonable in her demands, often driving the willing horse too hard, lavishing all her tenderness not upon one or two special objects of affection but upon a suffering world, and through all her public labours deeply conscious of her private faults and of her own need of a closer walk with God. If in the end we are humbled into unwonted admiration, it is not because FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE corresponds with what has been called the dossier of the saint or would satisfy the conventional tests for canonisation. We have gained fresh insight into the richness and power of human character, and been ennobled ourselves by the company which we have kept.

The Life of Florence Nightingale. By Sir Edward Cook. London: Macmillan & Co. 2 vols. 30s. net.

Other pens have called attention to the chapters which describe the great episode of the Crimean war. Seldom has a single human will triumphed so heroically over the disasters of ignorance and mismanagement. The account, given with much fulness of detail, of her subsequent labours for the health of the army, when her sick-room became as busy with the tasks of administration as any Government department, belongs equally to the active side of her career. But here we desire for a moment to linger over the life of feeling and meditation which lay behind. Few biographies of recent years have been so rich in religious interest, and this interest is all the stronger in its appeal because it is in no sense professional or merely ecclesiastical. If ever there was a mind fully occupied with the practical side of life, with a keen instinct for detail, and an impatience of mere dreaming when there is so much to do, it was that of FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE. And yet there was room for the everlasting problems of God and the soul, for self-distrust and interior prayer for guidance, for the search not only for to-day's duty but for the white light of eternal truth.

Doubtless many people will be attracted by the problem of FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE's religious ancestry and early environment. Most of us, indeed, have some of this appetite for origins. On one side she was deeply influenced by the Unitarian movement. It provided her with an atmosphere of mental freedom. It encouraged her intellectual curiosity. It helped to implant the reverence for Reason which never deserted her in her later speculations. It made her broad-minded and tolerant, able to regard religious differences as negligible when good work had to be done. On the other hand, she apparently drew much help for her own devotional life from more Catholic sources, and the inter-weaving of the details of daily duty with the life of meditation, the close association between statistics and the "thought of God," quite consciously to herself, owed not a little of its naturalness to her reading of the mediæval mystics. The result was a form of faith which was at the same time too wide in sympathy and too strictly personal to be patient of labels. "I am so glad," she wrote once, when party watchwords were being bandied about and threatened to interfere with the harmony of her work, "that my God is not the God of the High Church or of the Low, that He is not a Romanist or an Anglican—or a Unitarian." But any attempt at analysis or description hardly gives us more than a passing glimpse into the secret of the soul. What matters to us is this, that she revealed with unequalled power to our generation that philanthropy has its roots deep in the soil of religion; and by religion in this connection we do not mean some vague sentiment of goodness or benevolence, but the worship and the fear of God, the humbling of the soul in his presence in contrition, the desire to see him and live. She belonged to the elect fellowship of St. CATHERINE of Siena and St. TERESA, whose gift for religion has almost blotted out from the mind of posterity their genius for practical affairs.

Or let us put the same thought in another way. FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE was by nature too active, in the best sense she was too practical, to be guilty of the sin of spiritual inertia. She would probably have regarded the refusal of the tasks of the soul from weakness or indolence as no less blameworthy and disastrous than the refusal of the tasks of the will for similar reasons. No department of life's work must be scamped, no faculty left undeveloped. This is in sharp opposition to the easy complacency with which men often renounce the hard work of thinking in religion, and dispense with the discipline of meditation in order, as they say, that they may be practical and serve the need of the hour. The need of the hour is the vision of GOD quite as much as bread to eat or raiment to put on. Goodness quickly loses its good savour when there is no wrestling of spirit. It is not enough to do our duty and try to make others happy in some commonplace, earthly way. We have also to dwell daily in close companionship with the thought of God, with its haunting fascination, its unplumbed mysteries, its love and terror and sustaining grace; and no man, who has any deep knowledge of the human heart, can accept for himself or commend to others a scheme of life, which has no place for these things or in any way belittles their importance. This truth, which has often been despised and rejected in the interests of practical religion, is writ large in the life of FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE. If as she speaks to us in the pages of her biography she succeeds in restoring it with freshness and power to our hearts, it may be reckoned as noble an achievement for the good of her fellow men as anything she accomplished in the field of public philanthropy.

MAN AND ENVIRONMENT.

BY EDWARD LEWIS.

I MUST be forgiven for harping upon the same string. There are arrears of time to make up in this matter; and the average man does not appreciate a thing until he has heard it twenty times. Under the influence of Herbert Spencer, it used to be widely held that man was a product of his environment, that even great men were deposited, so to speak, from the existing conditions taken as a whole, much as a crystal will be deposited from a certain chemical solution given the right temperature and pressure.

Modern thought, under the breakdown of the mechanistic theory of the Universe, and under the remarkable advance of psychological science, has moved away from this position. The biological facts known as mutations have robbed us of the erstwhile useful dictum that "nature never makes a leap," and emphasise the presence of the Incalculable as an effective agent in the evolutionary process.

The fact which is in the focus of modern thought is that which Nietzsche expressed in his easy, aphoristic way: "Man is the animal not yet adapted to its environment." This non-adaptedness is true to some extent of other animals, too; but whereas in their case the persistence of the species depends upon the degree of adaptability they can acquire, in the case of man progress is effected by a refusal of adaptability even where it might be acquired. For while the physical environment amid which animals move is comparatively fixed and unalterable, the mental, social, moral, religious environment, which is the environment of man qua man, is alterable; it can be altered by individuals; and this alteration is practically synonymous with race-progress.

Each of us is born of the spirit. In each of us there is a fresh, new, original, incalculable element. To begin with it is but as a seed, a latency, and we appear to be altogether adapted to the thought-forms and the faith-forms of our time, we accept the traditional moral standards, and fit fairly comfortably in with the established social order. This is a kind of larval state. At this point, we are not yet men and women. We are possible men and women. As this inward latency of original selfhood develops, we become aware of being by no means adapted to our environment; for as our own personality, which is an original Word of God, ascends more and more into consciousness, it effects itself in thoughts which cannot find place in the received thought-system, in sentiments which are not compatible with the received moral standards, in experience which refuses to be formulated in the received creed. We awake inwardly to find ourselves at war with our world.

In many people this consciousness never becomes acute; the vision soon fades into the light of common day. Some people nip it in the bud, because it seems to promise discomfort and pain. Others, with profoundly mistaken altruism, strive to suppress it since it seems to promise danger and disturbance to others. For, if there is any divine significance in personality, is not this the reductio ad absurdum of sacrifice? How can you help the world by making yourself a nobody, by destroying just the very thing which makes you You?

It is likely enough that among those who will read this which is now being written, there may be some in whom this consciousness of non-adaptation is acute. You are not yet actual rebels, but the potentiality of rebellion increases in you almost daily. You are aware of a law in your own mind warring against what may be called the world-mind; a law of your own spirit warring against the world-spirit. The alternative lies before you of suppression, or expression; of self-renouncement, or self-announcement. I would like to tip the balance so as to secure your interest and your life for progress, for the future, for the children's land, for the new creation.

Man is the animal which is not adapted to its environment. You can only preserve your manhood by preserving your non-adaptation. Readers of this journal will probably admit the truth of this in reference to theology, which is perhaps the least important of the matters to which it is applicable. Every true man, says Emerson, is a non-conformist. To adapt yourself to your environment is to fall from your possible height of manhood. It is to become something less than a man—a slave, a mimic, an item, a part of a machine, an individual creature instead of a personality. To surrender your originality, the thing which sets you alone against the world, is to surrender your spiritual birthright for the pottage of ease, safety, happiness, or what the world calls doing good. What the world calls "good" is always that which does not prejudice the order; the "good" are those who are useful to the order; if you disturb or challenge the order, you may be a saint of God, but the world will call you Beelzebub. It is not any exaggeration to say that the race-life has been saved from age to age by those whom the world has called wicked, and has rejected and cast out as such. Vox populi is not vox Dei. The world's applause is scarcely ever the divine benediction.

To fit yourself into your environment is to find your place in the mosaic of that floor over which the pioneers, revaluers, the princes of men and the angels of unborn children, pass. Suppose for a moment that all men should by common consent decide to surrender their original thought, vision, spirit; the race would come to stagnation; we should have bartered all the hopes that make us men; there would be multiplication without progression; human society would be an ant's nest on a large scale; we should all be good, we should all be useful, we should all be as "happy as bees," but there would be no future; we should be able to produce duplicates of ourselves like a hive which gives off swarms to form other hives, but we should not create forward; we should have reproductive power, without creative power. It would be collectivism in excelsis. It would be the apotheosis of altruism which is a euphemism for spiritual death. Of course this will never happen, for, luckily, the world is not our affair only; and the "God that raised up Jesus" would be perpetually raising up others, challengers, re-enunciators, creators, masterful and mighty individuals because filled with the Spirit, and the community would hang them on a tree or something to the same effect, but God with His right hand would bear up and on their Spirit, and the future would recognise them as Princes and Saviours.

Some there are who try and adapt themselves to their environment as much as possible; they are glad to be popular, comfortable, and to have the commendation of the world; they are content to find their place in the present, to gain reputation and other things which are in the world's gift; they are amiable, pleasant, cultured, refined, philanthropic, successful; they are not deceived when they say that the stability of the community depends upon them and their like; surely they have their use and important function; but the Highway of the Spirit does not lie through them; the creative life which is now fashioning the future in the deep secrets of the present does not move through them. It doesn't; they may be glad that it doesn't, and there is reason in that, and nothing to be ashamed of, but it doesn't. But you others, "keep holy your highest hope." Keep the flame of rebellion in the heart. Nurture your spiritual, non-adaptive personality. Keep some area in you untamed.

You may not be "he that should come"; but these Great Individuals when they appear come less as individuals than as the focus-point of an organism, the Head and Front, and Eyes and Mouth, of a slowly pre-formed body, constituted of many minor personalities in whom for long time there have been buried feelings, concealed desires, submerged longings, thwarted energies, restrained powers, faint and fitful stirrings, all of which grow suddenly together at His appearing, stand up in Him, and in His eyes become the Vision that saves the world from perishing, in His mouth become the creative word, on His forehead the manifest promise of the age to come. Be ye not conformed to this world, but renew yourselves inwardly day by day in that Spirit which does not naturally adapt itself to the present order because it is a foregleam of that which is to be.

THE SUPREME ADVENTURE.

THE lecture was over. The darkened theatre was re-illuminated. From the stage a slight, dark man, in immaculate frock coat, bowed his acknowledgments of the ringing cheers of the audience—then retired from view with the hastiness of one who has not ceased to be embarrassed by public acclamation.

Indeed, to stand before the foot-lights was not his métier. To do so required, one felt, as big an effort as any of the apparently superhuman tasks he had successfully accomplished. Yet how could one do otherwise than cheer and cheer again, thrilled and moved as one was to the very depths by the story which had just been told? For the thin, clean-shaven man was Commander Evans, of the Antarctic Expedition, and the story, as it fell from his lips, with absolute simplicity, directness and modesty, had done what no printed page could ever do. It had made us realise, with flash-light vividness, what the much-talked-of British pluck and perseverance and "grit" really is—not merely something for newspapers and orators to gush about, but something in the very heart of the nation so natural, so spontaneous, so ineradicable, and withal so full of divine gaiety, that, coming face to face with it thus, one could but thank God and take courage, a lump in one's throat and a smile on one's face.

"Will it be very harrowing?" people had asked anxiously before the lecture.

If they meant, Would the chimæra Death that so affrights our timorous souls cast its dark shadow over the whole narrative? they need have had no fears. It was the spectacle of these strong, simple men going forth upon their perilous adventure in the spirit of schoolboys out for a holiday, with the same zest and light-heartedness and glee, that somehow brought tears to one's eyes.

We saw them in the moving pictures, making their way over the desolate ice-fields, helping to pull the heavily-laden sledges; we saw them worn by hunger and exhaustion at the end of one of their expeditions when they had not had their clothes off for three months, their beards and hair grown long and unkempt, their faces those of old men. We saw a little party in their tent at night, after a long day's tramp, changing footgear (the sole toilet!), preparing supper, lighting pipes, and—one could almost hear them—cracking jokes and making merry, surrendering themselves to a supreme content after the labours of the day, before at last rolling themselves into their fur sleeping bags, to dream of England and their "best girls."

Sometimes one of them would read aloud after turning in. The only book honoured by being included in their transport on one of these occasions was the "Pickwick Papers." Provisions had run short; they were all ravenously hungry, and when the reader came to the part about the leg-of-mutton soirée, he stopped to find the others half out of their bags, gazing at him with wide-open mouths!

There was never any murmuring, any disobedience. "Everyone played the game," as Commander Evans characteristically put it. When Capt. Scott wanted one more man for his final dash, he singled out Lieut. Bowers. "He was a splendid little fellow; we couldn't grudge it to him," said the speaker, with a wistful note in his voice. And it flashed upon one that there was not a man among them who, if he could have foreseen the future, would not have chosen joyfully the honour of dying with his leader at the goal.

As we went out from the theatre our hearts were very full. Pride and admiration were the two predominant sensations. But some of us were conscious too of a little pang of envy—of a vague discontent. The story of these gallant explorers, and the unimaginable hardships they won through, had brought us very close to primitive and elemental things. These men had wrestled with the mighty forces of nature and had prevailed. They had achieved a very definite end; they had made a real and substantial addition to the world's knowledge. And there rose up in our minds the inevitable contrast between the man of action and the man of thought. For a moment, the advantage seemed to be all with the former.

Here were we, weighed down by the burden of an advanced civilisation, vexed by problems at every turn—social problems, political problems, religious problems—knowing not how to guide our steps aright, half crazed with wandering in a maze of thought, with fighting nameless phantoms in an invisible, never-ending war, sickened by the bitter party spirit, the narrow conventionalities, the petty prejudices rife around us.

And there were these splendid men of action living in a world where all our mysterious, complicated life was infinitely simplified, all its doubts resolved into the crucible of deeds: a world where the lines were all clearly defined, and there were no half lights to mislead and perplex. How gladly would we change places with them for a while! The severest physical privations would surely be preferable to the gnawing soul-hunger which possesses us.

But such considerations were momentary only. Very soon there came another and a nobler thought. How faithless we had been! Were not we too explorers? Had not we too our "adventure brave and high"? Had not we too left behind us all that was dear and sheltered and familiar to sail alone on far-off seas? Nay, had not we too touched upon unknown shores in our eager quest for truth, and had not our quest also been shot through and through with the glamour of romance, of a divine recklessness and gaiety?

Mr. Chesterton, at the beginning of "Orthodoxy," has told us in a parable of a man who sets forth on a voyage of discovery from Brighton Pier in a little open boat. He sails and sails till he is out on the open sea, beyond sight of land for many days. Then at last, in great excitement, he sights land once more. Is it desert or inhabited country that he has discovered? Then figures and voices disclose themselves. Will the natives be friendly or hostile? He prepares, by means of gesticulations, to show them that he means no harm—when, lo! as he approaches nearer, he sees that it is Brighton Pier once more, and all his friends assembled to greet him! The point is, of course, that he has discovered it for himself. It is perfectly true that we must re-discover all essential truths, and make them our own by experience, but does our independent thinking always bring us back to the things we learnt at our mother's knee? The fact that the answer is in the negative is just what makes Christianity "the supreme adventure," as a modern preacher has called it. The realm of truth is very wide, and we do not need to be pragmatists to believe that, though we may journey very far from our early teaching, and pitch our tent in a country which may seem to have but little in common with that in which we were nurtured, and which still holds our dear ones, yet between the two countries there is a connecting link—secret, hidden, mysterious—but vital.

Never has there been an age in which more glorious discoveries awaited us in the world of thought. Eagerly our leaders are pressing forward, conscious of vast tracts of unexplored country waiting our coming. They lie there beyond us and above us, beautiful and serene, as they have lain since the world began—as those blue ice caverns of the Polar regions have shone with their weird beauty æons before they were trodden by the foot of man. But no longer do we cry with the pessimism of King Solomon, "There is nothing new under the sun." The prophet of "Creative Evolution" cries to us that there are new men. And we brace ourselves afresh for our high adventure, awed by the sense of immense privilege and immense responsibility. We too will "play the game," not grudging our martyrs in the sacred cause of Truth. We too, God helping us, will show a bold and undaunted front to all the perils of the way. And what shall the end of these things be? The question must often rise to our lips as comrade after comrade gives up his life, and still the goal is unattained. The Polar heroes found that for which they sought. Shall we ever find the Truth for which we agonise?

Perhaps Olive Schreiner's "Parable of the Hunter" is a truer answer than Mr. Chesterton's. We have seen, like the Hunter, the reflection of Truth like "a vast white bird, with silver wings outstretched, sailing in the everlasting blue," and "we desire nothing more on earth than to hold her." Like him, we have left the Valleys of Superstition, we have wandered through the dreary Land of Negation and Denial; we are cutting steps in the Mountains of Stern Reality beyond which Truth lies. And if, like him, we die before we reach her—if only a white feather from her breast flutters into our dying hands, may we have the utter selflessness of his faith, to cry, as he did, "For long years I have laboured, but I have not found her. I have not rested, I have not repined, and I have not seen her; now my strength is gone. Where I lie down worn out other men will stand, young and fresh. By the steps that I have cut they will climb; by the stairs that I have built they will mount. They will never know the name of the man who made them. At the clumsy work they will laugh; when the stones roll they will curse me. But they will mount, and on my work; they will climb, and by my stair! They will find her, and through me! And no man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself."

ROUND ABOUT A POUND A WEEK.

IF by a supreme effort of imagination we could dismiss entirely from our thoughts all income-tax payers, and a social stratum or two below them, and consider as an exercise in meditation the case of the toiling millions who are left, we should have taken the first step towards the mental discipline for which Mrs. Reeves' suggestive volume supplies abundant material (see reference at foot). The class of people whose conditions she and her collaborators have investigated belong, relatively speaking, to the more or less stable middle-class of labour, having a fairly regular income of 18s. to 26s. a week, and are, comparatively speaking, a thrifty, industrious, respectable folk in the seething welter of South London life. For about four years a committee of the Fabian Women's Group were engaged in an inquiry the purpose of which was to study the effect on mother and child of sufficient nourishment before and after birth. The names and addresses of expectant mothers were obtained from a local maternity hospital, and a couple of visitors undertook the weekly task of seeing each woman in her own home, supplying the nourishment, and noting the effects. The visits were to continue from three months before birth until the child was a year old. An area was chosen close to a weighing centre in connection with one of the consultations for mothers, which (after the example of St. Pancras) have sprung up in many London and provincial boroughs. Perhaps the hardest task before the visitors was to teach women to keep weekly records of their expenditure. The results of these budgets have been carefully tabulated without any effect at rhetoric or propaganda, which would only have detracted from the cogency of an unanswerable case. How little do people with incomes of three hundred pounds and upwards, who are always in the position to take a holiday or at least a week-end off when they need it (and very often when they don't), who never know what it is to have any anxiety about food, or employment, know of the year-in, year-out struggle with need which these family budgets reveal. How great is the effort to provide each week the proportions of the family income allotted to rent, burial insurance, coal and light, clothing, cleaning materials, food. Food is the item on which the thrifty housewife will economise, especially food for herself, with results that surely ought not to need to be described, except to recall the fact that Mr. Rowntree's inquiries at York (confirmed by all subsequent investigations in other centres of population) have proved that a huge proportion of the inhabitants of our towns are chronically without the means to keep themselves in a state of bare physical efficiency. And for most of the necessities of life the poor pay more, literally speaking, than the well-to-do; houseroom costs them more per cubic foot; fuel and light and food all cost them more, because they must buy in small quantities. We must here quote at length. "It is obvious that in London, at any rate, the wretched housing, which is at the same time more than they can afford, has as had an influence on the health of the poor as any other of their miserable conditions. If poverty did not mean wretched housing it would be shorn of half its dangers. The London poor are driven to pay one-third of their income for dark, damp rooms which are too small and too few in houses which are ill-built and overcrowded. And above the overcrowding of the house and the room comes the overcrowding of the bed—equally the result of poverty, and equally dangerous to health. Even if the food which can be provided out of 22s. a week, after 7s. or 8s. has been taken for rent, were of first rate quality and sufficient in quantity, the night spent in such beds, in such rooms, in such houses, would devitalise the children. It would take away their appetites, and render them more liable to any infection at home or at school." The writer of the present article well remembers what a revelation it was to him when he first realised that the poor spend, and, of course, have to spend, a large proportion of their income on light. Take the case of a family (quite common and typical) who spend 1s. 6d. per week on penny-in-the-slot gas meters, this large expenditure, of course, being sometimes due to the use of a gas-cooker. On an average this would work out at a fifteenth of their income. Well-meaning advisers of the poor often counsel them to give their children milk, not realising that this commodity is quite beyond their means. So we might go the whole round of the scale of dietary which it would be well for everybody to have if only they could afford it. We must, however, content ourselves with another quotation, which sums up Mrs. Reeves' conclusion on this point. "That the diet of the poorer London children is insufficient, unscientific, and utterly unsatisfactory is horribly true. But that the real cause of this state of things is the ignorance and indifference of their mothers is untrue. What person or body of people, however educated and expert, could maintain a working man in physical efficiency and rear healthy children on the amount of money which is all these same mothers have to deal with. It would be an impossible problem if set to trained and expert people. How much more an impossible problem when set to the saddened, weakened, overburdened wives of London labourers?"

Round about a Pound a Week. By Mrs. Pember Reeves. London: Bell & Sons. 2s. 6d. net.

V. E. CRAFER.

The effects on infant life of the environment described in this book must be faced. Let us bear in mind that the infantile death-rate of Hampstead is to that of overcrowded, poverty-stricken Hoxton as 18 to 140. A similar result emerges from Mrs. Reeves' inquiries. The 42 families investigated had had altogether 201 children, of whom 18 were either born dead or died within a few hours. Of the remaining 183 children of all ages ranging from a week up to 16 or 17 years, 39 had died, or over one-fifth, but of the 144 survivors 5 were actually deficient, while many were slow in intellect or unduly excitable. "Those among them who were born during the investigation were, with one exception, normal, cosy, healthy babies, with good appetites, who slept and fed in the usual way. They did not, however, in spite of special efforts made on their behalf, fulfil their first promise. At one year of age their environment had put its mark upon them. Though superior to babies of their class, who had not had special nourishment and care, they were vastly inferior to children of a better class who, though no finer or healthier at birth, had enjoyed proper conditions, and could, therefore, develop on sound and hygienic lines."

We do not think that any person familiar with the lives of the London poor will question the facts set out in this illuminating volume, and, for ourselves, we are convinced that the remedy for the painful state of affairs (painful when we consider that by no means the lowest depths of poverty have been sounded) therein revealed must lie in the direction of the establishment of a minimum or standard wage, such as our wage boards are making familiar to us. It is such painstaking and reliable investigations as these which will bring home to the mind of the average person the prolific causes of industrial unrest.

R. P. F.

DIRECTORS OF THE SOUL.

ON reading a little book—Quelques Directeurs d'Âmes au XVII^e Siècle, Sunday morning causeries to young people on Church History in the Crypt of St. Augustin, Paris, in the eighties of last century by the late Abbé Huvelin—the thought has been frequently uppermost in my mind, how much more subtle and penetrating than your Montaigne, or the most brilliant of the essayists, were the spiritual directors treated of in these pages, Saint François de Sales, Saint Vincent de Paul, the Abbé de Rancé, M. Olier and others. How deeply they understood the soul, how far more deeply than our modern psychologists! Have we lost the art, and, if so, how may we recover it? Or is it really no art at all, but nature, or rather super-nature? What was their peculiar avenue of approach, and how did they get there, when we by such tortuous routes get nowhere? I think it was because they moved in spiritual ways to us largely unknown, that they made room for the silences we have banished, above all, that they had an utterly devoted passion for human souls, and a right to direct souls, which are not ours. What right, indeed, have we to direct any soul, and how they would resent any suggestion of such direction in these days of unlicensed individualism!

I could cite many instances of the subtlest soul-analysis from this book. I translate roughly some few into English as I go. There is a freshness, too, in these pages which we owe partly to the simplicity and directness so youthful an audience demanded, and partly to the fact that their author had no intention of these lectures being put to writing—they were taken down in shorthand and published posthumously—indeed, he had boasted, if we can so speak of one so lowly, that he would leave nothing behind him in writing, that he sought to write only in men's hearts. He would not even have these talks called lectures; for him they were simply talks in class, catechetical exercises, "causerie pleines d'abandon." He spoke freely with the one desire of proving useful to souls.

And now to our instances. Consider for a moment Saint François de Sales' way with heretics. He avoided even the suggestion of controversy. But he touched the heart. He had not perhaps convinced the intellect, but "he had set in the heart the desire of believing and of loving. And when once we desire a thing to be true we are very near to finding it so." Is there any better way with heretics? Or consider the same saint's attitude toward sin: "When I know myself a miserable sinner, I am not unduly troubled, and at times I am even joyous, for I know that I am then a real good object for the compassion of God." The saint can guard his serenity even in sin, because he knows that he is anchored on God. Consider, too, this comparison between La Rochefoucauld and Saint François de Sales:—

"La Rochefoucauld fears to be a dupe. That is the one great ill from which he prays to be preserved. From the horror of being a dupe, good Lord deliver me! This thought is stamped on all his maxims—you must be careful to regulate the expression of your emotions, for there is an economy of the soul. It's a poor sort of economy; you had better far be a dupe with Saint François de Sales! He was one many a time, but we love the soul that spends, and is prodigal of itself, and our Lord replenishes it with an abundance of riches."

Or take this pen-portrait of M. Bourdoise, whose whole life was dominated by the idea of securing the most reverential respect for all the decencies of the priestly office, the "universal verger," as he called himself, or, as the Abbé Huvelin calls him, the "indefatigable sweeper of the Temple of the Lord." An enemy of cobwebs because "the Lord is in this place." A "rude" man, not particularly sympathetic, of moderate intelligence, but persistent, like a gimlet drilling a hole, or a drop of water that finally hollows the stone. The Abbé Huvelin is not specially drawn toward this worthy M. Bourdoise, but he realises that some are necessary to show us the itinerary from the exterior to the interior as well as those, far more necessary, who start with the inward disposition. The cowl does not make the monk, but "it helps to make the monk; it is a little thing that helps to make the big thing." I like this, too, from the Père de Bérulle, founder of the Oratoire. At times he had been unable to prepare his sermon, and had no idea, as he mounted the pulpit, what he was going to say. "At least," said he to himself, "I shall thus make public confession of my own confusion, and that will be a good thing for me!"

How does one attain to the right of directing souls? This is how M. Olier got there, and the Abbé Huvelin tells us there is no other way:—

"He underwent a terrible experience, the experience of those whom God calls in a special way to the direction of souls. He seemed to be losing all his powers, all his faculties, to be reduced to a state of imbecility. If he wanted to speak, no word came to his lips. God was acquainting him with his own utter wretchedness. . . . He emerged from this trial after eighteen months, knowing that he possessed his faculties only by the grace of God, that God could deprive him of all He had given him, and that, consequently, he ought not to live for himself, but utterly for Him who gave him all things."

Not with the eyeglass of the man of the world, but with a pitiless scalpel probing to the depths of his own heart, does the saint, or seer, become the intimate of the soul. Only thus does he discover the unum necessarium, strip off the superfluous, and learn, as at the moment of death, that "c'est un point." "Strip yourself of self, love God, love men; what are all these other things that seem of such importance to you?"

What was the nature of M. Olier's theological college at Saint-Sulpice? A place for study? No, only in a quite secondary way. Primarily, a place for the soul. The ideal was not a cultured ministry, but a consecrated one. "It was not a place for study, or for learning even to preach, but a place where one strove to give oneself to God, to mortify 'the old man' and stifle an ever-renascent egoism, in order to become united with our Lord and to enter into the dispositions of His heart." Learn here, too, the deep psychology of the true priest:—

"What the priest seeks in the soul is the hope still left in it. The world sees passions, self-interest, ambition; the priest sees the bitter waters that fill it, and seeks, beneath these bitter waters, the little spring of sweet waters, Arethusa, that little thread of grace, which, though deeper down and more hidden, is nevertheless there all the same. The world says, Behold a dissipated person! The priest looks further than that, and perceives certain disgusts (dégoûts) which are so many hopes, the sadness which proves the grandeur of the soul, and its inability to content itself with the successes of this world. . . . There is a subterranean work going on, a hidden spring, whose direction cannot be seized, but whose traces can be perceived all through life. And that is what the priest looks for in souls."

Many of us, outside Roman Catholicism, have found it difficult to appreciate at their full value the monastic orders. Monastic retirement has often seemed a selfish spiritual isolation from the grave clamouring problems of the outside world; going about doing good, the Christ-life par excellence. But we have failed to take sufficiently into account the immense inspiration which may come to those in the world, who would keep themselves unspotted, from those who have shut themselves off from all stain, whose generous sentiments and lofty thoughts have not been crushed out beneath the world's chariot-wheels. It is so difficult to keep oneself unspotted in the world, and certain monastic souls in their hardness of virtue can still recall us to a purity we in the world have not been able to attain. I had been absolutely incapable of at all understanding the Trappist till

I had read these pages. But I can now see that even the Trappist has his place, and probably a large one, in the economy of the divine dispensation, and could perhaps, if we had ears capable of hearing, recall us as effectively as any to the "one thing necessary." And what a deep insight is there not here into the heart of the Trappist, that "avenger of God against himself," especially of that great Trappist, the Abbé de Rancé:—

"He was one of those souls who in one fall see all falls, in one death all deaths; in one loss they lose all that can be lost, and in one disillusion they feel all disillusion. They have devoted their whole life to one affection; that affection fails them, and nothing remains. They are precipitated into the abyss, and if the hand of God does not bear them up they fall to the very bottom."

Some find other consolations for these bludgeonings of fate. The years, or drink, or the consolations of the flesh may draw over griefs at length the veil of forgetfulness. And what is forgetfulness but death? Others can find consolation only by casting themselves, soul and all, into the bosom of eternity. It was the way of the Trappist, the Abbé de Rancé. And how did he find his way? He came across persons of piety and was not drawn to them. There are souls with whom no half measures are possible, who scorn your counselled moderation, with whom it is neck or nothing. As said Saint Bernard: "I could have retired into a less exacting order, but my soul needed no less extremities." There are souls like that. The Abbé de Rancé's was one. He had been shattered by a thunderbolt from the blue and went to Port Royal. Port Royal did not satisfy him. He went to the Oratoire. The same. They exacted too little. He was troubled by the numerous benefices he had on his hands. Sanctify them by good usage, said Port Royal. Be a good ecclesiastic of the world, said the Oratoire. He went to a holy man, the Bishop of Aleth. "You want to do something for the good God?" asked the Bishop. "You have a large fortune; give it all to the poor." No sooner said than done! With some souls you must be exacting. He went to another holy man. "You have too many benefices on your conscience," said he. "Keep one, and see that it is properly administered." Benefices went the way of the family fortunes. He went to another. "It is a small thing to give up your fortune, to resign your benefices. That's not enough! Now, you must give yourself." And he gave, and became a Trappist.

There are, indeed, few books that reveal so deep an understanding of human nature and of the needs of the soul as this one. It is the very finest fruit of Catholic experience and life. I am therefore not surprised to discover that Baron Friedrich von Hügel, in his recent book "Eternal Life," speaks of the author reverently as one of those rare souls in whom "we catch the clearest glimpses of what, for man even here below, can be and is Eternal Life."

HAROLD JOHNSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

WILD ANIMAL ENTERTAINMENTS.

SIR,—As you well point out in your issue of 27th inst., it is good news that the organisers of "animal entertainments" have found it necessary to do something to "put themselves right with the public." But what all lovers of animals have to do is to so educate "public opinion" that animal "entertainments" and exhibitions, and even the keeping of wild animals in captivity at all—except in properly arranged zoological gardens—shall be prohibitive or unremunerative. As you say, no inspector can certify that nothing but kindness has been used in the training, although he can see that—apart from the cramped and unnatural surroundings—there is no evidence of actual cruelty at the time he visits. I hope that the R.S.P.C.A. will be exceedingly careful in the issuing of any licence, as I fear that by such means the public sentiment, which is now aroused, would be lulled to sleep; and consequently no real good will have been effected. I know nothing personally about the special arrangements at Olympia, but I do not believe that any ordinary wild animal show or animal "entertainment" can be carried on without some cruelty, active or passive.—Yours, &c.,

GEO. W. RAYNER WOOD,
Chairman, Manchester Branch, R.S.P.C.A.
Loughton Lodge, Manchester,
December 29, 1913.

BERGSON AND RELIGION.

SIR,—I certainly owe Mr. Kitchin an apology for my carelessness in commending to him a book he had read and marked. It is true that I have not read his "Bergson for Beginners"; and I ought not to have trusted a mere impression derived from one review. This is a hasty world, and I, alas! am of it.—Yours, &c.,

W. SCOTT PALMER.
December 23, 1913.

CHAPELS WHERE MARK RUTHERFORD PREACHED.

SIR,—In the notice of Sir W. Robertson Nicoll's new volume, "A Bookman's Letters," on December 13, it is said that we hear of Mark Rutherford as preaching frequently at "the quaint little chapel at Billingshurst." Can you, or any of your readers, tell me if this statement has any foundation in fact? Mr. Hale White, I understand, occupied our pulpit at Ditchling for about a year, and as it is the only connection with any Unitarian congregation he mentions in the sevenpenny copy of "The Autobiography of Mark Rutherford," it seems probable he refers to that.

If so, however, he is wrong in regarding the church as of Presbyterian origin; it is one of the old General Baptist foundations. He states that there was an endowment of about £100 per year, so the people felt no need of contributing towards his salary; this, I believe, has never been the case at Ditchling. Probably his statements about the people with whom he came in contact are equally apocryphal. I have heard the book characterised as "fiction, not fact." I am hoping, during the coming year, to compile some account of these and other South Country congregations of the same origin, and should be very grateful for any reliable information concerning them which is not in my possession.—Yours, &c.,

EMILY KENSETT.

Concord, Horsham,
December 30, 1913.

POLITICAL RESOLUTIONS AT CHURCH MEETINGS.

SIR,—Amongst your "News of the Churches" of the 27th inst. you report the fact that the congregation of one of our churches recently passed two resolutions of a political character. Now, Heaven help us if we are going to introduce politics in connection with our services. Upon such matters, pray, let our fellow-worshippers have leave to differ without being called upon to expose their differences at congregational meetings. There are other and more suitable occasions upon which they can give vent to their feelings and opinions upon these matters. It is this baneful practice which is doing so much to sap the religious spirit from the services of the so-called "Free Churches." May the Unitarian Church be saved from this peril!—Yours, &c.,

GEORGE J. NOTCUTT.

Ipswich, December 28, 1913.

THE VICTIMS OF THE DUBLIN STRIKE.

SIR,—The readers of THE INQUIRER have responded so generously to our appeal for help to feed the 1,000 mothers and babies, victims of the Dublin strike which is still dragging on its weary length, that we again venture to appeal to them for help. With this spell of cold weather upon them their sufferings must increase tenfold, and to alleviate them we have money only for another week.

Mrs. Rudmose Brown, and her voluntary helpers, have for the last eight weeks worked indefatigably at our relief centre in Dublin. Will your readers help us to keep it open while the strike lasts? It is anxious work.—Yours faithfully,

JANE COBDEN UNWIN, Hon. Treas.

BARBARA TCHAYKOVSKY, Hon. Sec.
Children's White Cross League,
3, Adelphi-terrace, Strand,
December 31, 1913.

[Mrs. Unwin desires to acknowledge 5s. received from an anonymous reader of THE INQUIRER.—ED. OF INQ.]

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

AN ETHICAL PRAYER BOOK.

SECOND NOTICE.

Social Worship for Schools, Families and Churches. Compiled and Edited by Stanton Coit. The Music Edited by C. Kennedy Scott. Price £2 2s.

THE second volume of "Social Worship" consists of Canticles, Hymns and Responses, the music arranged and edited by Mr. C. Kennedy Scott. Mr. Scott is not only an accomplished musician; he is also a man of considerable literary charm, and writes in a pleasant if not convincing way of the principles of church music which have guided him in his labours. Like the introduction by Dr. Coit, Mr. Scott's preface contains a good deal of debateable matter, not only of musical but also historical and philosophical interest. Æsthetics and religion is a tempting subject, although we begin to be alarmed when it wanders off into the "objective and "subjective" of church music. As a whole, the preface is really a defence of the use of Plain Song (Gregorian Tones) to give musical and congregational expression to the canticles, fifty-six in number, chosen by Dr. Coit for the religious services of the Ethical Church. For the most part these canticles are sonnets, odes, songs, and poetical extracts from Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, Swinburne, M. Arnold, Tennyson, and other modern poets. In themselves beautiful enough, they have neither the lilt nor the simplicity required for congregational singing. Of all forms of poetry the sonnet and the ode are least fitted for church music, when the necessities and limitations of the congregation are borne in mind. The majority of these canticles offer the most intractable material for united singing. Some of them might be set as anthems or cantatas to be given by capable choirs, but nothing can make them suitable for general use. No one would think of contending that Wordsworth's sonnet to Milton, or Arnold's to Shakespeare, are singable. Faced by this difficulty, Mr. Scott has fallen back on the Gregorian Tones, with their reciting notes and archaic cadences, as the only possible means of musical expression for congregational purposes these things permit. Yet to many people the deadly monotony of the Gregorian Tones is almost unendurable. Think of setting Shelley's "Skylark" to an imitated Gregorian. You might as well marry an aeroplane to a steam roller, and declare that the pace of the latter is the ordained pace for the former. Or what shall be said of "The Ode to a Nightingale" (Keats) with all its delicacies of word and feeling and colour, conception and language, wedded to the strident 3rd Tone. Let it be said that Mr. Scott has used his material, both literary and musical, with considerable skill. First, by giving the lines now to a solo voice, now to the choir, and now to the congregation, and secondly, by the introduction of Four Bourdons, not as accompaniments to the Tones, but as harmonised passages for the choir only, a good deal has been done to relieve the monotony which is so oppressive in Plain Song. The advantage the Editor has secured in adopting this ancient mode is the elasticity of the reciting note, which in some cases is stretched to take in nearly fifty words. Yet fifty words to one reciting note sung in unison only emphasises the monotony. The Editor is fully aware of all this, and half apologises on the ground that he had to "deal with literary material which at least suggested a lyrical setting, if it did not actually impose it."

A selection of nearly 200 hymns with appropriate tunes follows the canticles. A considerable number of new tunes by the Editor and Mr. Norman O'Neil are of a pleasing character, and give freshness to this section.

The final section, Responses, includes adaptations and enlargements of the Litany, the Ten Commandments and the Lord's Prayer. The others appear to be poems after the Walt-Whitman-Catalogue manner. A couple of extracts will serve to show their quality. "An Invocation to Jesus" begins by the statement, "No hand of greed is strong enough to wreck the tables of the money changers in the Temple now." We did not know that it was ever the hand of greed did this; the story declares it was the hand of Jesus. Then the choir and congregation sing, "No sermon comes from the Mount now, but only from the study," "Mobled Queen is good," and "from the study is good"! In a "Rosary of Things Beautiful," we are asked to sing, "Beautiful is smoke and slag," "Beautiful is fine machinery, with gleaming steel and brass and whirling shafts," "Beautiful are the granite wharves," "Beautiful are the smelting fires that blaze from their towers a gush of glory into the night"! The muse of Poetry shrieks at these mighty lines. She protests that while smoke and slag, and machinery with gleaming steel and iron and whirling shafts are undoubted realities, they are not poetry, and in such lines as these do not lend themselves easily to congregational singing. Mr. Scott has done his best, and, indeed, the whole of this section owes whatever worth it has to the great skill displayed in its musical setting, and is an illustration of an old saying that good music by its magic can give the baldest prose some semblance of poetic grace.

J. W.

A PLEA FOR TRADITION.

Modern Substitutes for Traditional Christianity. By Edmund McClure, M.A. London: S.P.C.K., 2s.

THIS book will appeal strongly to the man who wants no substitutes for traditional Christianity, by showing up the sin and wickedness of some of those who have gone so far astray as to offer them. The spirit of it reminds us of the question of that melancholy and futile don in "Robert Elsmere," "Why is it I dislike the things I dislike so much more than I like the things I like?" Canon McClure has not a good word to say for any religious movements which for the saving grace of tradition can only offer the curse of modernity. The Rev.

J. M. Thomson, Miss Evelyn Underhill, Mrs. Besant, Mrs. Eddy—they are all in the same black galley. The discussions of the various substitutes are much too brief and unsympathetic, where they are not mere argumenta ad hominem, to be of real value to any one seeking guidance in matters of faith. The first chapter contains allusion to the reaction now in full swing against a mechanistic theory of the universe, and we are treated once more to Eucken and Bergson in a nutshell. These two have become a veritable King Charles's head among the minor philosophers, and we shall all soon be wishing their names were struck out of the book of life, and their systems, with a millstone about their neck, sunk in Styx. They seem to constitute the 23rd chapter of the Book of Revelation for the twentieth century pilgrims of philosophy, and one can sympathise with the anathema against all additions, so presciently uttered in the 22nd chapter. And surely even mortals have some right to protection from having their name taken in vain.

Chapter II. discusses "Non-miraculous Christianity," and deals with the position of the Rev. J. M. Thomson's very frank and judicial book on the New Testament miracles, which was the innocuous means of relieving the episcopal breast of some of its phlegm at the time. It is an irrelevant, inconsequent and ineffective chapter, and we are only glad, in view of the treatment of the representatives of Theosophy and of Christian Science later in the book, that Mr. Thomson's character and past history are above suspicion. He has escaped the avenging Furies that sniff the bad blood of heresy with dilated nostrils.

Mr. McClure's argument is that miracles do not contradict the Law of Conservation of Energy, which we are willing to admit, and even if they did, we would not for such trivial reasons alone withhold our credence from them. The Law of the Conservation of Energy is in a somewhat parlous condition these days. The psychical is more than the physical, and cannot be explained from it. Also admitted, "There is continuous growth, not blind evolution, but growth with an intelligent purpose." "Miracles then are—like the mutations, or the sports of modern Darwinism—sudden new departures in what was previously continuous progress, and spirit is behind them." Then he goes on to say that these New Testament miracles are natural enough as being associated with a "Personality, who is a tremendous mutation, a new departure in human history, &c." "Our Lord's miracles are consistent with His life, and His life with His miracles"—so he quotes Dr. Headlam. We defy anyone to trace the logic of this movement of thought, and as for Dr. Headlam's statement, it is simply meaningless as it stands. There is no commensurability between morality and miracle; the saint will sink like the sinner, so long as the specific gravity of the human body is greater than that of water. Darwin never believed in mutations which from five barley loaves and two small fishes would give twelve baskets of fragments after feeding 5,000 people.

We pass over the succeeding chapters of the book, with their crude methods and inadequate presentations, only remarking that Mrs. Eddy's wickedness won't account for the wide acceptance of Christian Science, except by the wicked, nor Nietzsche's madness for the Cult of the Superman, except in asylums, and why a fresh presentation of Christianity like Miss Underhill's should require a "fresh revelation to establish it" one cannot guess. The best chapter is the last, on Rationalism and Secularism, and it is good in parts, like the curate's egg. Eckhart and Tauler wrote in the fourteenth not in the fifteenth century, as stated on page 47. On the whole we do not note the propagation of much "Christian" knowledge in this book.

R. N. C.

THE MEANING OF MEDIÆVAL ART.

Religious Art in France of the Thirteenth Century. By Emile Mâle. Translated by Dora Nussey. London: J. M. Dent & Sons. 21s. net.

It is a little surprising that M. Mâle's book has had to wait so long for a translator. It appeared in 1898, and at once took its place in the front rank as the only book dealing adequately with its subject for the ordinary man of education. Those who have visited Chartres or Rheims, Amiens or Notre Dame, with some of its leading principles and ideas safely stored in the mind—it is much too large to be a comfortable travelling companion—will be eager to testify to the new sources of delight which were suddenly revealed, as sculpture and windows were scanned with an eye illumined by knowledge. It is not M. Mâle's object to supply the tourist with purple patches of æsthetic criticism. For those who make sentimental journeys in search of pretty objects there are already books enough and to spare. He has attempted the more difficult and more useful task of interpreting the forgotten language of symbolism and tracing its sources in contemporary literature, so as to restore to the modern mind some of the intelligent wonder and wondering intelligence with which the men of 13th century France regarded their religious art. The art of the Middle Ages, he writes, was at once "a script, a calculus, and a symbolic code. The result was a deep and perfect harmony. There is something musical in the grouping of the statues in the cathedral porches, and in truth all the elements of music are present. . . . The genius of the Middle Ages, so long misunderstood, was a harmonious genius. Dante's Paradiso and the porches at Chartres are symphonies. To thirteenth century art more truly perhaps than to any other might be given the title of 'frozen music.'"

From this point of view he proceeds to examine the art of the thirteenth century cathedral, insisting always that it is enshrined thought, or in other words, that we are in the presence of an art which was fundamentally didactic. The four books of the Speculum of Vincent of Beauvais supply him with a useful division of the subject, the Mirror of Nature, the Mirror of Instruction, the Mirror of Morals, and the Mirror of History; while his wide reading in the theological books of the period enables him to suggest many lines of interpretation which were formerly obscure. At the same time M. Mâle avoids the error of trying to find a symbolical meaning everywhere. Many objects—this applies specially to the use of plants and animals in sculpture—he believes were purely decorative, and reflected only the taste or humour of the artist. Some readers will regret that attention is confined to a few of the greatest churches in France, and there are consequently no examples from contemporary English art. But the drawback is not really so great as it appears, for the thirteenth century was pre-eminently a period marked by a common intellectual life and common sources of artistic inspiration in Western Christendom. Anyone who has mastered M. Mâle's book will have the root of the matter in him. The illustrations, nearly 200 in number, have been selected with direct reference to the text, and are an indispensable aid to study. They have been admirably produced, though in several cases the detail is less clearly defined than in the French edition. It is only fair to add that this is a defect which will not be apparent except to the few readers who are able to make the comparison.

THE OLD-FASHIONED WOMAN. By Elsie Clews Parsons. Putnam's Sons. 6s.

MRS. PARSONS' book is not about the old-fashioned woman at all, as the term is usually understood; it deals rather with "primitive fancies about the sex," which lead us into very remote ages and climes, and yield some shrewd comparisons between the conceptions of womanhood as held by the savage and by civilised man. The author, who is an American, has a real sense of humour, for which the reader should feel very grateful, and the lively way in which she strings together and comments upon the quaint superstitions and customs which are brought to bear upon her argument—a fairly obvious one, though it is not set forth in a dogmatic manner—helps to reconcile us to the rather breathless rate at which we are carried along. Mrs. Parsons is evidently desirous that women should escape from some of the taboos and restrictions which have hindered their development in the past, but not without using their common sense and laughing at themselves occasionally. "Feminism and anti-feminism," she says, "are both made up of primitive ideas. That is why their unwitting exponents can be alike so dull and so exacting—if taken seriously. Not till they get some ethnological inking of themselves will they become better company."

THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH AND REUNION.

By W. Sanday, D.D., F.B.A. Oxford, at the Clarendon Press. 4s. 6d. net.

THESE four papers on primitive Church Order, originally published in the Contemporary Review, have all the familiar qualities of Dr. Sanday's theological writing, his caution and placidity, his instinct for seeing the best on both sides, his anxiety always to postpone decisions to an unknown future. As a summary of the chief results of research since Hatch gave his Bampton Lectures on the Organisation of the Early Christian Churches they are likely to be distinctly useful, though they might with advantage have been enriched with notes and references when they were re-issued. Dr. Sanday attaches a high value to the chapter on the subject contributed by Mr. C. H. Turner to the Cambridge Mediæval History, and marks with approval the tendency to claim an early date for Episcopacy. It is a matter purely of historical evidence and not in the least of doctrinal prepossession. It is quite probable that Mr. Turner is right, but his conclusions appear to us to throw practically no light upon the question of the validity of Orders, when what is meant is not the authority for traditional methods but the actual communication of a special and supernatural grace. The latter is dogma imposed upon history, and it is possible for a man to accept the history quite cheerfully while rejecting the dogma as entirely without warrant. Dr. Sanday touches lightly upon this question of validity, but he never comes to close grips with it, though it is clear that he has a strong personal aversion to the exclusive Catholic claim.

THE Unitarian Pocket Book and Diary for 1914, edited by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie (London, Essex Hall, 1s. 3d. net), is as useful and well-arranged as ever. The editor of an annual publication of this kind generally receives little thanks; but he may always rest happy in the consciousness that he is among the blessed ones who save other people's time and help the machinery of the world to run smoothly.

WE have received the Boys' Own Brigade Calendar, which strikes a cheerful note with its yellow cover, and is not only got up in a very attractive way but has some excellent mottoes and illustrations which will appeal to the boys who are so fortunate as to have it presented to them. The portraits of the Brigade President, Mr. Ronald P. Jones, and the Brigade Secretary, the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, appear on the January page.

WE have also received a specimen copy of the Certificate of Membership, designed by Mr. Ronald P. Jones, and published by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, which is specially intended for presentation to young men and women on leaving the Sunday school, or on the occasion of their being welcomed into the fellowship of the church. Copies of the certificate may be ordered from the Manager of the Book Room, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., price 2d. each (by post 3d.). Orders of 20 copies and upwards will be sent carriage free.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS:—Royal Guide to the London Charities, 1914. 1s. 6d.
THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS:—St. Basil the Great: W. K. Lowther Clarke. 7s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. JAMES CLARKE & Co.:—Christ and War: William E. Wilson, B.D. 1s. 6d. net.
SIR ISAAC PITMAN & SONS, LTD.:—The Samson-Saga: A. Smythe Palmer, D.D. 5s. net.

THE SALVATION ARMY:—Salvation Army Year Book, 1914.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Hibbert Journal, The Quest, Nineteenth Century, Contemporary Review, Cornhill Magazine, The Vineyard, Sunday School Monthly. "Poetry and Drama."

FOR THE CHILDREN.

A NEW YEAR'S LETTER.

MY DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,—As this letter appears under "For the Children," you may think that I ought to have begun "My Dear Children." But I rejected this for two reasons. In the first place, you might have concluded that I was some venerable patriarch whose ideas were bound to be antiquated. Whereas it is, as a matter of fact, little more than a dozen years since I started in my profession, which is that of a schoolmaster. (And this, by the way, explains why I venture to address you at all. I may not have taught much during these few years; but I have learned a very great deal.) The second reason for not calling you "children" is this. The letter is meant for all who go to school; and I feared that just those very people would fail to read it, being under the impression that they ceased to be children at the moment when they first entered the portals of a place of learning. I hope that you did then give up being childish; but it is a thousand pities if you left off thinking of yourselves as children. Unless I am much mistaken, you were not loth a week ago to admit that you were children still, and take delight in it. Moreover, what is the meaning of the festival that we were then celebrating? Is it not to commemorate the birth of a little Child? We read in the Epistle of James that "true religion before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world": in brief, care for others, and care for ourselves. The first clause we are ready enough to remember at Christmas time. I trust that we do not forget the second either, but desire earnestly that our hearts may become as the heart of that little Child, and that, following his example, we may increase in wisdom, as well as stature, and in favour with God and man.

It is a happy accident (if accident it can be called) that we begin our New Year so soon after Christmas. The feelings aroused in us then have not had time to evaporate, and we have definite material to work upon, as it were, in forming our New Year resolutions. And we at school have a further advantage at this time. Our own particular year—the school year that began in September—has already run a third of its course. We have fresh experience of the ways in which improvement is needed. Your School Reports will help you in that, and still more your own hearts. No doubt you came back after the summer holidays full of zeal and ambition, and you see now—happily before it is too late—what the end of so many good resolves may be. Do you remember the story of Tarquin and the Sibyl? Tarquin the Proud was the last of the seven kings of Rome, the same for whom Lars Porsena tried to win back the throne when Horatius held the bridge. One day, before he was expelled, a strange woman came to him with nine books, which she wished to sell. The price seemed to the King too high, and he refused. Thereupon the woman burnt three of the books, and offered the rest for the same price as before. Again the King refused. She then burnt three more, and asked the same price for the three that were left. This time Tarquin, seeing the hand of the gods in this, gave the woman what she asked, and she was never seen again. The Sibylline Books, as they were called, became a treasured national possession, consulted at all times of doubt or peril to the State. You, at the beginning of the school year, had nine months (three terms) before you in which to do a certain amount of work by a corresponding expenditure of effort, in school and out. Three of these months have now gone, beyond recall; but the total amount of work needed in the nine remains the same. Have you paid a third of the price? or shall you find yourselves compelled to pay a proportionately higher price for the six that are left? There is not one of you but must, in the last resort, confess that he or she has at least not paid in full. But do not be disheartened and let the end of the next three months find you saddled with a hopeless load of debt. If you will let your failure force you to efforts such as you have never made before—if you henceforth truly do your best—God will, in His mercy, forgive you a part of the debt; and that not only at the end of this brief year, but also when the time shall come for your earthly account to be for ever closed.

But you find this subject or that so hard, or so dull—I daresay you do; but . . . what a splendid time the dentists would have if we never ate anything but what is soft and sweet! Also, there may be something wrong with you—with your habits of mind. Take my advice and make yourselves really interested in something—something that occupies the mind and calls forth its best powers. Of course, I do not refer to such pitiful "interests" as fashions or professional football; but great subjects of thought such as Art and Music, Literature, Science, History—the last especially, because without a knowledge of history you cannot understand our life to-day; and it is this life of to-day in which you will play your parts, that will be read as history by future generations. Apart from the pleasure that such interests will give you, both now and after you have left school, they will help to make that complicated machine, your mind, so efficient that it can tackle with ease subjects that before seemed beyond its powers. And if you give your minds this keenness—this sharp cutting edge—you will profit in even greater ways than this. The Latin for "a sharp edge" is acies; but the Romans most often used the word (as many of you will know) in a derived sense, meaning "a line of battle." If your minds are occupied with healthy, noble interests, there will be no chance for evil thoughts to enter in—you will always have an invincible fighting line to oppose the ever-recurring onsets of temptation. In other words, you will be able to preserve that heart of a little child—a heart free from all guile and malice and impurity—which, above all things, we pray that our children may possess.

At this season, more than at any other, we realise what is meant by the flight of time. The Old Year is a symbol of the Past, the New Year of the Future. And what of the Present? It must be partly of the Future and partly of the Past; for there is no space between the last day of December and the first of January. That is true; but in another sense it differs immeasurably from the other two. For what is the Present? It is the only time over which we have control; which is ours to use, for good or ill. Think for yourselves if that is not so; and, as you think, do you not wish that you had realised it before "to-day" had changed to "yesterday," before the once New Year had become the Old? For though the Present is transformed into the Past, it does not, therefore, cease to be a part of our experience.

Our acts our angels are, or good or ill,

Our fatal shadows that walk by us still.

We can turn over new leaves in the books of our lives; but we cannot tear out the old. See to it that you so write on the page that lies open before you that you may never have cause to wish that you could tear it out. Then you will assuredly find happiness yourselves and bring joy to the hearts of those that love you, not only in the New Year now begun, but in all the years of the great future in which you will have to play your parts.—Yours sincerely,

H. LANG JONES.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

MR. W. E. A. AXON.

WE regret to announce the death of our friend and contributor, Mr. W. E. A. Axon, which took place on Saturday, December 27, in Manchester. Mr. Axon was born in Manchester in 1846, and became an assistant in the Manchester Free Libraries at the age of fifteen. He eventually became a sub-librarian, but in 1874 he joined the staff of the Manchester Guardian as office librarian, a position which he retained until 1905. His work was very congenial to him, as he was an omnivorous reader with a mind that was a storehouse of historical and antiquarian lore; indeed, he was recognised as one of the first authorities in the history, literature and archaeology of the county in which he lived, and of other counties far and near, as well as an accomplished linguist, a writer of articles, verses and stories (some of the latter in Lancashire dialect), the author of several books, and a contributor to the best-known encyclopædias, the "Dictionary of National Biography," &c. In addition to all this, he took a prominent part in the work of temperance reform, particularly in connection with the United Kingdom Alliance and the Band of Hope Union, and was an equally ardent advocate of vegetarianism. He also took some considerable share in local administration. In 1888 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature, and in 1899 received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the Wilberforce University of America. People who knew Mr. Axon were impressed immediately not only by his remarkable industry, but by his kindly, modest and gentle nature. "He always presented to me," says an intimate friend, "the spectacle of a man quietly unfolding his natural powers not for his own advantage but for the benefit of his fellow-creatures, and especially for the help of those who were least able to help themselves." His life was one of strenuous labour without ostentation or pretence, and the wide range of interests which kept his mind so fresh and active is shown by even a brief list of some of the books he wrote or edited, including "The Folk-Song and Folk-Speech of Lancashire," "The Annals of Manchester," "Life of William Lloyd Garrison," "Sermons of Thomas Fuller," (edited) "Bygone Sussex," "Verses, Original and Translated," and "Cobden as Citizen." Mr. Axon was twice married, and survived his second wife by three years. He leaves one son, Mr. E. Axon, chief assistant librarian at the Manchester Free Library, and two daughters.

MRS. W. G. CADMAN.

THE devoted, faithful, often strenuous life and work of the minister's wife are seldom chronicled; and yet if the story were told in connection with many of our congregations it would reveal services consecrated by a rare and beautiful spirit of devotion. In the death of Mrs. Cadman, which took place on Christmas Day at Gatley, after a brief illness, there passed away a woman whose active mind and loving heart and shrewd common-sense were for upwards of forty years given without stint to the work of our churches, for the most part in laborious fields of labour. There are not a few men and women, boys and girls, in Manchester, London, and Macclesfield, who will remember Mrs. Cadman with sincere affection and deep respect. Her husband's ministries at Dob Lane (1867-72), Miles Platting (1872-93), Mansford Street, London (1893-1902), Macclesfield (1902-13), were the scene of much quiet, earnest work, and Mrs. Cadman was always keen and ready to take her share in all that was going on. Her advice and friendship were available at all times and seasons, and she proved a true friend to large numbers of people in hours of difficulty and trial. It was customary at one time for a student of the Unitarian Home Missionary College to be placed at Miles Platting for Sunday-school teaching and district visiting, and there are several men now engaged in the work of the ministry who will recall with pleasure and gratitude Mrs. Cadman's kind and generous hospitality at her home in Harpurhey. Mr. and Mrs. Cadman had only recently taken up their residence at Gatley, after leaving Macclesfield. In their bereavement the sympathy of a large circle of friends will be with Mr. Cadman, and with the son and two daughters, the elder of whom, Mrs. Harding, was for several years so well known at Essex Hall, and is now living in Staten Island, New York.

W. C. B.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE RELIGIONS OF THE WORLD.

LECTURE BY DR. CARPENTER.

A LECTURE on "The Place of Christianity among the Religions of the World" was given on Wednesday evening, December 17, by the Rev. Dr. Carpenter, Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, in the Hall of the West Hill-road Unitarian Church, Bournemouth. There was a large audience, which included the Revs. C. C. Coe, H. S. Solly and W. B. Matthews, other friends from Poole and Wimborne, and a good number of strangers. The Rev. V. D. Davis was in the chair. The lecture dealt with the great enlargement of knowledge of the ancient religions which the past century had brought, and the new light thus thrown upon the Bible, which could no longer be regarded as a miraculous and infallible authority. The testimony of other forms of faith pointed to deep unities of religious experience; they covered a wide range of spiritual values, bearing witness to deep-seated human needs, and corresponding ideals and demands of worship, and of the peace and harmony of souls reconciled to God. The influence of Babylonia, and later of Persia, in the moulding of Jewish thought, was described, particularly in the coming judgment, and in the Adversary, Satan, and the world of demons in conflict with the powers of light, and it was shown how this world picture made the setting of the Gospel and early Christian teaching. Reference was then made to the broadening influence of Greek thought upon Christian converts, such as Justin Martyr in the second century. They claimed kinship with the truth and spiritual enlightenment attained by the great teachers of Greece, and could no longer take a narrow and exclusive view of the Gospel. Striking instances were adduced of the use of the term "Saviour" as applied not only to gods, but to human beings, in the person of Oriental kings and the Roman Emperors, one in particular in which the Emperor Augustus is described both as "God" and "Saviour."

Buddhism furnished remarkable parallels even in the matter of salvation by faith in the later Buddhist teaching of Japan, in which the conception of the supreme Deity has taken the form of the Amida Buddha, the Lord of infinite Light and Life.

In conclusion, Dr. Carpenter turned to the question of the historical reality of the life of Jesus, and the attempts of certain writers, on the basis of studies in comparative religion, to invalidate its truth. If they would read the Gospels, he said, in the light of imaginative common sense, any such suspicion would at once be dispersed. There were, no doubt, mingled elements in the Gospels, but behind was the great historical personality, and the whole picture was instinct with human elements of the life of the people. The germ of the whole development was in the single statement that Jesus appeared in Galilee, with a certain prophetic word, "Repent, for the Kingdom of God is come nigh," and the originality, which gave the stamp to the Gospel message, was that "The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost." The originality of speech and idea was not such as could be invented for the "degraded deity" of the theory. The service of man was the new note of Christianity. Like all idealists, Jesus was misunderstood by the conventional professors of his day, and came into conflict with the authorities. Temporary ideas of his time might drop away, but the inward spiritual truth remained; the realities of God and man, the relation of the soul as the child of God to the Heavenly Father, had been verified age after age in churches of every name; there was the permanent and abiding significance of Jesus.

PAUPERISM IN LONDON.

It is a dispiriting fact that, in spite of the boom in trade, and the tremendous impetus given to social reform in recent years, there were in the second week in December, according to the latest statistics issued by the Local Government Board, 102,887 persons receiving Poor Law relief in London. These figures exclude lunatics, casuals, and cases of medical relief. They are lower than the corresponding ones of December, 1912, but almost on a level with those for 1900, while the annual expenditure has risen by over £600,000.

Of the great working-class areas, the South district, with its huge population of 1,843,968, does not register anything better than a decrease of 2,449. The eight unions in the district have 13,789 outdoor paupers, which is only 1,154 lower than the number relieved in December last; and of this decrease Camberwell claims 718. Parts of the district, like Southwark, Bermondsey, and Wandsworth, actually record a higher pauperism than last year. The East End, with its great docks and a population of 681,819, cannot boast of a larger reduction than 1,046, and of this number Poplar alone supplies 456. Outdoor relief in the district is lower by only 392; and nearly the whole of this (383) belongs to Poplar. In the North district, which has a population of 1,022,637, the decrease is 2,403, but to this one union, Islington, contributes 1,649. There are 7,575 outdoor paupers in the district, or a decrease of 1,460, and Islington alone contributes 1,222 of this number. Thus it will be seen that the great working-class areas of London have not benefited largely from our flourishing trade. Of the entire decrease in London three-fifths belong to six unions out of the 29. The ratio of paupers for the whole of London is 22.8. Last year it was 24.4; in 1910, the year before the Old Age Pensions Act was extended, it was 26.8. The ratio has not been lower than it is now in any year extending back to 1872, except in the year 1891, when it stood at 22.4, but it was the same in 1900—22.8. There are nearly 21,000 children in the London Poor Law institutions. Comparatively few are now inmates of ordinary workhouse wards. Most of them are educated and trained in district and separate schools, cottage homes, scattered homes, and training ships, and nearly 600 are boarded out with foster parents. During last year the number of children placed out after being educated and trained was 1,362, of whom 761 were boys and 601 girls.

WITH the object of stimulating interest in Colonial and Foreign work, the President and Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association have arranged for a meeting at Essex Hall on Wednesday evening, January 14, at 8 p.m. The Rev. W. Copeland Bowie will speak on "Canada"; the Rev. William Jellie on "New Zealand"; the Rev. Charles Hargrove on "A World-wide Movement in Liberal Religion." A cordial welcome is extended to the members and friends of our churches in and near London, and to any others who may be on a visit to the metropolis.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Chatham.—A special celebration of the 25th anniversary of the opening of the Unitarian Church at Chatham will be held next month, when the anniversary sermon will be preached by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, who performed the opening ceremony when the new building, which took the place of the old General Baptist Chapel on Hamond-hill, was completed a quarter of a century ago. Many of those who were present on that occasion have died, or removed from the neighbourhood, but several of the original members of the congregation still attend the church, and it is hoped that as many friends as are able to do so will be present at the coming celebration.

Dewsbury.—Unity Church has just lost a valued friend and supporter by the death, at a comparatively early age, of Mrs. Elizabeth Walker, of Oaklands, Dewsbury, widow of the late Mr. Walter Walker, of the firm of Messrs. Mark Oldroyd & Sons, woollen manufacturers, who died four years ago. The funeral service, which was held on December 22 at the Lawnswood Crematorium, Leeds, was conducted by the Rev. B. C. Constable, of Manchester, a former minister of the Dewsbury Church. Among the mourners at the Crematorium, in addition to her two sons, two of her step-daughters, her brothers and sisters, were the Rev. Dr. Thackray, of Huddersfield and Dewsbury; Mrs. J. W. Connon, Miss Howe, Mr. C. Lupton, and Mrs. Butterfield.

Evesham.—To the great regret of the congregation, the Rev. W. E. Williams has resigned the ministry of the Oat-street Chapel, having been appointed through the British and Foreign Unitarian Association to the Unitarian Church at Auckland, New Zealand. Mr. Williams, who was previously at Wimbledon, commenced his ministry at Evesham, in succession to the Rev. G. L. Phelps, in March, 1910, and has won the respect and esteem of many friends in the town.

Framlingham and Bedford.—Farewell sermons were preached in these churches on Sunday, December 28, by the Rev. Herbert C. Hawkins, when good congregations assembled to bid God-speed to the minister and his family. At the close of the services Mr. C. F. Dowling, hon. treasurer of the Old Meeting, Framlingham, expressed the regret of the congregations, and on their behalf made a suitable presentation. Mr. Hawkins commences his ministry at the Meeting House, Oldbury, Birmingham, on January 11, 1914.

Lancaster.—A sale of work held in the schoolroom of the St. Nicholas-street Chapel on the 10th and 11th inst., in aid of the renovation fund, realised the sum of £108.

Leytonstone.—Services are being continued at the League House, 632, High-road, Leytonstone, with the support of the London District Unitarian Society, the subjects and preachers for January being as follows:—January 4, "The Evolution of Religion," Mr. J. Kinsman; January 11, "The Bible and the Modern World," the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson; January 18, "Divine Service," Mr. A. M. Stables; January 25, "Religion and Industry," the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

London: Blackfriars Mission.—The almost inevitable falling off in attendance usually occurring in an interim between two pastorates has practically been regained by the vigorous efforts of the Rev. W. J. Piggott and his wife. Mr. Piggott has begun a three months' special mission for the explanation and defence of the elements of Liberal Christian faith, which has been noticed in the local press.

London: Lay Preachers' Union.—The monthly meeting of the Lay Preachers' Union was held on Monday, December 29, when the Rev. A. H. Biggs gave an address on the problem of developing the religious life in the young, which was followed by a discussion. The chair was taken by Mr. E. R. Fyson.

London: Wandsworth.—The various societies are holding their Christmas gatherings during the present month. The Literary and Social held the new year's party on Thursday. In connection with this society a paper by Mrs. G. P. Blizard will be read on the subject of "William Morris" on January 15. The Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A., is giving a series of evening addresses during the month on "The Faith they Live by," including that of G. B. Shaw and Rabindranath Tagore. Mr. Tarrant's recent address on "Christianity in the Light of Modern Thought" has been printed, and friends may obtain copies on application to the Church Secretary.

Southampton.—On Thursday evening, Dec. 18, in the Kell Hall, Dr. Carpenter, Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, gave his lecture on "The Place of Christianity among the Religions of the World," which he had given on the previous evening at Bournemouth. The Rev. A. R. Andreae presided, and among the audience were the American Consul and the Principal of the Hartley University College. A brief report of the lecture appears elsewhere. The Rev. A. R. Andreae has recently been admitted as a member of the Southampton ministers' "Fraternal."

Women's League.—The New York League of Unitarian Women has formed a special committee for the purpose of distributing liberal literature and information to those who ask for it, and to keep at headquarters a list of Unitarian homes in or about New York, where young people, students or workers may be assured of safe and congenial surroundings, either as boarders or lodgers. The name selected for this part of the work is the Unitarian Extension and Fellowship Committee. In response to an appeal made by Madam Ferencz, the wife of the Hungarian Bishop, the British League is endeavouring to raise a small collection amongst its branches and individual subscribers towards the cost of a window in the Memorial Church which is being erected at Deva on the spot where 400 years ago Francis David suffered imprisonment. Several of the small branches have already sent a subscription, and it is hoped that the larger ones will follow their example. The smallest gift will be thankfully received by Miss Brooke Herford, and the sum total will be sent by her to the League at Kolossvár at the end of January.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A MESSAGE FROM ANATOLE FRANCE.

On his return home from his recent visit to the Paris correspondent of the Manchester Guardian asked M. Anatole France for a message to England. He replied that he could only repeat what he had said at the meeting at Kingsway Hall, that England alone was in a position to bring about a good understanding between France and Germany, and that he appealed to her with all the energy he possessed to use her position to that end. He rejoiced to hear that the relations between England and Germany were so much improved, but he repeated that England and France together or England and Germany together were but two sides of a triangle which needed to be completed. Recent incidents had shown that the German people was at last beginning to revolt against militarism; he hoped that the English and French peoples would also resist the encroachments of militarism, and that the peoples of the three countries would unite to demand from their respective Governments an understanding between England, Germany and France, which would guarantee the peace of the world.

THE BANKS OF THE WANDLE.

There have been many disfigurements of the scenery along the banks of the Wandle since Ruskin made his forcible protest against vandalism in the introduction to the "Crown of Wild Olive"; but its beauty has not been altogether spoilt, and the River Wandle Open Spaces Committee are to be congratulated on the purchase of a group of meadows near Mitcham Bridge, about 12 acres in extent, which has been vested in the National Trust for the permanent use of the public. The area thus saved is a picturesque spot, bordered by Lombardy poplars, elms and planes, and yellow kingcups and other wild flowers abound there at the right season of the year. The banks of the river just below Mitcham Bridge have been acquired, we learn from the Times, by a generous donor who is arranging to vest the land in the National Trust as a memorial to Miss Octavia Hill, subject to stipulations for maintaining its character in respect of quietness and beauty.

WOMEN AND THE PLUMAGE TRADE.

"The problem before the dispassionate bird-lover is to find, in the face of abuse, misconception, and similar trifling disadvantages, some way in which, pending the ultimate civilisation of woman, a means may be found of reconciling her caprice with the interests of the bird world." These words, which occur in an article by Mr. Bensusan in the Nineteenth Century for November, have been made the text of a plea by Mrs. Buckland in the Times for greater efforts on the part of women "to rid Great Britain of the odium of a barbarous traffic in beautiful and useful lives." It cannot be said that the indictment contained in the sentence quoted is untrue, although it would surprise many women of fashion swathed in animals' skins and wearing birds of Paradise in their hats to be told that they are little better than barbarians, and, indeed, it is generally want of knowledge and lack of imagination rather than a naturally cruel disposition which makes so many people indifferent to the sufferings of the animal world which they exploit. The sight of a dog or a cat which has been hurt or run over before our eyes at once awakens the feeling of pity, but the fate of the seal or the heron butchered for our adornment in far-off countries in countless numbers does not make the same immediate appeal. Nowadays, however, there is little excuse for ignorance as to the manner in which furs and plumage are obtained, and the least that can be asked of women of refinement is that they should only wear those which can be got without causing pain or running the risk of exterminating valuable species. Mrs. Buckland desires that women should write to the Members of Parliament for the constituencies in which they live urging them to vote for the Plumage Bill. "Already," she says, "the House of Commons is overwhelmingly in favour of it. The thing to do is to ask members to take care that nothing is allowed to stop the progress of the Bill towards the Statute Book."

THE FOUNDERS OF MODERN SOCIALISM.

The names of Frederick Engels and Karl Marx will always be linked together, for not only were they the founders of the modern Socialist movement, but it was the self-sacrifice of Engels which made it possible for Marx to carry on his great work. The story of these two friends, whose correspondence has just been published in Germany, has been re-told in the Manchester Guardian. Engels, it should be remembered, was the son of a man who had business interests in Manchester, and there the future Socialist in his young days learnt much from Robert Owen and the Chartists. Subsequently he became correspondent of a democratic paper edited in Cologne, by Karl Marx, with whom he was afterwards to become so intimately associated. The revolution of 1848 called him back to Germany, where he took part in the armed insurrection in Baden. After many exciting experiences he again returned to England, where Marx, an exile, had now settled. Both were in straitened circumstances, but Engels was unmarried, and had a rich father. He therefore resolved to sacrifice his own political career and enter business in Manchester in order that Marx might be enabled to carry on his theoretical and practical work.

ENGELS remained in Manchester till

1870, working with unabated zeal at uncongenial tasks in order to sustain his friend, at the same time studying languages and archaeology with extraordinary avidity. When in 1869 he gave up business, being now a well-to-do man and able to ensure Marx a solid and steady income, the health of the latter had already been so broken that he could no longer work, and the remaining volumes of his works were left unfinished to be edited after his death by Engels. Marx's wife died in 1881, and two years later he followed her to the grave, and was buried by her side in Highgate Cemetery. Engels died in 1895. On one occasion Marx wrote to him, "Without you I would never have completed my work, and I assure you my conscience was always burdened with the heavy thought that it was chiefly for my sake that you had permitted your splendid abilities to waste away and to rust in commerce, besides sharing in all my miseries into the bargain." The correspondence between two men of such striking personality and noble aims should prove of absorbing interest.

DR. ROBERT COLLYER AND CHARLES LAMB.

The description of Charles Lamb given in a lecture by Dr. Collyer, which we understand is about to be published in a volume entitled "Clear Grit," is entirely characteristic of a man whose joy in life was like perpetual sunshine, and who was naturally drawn to those who had the same winning and loveable temper. "A short and slender person you would have seen," he says, "with what Thomas Hood called a pair of immaterial legs, a head of wonderful beauty, if you could see it bare, well set on the bent shoulders, with black curly hair in plenty, threaded through with grey; eyes of a soft brown, like that you see in some gentle animals, but not quite the same colour—odd eyes, you would call them; and a face of the finest Hebrew type rather than the Saxon. 'But who shall describe his face,' an old friend says, 'or catch its quivering sweetness? Deep thought, shot through with humour, and lines of suffering wreathed with mirth.' He would be dressed in black, also of an old fashion, though the time was when he favoured a decent grey, and when a friend asked him once why he wore such queer old clothes, he answered very simply, 'Because they are all I have, my boy.'

* * *

"LAMB had a good word for Judas Iscariot, and pity for the man in the great sermon who built his house upon the sand, and for the five foolish virgins; but did not care much for the man who built his house on the rock, because it was clear he knew how to take care of himself, or for the five wise virgins who went in merrily to the supper, and left their companions weeping outside in the dark; while he was not quite clear that there was not a certain grain of nobility in Guy Fawkes, that arch traitor who would have blown up king, lords, and commons at one stroke; and had great pity also for a man he read of in the papers, who was taken up for sheep-stealing, because the sheep was taken, too, and so the poor man lost his first and last chance at a mutton-pie."

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

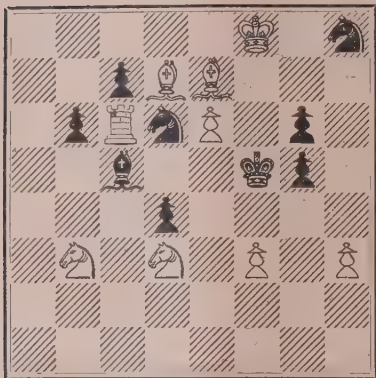

JAN. 3, 1914.

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 38.

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS.
(Specially contributed.)

BLACK. (9 men.)

WHITE. (9 men.)

White to play and mate in two moves.

SOLUTION of No. 36.

1. R. Kt3 (key-move).

Correct solutions have been received from W. E. Arkell, Rev. B. C. Constable, Thos. L. Rix, F. S. M. (Mayfield), W. S. B., E. Wright, Arthur Perry, A. J. Hamblin, H. L., R. B. D. (Edinburgh), D. Amos, Rev. I. Wrigley, Dr. Higginson, A. Mielziner, J. Johnson and L. G. Rylands.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

R. B. D. (Edinburgh) and OTHERS.—It is astonishing what diverse opinions I have received on No. 36. The fact remains, however, that it easily heads the list of positions for defeating solvers in this column; my judgment surely requires no further confirmation. One solver criticised it adversely, but sent the wrong solution!

CHAS. WILLING (Philadelphia).—See below regarding No. 33. Your kind remarks are much appreciated, but I am always anxious to secure variety in my chess journalism; I fear the style of one composer would soon tire my readers, however clever his work may be. I hope No. 38 above will interest you.

Problem No. 33.—I am at last in a position to give the correct diagram, after much tribulation and misunderstanding. It is as follows: White (8 men): K at KR5; Q at KB6; Rs at QR2 and QR3; B at QR7; Kts at QKt3 and QB1; P at K5. Black (7 men): K at K6; R at QB4; B at Q4; Kt at QR3; Ps at KB2, KB6 and KR2. Two moves. All objections are now removed. The key is, of course, P. K6. The black pawns at f7 and h7 respectively make all the difference. As Mr. Baird, chess editor, Bolton Football Field, has reprinted the position with these pawns omitted, and as I was led to copy it into this journal and also in the Chess Amateur incorrectly, our editorial labours will be none of the lightest for some few weeks. I have about six "corrections" per week from solvers all over the kingdom! The long and short of it is that the position was entered exactly as above, and how the endless misprints crept in I am at a loss to understand. M. Moraes, the composer, has never been known to submit an unsound problem to any paper, so the errors are very hard lines for him in consequence.

Now Ready for January.

THE

SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

Editorial.

Lessons for the Month:

- I. A World of Wonder and Beauty.
- II. I am Alive in this World.
- III. A Life of Choice.

IV. A Good Decision.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.
Senior Department—Bertram Lister, M.A.
Primary Department—Ruth New.

Our Story Pages.

Letters on the Primary Department
By the Way.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

ONE PENNY NET.

MERTHYR TYDFIL UNITARIAN CHURCH.

THE Church is burdened with a debt of about £400, and this the congregation are now making a special effort to wipe off. To help to achieve that end with as little delay as possible it has been decided to hold a on January 15, 1914. Baking and Toffee Competitions and also Pincushion Competitions will be held, particulars of which may be had from the Secretary.

CAKE FAIR

Contributions of Cakes, Sweets, or Cash are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully acknowledged by Miss MARY W. DAVIS, Treasurer, 113, High Street, Merthyr Tydfil; or FRANK A. WHITING, Secretary, 52, Pontmorlais, Merthyr Tydfil.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL, HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by
Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

"THE UNITARIAN MONTHLY."

Magazine for Unitarian Propaganda. Adopted by churches with or without local page. Issued for last Sunday in each previous month. One copy post free, 1½d.—1s. 6d. a year; 9d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100; extra charge local page.—Address to EDITOR, 36 Burlington-road, South Shore, Blackpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCs.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, THORALBY, AYSGARTH, S.O., YORKS.—Paying Guests received.—Particulars from Miss SMITH.

BOARD - RESIDENCE offered one Lady or Gentleman. Separate sitting-room if required. Every comfort, good table. West Hampstead.—Address for terms, C. C., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Triumph of Faith.

STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D.

Five Points of Christian Faith.

JAMES MARTINEAU, D.D., LL.D.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

BOOKS

EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY,
TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE,
And for all other Exams.

Second-Hand at Half Prices.

New at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogue 184 (post free) and state wants. Books bought. BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,

135, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to quote and pay definite prices. Note our quotations: Up to 2s. 3d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 5s. 6d. on silver, 11s. on gold, 32s. each on platinum. Cash or offer by return as desired; if offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Utmost value guaranteed. Testimonials in thousands from satisfied customers. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C. and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, Saturday, January 3, 1914.
* Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3733.
NEW SERIES, No. 837.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 10, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

National Conference.

APPEAL FOR £50,000
— FOR —
SUSTENTATION FUND.

TWELFTH LIST.

	£	s.	d.
Mr. Peter Eckersley, Chowbent ..	500	0	0
Mr. T. B. Taylor, London ..	100	0	0
Mrs. Henry Rutt, London, In Memory of ..	25	0	0
Anon. (2nd don.) ..	20	0	0
Mr. Edmund P. Beale, Birming- ham ..	20	0	0
In Memory of Mrs. Harper, Winnington, Cheshire ..	20	0	0
Mr. Philip J. Worsley, jun., Birm- ingham (2nd don.) ..	20	0	0
Mr. & Mrs. Hy. Woodall, Sevenoaks	10	10	0
Mr. T. M. Chalmers, Wakefield ..	10	0	0
Mr. G. H. Crook, Southport ..	10	0	0
Mr. Philip D. Holt, Liverpool ..	10	0	0
Mr. Robert D. Holt, Liverpool ..	10	0	0
Rev. Lawrence Scott, Denton ..	10	0	0
Mrs. Charles Taylor, Bolton (2nd don.) ..	10	0	0
Mr. B. G. Ussher, London (2nd don.)	8	8	0
Miss Mary T. Worsley, Clifton (2nd don.) ..	5	10	0
Rev. R. Nicol Cross, Leeds ..	5	5	0
Mr. J. Leslie Harwood, London ..	5	5	0
Mr. John Sale, Northampton ..	5	5	0
Miss E. A. Carter, Hove ..	5	0	0
Miss F. Jones, London (2nd don.)	5	0	0
Miss L. Jones, London (2nd don.)	5	0	0
Miss R. L. Notcutt, London ..	5	0	0
Mr. F. W. Turner, London ..	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Norman P. Booth, Bournemouth ..	3	0	0
Mr. W. H. Travers, Liverpool ..	2	10	0
Mrs. W. H. Travers, Liverpool ..	2	10	0
Mr. John Gregson, Bolton ..	2	2	0
Mrs. Bredall, Croydon ..	2	0	0
Mrs. Haselden, Bolton ..	2	0	0
Mr. W. S. Jones, Aberystwyth ..	2	0	0
Smaller sums and Collections to be announced later ..	12	7	3
Total Donations promised (of which £500 is conditional on the £50,000 being promised by next Whitsuntide) ..	44,389	7	9
Total new and increased annual subscriptions ..	107	0	6

Donors of Ten Guineas become Life Members of the Sustentation Fund.

Copies of the complete list of Donations to November 10 may be obtained from Mr.
Harwood.

Cheques should be crossed, made payable and forwarded to the Treasurer, Mr. F. W. MONKS, Stonecroft, Warrington.

All other communications should be addressed to the Secretary, the Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A., 60, Howitt-road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartment, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Son.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW VOLUME!

Now is the time to start subscribing to

"YOUNG DAYS."

Our Young People's Own Magazine,

Edited by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT, F.R.S.L.

CONTENTS OF THE JANUARY NUMBER:—

A Tale of a Tail told by Two. (Illustrated.)
Tony Bear's Christmas Tree.
To Greet the New Year. (Full-page Picture.)
The Lost Hair of Mound Hall. Chap. I.
Pluck. (Poetry.)
Temperance Ideas.
The Value of Song. (Poetry.)
Mother Nature's Children. (Illustrated.)
The Boy at the Top of the Hill.
Young Days' Guild Work.
Where, O where are our Little Coats?
(Poetry and Pictures.)
The Coward.
The Camel's Complaint. (Poetry.)
Puzzles and Puzzlers.
Editor's Chat, &c.

PRICE ONE PENNY MONTHLY.

Annual Subscription, by Post, One Copy, 1s. 6d.

Published by
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

GOLDEN GRAINS

THOUGHTS OF MANY MINDS.

Compiled by LADY AGATHA RUSSELL,
with a Preface by FREDERIC HARRISON, Litt.D.

Royal 16mo. Cloth, 2s. net.

Published by JAMES NISBET & CO., Ltd., 22, Berner
Street, London, W.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.
January

11. Rev. Professor PHILEMON MOORE, of Carmarthen College.
18. Rev. Thomas Paxton, of Bradford.
25. Rev. ROBERT F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.,
Assistant Minister of Ullet Road
Church, Liverpool.

NEWHALL HILL CHURCH

(Temporary Meeting Room), Villa Road, Handsworth,
BIRMINGHAM.

MORTGAGE WANTED for £1,000
at 4 per cent., security freehold land
1,317 yards and buildings of the old Newhall Hill Church, &c., Birmingham, until such time the aforesaid is unsold.—Apply Messrs.
RYLANDS, MARTINEAU & CARSLAKE, Solicitors,
Cannon-street, Birmingham; or Mr. S. S.
WOOLLASTON, The Avenue, Acock's-Green,
Birmingham.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a
Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20
Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

Next Term begins January 17.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO. PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to

C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNY MOUNT SCHOOL, BISHOP'S STORTFORD.

Head Mistress: Miss ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: Miss ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

Next Term begins on January 21, 1914.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M.

Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—
Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road
Maida-vale, W

INTERNATIONAL GUILD (London
Branch), Hostel for Women Students,
3, Brunswick-square, W.C. (near British Museum and University College).—Full Board from £19 to £26 for a term of 13 weeks.—For particulars apply to Miss E. S. WILLIAMS,
3, Brunswick-square, or Miss C. WICKSTEED,
International Guild, 6, rue de la Sorbonne,
Paris.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only,

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church)
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for January 11:

Morning: Messengers to the Times.

Evening: Church Decay and Religious Revival.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, January 11.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. Dr. MORITZ WESTON.
 Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PRIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.; 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON, "Conversion."
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.; 6.30, subject, "The God we Worship."
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. R. W. SORENSON; 7, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. T. B. SPEDDING.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.A.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Mr. W. H. SANDS.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. S. MOSSOP; 6.30, Mr. F. COTTIER.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. PHILEMON MOORE, B.A.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. AUSTIN.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Church-gate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 {DEAN ROW, 10.45, and
 {STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, B.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EVESHAM, Oat-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. E. WILLIAMS.
 GEE CROSS, 11, Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON; 6.30, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. ODGERS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. W. COCK.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREAEE.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTE.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

BIRTHS.

AUSTIN.—On January 7, at 31, Wheeley's-road, Edgbaston, Birmingham, to the Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Austin, a son.
 ENRIQUEZ.—On January 4, at "Arden," 46, Sheepcote-road, Harrow, to Mr. and Mrs. Albert Enriquez, a daughter (Elsa Coventry).
 SWANNELL.—On December 22, at 12, Naylor-road, Whetstone, to William Henry and Sadie Swannell, a son.

DEATH.

THOMPSON.—On January 8, at Childrey, in her 71st year, Ellen Thompson, sometime Matron of the Dutch Alms-houses, and for 54 years a beloved attendant, nurse and friend in the families of Solly, Wicksteed, and Sharpe.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds of MSS. carefully and promptly copied.—Miss KENNEDY, 20, County Grove, Camberwell, S.E.

LADY seeks re-engagement as Companion, or Companion Help. Elderly lady preferred. Good needlewoman.—C. M. S., 163, Kyverdale-road, Stamford Hill, N.

TRAINED NURSE, masseuse cert., experienced, requires visiting cases. Highly recommended.—Miss RUSH, 55, George-street, Portman-square, W.

WANTED.—Caretaker and House-keeper at a Northern Mission; husband and wife preferred.—Write X. X., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

YOUNG DUTCH LADY, student, certificated tutoress, French, German, Mathematics, Geography, Physics, &c., possessing certificate for English and plain needlework, wishes to go to England or America as a governess or a housekeeper's assistant.—Apply, Miss A. S. BERGSMAN, Mantgum, Netherlands.

PULPIT SUPPLY.

Rev. A. LANCASTER, 64, Stockbridge-road, Padiham.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken
 Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	19	The Call of Canada	24	FOR THE CHILDREN :—
THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN PULPIT :—		The Pulpit Bible	25	Jesus, Our Teacher and Friend	27
The Inclusiveness of Christ	20			MEMORIAL NOTICE :—
ORGANISATION AND LIFE	22	BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—		Mrs. Thomas Ashton	28
THE CONTRIBUTION OF OUR AGE TO RELIGIOUS		Lord Morley's Book of Wisdom	25	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
EXPERIENCE.—I.	22	Dr. Abbott's New Testament Studies	25	South African Letter	28
CORRESPONDENCE :—		Irish Literary and Musical Studies	26	Native Labour and Government Policy	30
The Kikuyu Controversy and the Catholic		Initiation into Literature	26	Side-Lights on Kikuyu	30
Church of the Future	23	The Religious Instinct	26	Colenso and the Bishops	30
Chapels where Mark Rutherford Preached	24	Ezra and Nehemiah	27	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	30
		The Secret Hill	27	NOTES AND JOTTINGS	31
		Publications Received	27	OUR CHESS COLUMN	32

 * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

LONDON has been besieged for a week by conferences on education. The most important of them has been the Conference of Educational Associations at which Lord Bryce gave the inaugural address. He dwelt specially upon our failure to forge close links between University education and the business world, as has been done in the United States, and the regrettable lack of intellectual keenness in many English boys. Why, he asked, did the English boy not care more for his work in school, and care more for knowledge after he had left school? Was it the fault of the schools, or of the parents, or was it because the passion for amusement was now exceptionally strong? Or had other competing interests, such as that portentously engrossing interest in athletic competitions to which the constantly growing columns and pages devoted to "sport" in our newspapers bare witness, grown so rank as to choke the love of knowledge? Lord Bryce did not attempt to answer these questions, but his statement of them is provocative of thought, and the fact that they do not sound exaggerated or unreasonable suggests that there is a serious problem of national inefficiency and intellectual waste which must be faced.

* * *

We did not expect that our desire for an explanation of Mr. McKenna's refusal to act in the Blasphemy case would be gratified. But the unexpected has happened, and the attempt to explain has only given a new edge to the controversy. In a letter written by the Under-Secretary of State two issues are confused, and the confusion has been transferred from his letter to the public mind. It appears that Stewart was prosecuted for indecency the day after his conviction for blasphemy and was acquitted. Because he carried on an undesirable propaganda, for which the police were unable to procure a conviction against him; it is apparently suggested that he may rightly be punished more severely for blasphemy. This we hold to be fundamentally unjust. If this is not the implication of the official letter we fail to understand the attempt to raise public prejudice against Stewart on matters lying outside the blasphemy charge. As Professor Gilbert Murray writes: (1) "The present Blasphemy Laws are, as Canon Holland has put it, both obsolete and unjust." (2) "It is highly unsatisfactory to use these unjust laws as a sort of dodge for getting into prison people whom we believe to be bad influences but whom we cannot convict of any legal offence."

* * *

It is hardly necessary for us to add that we do not for one moment palliate the conduct of Stewart, or underestimate the danger to public morals, if he has offended in the way suggested. We wish that we could have made our protest against the Blasphemy Laws in a case which had not so many unpleasant features associated with it. But we must ask our readers to keep the distinction clearly in their minds between a public attack upon the Christian religion—the technical offence of blasphemy—and offences of an entirely different kind, which may deserve severe punishment when they can be brought home to the offender in a court of law. We object to prosecutions under the obsolete blasphemy laws as contrary to public policy and the true interests of religion, whether the accused be a scoundrel or a saint.

* * *

THERE has been some slight cessation this week of the Kikuyu storm which has been raging in the columns of the Times. We agree that it is a good thing that it should be so. A newspaper controversy may do as much to kindle partizanship as to help just judgment in a controversy, which requires careful handling and the absence of hot words. In the present case, however, some good purpose has been served. The strength of divergent opinions has been made clear, as well as the tenacity with which each side claims its rightful place within the Anglican fellowship. Moreover, the controversialist has been reminded that there is such a thing as an appeal to history. This is not a matter which can be decided à priori, or by driving a few sentences in the Prayer Book to their logical conclusion without paying any regard to their context or to the habits and traditions of a living society.

* * *

IN spite of the rebuke administered to us by Mr. Lloyd Thomas in a letter which we publish to-day, we are quite unrepentant about our comments of last week. We are still of opinion that the storm-centre of the present controversy is not the question of Broad Church subscription, but the attempt of the High Church party to capture the Church for their own exclusive position. The Bishop of Oxford makes it clear in his letter that the High Churchmen, and we do him no injustice in including him among them, will regard it as "strictly intolerable" if others are allowed to do things which they have long regarded as permissible. As we have pointed out, the High Church doctrine about the priesthood is in its very nature exclusive, but fortunately the Church of England is Protestant as well as Catholic. Its formularies are saturated with the spirit and teaching of the Reformation, and through long periods of its history it has inclined far more to the party of Reform than to the mediæval temper, which at the present time has captivated and captured many of the clergy, much, we fear, to their own undoing.

* * *

NOR do we think that our criticism of the Bishop of Oxford's position was unfair, at least as we are able to understand it. Of course it would be another matter if we were able to accept Dr. Gore as the one man who knows "where compromise is wise and legitimate, and where it is dishonourable and shameful." But with all our reverence for him as a fearless reformer, and even more—for this debt is of longer standing—as a religious teacher with a rare gift of insight into the heart of the Gospel, we are quite unable to join in any such pontifical act of homage. The difficulty is this. The Bishop is not the only man who "knows exactly what he wants," to quote the words used by Mr. Thomas. Other men of equal intelligence, and no less loyal to the spirit and order of the Church of England, as they understand them, do not agree with him. Who is to judge between them, if not the tolerance of common sense and the moderating spirit of history, often so much wiser and broader than our hasty decisions?

* * *

MOREOVER only a few years ago Dr. Gore himself was among the heretics. We remember well the storm which gathered round his head after the publication of "Lux Mundi." In the opinion of many sincere and able men of that day, he was guilty of "dishonourable and shameful" compromise. With the lapse of time his heresies have almost sunk into oblivion. But it is not fair to expect the heresies of younger men and the newer day to stop just at the point where Dr. Gore has chosen to say "thus far but no farther." His own religious position, so far as it has been revealed to the world, is based largely on the selective principle of private judgment. We are glad that it is so, though his use of private judgment seems to us to lead him to some strange and baffling conclusions, and even to betray him at times into courses of action, which coming from him do not seem to other men to be either reasonable or fair.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN PULPIT.

THE INCLUSIVENESS OF CHRIST.

BY THE REV. HENRY GOW.

"John said unto him, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name and we forbade him, because he followeth not with us. But Jesus said, Forbid him not; . . . for he that is not against us is for us."—MARK ix. 38, 39.

IT is not difficult to reconstruct the incident in connection with which those words of Jesus were spoken.

Some young man had heard Jesus preaching the Gospel, and had been deeply moved. He did not go up to Jesus and talk with him at the close of the address. He did not attempt to enrol himself formally as a disciple. He went away silently and thankfully, feeling that the spirit of his life was changed. He returned home and began to speak and to heal in the name of Jesus. He believed that the Gospel called him to work for God and man, but he did not feel the necessity of joining the circle of the disciples. Perhaps he had heard Jesus saying such words as those in the Sermon on the Mount: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of God, but he that doeth the will of my Father in heaven." He had no outward authorisation from the disciples, no direct connection with them; he felt that the inward authorisation was enough. But the disciples, when they found him preaching and casting out devils in the name of Jesus, did not approve of his conduct. He had not joined himself to them. He had not been examined. He had not received permission. His work was not being performed under their ægis. It did not bring any strength to their organisation. It was a sporadic, individual effort. If men were allowed to speak and act and live as Christians without joining the central organisation of Christianity, the movement, they thought, would soon fall into great confusion. He could not be recognised. All Christians must come inside the ring. They must be formally admitted and approved by Jesus and his disciples. Everyone outside must be regarded as a non-Christian. By this means order would be preserved, and it would be easy to draw clear and definite lines of separation. It would be an intolerable breach of discipline, so the disciples thought, to allow men to be unattached Christians. The unattached must be regarded as non-Christians or schismatics; they could not be recognised, or permitted to cast out devils in the name of Jesus.

It was against this narrow view of Christianity as essentially a formal organisation or Church that Jesus spoke the words of my text: "Forbid him not; for he that is not against us is for us." He rejoiced to hear of this young man's good works. He welcomed him as a fellow-labourer and a disciple, although he had not connected himself outwardly with the disciples. It is a significant and noble expression of the freedom of Christianity, of the invisible union of men who strive in their own ways to follow Jesus; it is a great declaration on the part of Jesus that men are Christians, not because they belong to a particular organisation or profess a particular creed, but by unity of spirit and of aim.

On this New Year's Sunday, when we are looking out into the future, I want to consider with you the present position and tendency of Church communion. We are all aware of the strange state of excitement and controversy which exists at the moment in the great Anglican Church through a certain incident which has taken place in the mission field in Africa. As you probably know, a number of Protestant missionaries met together a short time ago for conference in Kikuyu. There were Anglicans, Presbyterians, Baptists and Wesleyans amongst them. They felt that, for their own sake and for the sake of their common work, it was good for them to meet together in friendly counsel. They realised, what their supporters at home often fail to realise, that it was a serious stumbling-block to them in their efforts to convert the natives when they quarrelled with or opposed one another. These childish peoples have a certain wisdom of childhood from which more civilised peoples may learn important lessons. It is possible to give them an idea of Christianity as a Gospel of love, of self-sacrifice, of honour and purity. It is possible to teach them reverence for Jesus and to lead them to believe in the Fatherhood of God. But they cannot understand the differences between Protestant Christians. If a man has been converted by an Anglican clergyman, if he has put away his superstitious polytheism and is trying to live in accordance with the teachings of Jesus, he is quite ready to attend a Presbyterian or a Baptist Church when he moves into another district. He cannot see any vital distinction amongst those Churches, and if you could make him feel any vital distinction it would be an offence and a hindrance to him in his upward path. He is inclined to say, Settle your differences at home before you come out here to convert us. How can we decide which of you is right? It is very likely, if you force him to realise the differences among Christians, that he will relapse again into heathendom. You can teach him to understand a little of Christianity, but if you insist on his becoming an Anglican or a Baptist or a Presbyterian, and command him to condemn all other forms of Christianity, he falls into utter confusion, and is inclined to reject Christianity itself. This is what our Christian missionaries of all sects are realising more and more clearly. Childish nations by their simplicity are forcing them to a union, which the more cultivated intellect of orthodox Christians at home is unwilling to accept. So true is it, as Jesus says, that God has hidden these things from the wise and from the understanding, and has revealed them unto babes.

In this missionary conference to which I have referred, under the influence of such experiences, there was a united Communion service. It was held in a Preached at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, on Sunday, January 4, 1914.

Presbyterian church, the Anglican Service was read, two Bishops took part in administering the Communion, and all present, Baptists, Wesleyans, Presbyterians and Anglicans, broke bread and drank wine together in memory of Jesus, uniting together in fellowship and loyalty to their leader and their Lord. Another African Bishop, not present on the occasion, heard with horror of this Communion service, and sent off letters to England, indicting his two brother bishops for heresy. They were, in his opinion, no longer worthy to be bishops of the English Church for having administered the Sacrament to Baptists and Presbyterians and partaken of it with them.

We know what a sensation has been produced in the English Church at home. Honoured Anglicans are divided from each other most seriously upon the question. Dean Hensley Henson and other Broad and Evangelical Churchmen support the action of the two bishops and express entire approval of their conduct. On the other hand, such a strong, courageous, and honoured leader as Bishop Gore, the Bishop of Oxford, writes with firm and sorrowful condemnation of their action, and he is supported by most High Churchmen. To Bishop Gore it seems like the beginning of the disruption of the Anglican Church if such promiscuous fellowship and communion is allowed. They take gloomy views of the future; they insist on the exclusiveness of the Anglican Church. No man or woman who has not been confirmed should be admitted to the Communion. No Church building can be regarded as a church unless it has been consecrated according to Anglican rites. No minister can be regarded as a minister unless he has been ordained by a bishop. No one claiming to be a Christian can be accepted by Anglicanism as a true Christian unless he has been baptized and confirmed according to the prescribed forms. Non-conformist missionaries are unauthorised teachers, with whom no communion can be held. This is the position of the High Church party in the English Church.

It is impossible to say what will happen. Very probably the excitement will die away and the fundamental differences of opinion amongst the Anglicans will be covered up again for a time and ignored. That is the kind of advice which an old man like Professor Sanday gives. He does not attempt to divide between the two points of view. He merely urges peace and forgetfulness. It is not a very satisfactory solution, and it cannot be a permanent one.

This claim to exclusiveness is deeply rooted in a certain section of the Anglican Church, and is based on a belief in Apostolical Succession and on the necessity of order and discipline and the divine origin of Episcopacy. According to them, the Roman and Greek and Anglican Churches are the only true churches in Christendom. All other so-called churches have no vital connection with Jesus. They are mere amorphous sects, whose ministers have no right to preach, and whose members are in a state of schism outside the Church of Christ. The High Anglicans do very much what the disciples did. They forbid men to cast out devils in the name of Christ, because they follow not with us. It is the spirit of sectarian exclusiveness, which Jesus condemned, that is being exhibited by Bishop Gore and his followers.

Now I think it has to be admitted that exclusiveness, as a working policy, has a certain advantage. The Churches which, like the Roman Catholic and High Anglican, claim with sincere faith that they possess exclusive powers and privileges, do make a special appeal to certain types of people. It is attractive to belong to a well-organised society, into which we must enter in a defined way and for which, when we are members of it, we can claim a certain superiority. A great German philosopher, Professor Paulsen, has said, "The power of a religion to gain adherents is in inverse proportion to its tendency to mix with others." The more a Church insists on its own individuality, the more it stands apart from others and claims to be better than others, keeping itself alone in magnificent isolation, the more it will attract certain types of people. It will attract people who long to be superior, who desire, not universal communion and unity, but a firm and narrow fellowship. It appeals to that in human nature which desires order, discipline, clear marked limits, and to that lower element which, not feeling by itself superior, hopes to become superior by union with a superior organisation.

There is no doubt that one of the weaknesses of our own Church is its freedom. It is so easy to belong to it. No doctrinal questions are asked, no ceremonial initiation is involved. Anyone who feels in general sympathy with the services is welcomed not only as an attendant but as a full member. It lies with the individual and not with the Church to decide whether membership shall take place. We should gladly welcome a Roman Catholic, or an Anglican, or a Baptist, or a Presbyterian to our Communion service. We should say to him, We have no right or wish to forbid you joining with us. If you yourself desire to break bread and drink wine with us in memory of Christ and in unity of spirit, we rejoice to have you with us. We do not ask you what views you have about the nature of Christ or about the meaning of the Communion service. It is sufficient for us to know that you wish to join in our service, that you take part in simple sincerity, and that you feel the spirit of Jesus to be a great unifying influence, bringing together all those who love God and desire to serve their fellow-men.

To many people this seems a very loose, unorganised arrangement. To many it seems a cheapening and lowering of the meaning of a church. A church must distinguish itself more definitely, it must surround itself with restrictions and ceremonies, it must make demands on the beliefs of its adherents, it must learn how to close its doors, it must have some claim to exclusiveness. People do not want to join a church which is entirely and easily open to everybody. You must make it appear difficult, you must create conditions, you must distinguish yourself strongly from others if you would appeal to the world.

There is a fundamental distinction here of which the Roman Catholic and High Anglican Church on the one side, and our own free churches on the other are the extremes. So far as policy and government are concerned, there is a good deal to be said for the Roman Catholic and High Anglican view. So far as the spirit and teaching of Jesus are concerned, there can be with us no doubt that our doctrinal freedom and refusal to impose tests, and our ready welcome to all who desire to join with us, is justified.

But in defending this principle of freedom we run some risk of drifting into mere anarchy and of misunderstanding ourselves and our principles, which is much more serious than being misunderstood by others.

Conditions of Church membership there ought to be, even in the freest Church, not conditions imposed by a fallible Church from without, but conditions imposed by the individual conscience within. The responsibility of Church membership is not really less with us than with the Roman Catholic and High Anglican, but it is a responsibility for each man to settle with himself. We need to feel that responsibility much more strongly than we often do. As members of any Christian Church, however free and open, we are consciously and definitely dedicating ourselves to the Christ ideal, we are trying to live a noble and self-sacrificing life, we are confessing our faith in a divine law and love as the guide and rule of life, we are pressing on to the mark of our high calling in Jesus Christ. We are putting off all exclusiveness of prejudices and ill-will, all that separates us into classes or parties. In remembering regretfully the exclusiveness of other Churches, it is well to remember that it is possible even for members of a free, open Church like ours to be exclusive too. We may be exclusive in our sympathies, wanting in free open welcome and kindness of heart and ease of manner towards newcomers, content with our own friends and associates and careless about those brought up in other ways and with other kinds of thought. We may be exclusive in our attitude towards those who exclude us, or towards the masses who are indifferent to us. As congregations of like-minded men and women, we Free Christians are by no means always free from an inward exclusiveness, although our doors and our membership are so open to all.

On this New Year's Sunday, let us realise the joy and responsibility of our freedom and our opportunities. We have no outward form of doctrines which exclude, but we may have an inward exclusive spirit. We need a more generous vital Christian sympathy, a more ready, easy power of association with others, a more kindly manner even in our welcome to strangers.

Above all, as members of a Free Church, we need the sense of responsibility. We are not asked to make any doctrinal confession, or to go through any ceremonies of initiation, but membership of any Church involves real duties and responsibility. It involves the sincere taking part in worship and a real desire for religious fellowship. It means a deep sense of the importance of the inward life, a desire for peace with all the world, and a quiet firm trust in the divine leading and the divine love.

It is to strengthen each other in such ideals that we meet together for our public worship. We do not meet merely to listen to music or to a sermon or a prayer. We meet to sing and pray, to think of the things which belong unto our peace, to feel through communion with God our intimate relationship with all mankind and to gain help in the battle of life that we may be good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

ORGANISATION AND LIFE.

BY EDWARD LEWIS.

THERE are two tendencies observable alike in the life of the individual and in the life of society. The one is towards regularity, order, conformity, perfection of organisation, settlement; the other is towards irregularity, nonconformity, disturbance, rebellion, upthrust, challenge. The former is deathward, the latter lifeward. With Bergson in mind, the former is downward, the latter upward; the former is essentially materialistic, the latter essentially spiritual. The movement towards perfection—in the sense of organisation and order—is a movement into a blind alley. It is the place into which those things come which have left the mainstream of life. Utopia is death-land. Eden, and the New Jerusalem, are essentially the same; the one depicts as a garden what the other depicts as a city. Each is a state of finality and perfection. Each is dead alive. Each is void of promise. Each is innocent of ascending effort. Each is a full stop. Any alive soul, inhabiting either, would perforce become a fallen angel. Each is the haunt of him whom Nietzsche calls the "last man."

Let us try and imagine this "last man." He is not a fact, but rather the logical issue of a tendency. He is the last word in organisation. He is a perfect being perfectly adapted to a perfect environment. He has a Perfect Theology; he has no religious doubts; all have been settled to his complete satisfaction. With perfect clearness he knows whom he believes and why he believes. He has a Perfect Philosophy. There are no further questions worth asking. All the riddles have been solved. All secrets have been revealed. All knowledge is up in the light. He has a Perfect Science. Everything has been classed and duly related. Everything is properly labelled and pigeon-holed. There are no mysteries. He understands all knowledge. He has the complete cosmos. All is in order. He has achieved the Perfect Moral order in his heart. He is in no fear of making mistakes. He has a Perfect virtue. He never sins. He is beyond temptation. His will to goodness is matched with his knowledge of it. He always hits the right mark. He keeps all the commandments. His habits are as regular as they are approved. He is correct without effort. He never offends. His feelings never get the better of him. He goes where he ought to go, does what he ought to do, and never has an off-day, nor wants to have one. He needs nothing. He lives in what some would call the perfect socialistic state. The means and methods of production and distribution have been perfected. Supply and demand are in final equilibrium. There are no rich or poor. There are no masters or servants. "No shepherd, and one herd." He has no pungent ambition, for all are equal. He has no vital rivalries, for each man has his appointed place and fills it. All is shared. Everything belongs to everybody. His work is a pastime; it is in the manner of taking exercise for reasons of health. He tenants a perfect dwelling with perfect sanitation. Sickness and old age are provided for. And doubtless in such a State which makes everything easy there will be euthanasia, so that his long life may pass into the longer sleep through the chambers of beautiful dreams. This is the "last man" and the final Order. There is nothing beyond. It is perfect. It is cul de sac. It is the ultimate whither of organisation. We may take a very long time to arrive there; but many people and many movements are heading for it. The quickest way to it would be to discover that magic fluid of which Alice in Wonderland had the secret, and reduce ourselves to insects and occupy a vacated ants' nest.

The tendency is observable in much modern social movement which would eliminate the great incentives to progress—hunger, want, pain, hardship, and (in spite of its idealistic affirmations) inequalities, personal ambition, scope for fullest self-expression. Observable, too, in defenders of creeds, guardians of morals, upholders of the status quo, and suppressors of all dangerous persons.

Organisation, however necessary, is always at the expense of life-impulse and life-quality.

Order, however necessary, is always the enemy of progress. Happiness, which is the chief end of the Order, is not the true end of Life. Man may not be the last word of the divine creation, but just as every subhuman order existed to be surpassed, man himself may exist to be surpassed. The Order exists mainly in the interests of the weak people.

On the other hand, the wilderness, with all its risks, perils, hardness, and possibility of evil, is better than the city high-walled in safety and security and inhabited by a perfectly regulated and contented people. The highway of God always lies in the desert. To say this is to voice the opposite tendency. This is the true Christian tendency. "The kingdom of heaven," said Jesus, "is like unto ferment"; not like unto an organised Church, but like unto ferment.

The point in a man's life where there is ferment, is the point at which the higher kingdom is entering into him, and he into it. All his promise lies there. That area of his life which is regularised, well-ordered, conventional, conformed to standard, is comparatively unimportant; the point of ferment is the important point. All else is moribund; this is vital. There are those who would have their faith so settled that they would never be open to the disturbance of doubt. Others who would have their virtues so perfected that they would never be upset by making a mistake. Others so conformed to the social order, that no impulse or enthusiasm would ever have the chance of carrying them away out of bounds. How stupid! How traitorous to life! How faithless to the future!

The higher faith arrives in and through the experience of doubt—surely a commonplace. Safety lies in the neighbourhood of the creed; but salvation, the health of faith, lies in the neighbourhood of the doubt. Advance in moral insight is along the pathway of irregular impulses. It is true in the history of a soul, as in the history of England, that a new era begins when a man refuses to conform. The ferment is the thing. In that a man may be exceptional, irregular, unconventional, original, disorderly, let him publish his personality. It so often happens that the exception breaks the rule like a hammer and makes way for the higher law.

A man's exceptionality, originality, his unique spiritual reality in all fulness, directness, boldness, passion of self-expression—this is what the world needs, if it does not want, from him.

"I come not to bring peace, but a sword."

"Ye have heard that it hath been said, but I say—"

"One must still have chaos in one to give birth to a dancing star."

THE CONTRIBUTION OF OUR AGE TO RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

I.

HISTORIANS have a way of leaving out just the things we want to know. Mr. Birrell says, speaking of Wesley, "Our standard historians have dismissed him curtly. How much easier to weave into your page the gossip of Horace Walpole, to enliven it with a heartless jest of George Selwyn's, to make it blush with sad stories of the extravagance of Fox, to embroider it with the rhetoric of Burke . . . than to follow John Wesley into the streets of Bristol, or on to the bleak moors near Burslem." Even so fine a spirit among historians as John James Tayler scarcely knows what to do with Wesley and the Methodist experience. It is an accident, a by-product of the "Religious Life of England," rather than a first-rate, over-towering development. Its success is attributed to the inefficiency of the Church and the sleepiness of Dissent; "it represents no great idea, expresses no principle, is a mere outbreak of feeling." It will either be re-absorbed into the Church, or die out (pp. 266-7).

As the historians will not tell us, let us try to discover for ourselves how religious experience has developed through two of its great modern stages—the Quaker revival and the Methodist revival—and then, after getting some grasp of the difference between them (for they are different) examine the characteristic contribution of our own age.

The Quaker revival, unlike the Methodist, was a revival manqué. At the first its success was enormous. One has only to glance at the lists given by Prof. Lyon Turner, of Quaker conventicles in 1669 and 1672, to realise how the fire had run through town and country. Mr. T. E. Harvey says ("Rise of the Quakers") there were nearly 400 meetings in Yorkshire alone by the time of the Toleration Act of 1689. But in the year 1900 there were not 400 congregations in the whole of Great Britain. The spread of Quakerism was, so far as we can judge, much more rapid than that of Methodism was to be in the next century, and this makes the falling away and dying down of the movement all the more mournful. One passes through the villages of the north Yorkshire dales where George Fox poured out his soul, and the old, grey, deserted meeting houses seem to ask reproachfully: Why is there often no vestige of a memory of that great work which, if it had been permanent, might have made Wesley's movement unnecessary?

The answer is that both the problem that Fox's experience arose to meet, and the peculiar form of that experience, were quite temporary, and passed away together. Fox's conversion did not conform to the ordinary evangelical lines. His struggle and search were not for forgiveness and reconciliation, in the manner of John Bunyan. He sought for light rather than for salvation. That is, he wanted to know the nature of true religion in a man's heart. He was intensely perplexed by the failure of the Church and Puritanism alike to make men truly good. Everywhere he saw the formalism and unreality of official religion—the ceremonialism of the Church, the dogmatism of the Puritans. His own life had been singularly pure and well-conducted from childhood. So it was false religion, rather than bondage of the will, that caused his sorrow, and dictated by revulsion the character of his "new birth." Thus his problem was wider than that of Bunyan and the evangelicals. It was the whole nature of Revelation, the question how far an individual soul could have immediate knowledge of God—not simply the narrower, evangelical question of the personal moral life and its recovery. This narrower question was all along hovering about his thoughts, but it did not give the shape to his thoughts. What did give the shape to his thoughts was something akin to our modern problem of the Self. Men of to-day, to whom "inwardness" is a commonplace of religious talk, can often not see anything remarkable in the Quaker insistence on the Inner Light. But that is because "inwardness" means for them a vague spirituality, the mind shut up in itself and its own workings; they do not come to close grips with the problem of God's work in the soul; and this Fox saw to be fundamental. He wanted to be sure of the Immediacy of God's presence. He came so near, indeed, to our perplexities about "Immanence," that the action of God in nature puzzled him as it puzzles us to-day. Thus in the "vale of Beaver," a temptation beset him which said, "All things come by nature"; until a true voice came and said, "There is a living God who made all things." It was through this pre-occupation with the Immediacy of God that he also came to translate all the historic facts of Christianity into processes of his own mystical experience. Once, when he was with a company of Puritans who were discussing "the blood of Christ," he told them it must be sought in the heart and conscience, and his view met with much opposition. There is something very modern in this "spiritualising" tendency which Methodism quite missed. It is the modern note of simplification—the note which makes Lord Morley say (with some exaggeration) that Quakerism has been the most devout of all endeavours to turn Christianity into the religion of Christ. This simplifying note, by which historic Christianity was in danger of being spiritualised away into formless mystic states, is sufficient to account for the loosened grip of Quakerism upon the age after Fox's death. But for Fox himself there was no such danger. He knew what he wanted. He wanted to find his own Self. In this he reaches clean across two centuries to us to-day, for it is in this want that we also envisage our problem. But that does not mean that he was what we should now call an Individualist in religion. Most of the meaningless eulogies we hear of Fox and Quakerism go upon the assumption that his spiritual life was akin to the anarchic, self-directed, ego-centric reveries that pose as the "higher-thought" of our own period. Really, the whole travail and stress of his thought was a search for Authority—not for the authority, certainly, of priest or dogma, but just as certainly not the authority of the unguided Self. It was not a lawless Self throwing off authority. It was a boundless moral conviction seeking Authority. For him, as for us, that problem was solved as soon as his pent-up moral fervour could find for itself an Authority great enough to back it and give it an Absolute warrant. The whims of a Self are poor authority to set up against Church and Dogma. But how if it be really a Divine Self that is speaking within? That is what Fox now discovered to be the case. His hopes in priests and Puritans alike being gone, "so that I had nothing outwardly to help me, nor could I tell what to do, O! then I heard a voice which said 'There is one, even Christ Jesus, that can speak to thy condition,' and when I heard it my heart did leap for joy." Such was George Fox's conversion.

It is plain that the moral fervour of this experience was derived from the dominant conflict of the Puritan age, the conflict between formalism and "inwardness." As Mr. Harvey says, the Quakers found "that what hindered people from seeing the light was often not so much the living errors as the old dead truths." It is important to keep in mind the kind of "dead truths" against which Fox had to fight, for it was by them that his spiritual history was conditioned. It was a quite special and temporary situation. With the passing away of this situation the significant work of the original Quakerism was done. In one sense it was a failure. But in another sense it was successful, for it cleared the ground for those who came after, and made it possible for Wesley in particular to devote himself to certain more vital interests of religion.

W. WHITAKER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE KIKUYU CONTROVERSY AND THE CATHOLIC CHURCH OF THE FUTURE.

SIR,—It seems to me that you have failed in your usual fairness when commenting on Bishop Gore's letter in The Times. You dismiss it with the remark, "These are not the words of a peacemaker, except upon terms which he knows beforehand that men of evangelical or liberal views will refuse to accept, for they involve a complete surrender to the strictly sacerdotal position."

Bishop Gore is a sincere and clear-headed thinker, a fearless Christian, and a sane ecclesiastical statesman. He knows exactly what he wants; where compromise is wise and legitimate, and where it is dishonourable and shameful. He co-operates in the most liberal-minded way wherever co-operation is possible. Those of us who have been associated with him in Social Service work know that a more candid and brotherly spirit does not exist among us. I do not say this in Bishop Gore's interest, and I would not be guilty of the impertinence of presuming to defend him. I say it because I think we ought to understand this Kikuyu controversy a little better and see what is at the bottom of it.

Without going into the wider issue of Bishop Willis's proposed federation of the sects for the ultimate formation of a native church in British East Africa on the basis of the Apostles' and Nicene Creed, the absolute authority of Holy Scripture, the Deity of Jesus Christ and his atoning death as the ground of our forgiveness, let us fasten on the single fact of the "open Communion" that took place. In June last some sixty missionaries, including Anglicans, Baptists, Methodists and Friends, assembled at the East African village of Kikuyu for conference on their mission work. At the close of this conference there was a celebration of the Holy Communion in the Scottish Presbyterian Church by the Anglican Bishop Peel of Mombasa. Bishop Willis of Uganda was also present. The liturgy used was that of the Church of England; the sermon was preached by a minister of the Church of Scotland. The Communion was open to all members of the sects represented. From the undogmatic non-subscribing position all this may appear as an excellent example of progress in Christian unity and co-operation. But that is not the real point at issue. Is this co-operation permissible to the State established, dogmatically constituted Church of England? Surely not. The Rubric of the Church of England limits admission to Communion to those confirmed or willing and desirous to be confirmed. To disregard this restriction is an act which loyal Churchmen may rightly resent. Especially is this so when taken in the context of the Conference and its proposed Federation. It is only just another instance of pledged priests playing fast and loose with their ordination vows and terms of subscription. And if we are going to say that these things do not matter, then why are we not side by side with the Modernists working inside the Church of England (or the Church of Rome) for real freedom and inclusiveness? Is it not precisely because we agree with Bishop Gore that these things do matter; that sincere and honourable men must have regard to their solemn vows and to the basal principles of their ecclesiastical fellowship? But the Kikuyu incident is only the occasion for long suppressed antagonisms to reveal themselves. I remember speaking to a Church of England clergyman many months ago—an editor of an influential Church of England paper—on the prospects of religion in this country, and more particularly of his own Church. He said, "There must be a split, and that pretty soon." I was amazed at his tone of certainty, for I imagined that the Anglican genius for compromise would be able to continue in some sort of make-believe unity for a long time to come. But my friend had no manner of doubt about it. The various sections in the Anglican body were too many and too intensely hostile. Who can reconcile (a) the modernists of the extreme critical non-miraculous school like the Rev. J. M. Thompson and some of the writers of "Foundations," (b) the ignorant, unintelligent, old-fashioned Bible-Protestant, (c) the extreme High Churchman, narrow, mediæval, aristocratically exclusive and Tory, always dreaming of Reunion with Rome, and perhaps plotting for it, (d) the educated, liberal-minded Evangelical, orthodox in heart, because essentially building on his personal experience of the redeeming power of the Ever-living Christ, but heretical in head simply because cultured and open-minded enough to be influenced by modern scholarship, (e) the Moderate High Churchman, essentially English and un-Roman in his Catholicism, passionately loyal to the Church of England, often broad in theology, and usually modern in his social and democratic sympathies? These are only the main divisions. There are besides curious cross-sections. What sincere unity can exist among such? Do we wonder that the cry is rising from more than one quarter—In things essential, Unity. "Who can dwell with perpetual burnings?"

This, it seems to me, is exactly what Bishop Gore has been trying to get the Church of England to face, and I for one honour him for it. Permit me to quote at some length from his letter, for the matter is crucial and may mark a new ecclesiastical era:—

"I doubt if the cohesion of the Church of England was ever more seriously threatened than it is now. The reason of this is that three sections of the Church are pursuing their own principles to a point where they become really intolerable to the main body of their fellow members. [Note that Bishop Gore does not identify himself with any one of these three extreme sections, but is writing in the interests of "the main body of their fellow-members."] I mean that—

"(1) The critical school is maintaining that it is legitimate for a clergyman to hold his official position while repudiating in published writings the miracles in which he must affirm his belief each time he says the Creed.

"(2) The extreme school among those who specially value the name of Catholics seem to be adopting a position from which the familiar views of Evangelical Churchmen must be pronounced to be strictly heretical.

"(3) The Evangelical portion of the Church, in its zeal for union among Protestants, is giving its approval to the 'open Communion.' . . . I feel quite sure that to the great mass of High Churchmen such an open Communion seems to involve principles so totally subversive of Catholic order and doctrine as to be strictly intolerable, in the sense that they could not continue in a fellowship which required them to tolerate the recurrence of such incidents. . . . I do seriously think that unless the great body of the Anglican Church can again speedily arrive at some statement of its principles such as will avail to pull it together again in a unity comprehensive, but intelligible and compatible with the moral principle of sincerity of profession, it will go the certain way to disruption."

If it be consistent with modesty I should like to say I entirely agree with Bishop Gore. Either disruption or a unity on some statement of principles comprehensive, but intelligible and compatible with the moral principle of sincerity of profession, is the only course for the Church of England. The scandal of the present condition must terminate. If Anglicanism wants to observe its own dogmatic basis (as Bishop Gore does), then let it be stated clearly and without equivocation and let its members accept that basis; or, if they cannot, let them be honest and honourable enough to come out of the Anglican Church. The present laxity and evasion and moral compromise constitute an offence against veracity and straight dealing, and must continue to breed spiritual corruption, hatred, suspicion and strife. As a Free Catholic, I am all for the open Communion, remembering that Christ tolerated Judas Iscariot at the Last Supper, and even after the treachery called him "Friend." In Church-life I take whatever risk there may be involved in an absolute trust in the guiding and organising power of the Divine Spirit. I repose perfect confidence in the ultimately victorious power of Christ over the hearts and minds of men. If God in Christ, and in his saints and martyrs and heroes, dead and alive, cannot organise men into a free and voluntary unity, no dogmas or constitutions or form of words will ever succeed in organising them into a compulsory unity.

The real live issue which the Kikuyu controversy has made to emerge once more is this—Shall we have a sincerely bound and compulsory Catholicism or a sincerely free and voluntary Catholicism? We agree with Bishop Gore in demanding sincerity and in preferring disruption to a sham and fraudulent "Unity." We disagree with him because he fails to accept as the only true solution the Free Catholicism of Christ, who with freedom set us free, so that we should never again be entangled in a yoke of bondage. "The only infallible guardian of Truth is the Spirit of Truthfulness," and the only infallible maker and sustainer of Church-unity is the free unjudaised Spirit of Christ. Where the Spirit of Christ is, there is liberty. "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out."—Yours, &c.,

J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham.

January 5, 1914.

THE CHAPELS IN WHICH MARK RUTHERFORD PREACHED.

SIR,—Miss Kensett's letter has raised an interesting question. The editor of the British Weekly, who has shown considerable interest in the matter, has stated pretty positively that the evidence points to Billingshurst as being the seat of Mr. Hale White's labours, but when asked for proofs his columns were silent. Miss Kensett assumes that it is Ditchling referred to in the Autobiography, and the records of the chapel show that a Mr. White preached there; but so far as the book is concerned, the only support for this theory lies in the place being described as D—. May I point out that the Autobiography gives the locality as being in the Eastern Counties? The chapel was of Presbyterian origin, one of those "red brick buildings from the time of Queen Anne," and had an endowment of £100. As we read can't we who know the district see the chapel in our mind's eye? Then the country is described. Mark had been minister of an Independent Chapel in a town ten miles from the sea which lay to the east, and a small river ran through the High-street. Some distance away on the west were soft swelling hills. The Unitarian Chapel to which he was appointed was in a large village, half town, a few miles away. While there he rambled among the hills, on the south side of which was a spot famous for butterflies. One of his congregation was a retired brassfounder, whose business had been in a town where Unitarianism flourished. Might not this be Norwich? It is stated on good authority that the Autobiography must be regarded as fiction. Still fiction has generally a basis of experience; and if the author only ministered to one congregation in a county full of General Baptist traditions, how is it he is so familiar with the conditions prevailing in the Eastern Counties? Can the minute books of any of our chapels there help to clear up the mystery?—Yours, &c.,

E. CAPLETON.

113, Highbury New Park, Jan. 5, 1914.

THE CALL OF CANADA.

SIR,—To me the most gratifying note in Mr. Bowie's letter is that there is still a grand opportunity for the presentation of our Unitarian Gospel in Canada, that the kingdom may yet be ours, despite the fact of our long neglect of the call. Few of your readers at home can form an adequate opinion of the isolation felt by many Unitarians, who, in addition to the struggles incident to a pioneer's life, have to submit to obloquy, or throw in their lot with churches which they cannot conscientiously support and whose teachers often delight in minifying the doctrines these people hold most sacred. I have known many such people in Canada. In Victoria, B.C., over a quarter of a century ago, among others, I met ex-members of the Sheffield congregation who attended in Mr. Brooke Herford's time. They spoke most affectionately of our Dr. Herford and treasured a few of his sermons and other Unitarian publications. The faithfulness and loyalty of these people was a splendid testimony to the earlier life at home, and, in new surroundings where they were misunderstood, was a brave witness to the principles which they knew were spoken against almost everywhere. I am delighted to hear that Mr. Bowie became acquainted with some of these old friends who were associated with me in founding the Unitarian Church in Victoria over twenty-five years ago. Fancy! Serving all these years mainly by standing and waiting.

These people and others like them are brave and faithful, and are entitled to know whether they are really cared for by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, or are to become converts to augment the ranks of other bodies who, sooner or later, may prevent us from getting a foothold after the hardest work has been done. It is not improbable that many of these faithful people at home, unless provided for in the new country, will lapse from church-going and say that the B. & F.U.A. had no interest in them.

I hope, Sir, you will keep your columns open for the discussion of this question until the "powers that be," whoever they may be, take active steps to provide young men, the number of years does not matter, for those posts where there is everything to be gained and nothing to be lost in our greatest oversea Dominion.—Yours, &c.,

W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Lewisham, January 6, 1914.

THE PULPIT BIBLE.

SIR,—I would like to suggest to any who cannot manage their public readings without making pencil marks upon the page, that among their New Year resolutions they should include this: Never to mark a Pulpit Bible that is not their own. Having recently spent some time in erasing from ours (as far as I could) a series of more or less ancient "scores"—sometimes, alas, too deep to be removed without defacing the print—I have learned something alike as to the varieties of selection and as to methods employed in indicating the passages selected. Some of both may be described as rather curious. But I hesitate about an adjective rightly applicable to the taste, not to say the morals, of persons who take the liberty of striking their marks through verses and paragraphs, bracketting, double-lining, affixing arrow-heads, and so forth, in a book that belongs to other people. Several useful collections of Biblical lessons are available for those who cannot readily follow their own note of chapters and verses; and if none of these is wholly satisfactory, the reader may find advantage in writing the whole lesson out—as my friend Frank Walters, I think, invariably did. He can then "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest" as fully as he is moved to do.—Yours, &c.,

W. G. TARRANT.

Wandsworth, Jan. 6, 1914.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

LORD MORLEY'S BOOK OF WISDOM.

Notes on Politics and History. By Viscount Morley, O.M. London: Macmillan & Co. 2s. 6d. net.

THERE is no adequate way of giving an account of Lord Morley's Manchester University Address in its published form except by the method of quotation, and the difficulty is that when once quotation begins there is no reason why it should end. He calls it Notes, and the title dispenses him from slavery to consecutive argument, and gives full play to his genius for flashing suggestion and aphoristic wisdom. It is a book not to be read through rapidly and then put aside, but to be used page by page as matter for meditation; for here he garners for us in rich full sentences what history has taught him of the guiding principles of life, or personal experience has revealed of "those habits of mind and temper upon which, along with knowledge of the right facts, the soundness of opinion depends." Here it will not be unfitting if we confine our attention chiefly to some parts of the address in which his thought stands in close relation to moral ideals and religious practice. In an early passage he provokes us to serious reflection upon the meaning of Religious Liberty, "in France and Italy a burning question; in Ireland, Scotland, and even England, by no means a mere handful of dead historic ashes." After a series of questions, which he leaves us to answer for ourselves—it is his excellent device for saving us from mental laziness—and in face of the fact that religious watchwords, "inspired by political and racial resentments" are still in use among highly civilised communities, he concludes,

"Still, we may fairly say that in our State at least, within a single generation, a law of tolerance—not indifference, not scepticism, not disbelief, but one of those deep, silent transformations that make history endurable—has really worked its way not merely into our statutes and courts of justice, but into manners, usage, and the common habits of men's minds."

Elsewhere he says, as a pendant to Rousseau's statement that man is born free, "man is born intolerant, and of all ideas toleration would seem to be in the general mind the very latest." Or he dwells on the fixities of human things as illustrated by Language, and then passes on to survey the indestructible element in religion.

"If we survey the far-stretching cosmorama of religions in their vast history, how steadfastly the name, the rites, the practices, and traditions, and intense attachment to them all, persist even after reasoning and comparative methods seem to have plucked up or worn away the dogmatic roots."

A reference to De Maistre is illuminated with this acute observation, "He was that compound of the profound mystic with man of the world, which often causes us so much surprise—unreasonable and unconsidered, for few compounds are more common even in a rationalistic age." But we have said already that the temptations to quote are unlimited and hard to resist. Everywhere Lord Morley's great characteristics as thinker and writer are present, in forms which are not the less delightful because they have been so long familiar, his large-minded enthusiasms, his just patriotism—"to deride patriotism marks impoverished blood, but to extol it as an ideal or an impulse above truth and justice, at the cost of the general interests of humanity, is far worse," his belief in progress, which is no automaton, but dependent always upon personal initiative, and in all the higher reaches of political thinking, his unfailing loyalty to Burke. Burke's "splendid pieces on the contest with the American colonies," he describes as "the profoundest manual of civil wisdom that our greatest literature possesses." We may close our pleasant task of sampling these treasures of wisdom with a tribute to Mazzini, which shows that Lord Morley has not abated one jot of the moral fervours of his youth:—

"Among the glowing spirits who have been pillars of cloud by day, and pillars of fire by night—agents in transforming abstract social idealism into violent political demand—after Rousseau in date, Mazzini came . . . Without forgetting the splendid elevation of Channing, most eloquent of American divines, in the struggles for human freedom in Northern America, the Italian was in wider range than politics the most fervid moral genius of his time. No other man of his century ever united intense political activity with such affluence of moral thought and social feeling."

DR. ABBOTT'S NEW TESTAMENT STUDIES.

The Fourfold Gospel. Section I. Introduction by Edwin A. Abbott. Cambridge, at the University Press. 2s. 6d. net.

Miscellanea Evangelica (I). By Edwin A. Abbott. Cambridge, at the University Press. 2s. net.

THERE is no writer on the New Testament so baffling to the reviewer as Dr. Abbott, not on account of his obscurity, but because his work is planned on such a vast scale and carried through with a massive apparatus of learning worthy of a Benedictine of St. Maur. We want to see the whole before we can fitly appreciate the parts, and then few beside himself will be equal to the task of judgment. The spirit which animates him is exemplified in the beautiful words of the dedication of "The Fourfold Gospel," "To those who are willing to undertake the study of the four Gospels as imperfect documents in the belief that their very imperfections were permitted or ordained to draw us nearer through the letter to the spirit of the Perfect Life which they imperfectly describe." The volume is occupied with questions of Gospel chronology and arrangement; but we think that interest will centre chiefly round the last chapter, on "Order and Arrangement in John." In his preface Dr. Abbott confesses that he has come to attach greater historical importance to John than formerly. "I find that the Fourth Gospel," he writes, "in spite of its poetic nature, is closer to history than I had supposed. The study of it, and especially of those passages where it intervenes to explain expressions in Mark altered or omitted by Luke, appears to me to throw new light on the words, acts, and purposes of Christ, and to give increased weight to His claims on our faith and worship." Apparently Dr. Abbott is now prepared to regard the Gospel as genuinely Johannine in this sense, that it contains the gospel which was preached by the Apostle though it owes its literary form to a disciple. Among special points we may mention the discussion of the use of the Jewish Calendar in John. In this respect it is far more Jewish than the other Gospels, which omit all reference to any of the annual Feasts except the Passover.

"Miscellanea Evangelica" has been published in a cheap form with a view to criticism before the volume is issued to which it will form an appendix. It contains three essays, "Nazarene and Nazoraean," "The Disciple that was 'known unto the High Priest,'" and "The Interpretation of Early Christian Poetry." Of these the first strikes us as the most important, as it throws light upon one of the titles which was given to Jesus. Dr. Abbott's argument is briefly this, that (1) 'Nazarene,' meaning a man of Nazareth, and (2) 'Nazoraean,' meaning the Nétzer or Rod of Jesse mentioned by Isaiah, were probably interchanged by a play on the two words; so that the populace acclaiming Jesus as the Life-giver and Healer, altered 'Jesus the Nazarene' into 'Jesus the Nazoraean.' If this contention is correct, and it depends upon a long argument, a large part of which can only be appreciated by a student of Semitic philology, then the title in familiar use in the Gospels was one of honour and had no direct reference to the place of birth. It is a tempting hypothesis, for the recurrent use of the place-name seems to have little purpose and is hard to justify. "What have we to do with thee, thou Jesus the Life-giver," gives a stronger and richer meaning than "thou Jesus of Nazareth."

IRISH LITERARY AND MUSICAL STUDIES.

By Alfred Perceval Graves. London: Elkin Mathews. 6s. net.

THE number of books calculated to enlighten the cimmerian darkness of the English mind in regard to Irish life and culture is fortunately increasing, and among them we must assign an honourable place to the new volume by the President of the Irish Literary Society of London. We can understand many people glancing over the contents of this collection of essays, and feeling that they have been transported into an unknown world. William Allingham was the friend of Carlyle and won his place among English men of letters; perhaps the name of James Clarence Mangan calls up some dim memory of "Dark Rosaleen"; but who was Sir Samuel Ferguson or George Petrie? and what of Dr. Hyde's collection of the Religious Songs of Connacht or Dr. Joyce's Irish Wonder Book? Well, we can only recommend the reader to yield himself to the lure of the unfamiliar, and he will soon find himself in a land of enchantment. These essays, written in a pleasant easy style and with real enthusiasm for the subject, form an excellent introduction to the intellectual activity of Irishmen in their own country during the last two generations in poetry and music and antiquarian research, and above all in the pious collection of folk-song and peasant lore. They are an attractive band, who deserve a wider fame than they have achieved hitherto, with their fine gifts, their intellectual ardour, and their indifference to commercial rewards, which so easily ensnare literary men in England to their ruin. Nothing could be more fitting than that the author of Father O'Flynn should raise this monument to the work of the living and the dead, for he himself belongs to their illustrious company.

INITIATION INTO LITERATURE. By Emile Faguet. London: Williams & Norgate. 3s. 6d. net.

WE are rather at a loss to understand why a critic of the eminence of M. Faguet wrote this book, and why Sir Home Gordon spent his time in translating it into English. It is far too scrappy to be of any use except as an index, and in an index we require above all completeness and accuracy, two qualities in which this volume is sadly lacking. We turn naturally to the English section, to which special additions have been made, and we find no reference to Burke, Jane Austen, or Stevenson. The critical remarks appear to us to be often the reverse of illuminating. We hardly recognise George Herbert as the author of a collection of "religious and melancholy poems," with a gloomy quality "analogous to the modern Schopenhauer." Again, we are not started on any fruitful train of thought by a comparison between Milton and Voltaire, on account of Milton's "prodigious productiveness and his varied life, divided between literature and the intellectual battles of his time." There are also some blunders so bad as to be unpardonable. What, for instance, are we to make of the following statement, "In prose must be noted, on the austere side, George Fox, founder of the sect of Quakers, impassioned and powerful popular orator, author of the Book of Martyrs." If the author wrote this, why did not the translator correct it? Again, we are told that Southey, Coleridge, and Wordsworth were called the lake poets "because they were lovers of the country-side." All this fails entirely to betray the hand of a master, to say nothing of fairly accurate knowledge of the subject into which he has undertaken to initiate the uninstructed mind.

THE RELIGIOUS INSTINCT. By the Rev. Thomas J. Hardy, M.A. London: Longmans, Green & Co. 5s. net.

IN his new essay in Christian apologetics, far more decisively than in "The Gospel of Pain," which was published five years ago, Mr. Hardy has taken his stand with those who maintain the ultra-catholic and sacramentalist position in the Anglican Church. To them "comprehension" is anathema, and he who would be a true Christian is warned against the "barren regions of Humanitarianism." The life of Christ, in Mr. Hardy's view, is "the unveiling of the Divine Object of our consciousness." He declared himself to be God, and disclosed to men "the Triune Mystery." "The doctrine of the Trinity . . . is nothing less than the Divine Consciousness of Christ." He himself is the supreme miracle. All the other miracles of the Gospel record are natural and inevitable, when that is understood. It is not simply in the heart and mind of the believer that he is found; the great need of our day is that with spiritual intensity he should be worshipped as he is "present now upon His altars." The sacrifices of all other religions are but the gropings of fallen human nature, efforts of a genuine, if perverted, instinct, seeking for reconciliation with God; but in Christianity the perfect sacrifice has been offered, and the reconciliation accomplished; on its altars "dead substance becomes the Living Victim." In the Eucharist men must seek "sacramental incorporation with Christ," for there is "the central height of our response" to him. It is in keeping with this view of Christian truth that not only the miraculous Christ, but the personal Devil, is seriously presented for our acceptance, as an ominous part of the spiritual realm in which our lot is cast.

Such being the standpoint of the book, we have simply to record our radical divergence, not only from its conclusions, but from its fundamental assumptions, and from the presumptuous claim made by such a church as is here represented, in the name of an "Exclusive Christ," to be the sole vehicle of a completely satisfying spiritual life. Mr. Hardy appears to us to go astray at the very outset, in a wholly inadequate conception of the moral life, which in its deeper implications is at the very heart of a true spiritual experience; and in his recoil from Modernism he is no less unjust in representing it as bent only on "what is perfectly 'rational' and obvious." The broader sympathies of liberal religion and its convictions of truth are by no means necessarily divorced from the deepest reverence and humility in presence of the mystery of life, in communion with God. And when we come to the fundamental fact of our "experience of God in Christ," we are compelled to join issue with Mr. Hardy at every point, in his exegesis, and his interpretation of the history. We do not find that we are left spiritually helpless by our refusal of his dogmatic claim, nor that the reality of the Gospel is destroyed, or the quickening power of Jesus lost, when the miraculous element in the narrative is set aside and we penetrate beneath that form of the tradition to the actual life. The experience of God in Christ is a deeper and more vital thing than "the Triune Mystery," which theologians meddle with at their peril. We take the word, not of the ecclesiastical dogmatist, but of Jesus himself, when we seek to become as little children, folded in the care of the Eternal, that so we may enter into the Kingdom; and when we learn with him, in his spirit, to do the Father's will, and begin at least to understand what it means to be children of God.

EZRA AND NEHEMIAH. By L. W. Batten, Ph.D., S.T.D. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. 10s. 6d.

DR. BATTEN regrets in his preface that he had to complete his contribution to the International Critical Commentary without the help of Dr. Briggs, one of the general editors, owing to the serious illness of the latter which ended with his death. It is not easy to see in what respect this book could have been improved, even if Dr. Briggs had been spared to revise it. On the lines laid down by the editors of the whole series it is admirable, and should be of very great help to students of the Old Testament. The lavish use of abbreviations, allowed in all the volumes of the series, enables more matter to be packed into the available space than would otherwise be possible; but it does not tend to elegance of style or ease of reading. On the whole, however, Dr. Batten has done well in this respect. No one would expect the notes to be other than severely compressed; but the longer paragraphs, and the Introduction as a whole, are models of clear statement.

The books of Ezra and Nehemiah, printed separately in our Bibles, are really one book, and form part of the much larger work known as the books of Chronicles. They should come after, and not before, "Chronicles." The Chronicler has no good reputation for historical accuracy; and the suspicion, justly felt in regard to the books connected with his name, has been used to discredit the value of the books of Ezra and Nehemiah, since he was the compiler of those books also. So far as his own work as editor is concerned, that suspicion is justified. But Dr. Batten shows that much of the material contained in Ezra-Nehemiah is reliable and therefore valuable. Only the use which the Chronicler made of it is in fault. Amongst other mischief, he has confused the chronological order of his documents, so that it is a matter of difficulty to rearrange them in their right sequence. Dr. Batten suggests a sequence of the main sections which seems highly probable; and he adopts it as the order of his exposition. He wisely does not apply it (except in the notes) to the minor passages.

The Introduction is extremely good; and, for those who have only a vague idea of the history of the period, it will be of great service. The most remarkable feature, as it seems to the present writer, is the strong case he makes out for placing Ezra considerably later than Nehemiah. In his opinion the two men never met; and, though he rejects the extreme view that Ezra is a fictitious character altogether, he regards him as of much less importance than Nehemiah. However that may be, the way in which Dr. Batten unravels the tangle left by the Chronicler as his account of the history of the period is worthy of high praise, alike for the strength of the evidence he brings forward and the sober judgment he applies to it.

The general reader will not perhaps find much pleasure in work of severe scholarship such as the International Critical Commentary provides. But to the student it is invaluable, and this latest volume only adds to the debt of gratitude which is due to those who planned the series and under whose guidance it is being carried forward. As a student I venture to offer cordial thanks to Dr. Batten for a book which has helped me much.

R. T. H.

THE SECRET HILL. Poems by Ruth and Celia Duffin. Dublin: Maunsell & Co. 1s. net.

"THE SECRET HILL," by the Misses Ruth and Celia Duffin, is a pleasant reminder that commercial prosperity has not driven the spirit of pure poetry from Belfast. But these two poets seem to have drawn their inspiration rather from the West and South than from the North. Yet it may be now that they have gone so far as to accomplish this delightful little volume of verse, they will, with deepening experience, be able to discover in the North as well new springs of the waters of Helicon. For their poetical ancestry is of the North, their great-grandfather, Dr. William Drennan (son of the Rev. Thomas Drennan, of the Rosemary-street Church), being the poet of the United Irish movement in the 18th century, and their grandfather, Dr. J. S. Drennan, was a most accomplished writer of verse. The thirty poems contained in this volume are all good; and some of them—"The Changeling," "Romance," "God's Fool," "Padraig," "Gloaming," and "Once in a Wood"—have a compelling charm. The last, in particular, carries us into the spirit's deepest recesses. "Gloaming" also strikes the right mystic note in such a verse as—

Some day the sun will find the hearthstone bare,
Will find the wheel turned, and no one there;
It were so good, by mystic music drawn,
To rise at eventide and follow so,
But I am grown so old I fear to go,
Lest I should miss the dawn.

The Misses Duffin also have had their inspiration kindled by the fire of patriotism, as is shown especially in "The Wild Geese" and "Mother of Exiles," the former revealing most finely the eternal affection which a true patriot must always feel for his country; the latter, with a quotation from which we must close, the subjugating imperative of the call of one's native land:—

O wanderers loved, mine once, and for ever mine,
Held by the bond of the wood and the dreaming hill;
Mine by the call of the bog, and the sob of the lonely pine,
Break me, and curse me, and leave me, I hold you still!

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION:—The Essex Hall Year Book, 1914. 1s. net.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & SON:—Everyman's Encyclopædia, Vol. 12. 1s. net.

MR. E. A. FIFELED:—Short Poems: Gertrude de la Poer. 1s. net. "Dislikes," some Modern Satires: Charles Masefield. 1s. net.

THE NATIONAL PEACE COUNCIL:—The Peace Year Book, 1914. 1s. net.

MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & SON, LTD.:—An Atlas illustrating the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistles: Rev. John F. Stirling. 8d. net.

MESSRS. W. RIDER & SON:—Psycho-Therapy: Its Doctrine and Practice: Elizabeth Severn. 3s. 6d. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cænobium, Review of Theology and Philosophy.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

JESUS, OUR TEACHER AND FRIEND.

I.—BLESSING THE CHILDREN.

WHEN a little child, the new baby brother or sister, is christened, either in the church or at home, the minister often begins the service by reading in the Gospel the passage which tells how Jesus was glad to have the children brought to him, and how he took them in his arms and blessed them, laying his hands upon them (Mark x. 13-16, Luke xviii. 15-17, Matth. xix. 13-15). We like to remember that scene, because of the eagerness of the mothers that the great Teacher should lay his hands in blessing on the little ones, and because of what Jesus said about the children: "Of such is the kingdom of God." It is good to remember, and the thought comes naturally and beautifully at the beginning of our service of christening, or thanksgiving and dedication. The innocence, the teachableness, the trustful love of the little ones Jesus used as a parable, to help men to understand the spirit in which they must come to God, and enter into his kingdom. His great teaching was that we are all children of God, our heavenly Father, and with love and trust in our hearts must learn to do our Father's will.

What the elder children, who were with the little ones, would understand was that it was a wonderful thing to be near this man, to whom all the people looked with such reverence and eagerness, and that he was very gentle and good to them, and looked at them with a beautiful smile, and that it made them very happy to feel the touch of his hand and to hear his word of blessing.

I want to ask you to think of that scene, and to use it as a starting point from which we may follow out the thought of what we really know about Jesus, and why it is we care for him and want to be near him.

In thinking of the scene you try to imagine it as it was in Galilee, in that distant land and in the far distant past, and you picture Jesus as an Eastern man of dark complexion and with dark hair and a bearded face, and in such clothes as his people wore, very different from ours, but simple and graceful, and suited to the hot climate and the open air life. And as you look at him, the chief thing in the face is the light in his eyes. There are lines of thought in the face, and a great earnestness and tenderness, but in the eyes something more wonderful still, a depth of understanding and sympathy, of commanding power and of love, such as you do not see in ordinary men. It makes you feel that here is one whom it must be good to have as friend and teacher, as leader in the true way of life.

Do not trouble for the moment about the outward things of the olden time and the Eastern dress, but imagine the scene in our own time and country. Think how it might be in an English village, on a warm summer day, if the great Teacher were there, resting, perhaps, under the shade of the trees on the village green, with his friends gathered about him. Suppose that he had been speaking to a great gathering of the people, and they were all excitement and enthusiasm, for they had never heard speaking like that before, or felt such wonder at the power of the man's appeal, and such stirring of their own hearts in the desire for nobler life. And now he was sitting there quietly talking to a few of the more earnest ones, answering their questions, perhaps, and speaking of the deep things of the religious life. And the mothers, some of whom had heard him speak, and before that had heard the rumour of his goodness and his wonderful influence, came near, with little children in their arms and other children with them. They drew nearer and nearer, hoping that Jesus would notice the children, longing to ask him to touch them, to lay his hand on them in blessing.

It was very natural, and showed how deeply the power and goodness of Jesus were felt among his people. But the disciples, engrossed in their talk with the Master, thought that he ought not to be interrupted or troubled for such a thing, and they tried to keep the women away. But when Jesus noticed it, and saw the look in the mothers' faces, he understood at once, and was indignant that they should be in any way hurt or hindered from bringing the children to him. And he not only called them to him, but with a beautiful tenderness in his gesture and his tone, lifted up the little ones to a place of high honour in his teaching. "Suffer the little children to come unto me," he said, "and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." How the mothers would feel that, and delight to remember it afterwards! How everything else would be forgotten in deep gratitude for that word, and for the way in which he took the little ones in his arms and blessed them! Nor could the disciples forget the lesson of humility, and the deep truth of that other saying, when Jesus warned them that they must become as little children if they would enter into the kingdom of God. For all alike that is true; even for the wisest and the greatest of the earth, as it was for Jesus himself. Whoever would understand what it means to be a child of God, and have a place in his kingdom, according to the Father's will, must be simple-hearted and trustful and loving, as those little ones whom Jesus blessed.

If you had been there and had heard Jesus speak like that, would not one question in your own heart have been, "Am I that sort of child?" And supposing he had called you to him, and put his arm on your shoulder, and had looked with that deep, affectionate look into your face, would you not have felt it a great thing to stand by such a man, and feel that he expected to see goodness and trust and love in your face? In thinking of it afterwards, would you not have felt very proud and happy, and very humble too, and, deepest feeling of all, the earnest desire and determination to be more worthy of such honour and such trust and love as Jesus bore to the children?

V. D. D.

* * The Rev. V. D. Davis will contribute six articles on "Jesus, Our Teacher and Friend." The one published this week is the first. We hope that our younger readers will look out for them week by week, and will read for themselves in the New Testament the passages to which Mr. Davis refers.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

MRS. THOMAS ASHTON.

THE death of Mrs. Thomas Ashton, which took place at Tunbridge Wells on New Year's Day, will revive many gracious memories of the days when she and Mr. Ashton dispensed their bountiful hospitality at Ford Bank, Didsbury, and made their home a centre whence the noblest influences of broadminded religion, education, and philanthropy radiated into the surrounding community. Mr. Ashton, who died sixteen years ago, did more than any man of his day for the University of Manchester, and combined in a remarkable degree the gifts of a great man of business with unflinching zeal for the higher influences of the mind and spirit.

"Mrs. Ashton," we quote from the Manchester Guardian, "was born in Liverpool on March 25, 1831, her father, Mr. Samuel Stillman Gair, having come from America and settled there as a partner in Baring Brothers. She came to Manchester on her marriage with Mr. Ashton, whom she has survived close on sixteen years. She shared in all his interests, and there are many still who will recall her affectionately as the charming hostess of a great house in the days when the wealth of Manchester had not yet learnt to make its home in rural retreats remote from its activities. Many distinguished people were received there, including Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone on the occasion of a memorable visit. But Mrs. Ashton was more than the fit partner of a very noble citizen; she did valuable and independent public work of her own. She was one of the pioneers of the district nursing movement. At the suggestion of her brother-in-law, Mr. William Rathbone, the well-known Liberal member for Liverpool, who with Miss Nightingale's help had started in Liverpool the first district nursing work as a memorial to his first wife, Mrs. Ashton and one or two other ladies of Manchester set one or two nurses to work, first in a tentative way, in the poorest districts of Manchester and Salford in the eighteen-sixties, Mrs. Ashton herself supervising the work in Greengate or Adelphi. Beginning, as it was bound to begin, with untrained or ill-trained nurses, this work has in fifty years covered the whole country with a system of efficient assistance for the sick poor. The business interests of Mr. Ashton were mainly at Hyde, and Mrs. Ashton took a large share in the management of Flowery Field School in that town. But work like this had to be done in such time as was left over from the care of a large family. Her children numbered nine. Six of them survive her. The eldest son, who represented the Hyde division of Cheshire and the Luton division of Bedfordshire in the House of Commons, was raised to the peerage in 1911 as Lord Ashton of Hyde. The other surviving children are daughters—Miss Margaret Ashton, who carries on the fine family tradition of public usefulness as a member of the Manchester City Council; Mrs. James Bryce, wife of the distinguished historian and statesman; Mrs. Charles Lupton, of Leeds; Mrs. E. Tootal Broadhurst, and Mrs. D. W. Kessler."

The funeral took place at the Manchester Crematorium last Monday. There was a large attendance of relatives and personal friends and representatives of public bodies. The service was conducted by the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

SOUTH AFRICAN LETTER. THE INDIAN QUESTION.

SOUTH AFRICA, I am afraid, is gaining an unenviable reputation throughout the Empire. We had no sooner allayed the Labour troubles on the Rand than the Indian difficulty re-asserted itself, and Mr. Gandhi—who, along with Mrs. Gandhi and many others, is now in prison—organised afresh the Passive Resistance movement. This developed in Natal into a strike of Indians against the £3 tax. Riots occurred at Ladysmith, Avoca, and other places. Some of the Indians, it is alleged, were flogged back to their work on the mines and the sugar plantations, and at Mount Edgecombe four Indians were shot dead and some thirty injured in an encounter with the police. Happily, but tardily, the Union Government has appointed a Commission to inquire into the disturbances, into the acts of violence alleged to have been committed upon indentured Indians, and upon prisoners sentenced in connection with the strike, and also to investigate the causes and circumstances which led to the disturbances, and to make recommendations. The three Commissioners appointed are highly respected in the spheres in which they move, but the Commission, as a body, does not command general confidence. One member is known to be anti-Indian in his sympathies—or antipathies; another is a strong party politician. The Indian community complains that an impartial and widely-respected man like the Hon.

W. P. Schreiner or Sir James Rose-Innes has not been appointed. Whether the Commission is sufficiently representative is a point to which I must return later.

On the general question most people are now agreed that the Colonies have a right to restrict immigration. The indiscriminate intermixture of races of diverse civilisation, especially in small communities, is not a good thing. It is not merely a question of different customs and religions—which, with tolerance and patience, might easily be dealt with. It is a question of varying morals and standards of life. A mixture of virtues is a good thing. A mixture of vices—opium-eating and whisky drinking, for example—produces things unnameable. So, too, with varying standards of life. So long as our industrial and commercial system is based on competition we must regulate competition in such a way as will preserve, in a European community, a European standard. We cannot expect the European to adopt the Asiatic standards of life.

But once immigration is allowed—or, as in the case of South Africa, invited—it must surely carry with it, in all civilised Christian communities, a recognised civic status, and the right to qualify for citizenship in the country of the immigrants' adoption. That is a lesson which South Africa has not yet fully learnt. There is a sentence in a speech made by Sir Thomas Hyslop a month or two ago before the South African Agricultural Union, which puts the views of thousands of South Africans in a nutshell: "We want Indians as indentured labourers, but not as free men." That is the doctrine of the "cash-nexus" in its nakedest and most brutal form. It is the negation both of Christian ethics and of free citizenship. It means colour serfdom for the profit of the white man. Add to this the colour prejudice which prevails so widely and so strongly in the Northern Provinces, and your readers will realise the difficulties which Liberal humanitarianism has to contend with in South Africa.

There are four grievances which have led to the present disturbances. First, the £3 tax in Natal on those Indians whose indentures have expired; second, the refusal to recognise those Indian marriages which are monogamous; third, the denial of the right of free migration to all parts of the Union of South-African-born Indians; fourth, the inequitable administration of the Transvaal Gold Law, and the Cape and Natal Licensing Laws, which operate harshly against Indians on the ground of race. In a word, the Indians demand an improved legal and civic status.

On the first point the Government has undoubtedly blundered. Mr. Gokhale left South Africa under the impression that the £3 tax would be repealed. General Smuts denies that he gave any such impression; he apparently promised the repeal if the Natal members of the Legislature were favourable. An important matter like this, however, ought not to be settled by the members of one province. The tax is indefensible. The Government recognises its inequity, for I understand that it is not now collected from women and children. Those who defend it say that the Indians knew the terms when they signed their indentures. But there are some contracts which ought never to be allowed to be made, and this is one of them. Its alternatives are serfdom, deportation, or hard labour. It recognises no reciprocal civic or social obligations. We are to make use of the labour and the life of other peoples for our own profit, then, when we have made what we can out of them, ship them back to the country from which they came. The conscience of civilised mankind will not stand this sort of thing. Men are not cattle—they are human beings with civic rights and family and social obligations and responsibilities.

On the second point the Government has laid itself open to a charge of distinct breach of faith. After the passing of the Immigration Bill in the last session of Parliament everybody who has followed the Indian question was under the impression that monogamous Indian marriages would be recognised. "There never has been any doubt," says the Cape Times, "as to the intention of the Legislature when the Act was passed" that such marriages should be recognised. Yet, within a few weeks after Parliament had risen, the Government officials, apparently of set purpose, took a case into the courts and succeeded in obtaining a judgment against the recognition of Indian marriages on the ground that they are not necessarily monogamous. This judgment, or the law on which it is based, the Indians regard as an insult to their race, and especially to their women-folk. Mr. Polak, the editor of Indian Opinion, now in prison, says that only 1 per cent., or rather 11 per thousand, of Hindu marriages are polygamous. The South African Indians do not ask for the recognition of such marriages, but they are incensed against a state of the law which regards a single wife—because married according to a rite which allows polygamy—as a concubine. The present position is intolerable, and there is very little doubt that it will be remedied by Parliament next year.

The third and fourth points bring up very thorny problems—social and economic. The Orange Free State will not allow migration into that province on any terms, with the result that the Indian population there is negligible, numbering but a few scores. There is also a very widespread feeling against free migration into the Cape Province. Wherever, it is said, the Indian trader appears the European trader is doomed. That, I fancy, is an over-statement, for if it were true there would be no European traders in Natal, where the Indian population outnumbers the European, the proportion being, in round numbers, 136,000 Indians to 100,000 Europeans. But there can be no doubt that the low standard of life with which many Indians are content, combined with their unhealthy and insanitary modes of life, makes the problem a very difficult one. On the other hand, it may be urged that the standard of life of many Indians is higher than that of many Europeans; that, probably in the majority of cases, it is no lower than that of the Malay and coloured people of South Africa; that it is the duty of local authorities to set their house in order and insist upon more efficient sanitation in every race and community; and, lastly, that the whole difficulty is one which South Africa has largely brought upon herself by her system of indentured labour, and that she should apply herself to find a remedy which is consonant with justice and with equal opportunities for all.

This brings me to the Imperial aspect of the problem. The Colonies in general, and South Africa in particular, are extremely jealous of outside interference. The mention of Downing-street is as a red rag to a bull. But it would be well for South Africans to bear in mind that if India and South Africa had been independent nations there would probably have been war between them by this time. I do not like the word Imperialism. Its traditional associations imply force and undue centralisation. But one can surely rise above that to the idea of a federation of nations bound together by common interests, and ideals of free and just government. But in that case the democratic principle must be applied all round. The State which holds itself aloof and says, "We alone will settle these questions of racial policy without reference to the rights of other races and nations," is a very exclusive, undemocratic, and short-sighted State indeed. Take the Commission of Inquiry which has just been appointed. It consists of three South Africans. But Great Britain is surely affected. One hundred and fifty million people in India are affected. Surely it would have been a graceful act on the part of a democratic Government to have said to the British and Indian Governments, "You also are involved in this trouble. Appoint your representatives, and join us in this inquiry, and let us see if we cannot work out a solution which will be acceptable to all." That is the true democratic spirit—not the spirit of jealousy and aloofness, but the spirit of co-operation and mutual consideration. And that is the spirit which is especially needed at these times. Mr. Bryce has lately been telling us that racial distrust and antagonisms are being accentuated the world over. They can only be allayed or overcome by continual efforts towards mutual understanding and mutual sacrifice. The great thing is to bring the best thought in the world, or at least the best thought in the Empire, into contact and conference with the immature and inexperienced thought of young communities, in which material considerations are apt to over-ride moral considerations. This is not Imperialism, in the old sense of the word. It is an attempt to get "the paramount authority of right reason" applied to the removal of crude racial prejudices, the keeping in check of racial passions, and the solution of racial problems by the development of world-wide democratic sympathies. In a word, it is Christianity applied to world-politics.

I have already exceeded my space, and must leave Church and theological matters to be dealt with some other time.

RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

Cape Town.

P.S.—As I write I notice that the Witwatersrand Church Council has passed a resolution asking the Government to make the above-named Commission of Inquiry more fully representative. Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Polak have been released, but it is not yet known whether they intend to recognise the Commission.—R. B.

NATIVE LABOUR AND GOVERNMENT POLICY.

THE following reply has been received from the Prime Minister to the memorial recently sent to him by the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society and influentially signed, on the conditions akin to slave labour which prevail in South America and other tropical regions of the world, and the responsibility of British companies operating there.

10, Downing-street, Whitehall, S.W.,
December 19, 1913.

DEAR SIR,—The Prime Minister has given careful consideration, in consultation with Sir Edward Grey, to the memorial with reference to conditions of native labour, which you submitted to him on November 25.

The memorial contained three recommendations, and with regard to the first of these, I am to inform you that the question of the desirability of consolidating and extending the Slave Trade Acts is engaging the serious attention of His Majesty's Government.

The second and third recommendations are that an effort should be made to revise the Anti-Slavery Treaties with Foreign Powers, and that an increase of the Consular Service should be effected in order to facilitate the investigation of labour conditions. In this connection, I am to enclose a copy of a circular recently sent to His Majesty's Consular Officers, from which you will see that inquiries are being prosecuted in the sense of the report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the Putumayo atrocities. His Majesty's Government will not fail to examine the reports received from Consular Officers in reply to this circular, with a view to such further action in either or both of the directions recommended in the memorial as it may be desirable to take.—Yours faithfully, (Signed) ERIC DRUMMOND.

TRAVERS BUXTON, Esq.

SIDE-LIGHTS ON KIKUYU.

It is on the historical side that the correspondence of this week on the Kikuyu Controversy has been most valuable. The Dean of Worcester, Dr. Moore Ede, has called attention to the form of the Bidding Prayer, which has been in use since 1603: "Ye shall pray for Christ's most Holy Catholic Church, that is, for the whole congregation of Christian people dispersed throughout the whole world, and especially for the Churches of England, Scotland, and Ireland." As the Dean points out, the Church of Scotland referred to in the Canon of 1603 is the Presbyterian Church. On Thursday Mr. Swift Macneill, in a letter to The Times, disinterred a piece of history which has been long forgotten. During the colonial period American Episcopalians were not allowed to have a bishop of their own, but remained under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of London. Candidates for the ministry had to come to England for ordination, and in the absence of a bishop confirmation was practically unknown. "It was not," he writes, "till after the War of the American Independence that in 1784 a missionary belonging to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel was selected by the Americans and consecrated by Scottish Bishops. The recollection of this episode, coupled with the facts that the first Anglican colonial Bishop was not consecrated till 1787 and the first Anglican Indian Bishop was not consecrated till 1814, proves the dispensing with the rite of confirmation as an essential preliminary to participation in the Holy Communion to be no new departure in the history of the Anglican Church."

COLENZO AND THE BISHOPS.

THE Kikuyu controversy has revived memories of Bishop Colenso and the fierce attacks made on the heretic bishop. A correspondent of the Manchester Guardian gives a touch of gaiety to present solemnities by recalling the humorous side of that far-away heresy hunt:—

"In the beginning of it, the bishops, wishing to avoid rows, unanimously begged Colenso to resign, and he politely declined. Longley was Archbishop of Canterbury at the time, and he wrote, on behalf of the bishops:

My dear Colenso,—With regret,
Your brethren all, in conclave met,
Request you—most disturbing writer—
To give up your Colonial mitre.
This course I beg to urge most strongly,
And am, yours very truly, LONGLEY.

To which Colenso replied:

My dear Archbishop,—To resign
This Zulu diocese of mine,
And own myself a heathen dark,
Because I've doubts about the Ark,
And think it right to tell all men so,
Is not the game for yours, COLENZO."

Our only comment is that if these letters in verse are not genuine they are far too good to be anything else!

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Bath.—The Rev. A. Cunliffe Fox, B.A., late of Moss Side, Manchester, has accepted a unanimous invitation to the pulpit of Trim-street Chapel, in succession to the Rev. John McDowell. Mr. Fox will begin his ministry on January 11.

At an "at home" given by Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Taylor, at Beau Nash House, on New Year's Eve, an opportunity was taken of making a presentation to the Rev. John McDowell, who has resigned the pulpit of the Trim-street Chapel, and Miss Nellie McDowell. Mr. Taylor referred to the esteem and affection which Mr. McDowell had won during his 13 years' ministry, to the courage and faith with which he had met all disappointments, domestic sorrows, and the personal affliction which had handicapped him so seriously in his work but drawn forth no word of complaint. They greatly sympathised with Mr. McDowell on account of his impaired eyesight, which made it necessary for him to shorten his ministerial career, but they were glad that they were not going to lose him from Bath and that he would still be with them as a member of the congregation. With his name was associated that of his daughter, who after her mother's death had taken a large share in the responsibility and cares of church and home life. The presentation to Mr. McDowell took the form of a purse containing £80, a bracelet and pendant being given to Miss McDowell in appreciation of her valuable work amongst them. Speeches were also made by Mr. C. H. Gooding and Mr. T. Mills, who spoke as one of the younger members of the congregation of Mr. McDowell's friendship for him and his family. The Rev. J. McDowell, in the course of a short address, expressed his appreciation of the kindness which had been shown to him and to his daughter. A musical programme followed.

Birmingham.—The trustees of the old Newhall Hill Church are appealing, as will be seen from our advertisement columns, for a mortgage which will enable them to build a school or mission hall on the excellent site which they have secured in Handsworth. The old church was vacated some two years ago, and it has become very desirable that better accommodation should be provided than is afforded by the meeting room which is rented at present, in view of the fact that it has been decided to obtain the services of a permanent minister.

Doncaster.—The death has occurred of Mrs. W. E. Taylor. Mr. Taylor is a trustee and deacon of the Free Christian Church in Hall-gate, and Mrs. Taylor was a member of the congregation and a devoted worker. She was deeply interested in the Pleasant Monday Evening movement which has a membership of 240, and here she will be greatly missed.

Manchester.—At the congregational party held at the Willert-street Domestic Mission on New Year's Day a cordial welcome was given to the Rev. H. R. Tavener, who has recently taken up his work there. The Rev. W. Whitaker, secretary of the Domestic Mission, alluded to the good work which Mr. Tavener had done at Hunslet, and appealed for earnest co-operation with him in his work, and Mr. G. H. Leigh (chairman) endorsed these words. Mr. Tavener responded, and a musical programme was afterwards carried out by the workers of the Mission and the Band of Hope choir.

Manchester: Moss Side.—The Rev. A. Cunliffe Fox having brought his ministry at Moss Side to a close on December 28, opportunity was taken at the Congregational Christmas Party, held on January 3, and very largely attended, to bid him farewell and God-speed in his new sphere of labour. Mr. C. Hepton, chairman of the congregation, presided. Several appreciative speeches were made, and at their conclusion a presentation was made to Mr. Fox as a memento of his pastorate at Moss Side. A presentation was also made to Mrs. Fox. In acknowledging the gifts Mr. Fox expressed his sorrow at parting, much against his wishes, from so many kind and warm friends.

Newport, Mon.—The Rev. William T. Davies, late minister at Wakefield, has accepted a cordial and unanimous invitation from the congregation, and will begin his ministry on January 18.

Rochdale.—The annual sale of work in connection with the Unitarian Church has again resulted in over £200 being raised, and this is entirely due to the energy and enterprise of all who have helped to make it a success. The opening ceremony was performed on the first day by Councillor G. W. Wilby, and on the second day by a party of scholars who had been trained by Mrs. H. A. Mince.

Sheffield.—At Upper Chapel, last Sunday morning, January 4, the Rev. C. J. Street conducted a New Year's service of self-dedication and of welcome to new members. In the evening the annual united service of the three congregations of Upper Chapel, Upperthorpe, and Attercliffe was held, the chapel being well filled. The choirs were united for the occasion, and addresses were given by the Revs. J. W. Cock, C. J. Street, and A. H. Dolphin respectively on "The Modern Quest for Religion: (1) the Problem; (2) the Need; (3) the Satisfaction."

Wigan: Park Lane.—On Sunday, January 4, the Rev. H. Fisher Short conducted a service of dedication. About 50 new members, mostly young men and women connected with the Guild, were added to the roll. At the close of the service Mr. Short handed a copy of the Rev. W. G. Tarrant's devotional manual, which had been presented by a friend, to each new member.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

HONOURING RABINDRANATH TAGORE.

Towards the close of November a deputation consisting of about 500 people (one paper says 600), several of whom were Europeans, visited Mr. Tagore at his residence, Santiniketan (the Home of Peace), Bolepur, to felicitate him on receiving the Nobel Prize for literature. The Rev. C. F. Andrews, wearing dhoti and chaddar, and a number of students from Mr. Tagore's school in yellow robes, met the pilgrims at the station and conducted them along the road, which was decorated with mango and lotus leaves and festoons of flowers, to their destination. There, under the mango trees, the poet was seated, "the handsome figure and the beautiful, meditative eyes," flowing hair and picturesque robes, all combining "to present a perfect picture of the best type of Aryan philosopher." A short Bengali address printed on silk was presented, and congratulations offered by various speakers, after which Mr. Tagore thanked the deputation, saying, in his characteristic way, that he had never longed for fame; his claim was to the heart. Mr. Andrews, who has just arrived in South Africa, to investigate the problem which is affecting all India so deeply, has addressed a meeting of Indians to whom he read a poem in Sanskrit written by Mr. Tagore as a message to his distressed fellow-countrymen.

SCHOOLBOY "HOWLERS."

Some amusing "howlers" have been taken by the Times from the University Correspondent, which has been offering a prize for the best collection of 12 amusing mistakes. Some of them, which are so apt that they seem "too good to be true," are here given for the entertainment of our readers.

The courage of the Turks is explained by the fact that a man with more than one wife is more willing to face death than if he had only one.

Milton was called the father of English poetry because he was blind and his daughter did the writing for him.

A problem is a figure which you do things with which are absurd, and then you prove it.

An anachronism is a thing man puts in writing in the past before it has taken place in the future.

Ambiguity means telling the truth when you don't mean to.

Much butter is imported from Denmark, because Danish cows have greater enterprise and superior technical education to ours.

The imperfect tense is used in French to express a future action in past time which does not take place at all.

The mineral wealth of a country is ginger beer and lemonade.

The flannelette peril means petticoat government.

"THE ROMANCE OF INDIA."

The abandonment of the great Indian spectacle at Earl's Court has caused acute distress among the 400 performers, many of them natives of India, who have been thrown out of employment without any immediate prospect of obtaining other work. Indian susceptibilities have played a large part in the curious drama of events which has led up to this state of things. "The Romance of India" was formerly banned by the Indian Office because it was thought that it raised invidious comparisons between West and East which it would be better to avoid, although subsequently, when the scenario was altered, the performance was sanctioned. Now some difficulty has arisen in administering relief to Hindus retained for the spectacle who are prevented by reasons of caste from eating English food, or receiving even rice and lentils if conveyed to them by the hands of a white man. These Hindus have also refused to enter the Strangers' Home, West India Dock-road, where provision was made for them; but it is now stated that other arrangements have been made for them. All this is significant, not only of the differences in thought and habits which sometimes makes it so hard for English people and Asiatics to understand each other, but of the real desire on the part of our administrators that nothing shall be done to offend our fellow-subjects of India where religious faiths or national traditions are concerned.

THE SAFETY OF RULERS.

It is a sad commentary on the state of things which the general unrest throughout the countries of the world has brought about, that even the Viceroy of India, although his openly expressed sympathy with the Indians in South Africa has increased his popularity among the native people, should have required so much protection during his recent visit to Calcutta. No crowds were permitted to congregate in the streets, the thoroughfares were heavily guarded by soldiers and police, and the railway was watched for a hundred miles by police standing four feet apart and bearing torches. Similar precautions had to be taken in order that the Tsar of Russia might reach Tsarskoe Selo without any mishap last week, but several miserable tragedies were the result. For two days and nights before the Tsar's train passed soldiers had been posted at a distance of a few yards along the whole route between Moscow and St. Petersburg while a furious snowstorm was raging, which in some places obliterated the lines entirely. The day after it was discovered that four soldiers were killed by the trains, which, in their numbed and dazed condition, and owing to the noise of the storm, they could not hear. There may be other deaths owing to cold and exposure, for the roll-call is still incomplete, and the sufferings of the survivors must have been terrible. Can it any longer be said that only a good war brings out men's powers of endurance, and develops the sense of loyalty to duty and the Crown?

INFLAMMABLE FABRICS.

On New Year's Day the Fabrics (Misdescription) Act came into force, the object of which is to lessen the number of fatal accidents arising from the use of inflammable flannelette. This Act provides that it shall not be lawful for any person to sell any textile fabric to which is attributed, expressly or inferentially, the quality of non-inflammability or safety from fire unless the fabric conforms to such standard of non-inflammability as may be prescribed by Home Office regulations. It will be enforced by suitable penalties, and administered by local authorities who are empowered to appoint inspectors to institute proceedings against offenders.

CHILD LIFE IN INSTITUTIONS.

Some of the suggestions made by the Special Committee which has just completed a ten months' inquiry into the children's homes and orphanages of Great Britain, show that more sympathy with the mind of the child is creeping into the rules and regulations which such institutions must necessarily enforce. There is, for instance, the question of talking at meal-times. Although the matrons say that there would be too much noise if the children were allowed to talk while taking their food, it would surely be as well if a little conversation were allowed, if only in the interest of proper digestion, and this is advocated. Then, too, we are glad to see a recommendation to the effect that the girls' dresses might be more becoming in colour and make, permitting also of some variety, though the children are said to be proud of their uniform, and some of the old-fashioned charity dresses are quaint and picturesque. In view of the fact that so many of the girls are trained for domestic service, it is a pity that the kitchens, sculleries and larders are often so inconvenient and dark. This is usually the result of private houses, which are not always suitable for the purpose, being adapted in many cases for the purposes of a home. A few homes have endeavoured to carry out the plan of giving girls over school age bedrooms where they can keep their own clothes and accessories under the same conditions as they will experience when they go into service, and this is considered a better preparation for their new life.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

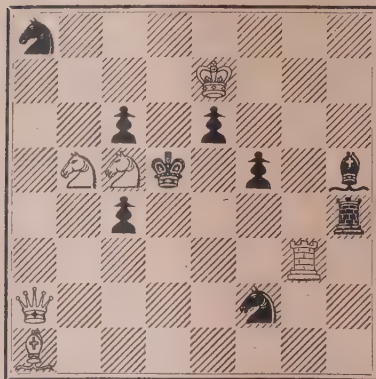

JAN. 10, 1914.

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 39.

By A. G. STUBBS (Hertford).

BLACK. (9 men.)

WHITE. (6 men.)

White to play and mate in two moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 37.

1. Kt. Q4 (key-move).

Correct solutions have been received from A. Mielziner, H. L., A. J. Hamblin, D. Amos, Rev. B. C. Constable, Arthur Perry, R. B. D. (Edinburgh), W. T. M. (Sunderland), J. R. W. (Belfast), Walter Coventry (also No. 36), L. G. Rylands, W. E. Arkell, R. E. Shawcross (also No. 36), Rev. I. Wrigley, J. Johnson, Dr. Higginson, F. S. M. (Mayfield), Geo. Ingledew.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Rev. B. C. CONSTABLE.—In No. 38 I do not see any dual after 1.... Kt (Q3) to B2, for 2. P x Kt is illegal.

J. JOHNSON.—No. 33, the Black P on KB2 prevents a check with the Black B which would afford a strong clue to the solution.

W. T. M. (Sunderland).—Sorry your solutions 35 and 36 were omitted in the list.

I must heartily thank my readers for their kind expressions of Christmas and New Year sentiments. Owing to pressure of postal arrangements, the "copy" for the last issue of 1913 arrived too late for inclusion. Hence the hiatus on December 27.

"Sam Loyd and His Chess Problems." By Alain C. White. (Leeds: Whitehead & Miller, 15, Elmwood-lane.) Mr. White has written a most interesting book on the American Puzzle Wizard, and he touches on his inventive fertility not only as regards chess, but also the famous "Fifteen Puzzle," the "Vanishing Donkey," and many other devices which were popular some 20 years ago. Loyd made a large income out of these, since they were taken up by advertising houses. The "Fifteen Puzzle" was, I well remember, the subject of a pantomime topical song at Drury-lane, so great was the rage for this ingenious trick. Loyd's fecundity in chess problems was astonishing. He used to boast that he could compose a problem in less time than the solver would take to discover the solution. His work was always difficult, and he was never tied down to any particular school of composition. Sometimes his problems began with a check, which lent additional, if perhaps artificial, difficulty. He collected much of his own work (in a rather disorderly and unsystematic way) in his book called Chess Strategy, a volume now rare.

Now Ready for January.

THE

SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

Editorial.

Lessons for the Month :

- I. A World of Wonder and Beauty.
- II. I am Alive in this World.
- III. A Life of Choice.

IV. A Good Decision.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.
Senior Department—Bertram Lister, M.A.
Primary Department—Ruth New.

Our Story Pages.

Letters on the Primary Department

By the Way.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C

ONE PENNY NET.

MERTHYR TYDFIL UNITARIAN CHURCH.

THE Church is burdened with a debt of about £400, and this the congregation are now making a special effort to wipe off. To help to achieve that end with as little delay as possible it has been decided to hold a on January 15, 1914. Baking and Toffee Competitions and also Pincushion Competitions will be held, particulars of which may be had from the Secretary.

CAKE FAIR

Contributions of Cakes, Sweets, or Cash are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully acknowledged by Miss MARY W. DAVIS, Treasurer, 113, High Street, Merthyr Tydfil; or FRANK A. WHITING, Secretary, 52, Pontmorlais, Merthyr Tydfil.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by
Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

"THE UNITARIAN MONTHLY."

Magazine for Unitarian Propaganda. Adopted by churches with or without local page. Issued for last Sunday in each previous month. One copy post free, 1½d.—1s. 6d. a year; 9d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100; extra charge local page.—Address to EDITOR, 36 Burlington-road, South Shore, Blackpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCs.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, THORALBY, AYSGARTH, S.O., YORKS.—Paying Guests received.—Particulars from Miss SMITH.

BOARD - RESIDENCE offered one Lady or Gentleman. Separate sitting-room if required. Every comfort, good table. West Hampstead.—Address for terms, C. C., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

GREAT REMNANT SALE of White Art Linen, in bundles of ½ to 1 yard pieces, suitable for D'Oyleys and Tray-cloths. 2s. 6d. per bundle, postage 4d.—Write, HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

MAKE YOUR APRONS AT HOME. Bargain bundles of Union Apron Linens. Large pieces for aprons; price 6s. per Bundle. Postage 6d. Write for Free Sale Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

BOOKS

EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY,
TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE,
And for all other Exams.

Second-Hand at Half Prices.

New at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogue 184 (post free) and state wants. Books bought. BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,

135, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to quote and pay definite prices. Note our quotations: Up to 2s. 3d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 5s. 6d. on silver, 11s. on gold, 32s. each on platinum. Cash or offer by return as desired; if offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Utmost value guaranteed. Testimonials in thousands from satisfied customers. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, January 10, 1914.

Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3734.
NEW SERIES, No. 838.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 17, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

Works by Prof. RUDOLF EUCKEN

Introduced to the English Public by the Rev. W. Tudor Jones, D.Phil.

(Jena), of whom Dr. Eucken says: "No Englishman has a clearer understanding of the meaning of my philosophy."

An Interpretation of Rudolf Eucken's Philosophy

By the Rev. W. TUDOR JONES.

Crown 8vo, Cloth, 5s. net.

"The book presents an excellent view of my philosophy."—Dr. EUCKEN.

BARON VON HUGEL says: "Dr. Tudor Jones knows Prof. Eucken's philosophy well."

"There was an excellent reason for offering such an authoritative and succinct statement. The book delivers the theory ably and well."—Athenæum.

"The survey is complete, nothing is hurried, the atmosphere is English. The ability and sincerity of the author cannot fail to impress thoughtful readers."—Prof. BANKS in the Methodist Recorder.

"Dr. Tudor Jones has written an admirable introduction. It brings out with great lucidity the main points in Eucken's teaching."—Guardian.

DIE IDEE DER PERSÖNLICHKEIT, bei den englischen Denkern der Gegenwart.

By the Rev. TUDOR JONES, D.Phil. (Jena).

Demy 8vo. Sewed. 3s. net.

The Truth of Religion.

By Dr. RUDOLF EUCKEN.

Translated by Rev. W. TUDOR JONES. Second Edition, based on the latest German edition, and containing nearly 100 pages of new material. Demy 8vo. Cloth. 12s. 6d. net.

"The book holds the reader's attention by the energy that surges through the whole, while he is charmed with the eloquence and wealth of language preserved in Dr. Jones' excellent translation. . . . This is one of the greatest apologies for religion ever written."—The Christian Commonwealth.

Two New Volumes by Professor EUCKEN
JUST READY.

Knowledge and Life.

Translated by Rev. W. TUDOR JONES, Ph.D. (Jena). Crown 8vo. Cloth. 5s. net.

Present-Day Ethics

In Their Relation to the Spiritual Life.

Being the Deem Lectures delivered at New York University. Translated by MARGARET VON LEGDEWITZ and Edited by the Rev. W. TUDOR JONES. Crown 8vo. Cloth. 3s. net.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW VOLUME

Now is the time to start subscribing to

"YOUNG DAYS."

Our Young People's Own Magazine,

Edited by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT, F.R.S.L.

CONTENTS OF THE JANUARY NUMBER:—

A Tale of a Tail told by Two. (Illustrated.)

Tony Bear's Christmas Tree.

To Greet the New Year. (Full-page Picture.)

The Lost Heir of Mound Hall. Chap. I.

Pluck. (Poetry.)

Temperance Ideas.

The Value of Song. (Poetry.)

Mother Nature's Children. (Illustrated.)

The Boy at the Top of the Hill.

Young Days' Guild Work.

Where, O where are our Little Coats? (Poetry and Pictures.)

The Coward.

The Camel's Complaint. (Poetry.)

Puzzles and Puzzlers.

Editor's Chat, &c.

PRICE ONE PENNY MONTHLY.

Annual Subscription, by Post, One Copy, 1s. 6d.

Published by

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15.

Evening, 7.

January

18. Rev. Thomas Paxton, of Bradford.

25. Rev. ROBERT F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.,
Assistant Minister of Ullet Road
Church, Liverpool.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only,

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church)

PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for January 18:

Morning: The Right and Duty of Free Thought.

Evening: The Positive Note in Religion.

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

Lecture Hall adjoining 19, Tavistock Square, W.C.

On Sunday Evenings, January 11 to March 22, 1914, at 7 o'clock, a Course of Lectures on

The Three Objects of the Society

will be given.

Jan. 18. How Theosophy faces Pain and Evil.

Mrs. G. H. WHYTE.

Jan. 25. Theosophy and the Treatment of Crime.

G. DYNE.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

Next Term begins January 17.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

TIAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.— PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to

C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, BISHOP'S STORTFORD.

Head Mistress: Miss ESTHER CASE, M.A. Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: Miss ESTERBROOK HICKS, B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

Next Term begins on January 21, 1914.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M.

Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road Maida-vale, W

INTERNATIONAL GUILD (London Branch), Hostel for Women Students, 3, Brunswick-square, W.C. (near British Museum and University College).—Full Board from £19 to £26 for a term of 13 weeks.—For particulars apply to Miss E. S. WILLIAMS, 3, Brunswick-square, or Miss C. WICKSTEED, International Guild, 6, rue de la Sorbonne, Paris.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, January 18.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. FRANK R. FREESTON; 7, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.; 6.30, subject, "The Mystery of Pain."
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. A. J. HEALE; 7, Mr. P. CHALK.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Roslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High-road, 11, Mr. E. R. Fyson; 7, Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, Mr. R. W. SORESENSEN.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. RICHARD LEE, B.A.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Mr. A. M. STABLES.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.A.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Mr. WALTER RUSSELL.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. PIPKIN; 6.30, Mr. P. CHALK.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. THOMAS PAXTON.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. AUSTIN.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Church-gate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN Row, 10.45, and (STYAL, 6.30, Mr. HARMON TAYLOR.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EVESHAM, Oat-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. E. WILLIAMS.
 GEE CROSS, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDRAE.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays; 7.30 p.m.

MARRIAGE.

SKEMP—FRAZER.—On January 7, at Finvoy Parish Church, by the Rev. Canon Benson, Chancellor of Connor, assisted by the Rev. G. Frazer, father of the bride, Frank Whittingham Skemp, Indian Civil Service, elder son of the late Rev. J. R. Skemp, to Dorothy, younger daughter of the Rev. George Frazer, Rector of Finvoy, Ballymoney, Co. Antrim.

DEATHS.

JEVONS.—On January 13, at 196, Grove-street, Liverpool, Henry Jevons, J.P., of Liverpool aged 88.

WOOLLEY.—On January 13, at Mount Pleasant, Gee Cross, Hyde, William Woolley, aged, 58 years. Memorial service, Sunday, Hyde Chapel, Gee Cross, 3.30 p.m.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds of MSS. carefully and promptly copied.—Miss KENNEDY, 20, County Grove, Camberwell, S.E.

WANTED.—Caretaker and Housekeeper at a Northern Mission; husband and wife preferred.—Write X. X., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

YOUNG DUTCH LADY, student, certificated tutoress, French, German, Mathematics, Geography, Physics, &c., possessing certificate for English and plain needlework, wishes to go to England or America as a governess or a housekeeper's assistant.—Apply, Miss A. S. BERGSMAN, Mantgum, Netherlands.

PULPIT SUPPLY.

Rev. A. LANCASTER, 64, Stockbridge-road, Padiham.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	35
IS IT PEACE?	36
KIKUYU	38
THE CONTRIBUTION OF OUR AGE TO RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.—II.	39
YONE NOGUCHI	40
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Confirmation Rubric	40
The Kikuyu Controversy	41

Chapels where Mark Rutherford Preached	41
The Indian Question in South Africa	41
The Ministry in New Zealand	42
A Word More on Nietzsche	42
The Sustentation Fund	42
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—
Spanish Islam	42
Belisarius	43
Publications Received	43

FOR THE CHILDREN:—
Jesus, Our Teacher and Friend	44
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
British and Foreign Unitarian Association	44
The Sunday School Association	45
The Adult School Aims	46
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	46
NOTES AND JOTTINGS	46
OUR CHESS COLUMN	48

 * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N. W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

WE had an opportunity last week of hearing from Miss Edith Durham some first hand information of the terrible condition of things existing in Albania. We were so deeply and painfully impressed by what she said that we invited her to write a special article on the subject, in order to spread information and to give our readers an opportunity of helping in the noble work of relief in which she is engaged. Of Miss Durham's credentials there is no need for us to speak. She knows the country intimately. She has lived among the people and for years been their helper and friend. She has endured hardness for their sake, and combines with the gifts of the administrator the rarer qualities of directness and courage. No one can read her article without strong admiration for the bravery of our countrywoman in circumstances of great difficulty and danger. We do not wonder that the Albanian peasants call her "the English queen."

THE article itself is horrible, quite as much in the suggestion of dark things behind which cannot be told in the public press, as in what it actually says. This blasted country, this population dying of starvation and nakedness, are the aftermath of war. The chief sufferers are the non-combatants, who do not even know what the fighting has been about. They only know that their homes have been burned, their crops destroyed, and that it would be better to throw their children into the river than to see them starve. The need of help is urgent. We hope that many of our readers will be anxious to contribute generously to Miss Durham's Relief Fund. A life can be saved for one penny a day, and every penny sent will be well administered. We shall be glad to receive contributions endorsed "Albanian Relief Fund" at 23, Cannon-place, Hampstead, N.W.; or contributions may be sent direct to the Union of London and Smith's Bank, College-crescent, Finchley-road, London, N.W., and all marked "INQUIRER Fund" will be acknowledged in our columns.

IT may be pleaded that the proceedings and verdict of the Zabern court-martial are not the concern of the foreigner, and that Germany must be left to manage its own affairs. That is true; but at the same time it is impossible to enclose any country in a ring fence, or to deprive its public policy of far-reaching significance for the civilised world. For ourselves, the chief value of the Zabern incident is as an illustration of the grave peril to civil liberty involved in a military autocracy. For Germany, we hope it will act both as a warning and as an incentive to a fresh struggle for freedom and effective civil control of military affairs. The Berlin correspondent of the Westminster Gazette points out that the militarist agitation has been chiefly a Conservative and press campaign, in which the personnel of the Army has played no part. But that is just the danger. Campaigns of this kind in a democratic country speedily die a natural death, but where they can count upon almost certain victory they constitute a serious menace to civil and religious liberty.

MR. BALFOUR's personality, and his interesting if inconclusive position as a thinker, will give special interest to his course of Gifford Lectures at Glasgow. The audience at the inaugural lecture last Monday is said to have numbered about 3,000. He announced that his subject was Theism, and, further, that he would not spend time in criticising other people's systems, but in trying to make his own point of view clear. He wished it to be understood that when he spoke of God it was not the Absolute of which he was speaking, but it was a God whom a man might easily love and adore. It was not a God who was sometimes apt to appear as merely the end or conclusion of an inevitable logical process.

PROCEEDING, Mr. Balfour said that he was quite indifferent to the charge of anthropomorphism. The God that he wished to talk of was a God of whom it would be inadequate but not untrue to say that He took sides, that He worked for great ends, that He was a spirit engaging with other spirits, and that He was in that sense—which was the only true sense—what he did not think it profane to call a social God, a God that asked us to work with Him, a God, therefore, in all those respects, who was to be distinguished, if only provisionally, from a sort of Absolute to which everything included within its boundless limits was equally indifferent, to whom the good and the bad, all that they admired and all that they detested, were equally necessary to form elements in a perfect whole.

AMID the sounds of strife and tumult it is pleasant to turn to Professor Herford's beautiful tribute to the memory of the late Miss Julia Wedgwood, which appeared in the Spectator last week. We hope that it will send many new readers to that great and inspiring book The Moral Ideal, as it will certainly kindle admiration for a character of rare nobility and attractiveness. "With some of her closest friends," Professor Herford writes, "she had scarcely an article of faith in common, unless it were that the faith which can be put into articles cannot be final. Little concerned with the details of politics, she felt deeply upon its larger issues. The sufferings of animals were an enduring sorrow to her, and she was an ardent and generous supporter of the cause of antivivisection. But, as has been said, her friendships by no means followed these lines. A strong Conservative herself, she had intimate friends among Liberals no less 'strong.' That is, happily, not uncommon, but intercourse between them can rarely have evolved so constantly the sense of a fellowship deeper than creeds or policies, as did ours with her. Deepest of all in her was the passion for righteousness, the divine fire which glowed in Greek as in Hebrew, and of which policies and creeds, in their noblest exponents, are the partial, the stammering expression."

* * *

MR. LLOYD THOMAS sends us another vigorous letter on the Kikuyu controversy this week. Evidently we have deeply offended in his eyes, and our comments seem to him to require severe handling in the interest, among other things, of "fair journalism." We are prepared for a large measure of disagreement, and expose ourselves cheerfully to the sharp-shooting of our critics. That is one of the conditions of our existence. We can only bring our best judgment to bear upon the problems and controversies of the hour. We know that it is fallible, and we stand always subject to correction. But we try to be courteous and to avoid the unfairness which arises from prejudice and hasty or ill-considered opinions. In the present case we cannot see how we have offended in these respects, and after further reflection, and in face of all that Mr. Lloyd Thomas urges to the contrary, we are only confirmed in our former judgment.

* * *

HERE we should like to advise any of our readers who are interested in the subject to read the pamphlet on the Kikuyu Conference written by the Bishop of Uganda. It has not achieved the notoriety of the Bishop of Zanzibar's "Open Letter" on the Ecclesia Anglicana, but of the two it strikes us as far the more interesting, able, and statesmanlike document. As a constructive scheme, drawn up by men who are anxious to promote closer union in common religious work, its proposals are full of interest, and ought, we think, to be welcomed even by men who cannot themselves accept the doctrinal terms. They are a step, but a very important step, in the right direction, and certainly it would never occur to us to describe the scheme as an "ecclesiastical monstrosity" or its authors as "Evangelical antiquarians." We use the word "proposals" advisedly, for the Bishop of Uganda makes it clear that the Conference settled nothing. It only drew up a series of proposals, which are submitted to fair and wise criticism. These are his words: "The printed Memorandum in which are embodied the resolutions of the Conference is headed 'Proposed Scheme of Federation.' From the first it has been clearly understood that none of the signatories claimed any power to decide. The utmost that has been done has been to submit to the authorities concerned what have seemed to the missionaries in conference to be feasible proposals in the direction of united action. No Church and no Society stands committed; the whole scheme is still sub judice."

THERE is nothing in all this which touches in any way solemn pledges and agreements at ordination, unless it is pleaded that the clergy of the Church of England have signed away their freedom even to formulate schemes of reform or to discuss proposals for more effective work. The one thing that has been done and cannot be undone is the "open Communion." This is really the chief rock of offence, and the Bishop of Oxford has written that any repetition of it would be regarded by High Churchmen as "strictly intolerable." But it does not follow that the Bishop of Uganda and the clergy who agree with him have done anything dishonourable, or even been guilty of ecclesiastical irregularity. Mr. Lloyd Thomas along with the school of rigid High Churchmen puts a very definite and exclusive interpretation upon a particular rubric. Many learned and devoted ministers of the Church do not accept this interpretation, and whatever our opinion may be worth we agree with them. In any case this "open Communion" is no novelty. It has a long history behind it, and is customary in many places at the present time. In these circumstances we hardly think that strong words like "broken pledges" are called for. There is no taint of risky compromise about it, and the conscience is entirely void of offence.

* * *

THERE are other issues raised by the Bishop of Zanzibar in his onslaught upon heresy which have only a distant connection with the Kikuyu Conference and co-operation in the Mission field. He makes a fierce attack upon the group of essayists in "Foundations," and upon the editor, Mr. Streeter, in particular. Here undoubtedly the question of permissible theological liberty in the Church of England does arise. But it is a question which can hardly be settled by reference to any standards fixed by the Bishop of Oxford. "Lux Mundi" opened the floodgates of historical criticism and modern speculation, and "Foundations" has only carried the same principles a stage further. In a letter which appeared in the Times on Thursday Mr. F. C. Conybeare writes that the conclusions of Dr. Gore in his book Dissertations on the Incarnation, "are from the standpoint of any orthodox Church redolent of the worst heresy, and in any age before the 17th century would have speedily brought him to the stake." But Mr. Conybeare hastens to add, "For all this, however, and yet more because almost alone among Anglican Bishops he stands for social and political progress, I love him. He has discovered that the world was not created merely for the 'gentlemen,' and has the courage to say so." With this pleasant confession, which for our part we heartily endorse, we may leave the subject for the present.

IS IT PEACE?

BY MISS EDITH DURHAM.

ON returning to England after struggling for two and a half years with the awful results of war—for, though you in England took little notice of it, fighting began in the parts where I worked in April, 1911—the most distressing and astounding thing to me is the ignorance, the light inconsequence, with which most people seem to regard war. Perhaps it is owing to the cinematograph shows which seem to have sprouted, like toadstools, everywhere since I left England. But people seem to think that when the war-film is finished it is all put back in its box, and things are the same as before. They ask most cheerfully, "Well, I suppose they are all settling quietly down now out there," and seem to think that, the show being over, you come home, eat your supper and go to bed. All is peace.

Peace. What peace? If you ask me, "Is there anything more terrible than war?" I reply emphatically, "The time that follows immediately afterwards." It is then that the real misery begins. It is then that the innocent victims—those who have escaped sudden death by shot, shell, and burning—"settle down quietly" to die of cold and starvation. You have never witnessed such a thing. You cannot imagine it. Think of any flourishing country district you know, and imagine that every house has been burnt to the ground, that previous to burning, every article of the smallest value has been looted by the soldiers, that of the hay and corn stacks only black circles of ash remain; that every fruit tree has been felled for fuel. And that, when Peace begins, the surviving inhabitants crawl back, crouch against the blackened ruins of their homes, and have to face the winter.

Between April and October last I rode to some twenty-eight burnt-out districts near Scutari, Albania. The people do not live in "villages" as we understand them. The houses of a so-called village are often scattered far apart; each standing in its own plot of ground. I had known these places in former days, when great olive gardens, vegetable gardens, and fat fields of maize spread round all the dwellings, and flocks of goats, sheep and cattle grazed in the fields and on the hillsides. As peasants, these people had been well to do. Plenty to eat, plenty of fine embroidery and silver chains to wear on a feast day. And all of them lavishly hospitable to a guest, as I know by experience. I found a wilderness of misery. Some districts, in fact—those which depended largely on fruit and olive trees, and where the trees were not merely felled but the roots stubbed up—were quite unrecognisable, and will not recover their prosperity perhaps for a generation.

So effectually had the destruction of houses in some places been carried out by the invading troops, that nothing remained but heaps of stones, and even re-roofing was impossible. Women and children crouched together in wretched little hovels made of a few poles, rushes, and brushwood. There was not even straw obtainable. Mothers were chopping up grass and nettles and dandelion leaves to feed their hungry children. A few lucky people had saved a cow or two, or some goats or sheep. Scarcely any had a change of clothes, and some already, in September, were half naked. In addition to all this misery, smallpox broke out, and in one place I found thirteen poor wretches all ill with smallpox in a little cave.

It took, generally, ten to twelve hours to ride round a district, collect the headmen, obtain particulars, and deal out help. Some large districts took three days to visit. Those that I visited first I enabled to sow a fair amount of ground with maize or vegetables. They, I hope, will all pull through. The gratitude of some of them was most touching. A man one day brought me a wild duck; I said I could not accept it, he could get a good price for it in the bazaar. He replied that he would not sell it even for twenty francs. "I shot it for you; you have saved us." Another man came as spokesman from a group of twelve houses and brought a young goose. Their harvest, too, had saved them.

But the districts I was, by the kindness of friends, enabled to help thus, were all too few. When it became known that I was giving help, news came from further and further up country. The distress was far more widely spread than I had any idea of. It was too late then to sow, nor had I enough money. The poor people could not believe this. They imagined, some that I was a millionaire, others that I was supplied by the King. The scenes that took place when the fund was nearly exhausted were too painful for words. I sent messages in haste up country begging that no more should come to me for help. But they came. I could give but a few pence for a day or two's food. Then women, whose starved breasts had no more milk for the shrivelled baby, would fling themselves at my feet and weep, and kiss the edge of my dress and my boots. "They came, the soldiers came, they took everything, everything. My husband was shot. My children are out on the high-road. We have nothing, nothing." Then, fiercely and in despair: "If you won't give, then take them and throw them in the river; don't let them starve."

The most pitiful thing of all was, perhaps, that most of these unhappy victims had no idea whatever what the war was about. "Why did the great Kings (the Powers of Europe) let the soldiers come and kill and rob us?" Why, indeed? It would be impossible to make these poor creatures understand that the Great Powers are actually priding themselves on having "localised the trouble." "Are we not good?" they ask. "Our little hands have not torn each others' eyes. We have only sat round and watched those people being slaughtered." The Moslem Albanian women, with their starving children, are too ignorant to understand the noble self-restraint of the Powers.

Sometimes I returned tired after a twelve hours' ride, and found a lot of people who had been squatting all day at my door. It was late. I had not a penny piece left. They would sit all night even in the rain, hoping that I would help them in the morning. One man, I remember, collapsed at the gate, and only after we had laid him under a tree in the orchard and poured hot milk into him, was he able to tell a coherent tale.

It was the usual one of loot and burning. He had saved a few sheep and had lived on their price. Now he was destitute. He heard there was "an English Queen" in Scutari and had come. It had taken him nearly four days, as he had no food. Someone had given him a piece of bread on the way. He was one of the last cases I could give efficient help to.

I prepared to leave for England with the belief that though in some districts there would be deaths from starvation, yet our fund had saved a considerable number, and with the hope that I might raise money in England that would save the rest. The need was great, but was not unconquerable. Then came the final overwhelming catastrophe. The Powers, in their anxiety to avoid "tearing each others' eyes," drew, in March, a hasty and most ill-considered frontier. In drawing it they thought only of their own interests. As a diplomatist said to me: "In drawing a frontier, the ethnographical question is not considered." Which, being interpreted, means that human beings are handed over in thousands helpless to their enemy.

At the beginning of October the results of this policy were seen. I had just wound up my accounts and drawn from the bank the money for my return fare to England, when I had a telegram from Elbasan begging me to come at once, and bring medical stores for wounded. I begged three cases of dressings, &c., from the Italian Consulate, and started on horseback, with a packhorse, and the horse owner as guide. As it was fine weather, we reached Elbasan in three and a half days. But already on the way we met parties of refugees flying from the territories annexed by Servia. It was late afternoon when I arrived, and I was horrified to find that I was expected to stay and organise and pay for the relief work. By next morning, even before dawn, the refugees were streaming into the town. I watched them with dull dismay. Hundreds of men, women carrying babies and dragging little children, men and women bent under bundles of the few poor household goods they had managed to snatch before fleeing. Here and there a cow or two, or some sheep. A very few lucky people had a packhorse piled high with goods and one or two children perched on top. Almost all were unarmed, and had fled with scarcely anything but the clothes they wore. They were hungry, exhausted, dismayed, terrified. I remember a woman who showed me her cut feet and told that she and her three children had been six days tramping, "the children went so slowly." There were some Bulgarians and some gypsies, but the bulk were Moslem Albanians; fine specimens of humanity, who bore themselves bravely even in their misery, though many were almost dumb with despair. All, Moslem and Christian, told the same tale. Their villages had been set on and burnt by the Servian troops. I was given the particulars of twenty-seven villages in all. Some were miles away; near to Uskub, in fact. The accounts given were very painful. In some instances the troops had surrounded the village, set fire to it, and prevented those within from escaping; even, it was said, driving them back into the flames with bayonets. In inquiring into such affairs, one must always make allowance for the exaggeration which is inevitable from terrified people, and must always hope that some of those reported slain will have managed to conceal themselves and to escape. But, even if the sum of horrors were divided by ten, it left a terrible tale of "what man has done to man." And a thousand slain at least.

It is easy for one man to lie. Three or four can arrange to tell the same tale. But when a number of people are separately questioned and corroborate one another, there is little, if any, room for doubt. On my return journey, I found at Tirana a mass of people from the same villages: there were eight thousand at least. A number of these, taken quite haphazard and questioned, gave almost precisely similar accounts to those given by men of the same village in Elbasan. Nor when the old Hodja of Rechan broke down and wept when he told that he was one of five men who escaped alive out of eighty, and that he had heard the shrieks of the women burning in the village, could one doubt he was speaking the truth. In the face of all this misery I was helpless. The local authorities made a committee and allotted a thousand pounds for relief work. I had spent already at Elbasan all I had with me, and rode away from the sight of misery I could not relieve. I arrived back in Scutari only to find that the Serbs and Montenegrins had crossed the Albanian frontier and completely destroyed the houses of the tribes of Gashi and Krasnichi, and that beyond the border a number of villages near Prizreni and Djakova had been also burnt. From places three days' march away, unhappy beings came to ask my aid. I remember the shame of a man who said: "I have always given hospitality. I did not think I should ever be reduced to begging." And how his wife burst into tears when I told her that all I could do was to give food for a few days.

I left Scutari; without funds it was impossible to remain. Colonel Phillips, who is in command there, writes me that the misery is extreme, and that he especially begs help for the tribes of Gashi and Krasnichi. Mr. Kennedy, the American missionary in Elbasan, writes praying for funds for the refugees there, and at Tirana. Clothing, as well as food, is needed, but if money be sent he can give employment to many refugee women and distribute the garments they make. The money thus gives twofold help.

I have not entered into any political question as to whether or not the devastation wrought was justifiable. I appeal only for help for the wretched victims. Many can yet be saved. All sums entrusted either to the Editor of this paper or sent direct to the Albanian Relief Fund, the Union of London and Smith's Bank, College-crescent, Finchley-road, London, N.W., will be acknowledged in the paper, and will be sent by me to one or other of the above-named gentlemen. One penny will buy a maize ration sufficient to keep body and soul together for a day, and every little helps.

It is Peace. But if help be not forthcoming the peace of death by slow starvation is all the peace that awaits the victims of fanaticism and international politics.

KIKUYU.

By EDWARD LEWIS.

I CONGRATULATE myself that nothing which I am likely to write will embarrass the Church of England. Besides, I do not intend to refer to the subject sufficiently indicated by the title of this article, in its aspect of a domestic quarrel within the Anglican community. My observations will be of the most general character.

This thing is being said:—"Our different churches in the mission field must be united if they are to have any chance of stemming the advancing tide of Mohammedanism." I protest against that. Something feels wrong, to me, about it. Christianity is not in the world to antagonise Mohammedanism. Surely the missionary spirit in both the religions springs from the same root. Surely, in each case, it is those who have the light acting under its propulsive power to spread it. Surely the Mohammedan missionaries are as much bondservants to the truth as the Christian. In some sort, it is the higher humanity loving the lower humanity which accounts for the presence of both Islam and Christianity in British East Africa. If either Mohammedan or Roman or Anglican priests are out there to make money, or to gain éclat, or to aggrandise an institution, they are open to severe criticism; if, on the other hand, they are there to uplift and serve and redeem humanity—and, taking them at their best, this is probably the truth about all of them—they deserve commendation according to their zeal. Take a young Christian missionary and a young Mohammedan missionary, and place them side by side, and let them talk to each other of the things that lie nearest to their hearts, and they will say the same things for all intents and purposes. It is divine enthusiasm, it is love, in both cases. In both cases, it is the urge of the Will of God. By what right does Christianity, to say nothing of a section of Christianity, identify the Kingdom of God with itself?

Indeed, from the institutional point of view, it is likely enough that Mohammedanism is a more effective uplifting agency, for the lowest races, than Christianity. It is worth asking whether the "evangelisation of the world in a single generation" is a rational ideal. If it were possible, would it be well to bring all the tribes of men as they are at this moment under the dispensation of Love and Liberty? For races which are low in the scale of civilisation, the little children of the great human family, is it not better that they should come under a dispensation of severe discipline and obedience—a kind of military rule expressed in religious terms? Do we not make a great mistake to take away from these half-savage people the sanctions of their own native religion and provide them with another set of sanctions which they are not sufficiently developed to understand or to use? Is there any sense in telling a child that, in the sight of God, it is equal to its parent or its master? As a matter of fact, is it equal?

I put down these questions almost at random; the fact that they can be asked suggests the blindness and folly of "opposing Mohammedanism all along the line." With a kind of unctuous horror some may lift up their hands and utter the word "polygamy"; but apart from the fact that polygamy is an advance upon promiscuity, it deserves to be said that not only Mohammedans, but some of the native races themselves, can give points to a Christian community on some matters pertaining to domestic morality.

I pass to another matter. The fear has been expressed that the discussion which has arisen out of the Kikuyu Conference may split the Anglican Church from top to bottom. Probably it would if it could find a logical issue. Most likely it will not, for the way of compromise is sure to be found. In spite of this, however, we are witnessing here yet another manifestation of the spirit which is, in so many quarters to-day, threatening to shake existing organisation to its foundations, and possibly to break it up. The Bishop of Zanzibar represents the type of mind which says that life exists for organisation; the Bishops of Uganda and Mombasa represent the type which says that organisation is secondary to life. The former will either have to stand out of the main stream of life, and strand himself on the shore, or else be broken. He may be the sincerest man on earth, and have the best possible intentions, but he must either stand aside or go down. That is the end, however long it may take to reach. A church which would confine the life to its own rites and sacraments, would imprison God within its own peculiar ark, must either be broken in pieces or left behind on the wayside. It must be either destroyed or deserted by the Life. When the claim of spiritual religion is announced, the toughest organisation that opposes it is bound to succumb. The spirit of intercommunion is the love-spirit; its opposite is the spirit of exclusive communion; and the latter has no chance at all in the long run. Humanity is greater than the Church. Brotherhood is greater than priesthood. God Himself must be in some sort against the exclusive man or sect. It is the big sin. To "limit the Holy One" is to sin against the Holy Ghost.

They say that Christianity will lose its power in the presence of heathendom if it is divided and at war within itself; this is likely enough, for this is precisely what has happened to Christianity in the presence of the civilised world. It is not that our divisions make us weak, but they put us in the wrong. A disunited Christianity is a contradiction in terms; its age alone scarcely saves it from ridicule. We may go on gulling ourselves for a long time with fine words and fair-sounding phrases, but to say that Life Eternal can only be received on terms arranged by an organisation is one of those preposterous assertions which, whenever they crystallise into conduct, must become an "offence which smells to heaven."

The landlord who would shut out the people from the land, the capitalist who would shut out the labourer from a living wage, and the priest who would shut out the unbaptized, unconfirmed person from the "means of grace," are but several aspects of that one "devil" whose "works" the Christ is present in the world to destroy. It is amazing enough that men of God who are called Christians should oppose the advance of men of God who are called Mohammedans; but more amazing still that men of God, naming the same name, serving the same Master, should not be able to celebrate together the Memorial Feast without committing an offence worthy of reprimand and persecution. To such straits does organisation bring us when it is full-grown! In the light of such a controversy as this we are shown up. We seem to have lost, if not our vision, at any rate our sense of humour. No wonder the world is saying, in various emphatic ways, "Take away that bauble!"

Can the Church be saved? To put the question in another form, can the Church be humanised?

THE CONTRIBUTION OF OUR AGE TO RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

II.

THE next great uprising of religion sprang, not from Quakerism, but from a spiritual ancestry much nearer to the true norm of Christian faith. It is a fact that reveals much, that both John Bunyan and John Wesley, at the decisive moments of their spiritual history, were reading Luther on Galatians and Romans respectively. What was it, then, that Wesley sought, and how did it differ from what Fox sought? He wanted holiness, whereas Fox had wanted illumination. For thirteen years before his conversion Wesley had pursued one object—to make the moral life of his soul real before God. He had sought it through severe self-discipline, denial, fasting, continual study, philanthropy, prayer and recollection, and converse with like-minded friends. It took him thirteen years to find out that he had missed the deepest thing of all. Holiness is not a matter of sheer will—it is a matter also of what we love. It is a matter of the depth of our spiritual insight and of our beliefs, not simply of the diligence with which we discipline our desires and moods. It depends not so much on what we are as on how we stand in relation to God. Holiness begins by being a question of morals; it finds, sooner or later, that it must become a question of religion. Sooner or later we have to bring God in, as a living, felt experience, and then everything is altered. When Wesley did that—when, after living for years on Jeremy Taylor's "Holy Living and Dying," and Law's "Serious Call," and the "Imitation," in the best Anglican mode, he came to know the Moravian way of religion—he saw that he had been living "under the law." To live under the law is to try to meet the awful demands of conscience and obligation, and yet to find oneself always falling back into failure and despair. It is to feel the law growing more majestic and exigent, while the power to satisfy it does not grow in proportion. It is to live in the seventh of Romans instead of the eighth. There is no joyful sense of victory.

To Wesley in this state came Peter Böhler, with his teaching of Faith. Why did Wesley find it so difficult to accept this? Böhler said to him: "My brother, my brother, that philosophy of yours must be purged away." We can see what this obstructive philosophy was. Wesley was the child of his time. Mark Pattison goes so far as to bring Methodism under the general head of the Rationalism of the century. Men had revolted alike from Church Authority and from the Inner Light "of the sectaries of the last age," as they were contemptuously named. There was an "appeal from the frantic discords of the enthusiasts" to common reason and common sense. Wesley's mind was common sense itself. The Methodist "plan of salvation" is an instance of this—logical, matter of fact like an Act of Parliament. "Methodist discipline," said Wesley, "is entirely founded upon common sense." (Sermon 112.) How repugnant to him, at first, must the teaching of salvation by Faith have been. On the one hand, it looked like proposing Faith as a substitute for a good life—a mere subjective state of mind, an emotional caprice, a facile enthusiasm, instead of good works and careful self-mastery. On the other hand, to expect God to save one from "the guilt and power of sin," merely on condition of "believing," was a monstrous difficulty to rationalist thought. No wonder that Wesley came by the slowest steps to his joyful deliverance. Slowly and painfully he had to think himself clear of "that philosophy." New Testament Faith, saving Faith, had hitherto been to him, as it mostly has been to those brought up under Roman Catholic or High Church influences, an unrealised mystery. "Under the law" men do not have that complete sense of their own utter insufficiency, joined with that complete resting in God's utter mercy, which is what faith means. Their religious experience is still too much a human affair, not yet finding its entire Source and Warrant in God. Just as Fox had found peace as soon as he found that which could make the moral demand Authoritative, so Wesley's deliverance came when he found that which could make the moral demand Effective. In both cases it came through Faith. For at last Wesley saw that faith was no mere assent of the intellect, and no mere subjective caprice, but the deepest and most decisive moral act of which the soul of man is capable. It was the only way by which the whole man could gather up all his powers, and lay hold upon something stronger than himself. Paul and Luther had declared that faith was the way. Wesley now proved it in his own heart. So he found salvation. The old powerlessness to fulfil the moral law was transcended. He felt in his deepest being that his sins were forgiven. This was his conversion.

There are aspects of Wesley's experience that remain opaque to modern spiritual reflection. But for the most part we can find points of contact. (1) We feel that he conceived the relation between the soul and God too much as an external arrangement. God and man are too clearly marked off from one another. He could not help this, for it was part of the rationalism which he shared with the rest of the age, e.g., with Deism. But the unfortunate result was that Reconciliation with this God had somehow to be secured over and above the spiritual surrender of his own heart to the love of God. He had to wait until God by a signal intimation definitely declared that he forgave him his sins. This forgiveness was deliverance from penalties, and the Atonement that made this possible was a transaction. Here is a point that the modern religious sense has passed beyond. We now feel that Wesley, with his logical rigorism, is in this matter further from us in our present need than was Fox. But our danger is now in the other direction. If Wesley was too definite, we are not definite enough. The task for us is to keep the sense of God from slipping away, as Martineau says, into the vaguest idealism—"the mere self-painting of the yearning spirit." (2) Another result was that conversion appeared too much like magic, not a wonderful development growing straight out of the believer's condition of mind and heart. This impression was increased by Wesley's insisting on instantaneous assurance of conversion. We now realise that conversion is rather moral than magical. Too much, however, has been made of this objection. What is important in knowing ourselves "saved" is not suddenness but definiteness. Here, again, if Wesley was too definite, we are woefully indefinite. The clear witness of the Spirit with our spirits is as much a need of this time as it was of St. Paul's. (3) The word Experience is always coming in. This is because Experience was a foremost fact with Wesley and his age. The Experience philosophy, asking before all else for the warrant of sensible proof, was the spirit and breath of the time. Wesley accepted the standpoint of his contemporaries, and then made it subserve his own purpose. The very thing that seemed likely to submerge all religion came to be with him the flood that floated religion to its victory. His master stroke was to identify Experience and Faith—those seeming antagonists! His people sang: "What we have felt and seen, with confidence we tell." Fox had stressed Inwardness. Wesley exalted Experience. That is, there must be not only a certain state of mind; something real must be done by God in the mind. Quaker inwardness might (it did!) come to mean something done by man in his own inward self. That would be a moralism, albeit a spiritual moralism. Wesley wanted, not a spiritual moralism, but a spiritual experience—salvation wrought by God through faith. (4) The conflict was not in Wesley's case, as it had been in that of Fox, between formalism and spirituality. It was between works and faith, between law and grace. This was an immense step forward. It made sure a certain point which religious experience will not henceforth go back upon. That conflict is not, indeed, the same as ours, for we live in a day that doubts "law" as much as it doubts faith; and there is no easy evangelical method for us in waving faith as a banner against works—"throwing a Gospel in people's faces in a Low Church way," as Dr. Forsyth says. But, at least, any way of salvation that the world will receive will have to be a way of faith. (5) But we must not miss what is, after all, the crowning glory of Methodism. The Wesleyan experience recreated, as scarcely anything else has ever done, the New Testament sense of the free love of God to sinful men—"Thou hidden Source of calm repose, Thou all-sufficient love divine." "Thou hidden love of God whose height, Whose depth, unfathomed, no man knows." This fiery heart of Redeeming Love is as unlike the modern sentimentalising about love as the All, as sunlight is to moonlight. The humble gratitude of the sinner sure of God's forgiveness is an engine of moral power that colder religions can never know.

In another paper an attempt will be made to connect all this with modern types of experience, as represented by Dr. Ferries, Mr. Temple, and Dr. Forsyth.

W. WHITAKER.

YONE NOGUCHI.

In various plainly perceptible ways the peoples of the East and the folk of the West are being drawn together. Ring by ring, a chain of connection is being forged. Warm welcome assuredly awaits the forging of each link which serves to lengthen and strengthen that connecting chain, for, as the years advance, these links advance also in interest and efficiency alike. Science, mechanics, art, each has its part to play, and history records the playing. The link formed by literature has its real and abiding lustre, largely no doubt because it supplies sensation and thought with adequate shaping and expression. By literary wizardry the soul of one race is photographed and framed for the enlightenment and enjoyment of another, aforetime, stranger race.

The religious idea, concentrating itself in a book, or series of books, embodies the facts and the legends to which the idea owes narration, development, and expansion. One such collection of imagery, of psalmody, of historic and spiritual worth, occurs in some Oriental quarter famous for the zeal and reverence of its prophets and its propagandists. Another publishes itself in the West, bearing the impress of a differing strain of spiritual perception, not actually opposing the positions approved by the former, but, rather, when rightly regarded and carefully considered, helping them towards a common supplement. Each holds within the boards of its binding much that explains and amplifies both. Each appeals sympathetically to both, and, in the exercise of genuine sympathy, the exponents of each may seek and find that depth of understanding which signifies unity.

The race of humanity is made up of man and man. Every unit has its worth, but only as connected with the rest; and it is the sympathetic sense which, acknowledging and exulting in the connection, forms the unifying bond of affirmation and appreciation.

The link of letters composes itself of that sterling metal by means of which the bond of union is fashioned and expressed. It becomes most articulate, most profound, when beaten out on the anvil of the poet's heart and moulded in rhyme and rhythm. It is for the poet—and this is his highest privilege—to unfold and uplift the truth as he sees it at any time and in any place, because he realises that at the core of truth lies sympathy between man and man; between the people of one clime and the people of another.

The poet discovers and discloses that fine feeling which presupposes sympathy. The faculty of fitly phrasing the tone, shape, and significance of the thing seen is his by divine right. By means, then, of the poets of a people the soul of that people becomes known, understood, and appreciated. More, the poetic sympathy solves many apparent differences between soul and soul.

Our immediate aim is that of very cordial consideration of the work of a poet of Japan; work which is at once arresting and markedly informative. We have recognised in Japanese poetic art a directness of appeal, a lively lucidity of tone, a depth of intention effected with a brevity of utterance almost rapid in its determination. In few words, for the most part in fewer lines, our present poet, to quote him forthwith as example, defines his theme. He, Yone Noguchi, paints a poet's portrait for us thus:—

Out of the deep and the dark,
A sparkling mystery, a shape,
Something perfect,
Comes like the stir of the day;
One whose breath is an odour,
Whose eyes show the road to stars,
The breeze on his face,
The glory of Heaven on his back.
He steps like a vision hung in air
Diffusing the passion of eternity;
His abode is the sunlight of morn,
The music of eve his speech;
In his sight
One shall turn from the dust of the grave

And move upward to the woodland.

He tells us at least part of the poet's secret: "I'll gather the poems from the flowers and from the hearts of birds." He dedicates one dainty little volume* to the Spirits of Fuji Mountain. This sacred mountain has its mysterious and mystic message:—

We, being around thee, forget to die;
Death is sweet,
Life is sweeter than death.
We are mortals and also gods,
Innocent companions of thine,
O eternal Fuji.

Mortals and also gods; eternal as the mountain in its snow-capped sanctity.

Yone Noguchi asks: "When I am lost in the deep body of a mist on a hill, The universe seems built with me as its pillar. Am I the God upon the face of the deep, nay, deepless deepness, in the beginning?" Does he seek his answer "By the Sea"?

The silence of the stars was as great
As the voice of the sea; it is so
Since the First Day, that the stars
Keep the silence and the sea the voice.

The reply reaches him, but full of certainty and pregnant with a simple yet divine philosophy: "The Life-Vessels for soul passengers glide down the river of Eternity. O vast river! Solemn river! yet kind river! The vessels that are Love-roped by the hand of God sail without failing into the gate of Heaven."

He devotes a considerable number of his pages to the exposition of religious and philosophic thought, but does not confine himself to these. In intimate and loving touch with Nature, he writes with charm of her ways and moods, her relationship to his adored Japan, "the fairyland of Nippon," and the exquisite and tender subtleties of her beauty there. With remarkable brevity generally, with vivid, vibrant, appealing force, he paints his verbal picture and conveys to us just what he himself beholds and exults in. He writes of Spring: "Flying Spring, a beautiful runaway." Of Summerland, he tells how "Her melody and odour softly creep down to the sleeper through the grave, waking him to life again."

* From the Eastern Sea. 4s. net. Also The Pilgrimage. 4s. net. Lafcadio Hearn in Japan. 6s. net. And other works. London: Elkin Mathews, 4, Cock-street, S.W.

Autumn [he sings] stirred me
With a sweet sadness. The dark murmur
And cold song of leaves and winds
Died; it was a beauteous death,
I paced into dream and thought;
How sweetly sad to die; I was taught
By the leaves and winds; the yellow leaves
Resignedly fell, and their stir slowly died
Into the silence; the winds passed
Graciously into death.

This genial singer "From the Eastern Sea" skips over the winter-tide with what semblance of gladness he may, and revels and rejoices again in spring and summer and overflowing sunshine.

His melodious message is one of unity and peace: "The Goddess of Peace wore a golden robe," and

In her velvet sandals Stepped airily
As the stealing yellow robes of the young moon.

Her every step
Echoed a silent preaching of peace.

ERIC HAMMOND.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE CONFIRMATION RUBRIC.

SIR,—It would be interesting and instructive to your readers if someone possessing greater historical and legal knowledge than I can lay claim to would discuss the application of the Confirmation Rubric. I observe that Mr. Lloyd Thomas regards that Rubric as universally binding. But it seems to me that it is one of those prohibitions of which we may quite honourably limit the application by considering the animus imponentis, and that the Confirmation Service is obviously intended for young people who have been baptized and grown up in the Church. In that case the Rubric has no application to Nonconformists. In my younger days I think there was a general impression that, in opposition to the practice of some Dissenting bodies, the Communion of the Church of England was as open as it is among ourselves. In the Corporation Act, the Test Act, and the Occasional Conformity Act it seems to be assumed that every adult of decent life might, if he chose, partake of the Sacrament in his parish church, and Confirmation is not referred to. And, indeed, the last-named Act suggests that the Sacrament could not be refused, for it does not forbid its administration to Nonconformists, but hits them indirectly by imposing on them certain disabilities during their tenure of any public office to which they may have been elected after participating. To all appearance the Act would have been unnecessary if the Rubric had been supposed to exclude Nonconformists. At least in my limited reading I have not met with any statement that occasional Conformists were confirmed. Any further light on the subject will be welcomed by Yours, &c.,

JAMES DRUMMOND.

Oxford, January 13, 1914.

THE KIKUYU CONTROVERSY.

SIR,—You say in reply to my letter that the storm-centre is the attempt of the High Church Party to capture the Church for their own exclusive position; and you still identify Bishop Gore with this attempt, although in his Times letter he explicitly repudiates and condemns the extreme High Church Party (which includes the Bishop of Zanzibar) for “adopting a position from which the familiar views of Evangelical Churchmen must be pronounced to be strictly heretical.”

Now the actual case in dispute is the other way round. It is not the Anglo-Catholics who began it. It was the Low Evangelical party that struck the first blow by trying to bring into being an ecclesiastically illegal Federation with Non-Episcopalians, and an “open communion” known beforehand to be repugnant and intolerable to High Churchmen at home and in the neighbouring district of Zanzibar. What is the basis of this new Evangelical Alliance? The reference in your columns to Colenso in this connection is not only irrelevant but misleading. Colenso would not have touched the proposed Federation whose basis is reactionary and impossible. As few people take the trouble to read the original sources permit me to quote from the “fundamental provisions” of the constitution.

“The basis of Federation shall consist in: (a) The loyal acceptance of the Holy Scriptures as our supreme rule of Faith and Practice; of the Apostles’ and Nicene Creeds as a general expression of fundamental Christian belief; and in particular, belief in the absolute authority of Holy Scripture as the word of God: in the Deity of Jesus Christ, and in the atoning death of our Lord as the ground of our forgiveness.

“(b) Recognition of common membership between the Churches in the Federation.

“(c) Regular administration of the two Sacraments, Baptism [not necessarily infant Baptism] and the Lord’s Supper by outward signs.

“(d) A common form of Church organisation.”

And do you expect High Churchmen to accept this kind of ecclesiastical monstrosity in the name of the Church of England?

The Bishop of Zanzibar in his Ecclesia Anglicana points out that he would thus have to surrender to the Low Evangelical party, because he would be forced to come into religious and ecclesiastical relationship with people who exclude from the basis of communion things common to all Anglicans. Let me tabulate what, according to him, has been removed from the basis:—

“(a) It does not contain the Creed commonly called the Creed of St. Athanasius.

“(b) It does not contain the Rite, or Sacrament, of Confirmation.

“(c) It does not contain the rite, or Sacrament, of Absolution.

“(d) It does not contain Episcopacy.

“(e) It does not provide a Priest for the Celebration of the Holy Communion.

“(f) It does not contain a rule of Infant Baptism.

“(g) It does not know the Catholic Church, or the Communion of Saints, except in such a general sense as is already admitted by the four Protestant bodies that have joined the Federation.”

The Bishop of Zanzibar may, from the Liberal Christian point of view, be pronounced a fanatical and narrow-minded bigot. But so may be the Evangelical antiquarians who propose to establish at this time of day “the absolute authority of Holy Scripture.” Let us give even the bigot his due. Imagine the situation reversed. Suppose the Bishop of Zanzibar proposed, in the interests of Christian unity, Federation with Roman Catholic missionaries by adding to, not taking from, the Anglican basis. Let us say that these additional elements are the Supremacy and Infallibility of the Pope, the adoration of the Mother of God, the Invocation of the Saints, coupled with a yet closer approximation to Roman worship in ritual and ceremonial than is at present the case; how would the neighbouring Bishops of Uganda and Mombasa like it? Would they not at once complain, “This is not Anglicanism as we and our Evangelical fellow-Churchmen understand it; and how can we remain missionaries in the name of the Church of England if you, a neighbouring bishop, into and from whose diocese our church-members come and go, play fast and loose with the basis of our communion, and enter into these compromising and entangling alliances?”

I hope you will understand that I hold no brief for either party. In my zeal for a genuine and honest Christian Unity, I could almost say, “A plague on both your houses!” But in the interests of fair journalism and of Free Catholicism, I think it necessary to point out that justice has not been done to the High Church party in this controversy, least of all to Dr. Gore, who has, with characteristic frankness, explained the conditions of peace. To me the conclusion of the whole matter is this. However earnestly we may desire union among all churches, we cannot have that union, until clerics and laics attain an austerer sense of the obligations of veracity and of fidelity to solemn pledges and agreements. It people want the advantages of dogma (and there are such advantages) let them have dogma, by all means, and in as precise, definite, unequivocal a form as theological scribes of the law can frame it. Having got it, let them have the sincerity and the simple ordinary honour to abide by it. If, on the other hand, people want, as I do, the advantages of intellectual liberty (and there are such advantages), let them come into the open of a really Free Catholic Christianity, and accept whole-heartedly the non-subscribing principles which at present Unitarians, almost alone, have the honour to represent and preach.—Yours, &c.,

J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham,
January 12, 1914.

THE CHAPELS IN WHICH MARK RUTHERFORD PREACHED.

SIR,—I am very sorry that I cannot give any evidence that Mr. Hale White preached at Billingshurst, but I certainly saw the statement made somewhere at the time of his death, and my impression is that I saw it in THE INQUIRER. I had never heard of Billingshurst before, but made a visit to the place, saw the Unitarian Chapel, and interviewed some of the members. They were unable to confirm or deny my impression. It was hardly to be expected that after more than sixty years any evidence could be obtained.

I read the other day an article in the Dublin Express where it was mentioned that Mr. Hale White supplied the pulpit at Ditchling for two years. Perhaps some reader could inform me whether Mr. Chignell was the minister of the Unitarian Church in Portsmouth when Mr. Hale White preached there. It is very probable that Mr. Hale White preached in the interesting old chapel at Lewes. I shall look forward with great interest to the publication of Miss Kensett’s book.—Yours, &c.

W. ROBERTSON NICOLL.

Hampstead, January 13, 1914.

THE INDIAN QUESTION IN SOUTH AFRICA.

SIR,—Since writing last week I have received more information on the above question—information which will probably interest your readers. With reference to the £3 tax on indentured Indians, I learn that the wages of men under indenture begin at 11s. a month, and advance gradually to 15s. a month. Women begin at 8s., and advance in the course of four years to 12s. This, I presume, is in addition to rations. Out of these meagre wages the £3 tax has to be paid. Any indentured servant, male or female, who goes more than two miles from his allotted place of work is liable to imprisonment. Children become liable to the tax on attaining the age of 16. If they do not indenture they may be sent back to India, that is, separated from their families. This tax, in the case of girls, is said to have led to grave and unspeakable results, but I believe the tax is not now collected from girls.

Mr. Boydell, a Labour member for one of the Natal constituencies, speaking this week, denounced the treatment of the Indians during the strike as “horrible.” He pointed out, however, that “in many trades, such as tinsmiths, tailors, and painters, Europeans were being driven out by Indian competition. There were 58,000

Indian children in Natal, who would soon be looking for jobs. They were faced with the problem as to whether they were going to have white workers, or whether they were coming down to live on rice. The last census showed that there were 4,000 less white men in the Province than at the previous census. He thought sufficient inducement should be held out to the Indians to return to their own country."

This will show how difficult and complex the whole problem is. Whether it can be solved by a system of Trade Boards, industrial citizenship, with Trade Union qualifications, and the application, not of a racial or colour line, but of a civilisation line, is matter for discussion. But the very complexity of the problem shows how necessary it is in justice that we should associate some representative of the Indians with us in the inquiry which has been instituted.—Yours, &c.,

Cape Town.

R. BALMFORTH.

THE MINISTRY IN NEW ZEALAND.

SIR,—While rejoicing in the enthusiasm aroused in colonial work by Mr. Bowie's recent visit to Canada, one wishes that his visit could have been extended to New Zealand and Australia. May I therefore enter a plea for one of our churches there, namely, Wellington, N.Z., one of our recent and most promising centres for missionary zeal? For, after all, there is little use in starting new centres if we leave them without leaders while in their infancy. I do not think it possible to find better material and a more promising field for Unitarianism than in Wellington, given a man of strong personality, enthusiasm, and one abreast of the times. He would find, as we found, a ready and enthusiastic response from a kindly and most hospitable people. They are kindness itself, and to a large extent free from the prejudices and conservatism to be found at home. When one remembers that, with rare exceptions, the majority of the people who were attracted to the advertised meetings had never even heard of Unitarianism, yet when it was presented to them found that the message was what they wanted and for which they were ready to give freely of their means, so that in four years they subscribed nearly £4,000 for a Building Fund, with the generous help of the B. & F.U.A. and some English friends, besides paying the heavy initial current expenses of between £500 and £600 (owing at that time to the heavy rent of a hall, &c.), it will be seen what grand possibilities remain now that these initial difficulties no longer exist.

The Wellington Church has the unique distinction over our other churches in N.Z. (and, indeed, over the orthodox churches, too, as the only denomination who shared it with us was the Roman Catholic Church) of being built on a freehold instead of a leasehold site, and of being built of brick instead of wood, thus showing its value and stability. Anyone who understands colonial life will know that for some time to come our churches must be manned by men from home; even the orthodox churches are so dependent, and will recognise the difficulty of keeping a well-informed, enthusiastic congregation together without an accredited leader.

In how many of our churches founded from so small a nucleus could one secure a congregation of between 400 and 500, or a weekly class in philosophy of from 100 to 150; or, again, during the time they were giving and giving could the minister at the close of an evening service ask those interested to remain behind, explaining to them that owing to unforeseen difficulties an extra £100 must be paid the builders within the week, and confidently appeal to 100 members to promise £1 each? (And £97 10s. of the amount was paid!) All this, too, near the end of the four years' ministry. Does it not seem a thousand pities that such material and prospects should be scattered for the want of a leader?—Yours, &c.

HELEN JONES.

Highbury, N., January 13, 1914.

A WORD MORE ON NIETZSCHE.

SIR,—At various times there have appeared in your columns strange misunderstandings, and, on occasion, vilifications of Friedrich Nietzsche. Very humbly I have myself, from time to time, in reviews of books, articles, and letters, tried to offer to your readers another, and, as I have always thought, a truer view of the great German poet and rhapsodist. May I be pardoned, therefore, if I beg space for the following quotation from Baron von Hügel's "Eternal Life," itself a noble and intensely splendid work. Of Nietzsche Baron von Hügel writes: "This clean liver and devoted brother is, as a writer, destined to endure, not by his last works, 'The Twilight of the Idols' and 'The Antichrist,' 1888, with their wild and vulgarly violent attacks upon Christianity; but by many an exquisite saying or half-page in his booklets on Strauss, on the Use and Drawback of History, and on Schopenhauer; in his Human, all too Human, and on to his Zarathustra. Even in these writings we everywhere come upon excesses, yet excesses which, if often (in form) vehemently anti-religious, or even anti-moral, spring doubtless largely from a thirst and search for what religion alone can give. Especially is this the case with Nietzsche's favourite idea of the 'Superman'—that pathetically hopeless misapplication of our instinctive need of adoration—in which Professor Aloys Riehl, himself for so long an aggressively negative philosopher, finds one of the many significant and powerful (because utterly sincere, indeed as yet unconscious), re-awakenings of the religious passion and conviction in these our times."

In these few golden lines there is the truth about Nietzsche, and henceforth there should be no unseemly slighting and dispraise. Let us think of that great, tragic soul as Von Hügel thinks of him: let us with humility call him our "devoted brother."—Yours, &c.

STANLEY A. MELLOR.

THE SUSTENTATION FUND.

SIR,—It is hoped that it may be possible this year for the managers of the Sustentation Fund to enter upon the first part, at all events, of the work specified in the appeal for the Special Fund now being raised. By the first part of the work I mean the raising of the stipends of all our duly qualified ministers in England and Wales to a minimum scale, subject to certain reasonable conditions as to the adequacy of the sphere of work and of local contributions.

I should be much obliged if, through your columns, you will permit me to ask the secretaries of all congregations which, being eligible, are likely to apply for a grant this year under the Minimum Scale Scheme (excluding for this purpose those at present receiving grants from the Sustentation Fund or the British and Foreign Unitarian Association) to communicate with me before the date of the Managers' Meeting on February 11 next, and, at the same time, to inform me what stipends their congregations are at present paying. All such information would, of course, be treated by the managers as confidential.

I would remind your readers that the operations of the Fund will extend in future to the whole of England and Wales, so that my remarks apply to the Northern as well as to the Southern half of the country. The minimum scale to which I have alluded is for cities and large towns in England £175, for towns or populous places (a) in England £150, (b) in Wales £140, and for agricultural districts (a) in England £120, (b) in Wales £110.

It should be clearly understood that the information for which I am now asking is of an informal nature only. The time for making formal applications for grants will come later on.—Yours, &c.

HAROLD F. PEARSON,

Hon. Sec. of the Sustentation Fund.

22, College Hill, London, E.C.,

January 13, 1914.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

SPANISH ISLAM.

Spanish Islam. A History of the Moslems in Spain. By Reinhart Dozy. Translated with a Biographical Introduction and additional Notes by Francis Griffin Stokes, with a Frontispiece and Map. London: Chatto & Windus. 21s. net.

It would not be saying too much to assert that Reinhart Dozy's "Histoire des Musulmans d'Espagne," though one of the least known, is intrinsically one of the most remarkable historical works of the last century. The book first appeared in 1861, written, it is to be noticed, in French, though its author was a Dutchman, whose family had been settled in Holland from 1647 onwards. Reinhart Dozy was born in 1820. In 1837 he entered the University of Leyden, and came under the direction of the capable Orientalist, Prof. Weijers, with whom he studied Arabic, Hebrew, Chaldee, and Syriac. From 1841 to 1843 Dozy wrote a monograph on old Arabian costume, compiling and arranging his material as gathered from documents in Oriental languages in the same spirit that the Renaissance scholars had conducted researches two or three centuries earlier in Latin and Greek antiquities. This he followed up by a "Dictionnaire détaillé des Noms des Vêtements chez les Arabes." The chief work, up to this date, on the history of the Arabs in Spain had been written in Spanish by a Spaniard, José Antonio Conde. When Dozy had read Conde's book, and recognised almost by intuition its inadequacies and inaccuracies, he concentrated himself on Spanish studies, and soon possessed "the best Spanish Library" in Leyden. Dozy was a man of considerable financial resources relatively to his needs, and was able to travel for material. He thus discovered fresh Arab MSS., and threw light on those already noted. He edited Arabic texts, amongst others one in English for the Society for the Publication of Oriental Texts, and compiled a Catalogue of Oriental MSS. In 1848 he issued a volume of an Arabic History of Africa and Spain.

It is necessary to bear in mind such studies as the foregoing, though many other labours of Dozy would have to be added, if the list were to be comprehensive. But sufficient has been said to make it evident that Dozy had taken adequate pains to afford a basis of preparation for a work involving great research. He was a master of Oriental bibliography, and in allied subjects knew how to find out and make use of all that had been previously written. In the special subject of Moslem Spain, aroused in the first instance by irresistible criticism of Conde's work, he was still further drawn to attack the subject by himself writing a work, by the publication, in 1843, of Don Pascual de Gayangos' history of the Mohammedan Dynasties in Spain, probably still the best known exposition of the subject. It may thus be said that substantially Dozy's work of preparation and writing of his History, issued in 1861, extended over twenty years. No portion of European history could demand greater erudition and patience of research. For the whole of his book is based upon the original Arabic authorities. He saw the Arabic point of view, as disclosed by the numerous MSS. and books the very existence of which was scarcely known by many so-called historians. He also understood the issues involved for European progress—political, religious, social, and literary.

It will thus be seen that Dozy's book is of no ordinary kind. It is the outcome of prodigious toil, such as has gone to the making of the greatest historical works. It has, for instance, been classed within its own limits with the magnificent "Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire" of Gibbon. If the classification, in any way, be allowed, Dozy's feat is differentiated from Gibbon by the extra strain of writing in a foreign language. For Dozy hoped by writing in French his book would appeal to the world of scholars. At any rate, the contents of Dozy's book are the result of unremitting energy and relentless demands made by the author upon himself. As the translator into English, Mr. F. G. Stokes, claims: "Dozy's magnum opus challenges comparison with the best specimens of historical literature. . . . The grace and lightness of the edifice suggest, perhaps, but faintly the immense labour expended on the discovery and accumulation of its materials . . . but, as Dozy reminds us in his Preface, the result of the labour of weeks was often compressed into a paragraph of the History—or, not seldom, was wholly rejected, as lying beyond the scope of the work as he conceived it."

Mr. George M. Trevelyan has lately uttered a vigorous protest against the "scientific" method of historical treatment by writers merely supplying the cold and isolated statement of "hard facts." Certainly such a method, whatever its advantages may be, seems to avoid the necessity of the constructive element, or, if it uses it, tends to lay its ultimate stress on environment, rather than giving the due position to personality. The comprehensive supply of ascertained facts—as Mr. Stokes, I think, somewhere represents the supporter of the scientific method as saying—may be regarded as bricks, and the student becomes his own architect. But surely we may go further and say that even if the scientific historian should present the reader with a finished building, grateful as we are for this help, after all, it is possible for the right sort of historian to show us the sort of living inhabitants which he conceives to have given spirit and meaning to the edifice of facts so painfully brought to light by the historian's investigation. Dozy, anyway, attempts to reconstruct, and also to interpret the old surroundings and the old life. He chooses that most difficult period of Mediaeval Spain, as it was not only conquered, but also thrilled by the movements, one might say, the procession of the Orientals. He brings before us the pre-Islam Arabs, the Prophet himself (a remarkable and strongly independent sketch), the Khalifs, Almanzor, the republics, the petty Princes, the Almoravides, and the highly interesting history of al-Mutamid of Seville. The book is full of graphic touches, of colour, of atmosphere. The psychological insight into strange men, and the clash of Easterns with Westerns, is the sign of extraordinary power of sympathetic imagination. By his marvellous skill, Dozy has largely allowed the Arabs and Mohammedanism to speak for themselves, wherever critical investigation has confirmed their own descriptions and estimates.

Mr. F. G. Stokes is a most experienced translator. Already he had given the English reader for the first time a remarkably sympathetic rendering of the "Epistolæ Obscurorum Virorum." It is true that Dozy's work, and, needless to say, his style, is of an entirely different kind. We can give no more relevant praise than to say that in reading it we lose the memory of the fact that we are reading a translation. Both author and translator are forgetful of self—both are intent in rem. The result is that a historical masterpiece is now available for the English reader. Now we have it, we can only say that it is astonishing that it has not been done before. But it is still more astonishing that the original French edition of 1861 is still the only edition in French. If one reflects for a moment on the hundreds of well-known books which have made their mark since 1861, and the scores of authors who have won popularity since that date, without wishing to claim the very highest rank for Dozy (unless after a critical examination, which would be impossible on the present occasion) one is reminded of Sir Henry Taylor's dictum: "The world knows nothing of its greatest men."

FOSTER WATSON.

BELISARIUS. By John Presland.

SONGS OF CHANGING SKIES. By John Presland. London: Chatto & Windus. 3s. 6d. net.

"NOBLE endeavours and adventures wild" are woven into Mr. Presland's pattern of life, and he turns with zest from the tragedy of Joan of Arc and the defenders of Italy to give dramatic expression to the last sad (and probably fictitious) episode in the life of Justinian's great general, Belisarius. The theme, even if the story of the blinding and impoverishment and death of the popular idol in the streets of Byzantium is not historically true, is a stirring one, and would provide material for several homilies on the fleeting favour of kings, the vicissitudes of life, and the enduring merits which cause a man's name to be honoured long after he is dust. Mr. Presland finds inspiration in it, and treats the subject with dignity, sincerity, and considerable poetic skill. But his style is perhaps too graceful to permit of a really convincing portrait of a man of consummate military genius, remarkable strength of character and almost obstinate loyalty, or of the jealous and exacting Emperor whose word was law to him unto the day of his death, the shrewish and avaricious Antonina, his wife, to whom he rendered almost servile homage, and the crowd of sycophantic courtiers who contrived his downfall. The love scenes between Joannina and Anastasius, however, are full of tender feeling, and the genuine note of pathos is sounded in the last act, which describes the final humiliation and death of the once victorious conqueror of Carthage and Rome, murmuring with his latest breath, "Tell nothing to the Emperor."

There are some musical lines and moving thoughts in the lyrics and sonnets gathered under the title "Songs of Changing Skies," which remind us again that Mr. Presland has the joy of life and brave deeds as strong in him as the sense of the poignancy of love and the sadness of benefits forgot. He has been influenced to some extent by his admiration for Browning, though he has none of his master's rugged force and exuberance of imagination, and some of his verses are full of a quiet austerity which is welcome at a time when the flamboyant utterances of the Futurists are claiming so much attention.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. A. & C. BLACK:—Who's Who Year Book, 1914. 1s. Who's Who, 1914. 15s. The Writers' and Artists' Year Book. 1s. The Englishwoman's Year Book. 2s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE & Co.:—The Rural Problem: Henry D. Harben. 2s. 6d. net. Paul Verlaine: Wilfrid Thorley. 1s. net.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co.:—The Works of John Morris: The Sundering Flood, 2 vols., 4s. net; The Water of the Wondrous Isles, 2 vols., 4s. net; The Roots of the Mountains, 2 vols., 4s. net; The Well at the World's End, 2 vols., 4s. net; The House of the Wulfgins, 1s. net; The Story of the Glittering Plain, 1s. net; A Dream of John Ball, 1s. net; News from Nowhere, 1s. net; Poems by the Way, 1s. net.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, LTD.:—Our Irish Theatre: Lady Gregory. 5s. net.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN:—French Civilisation in the 19th Century: Albert L. Guerard.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

JESUS, OUR TEACHER AND FRIEND.

II.—THE BEGINNING OF THE GOSPEL.

I ASKED you last week to think of the scene in the Gospel story, where the children are brought to Jesus for his blessing. It seemed a good starting-point from which to follow out the thought of what we know about him and what he is to us. I hope that what I said helped you to picture the scene, and that you felt something of the wonder and the gladness his own people must have felt, when they gathered about him and listened to his teaching.

Now let us go on to think how it was that Jesus became a teacher—the greatest teacher the world has ever known, as he seems to us, not only because of what he taught, but because of what he was in himself. When you read about him in the Gospels, you find a great deal of teaching that is clear and very beautiful, but much also that is difficult to understand. You find one kind of teaching in the first three Gospels, and a very different kind in the fourth; and in all four very wonderful things are told about him, some of which, if we try to imagine them as actually happening, we feel to be quite impossible. We have to remember that the Gospels are not like a photograph of an actual thing taken at the time. They were written long after the time when Jesus lived among his people; they are pictures made from memory, and from one man's memory handed on to another, to which a great deal of the people's own imagination was added. One thing that had great influence in moulding the form of the story, and colouring the picture, was the disciples' belief that Jesus was the long-expected Messiah of his people. This led them to put into the story things which they thought must have been there, because they were expected of the Messiah, or seemed to have been foretold of him by the ancient prophets. Then it was natural for them to believe and to tell wonder-stories about so great and wonderful a man, so that many things of this kind found their way into the Gospels. We have to learn to distinguish between them and the things that really happened, and between the teaching of Jesus that was faithfully remembered and what the disciples added from their own thought and feeling about their Master. It is often difficult to do this, but it is deeply interesting and it is worth a great deal of trouble, because it means so much to us to be near to Jesus himself, to have him for our own teacher and friend, in intimate knowledge and companionship, and to learn with him to understand more of the deep things of our life with God.

If you turn to the earliest of the Gospels (Mark i. 1-15), you see that the opening words are, "The beginning of the Gospel (the good news) of Jesus Christ," and the first thing told is that there was another teacher, John the Baptist, who came to his people, calling them to repentance and baptizing them in the River Jordan as a sign that they were repentant and desired to be rid of their sins. And then we hear that among those whom John baptized was Jesus, who came from Nazareth in Galilee, where his home was. Afterwards, when John had been "delivered up" and was in prison, Jesus himself began to teach in Galilee, "preaching the Gospel of God," that is, telling the good news of God, and saying, "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe in the Gospel," believe the good news!

That is the most certain thing we know about Jesus, that he came as a teacher, first of all to his own people in Galilee, following John the Baptist with his call to repentance, a preacher of the Kingdom of God, pleading with all who would hear him, to believe the good news that the Kingdom was near at hand.

John was a stern prophet of righteousness. More is told of his teaching in the other Gospels (Luke iii. 1-22, Matt. iii.), and there also the same wonderful thing is told of what happened to Jesus when he was baptized. It is a good example of the kind of legend that gathered about the life of the Master, and I hope next week to show how through such a story as that we may see into the heart of Jesus, and understand something of what he was feeling at that time. But now I want to dwell on the one thought of his preaching of the Kingdom of God, or the "kingdom of heaven," as Matthew more often has it.

Jesus was from the first, like John, a prophet of righteousness, but with a strength that went deeper, and had an immeasurably greater influence in the world, because it was blended with a purer, gentler spirit, with deeper insight and a greater love. That is what we feel when we see him with the children and the mothers about him, and in other scenes in the Gospel. He was a teacher who touched the very heart of his hearers, except where they were too much hardened by prejudice or worldliness, and wakened in them a great love and trust. He preached the Kingdom of God, that is, the rule of God in the world, in the outward order of things, and in the hearts of men; and the wonderful thing in his teaching was that he made men feel, as they had never felt it before, how near God was to them. With him they realised it, because it was so in his own heart.

Jesus no doubt shared in his own way in the hope and expectation of his people, that a new and more glorious age was to come, an ideal time, to be suddenly brought in by the marvellous power of God, when all things should be made new, and goodness would be supreme and all evil things be destroyed. That expectation would be in his mind when he said, "The Kingdom of God is at hand;"—the glorious time of the new age is drawing very near. But, however that may have been, and in whatever glowing colours he pictured it, one thing is certain, that when Jesus spoke of the Kingdom of God, what he cared most about was its inner meaning in the hearts and lives of men. Remember the Beatitudes, and that will be quite clear to you. He not only called men to prepare for the Kingdom, but felt and said that it must begin at once, the Kingdom, the rule of God, in the hearts of his children, the rule of goodness, of righteousness. And so he said of the Kingdom, to those who asked when it should come: "Lo, the Kingdom of God is within you" (Luke xvii. 21), or if the reading should be "in the midst of you," still the meaning is the same; it is a matter of the inward life, of the love of goodness and obedience to the Father's will. It is already in the hearts of some, and it must be in you all. Remember also Matt. vii. 21.

V. D. D.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

WELCOME HOME TO THE REV. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

A SPIRIT of great cordiality pervaded the meeting which was held at Essex Hall on Wednesday night to welcome the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie after his missionary journey to Canada and the United States. Mr. Bowie had already received the greetings of a number of friends at the recent meetings at Nottingham, but there were many in London who had not had an opportunity of welcoming him there, and it was a special pleasure to them to be able to do so at Essex Hall. The chair was taken by Mr. G. H. Leigh, President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, who expressed the delight of those present in having Mr. Bowie safe at home again after his travels, and their appreciation of the services he had rendered to the Association and the cause of religious freedom generally by the investigations he had been enabled to make in Canada. There, and in the other Colonies as well, immense fields of enterprise were opening out, as certain remarks made by Lord Bryce and others had brought home to them recently. Referring to the religious position in Canada, Mr. Leigh said that out of about seven millions of the population who had been classified according to their religious denominations, it was found that there were about three million Catholics, one million Anglicans, one million Wesleyans, and about one million representing various denominations other than these. There was indeed a great opportunity for the spread of free religious thought as they understood it, and they must help and encourage all efforts in that direction, but they must strengthen their position at home before that help could be effectively rendered, realising that their numbers were few, their means limited, and their forces not yet fully organised.

The Rev. W. Copeland Bowie then proceeded to give a description of his travels with the aid of lantern slides, which added greatly to the interest of the narrative. He was, he said, received everywhere with great cordiality, and opportunities were afforded him of speaking at Universities, women's clubs, and social gatherings of various kinds, irrespective of special church meetings and assemblies, which enabled him to put many aspects of religious and social work at home before groups of intelligent and deeply interested hearers. The long journeys across the great plains and wheat-growing areas of Western Canada, and through the Rockies on to Vancouver, enabled him also to see something of the wonderful agricultural developments of the country with its immense possibilities in the future, and the magnificent scenery of which some idea was given in the beautiful views of Banff, Laggan, Lake Louise, and the glacial slopes of the Selkirk Mountains. The loneliness of these regions, said Mr. Bowie, could be understood when he told them that he took a walk of fourteen miles among the forests and mountain slopes, in the course of which he did not meet a single soul. In his subsequent address on the religious needs of Canada, Mr. Bowie referred to the work which has already been done for the cause of liberal religion by the American and English Unitarian Associations, and emphasised the importance of taking advantage of the splendid opportunities afforded of helping on the great work of civilisation in this new world. It was the very place for strong, adventurous, noble-spirited men and women who were capable of enduring the hardships of a pioneering life, and for his part he could hardly understand how any young man could possibly stay in a quiet little village at home, where opportunities were so few and the life so narrow and cramped, when he had the chance of going out to this great country across the sea and sharing in the building up of its future. The life was free from conventionality, nobody was thought the worse of if he did things which many people considered beneath them in England, and those who were able and willing to turn their hands to anything were bound to get on. But there was urgent need for religious work, especially in those great prairie lands where the young farm labourers had so little to occupy their time and thoughts when their work was done and during the winter months. It was sad to see them crowding into the towns for whatever amusement it afforded and frequenting the saloons in such large numbers. They should have some conscience about these matters, for this country was part of our own Empire, and they were responsible for some share in the building up of men and women of fine character. It was, however, gratifying to know that within the last ten years Unitarians had increased by 60 per cent. in Western Canada, a larger percentage than could be claimed by any of the accredited religious bodies. There were large numbers of thoughtful men and women who were unattracted by the orthodox Churches, and they ought, without the least desire to interfere with the beliefs and practices of others with whom their ideas were not in agreement, to try to meet their needs. Mr. Bowie repeatedly emphasised the need for men of the right sort to volunteer for this work, and in conclusion paid a tribute to the American Unitarian Association not only for its generosity and courtesy towards himself, but for the fine spirit in which it was helping the movement in Canada.

The Rev. W. Jellie pleaded the claims of New Zealand as urgently as Mr. Bowie had pleaded the claims of Canada, though he said that New Zealand was a land which had already achieved much that other countries were about to achieve. He described the beautiful scenery of the islands in most glowing terms, and referred to the remarkable development during the 70 years which have elapsed since New Zealand was nothing but a "bush" country, to the fact that its inhabitants are British to the backbone, both in their origin and characteristics, and to the interesting way in which various legislative measures which are now under consideration in the old country have already been successfully carried out in New Zealand. In regard to their own churches, they had created the nucleus of a great movement, but what was wanted now was not only enough men to fill up the gaps in the vacant pulpits, but a constant stream of men always in readiness to go out and take the place of others, and open up fresh fields of work. They were at the parting of the ways, he believed, and a great open door was before them. They were offered such an opportunity as they had never had before, and they ought to accept it as a matter of national urgency. He would like to express to his hearers the deep gratitude which Unitarians in New Zealand felt for all that the British and Foreign Unitarian Association had done to help their struggling cause, and to remind them also of their responsibility in connection with the young people, trained in Sunday schools and churches in England, whom they sent out to new countries quite unfitted by this very training to take up a happy position in other churches, and then lost sight of them altogether. They were too individualistic in their outlook, they did not believe in the Church as a great human institution, and they did not realise that it was their duty to look after their children and to follow them up, however far they might go. In conclusion, Mr. Jellie spoke of various methods which he would suggest of attracting young men to the ministry, not only in England, but in the Colonies, where they were hampered by the necessity of coming "home" to study and the lack of means to accomplish such an object. They wanted the whole question dealt with by some man of statesmanlike mind who would formulate a Colonial policy, and if that were done, he did not think there would be any difficulty about getting the necessary funds to carry it out. They wanted men with the spirit of William Cary, the great missionary, who said, on a historic occasion, "Expect great things from God and attempt great things for God."

The Rev. Charles Hargrove said he had been asked to speak, not for one particular country, but for the whole world. That was a theme too vast for the short time at his disposal, and he could only indicate the various ways in which the new liberating spirit was making itself felt everywhere, especially in the great Church of Rome, in spite of the present Pope's strenuous efforts to suppress the Modernist movement. He was himself profoundly impressed with the mystery of it all. It was as the wind of the spirit blowing where it listeth, and they heard the sound thereof, but could not tell whence it came nor whither it went. Everywhere men were shaking off the old dogmas and doctrines which had once held them, and were looking about for something which would serve their need when the ancient foundations were taken away. It was their privilege, not to supply that need—that was a task too big for them—but to do all in their power to enlighten and instruct and quicken the new life. This was the kind of work which Signor Conte was doing in Italy, the land of so many heroisms, where numbers of people were breaking away from the Church, and seeking, not a new religion or a new sect so much as new ideas and opportunities for free and enlightened thought. They could not measure the value of the work which Signor Conte was doing as he went up and down the country, spreading the Unitarian spirit without founding Unitarian churches, which would be impossible in Italy, and at the same time combining a deep interest in the social needs of the people with religious zeal. This was the true missionary spirit, and if they had this spirit and this desire to serve humanity amongst them, their sons and daughters would have it too, and they would be able to send forth their missionaries as the other churches had done from time immemorial.

A vote of thanks to the Chairman, proposed by Mr. Charles Hawksley, brought the meeting to a close.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

THE PRESIDENT'S NEW YEAR'S GREETING.

THE following Letter of Greeting has been sent to all the Teachers of Sunday Schools on the roll of the Sunday School Association:—

MY DEAR FELLOW TEACHER,—My New Year's Message shall be a reply to a question which I think all of us have asked at times, and more especially those who have had but short experience as Sunday School Teachers.

What a tax this every Sunday-teaching is on our time and energy. We have to give up so much. Is it worth while?

I will remind you that the attainment of proficiency in anything of real worth must be a tax upon us, and so we often naturally ask ourselves, Is it worth while and what do we gain by it? In thinking this out, you will, I am sure, recognise that in taking up the teacher's task you are answering a claim made upon each one of us to do something towards helping others to make life a little better, a little brighter. If you can realise this in your true self, your higher self, no further reply to the question is needed. But I should like to mention some of the practical benefits that the work brings with it.

Confidence in Speaking.—How difficult this is to attain to most of us. The class teacher has his little audience who will listen without being too critical, and the teacher, if fairly prepared with the lesson, will be listened to in quietness and with attention. Little by little practice gained in class will teach him to improve the putting together of words, and he will gain confidence and ease as time goes on.

Control of temper, one of our great needs. I can assure you that I have found a class of boys a very serious trial indeed to the temper, and especially when one is a little overstrained. But a teacher cannot control his scholars unless he can control himself. Recognising this we can all of us, if we have failed, quietly afterwards think out how the failure came about and try to avoid the cause another time. The more we keep our temper the easier it becomes to keep.

Self Culture.—You know as well as I do how being prepared helps to make a good lesson an interesting lesson. A chapter from the Bible is taken. You may read it through on the previous Sunday. It does not take long, and you have the idea of it during the week. Then during any spare moments the subject may come up in your mind and illustrations suggested by events of the day help to put life into the class-lesson. A thought-out lesson given from any book is very different from just reading it through to oneself. To satisfy the real demand of your scholars you will try to find books that will interest and influence them. Many of the books so taken might have been passed by were it not for your task as a Sunday School Teacher. You will gain from your lesson perhaps more than your scholars.

Worth of the Work.—I should like you to remember what a high estimate is held by religious leaders all over the world of the worth of the work you are taking part in. The record of the past is excellent, but it is the future development and progress that is dwelt upon. The Archbishop of Canterbury a few weeks ago called attention to the demand made in the schools for improved methods of ethical and religious training now being introduced. Another church dignitary added that the best "church work" was being done in the Sunday Schools, and at the World's Sunday School Convention at Zürich in July last the leaders were all looking forward to the future as full of promise and progress.

I want to close by saying that I recognise thoroughly that our task is a difficult one, and that it does make a great demand upon us. Emerson once said: "What I need is some one to make me do what I can." In your place of teacher, let the "some one" be your own "self."

With the old wish, but ever a new one, for a Happy New Year to you and your School, I am, sincerely yours,

ION PRITCHARD,
President.

THE ADULT SCHOOL AIMS.

THE following are the Adult School aims as set forth by the National Council of Adult School Unions in the scheme of Bible study for 1914:—

To make and develop men and women and to teach them the art of life.

To study the Bible frankly, freely, reverently, and without prejudice.

To establish an unsectarian basis for Christian effort and unity.

To bring together in helpful comradeship and active service the different classes of society.

To stimulate and educate public spirit and public morality.

To teach the responsibility of British citizenship.

To encourage whatever makes for International Brotherhood.

To advance as far as may be the equality of opportunity.

In short, to help men and women to understand and to live the life of Jesus Christ, and to encourage them in their personal allegiance to Him.

The annual meeting of the Unitarian Home Missionary College will be held at the Memorial Hall, Manchester, on Wednesday, January 28, at 5 o'clock, and the chair will be taken by the President, Mr. R. D. Holt, M.P.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Belfast.—On January 4 the morning service at All Souls' Church was marked by the inauguration of a surpliced choir. This, as the Rev. E. H. Pickering explains in the Calendar, is simply the revival of an old custom, for there was a surpliced choir so far back as 1821. Special services were held morning and evening, the former commencing with the singing of the "Old Hundredth" in procession, and the collections were in aid of the choir fund.

Bournemouth.—A successful New Year's social was held at the West Hill-road Church on Wednesday, January 7. During the evening Mrs. Thick, on behalf of the ladies of the congregation, presented to the Rev. V. D. Davis a silk gown and to Mrs. Davis a hand bag and an umbrella. Mrs. Thick, in making the presentations, assured Mr. Davis of the warm good wishes of the congregation, and Mr. Davis, in replying for himself and Mrs. Davis, thanked the ladies of the congregation not only for the gifts, but for the kindly spirit which had inspired them, and dwelt upon the happiness which had come to him through his ministry at Bournemouth.

Bristol: Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission.—The Rev. Thomas Graham having been invited to become Home Missionary to the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, in succession to the late Mr. Tranter, the Committee of the above Mission, whilst thanking him for his valuable services during the past seven years as their missionary, feel they cannot do otherwise than accept his resignation, which they do with much regret and a keen sense of their own loss. At the same time they wish him and Miss Graham happiness and success in their new work.

London: Peckham.—As the result of the "Carol" collections made by the members of the choir of the Avondale-road Church in the few days preceding Christmas, the sum of £7 7s. was realised. After making donations to St. Winifred's House and the Church Sympathy Fund, the balance was devoted to a tea and entertainment to about 100 poor people, mostly old age pensioners, which was held in the schoolroom on Monday, the 12th inst. The sale of work recently held at this church realised £52.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Through the death of Mr. William Skeoch, which took place on January 5, at the age of thirty, the churches in the Northumberland and Durham District have been deprived of a most promising and earnest lay preacher. Quiet and unassuming in manner, some people might underestimate his worth at first, but his intellectual ability showed itself at once when he preached, delivered papers, or joined in discussion. His moral and spiritual earnestness had a great influence on those who knew him and won for him the deepest respect. He was the Secretary of the "Liberal Thought" class which meets in the Church of the Divine Unity on Sunday afternoons, and its recent success has been largely due to his able organisation. He was also an active member of the Unity Literary and Debating Society, the Tyneside Phonographers' Association, and a local temperance society. He was a manager for an estate agent, and now that he has passed away stories are abroad of the ways in which he helped poor people in trying times. He joined the Church of the Divine Unity five years ago, and was recently elected a member of its Committee. The funeral, which was conducted by the Rev. Alfred Hall on January 10, was largely attended. The biennial bazaar held last month in connection with the Church of the Divine Unity, realised £313, the largest sum reached for several years. It was opened on the first day by the Sheriff of Newcastle (Councillor Shaw), Sir Joseph Ellis being in the chair, and on the second day by Lady Ellis, Mr. Otto Levin, J.P., being in the chair. Sir Joseph Ellis said that during the forty-seven years of his membership of the church he had never known so large a band of earnest workers associated with it. A course of sermons on "Problems Concerning Jesus," delivered by the Rev. Alfred Hall before Christmas, was well attended.

St. Helen's.—At the annual Christmas party for Sunday scholars and friends in connection with the Unitarian Church, which was held on December 26, a presentation, consisting of an Amster Planimeter was made to the Rev. J. Bellamy, who has been the minister for over six years, but has had to resign his duties on account of ill-health.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

DISTRESS IN JAPAN.

The terrible calamity which has befallen Japan as a result of the eruption of the Sakura-Shima volcano is not the only misfortune which has visited that country at the beginning of the year. Untold suffering has been caused by a famine in the northern provinces, caused by the failure of the rice-crops and the fisheries, of which we in England know comparatively nothing, but which is said to rival the worst in the history of Japan for over a hundred years. A population of many millions is practically reduced to the point of starvation. The people are living on roots and leaves, their houses have been demolished and the timber sold, the schools are closed because the children are too hungry to learn anything, and cases of crime are of frequent occurrence owing to scarcity of employment and the dread of starvation. The missionaries report that the means of helping the sufferers are quite inadequate, although the capital is slowly waking to the cry of distress, but this is not one of the ordinary famines common in Japan, and it is found to be extremely difficult and costly to provide means for the proper relief of a scattered population living chiefly in mountainous districts.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN.

The quinquennial sessions of the International Council of Women will be held in Rome from Monday, May 4, to Wednesday, May 13. The resolutions which have been included in the preliminary agenda cover a wide range of subjects dealing with vital questions relating to women and children, while the protection of birds is not overlooked. At the meetings of the council the Committee on Peace and Arbitration will propose resolutions in sympathy with the principle of mediation, even where vital interests are involved, in international conflicts; and will appeal to the next Hague Conference to consider how a more effective international protection of women may be secured which will prevent the continuance of the horrible violation of womanhood that attends all wars. The Committee on Laws will propose, among other things, that efforts should be made to secure juvenile courts in all the countries where affiliated National Councils exist, and where such courts have not yet been adopted to obtain the declaration that no child should be looked upon as a criminal, and to recommend that women be permitted to conduct judicial proceedings in juvenile courts. It will also be recommended that in the upper classes of all schools attended by girls, some sympathetic teaching of the leading principles of the laws which more directly concern women and children, and of the civic duties and responsibilities of women, shall be given.

LONDON TRAFFIC.

Some remarkable figures are given in the sixth annual report of the London Traffic Branch of the Board of Trade, which show that the problem confronting the authorities in this connection is one of increasing difficulty. There is the "daily movement of a very large section of the population from their residences within an area of 30 miles round London to places of business in Central London and back again" always to be considered. The Outer Suburban Ring, with a radius from the centre of London to the circumference of about 30 miles, comprises an extra 2,115 square miles approximately, with an additional 1,219,788 inhabitants, giving in all a total population of 8,471,146 spread over an area of 2,908 square miles. This vast population exceeds not only the populations of Ireland, Scotland, and the Commonwealth of Australia severally, but even exceeds that of the Dominion of Canada, with an area of 3,730,000 square miles, and a population in 1911 of 7,205,000.

THERE has been an enormous growth in the number of passengers carried in the last ten years by local railways, tramways, and omnibuses. In 1903 the number of passengers carried was approximately 972,465,682, the estimated population of Greater London was 6,710,272, and the number of journeys per head 144.9. In 1912 the number carried was nearly double, being 1,785,602,527, whereas the estimated population was 7,321,978. The number of journeys per head was 243.9. These figures do not include the vast suburban traffic of the trunk railways, or the passengers carried by over 10,000 cabs, which would add considerably to the total. The figures as to tramway and omnibus traffic show that in 1911-12 tramways were declining, while omnibuses were increasing in popularity. In 1910 the number of tramway passengers was 763,797,856. This had increased in the following year to 821,819,714, a number which decreased in 1912 to 797,487,581. The omnibuses, on the other hand, carried in 1910, 377,207,555 passengers; in 1911, 400,628,487; and in 1912, 551,622,398.

BROWNING RELICS FOR THE BROWNING SETTLEMENT.

Mrs. Barrett Browning, the poet's daughter-in-law, has sent a collection of Browning relics to Mr. F. Herbert Stead, of the Brotherhood of the Browning Settlement, Walworth. She says, "I know no one with whom they would be held in more reverent keeping than yours for the work associated so closely with him and his." The relics comprise an address book, a drinking flask, the poet's card-case containing eight cards, a felt hat—"R. B.'s last hat, worn in Venice," thus runs the inscription within the lining—the marriage lines of the Brownings, and a book of blank unruled leaves bearing on the inner page of the cover the words "Robert Browning, September, 1855," followed by two quotations from Greek poetry, and one from Italian.

A SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF NATURE.

The exploitation of Nature, which has been taking place on such a large scale within the last few generations, has resulted in her becoming so impoverished that it is necessary to protect her from further depredations. Switzerland, the "playground of Europe," has already established a reserve of 50,000 acres in the Engadine for the purpose of saving the Alpine flora and fauna from destruction by sportsmen and collectors, and preserving a corner of nature intact. In Germany there are upwards of 100 reserves already, the management of which is carried out by a special bureau assisted by other state departments, such as the Department of Forestry. The Society for the Promotion of Nature Reserves in England has acquired for the nation the shingle and salt marshes of Blakeney, in Norfolk, and has collected a mass of information relating to other suitable places which it would be desirable to secure in the pursuit of its general objects. But perhaps the most important movement in this direction was inaugurated at the International Congress for the Protection of Nature, which recently met at Berne, when a permanent International Commission which is to meet every three months at Bâle was appointed, to deliberate upon various protective measures to be submitted to their respective Governments for legislation. An international bulletin will be published giving an account of the progress of the movement.

SLAVERY UNDER THE TRUCK ACTS.

The conditions of women's labour, as Miss Gertrude Tuckwell points out in an article in the Manchester Guardian, are so deplorable that the need of reform is urgent in the extreme, notably in regard to overtime and the matter of fines and deductions. In regard to the latter, she shows that a condition worse than slavery may exist under the Truck Acts. In a certain factory the workers' wages were so heavily reduced by fining that many of them were in bondage to their employers, the fines to be worked off exceeding the wage, so that they were always in debt. "The slave looks to his owner for food and lodging; under the system here described the worker may return each day to work off an alleged debt, and meanwhile Poor Law Relief, charity, or the unfathomable goodness of the poor to the poor keep body and soul together." The Government is alive to the need for further factory and workshop legislation, and Mr. Asquith holds out the hope of an amending Truck Bill next session.

* * *

THE present conditions in regard to overtime are gradually undermining the health of the people and deteriorating the nation's capital, which consists in sound, healthy lives. They vary, however, considerably. "Side by side with one workplace where the long day may drag on from eight in the morning till ten at night, we find another where it does not begin till 8.30 or 9.0, and is over by seven, or even by six. Uniformity of practice—the leveling-up of all work hours to the best standard—is the object to be aimed at. The limited hours attained by the strong textile trade unions should be extended by law to other trades. Those exigencies of the market which adapt themselves to the requirements of the textile trade can equally adapt themselves elsewhere. There is no reason why the making, say, of corsets or tin boxes should not be carried on under the same conditions of employment as is the manufacture of a fabric."

AN OLD ROMAN TOWN.

Some important discoveries are anticipated as the result of excavations which are now being carried on at Wroxeter, near Shrewsbury, a little village on the Severn beneath which is the site of a Roman town, once a military post, and later a country town known as Viroconium Cornoviorum. The site, we learn from the Times, is being uncovered under the direction of the Society of Antiquaries, and their task is likely to be a long though a fruitful one. Meanwhile a report has already been published of work done in 1912, which gives a description of the main street as it must have looked with its row of shops, with houses behind, and a colonnade in front. Perhaps the most important result was won without the use of the spade, for the excavators were able to trace marks of streets in the growing crops, and thus obtained a clue to the plan of the town.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

JAN. 17, 1914.

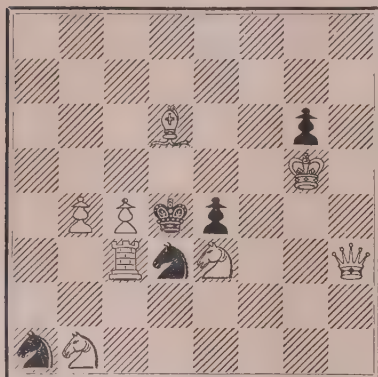

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 40.

By W. MEREDITH.

(From White to Play.)

BLACK. (5 men.)

WHITE. (8 men.)

White to play and mate in two moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 38.

1. B. Q8 (key-move).

Correct solutions have been received from L. W. (Farnham), Walter Coventry, Dr. Higginson, F. S. M. (Mayfield), Watson Eldridge, L. G. Rylands, R. B. D. (Edinburgh), A. J. Hamblin, D. Amos, W. E. Arkell, Claude Paterson, Rev. I. Wrigley, R. E. Shawcross, A. Mielziner, E. Wright, and E. C. (Highbury).

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

TO ALL MY READERS.—I much regret that, through an oversight, a White pawn was omitted from the diagram of No. 39 on QKt4. The omission should have been corrected, but owing to lack of time I had not the means of verifying it.

J. E. PECKOVER.—Your solution to Klett's problem is correct.

A. PERRY.—The chess department in that issue was unavoidably crowded out, owing to pressure in the postal department at Christmas time. Mr. Heatcote's problem is solved by 1. Kt. Q4.

Mr. Alain C. White has issued a collection of two-movers under the title "White to Play," and our No. 40 is quoted from it. This style of composition is well worthy of special comment and investigation, as such two-movers are amongst some of the most difficult both to solve and compose. I have made several references to the theme in this department. The subdivisions are:—(1) Pure waiting-movers; (2) added mate waiting-movers (such as our No. 40); (3) changed mate waiting-movers; and (4) block-threats. All these classes involve the question of the expediency of "making time" by way of solution, and the device is capable of much subtle extension. I propose to write a small treatise on class 3, having already collected many interesting examples.

Now Ready for January.

THE

SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

Editorial.

Lessons for the Month:

- I. A World of Wonder and Beauty.
- II. I am Alive in this World.
- III. A Life of Choice.

IV. A Good Decision.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.
Senior Department—Bertram Lister, M.A.
Primary Department—Ruth New.

Our Story Pages.

Letters on the Primary Department
By the Way.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.
ONE PENNY NET.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

SALE! SALE!! Remnant Bundles of Irish Pillow Linens, sufficient to make 6 full-sized Pillow Cases, 6s. 6d. per bundle. Postage 5d. extra. Send Postcard for Sale Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

BARGAIN BUNDLES of White Art Linen, for drawn-thread work. Suitable for Tray-cloths, afternoon Tea-cloths, and Sideboard Covers. Price 5s., postage 4d. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by
Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Triumph of Faith.

STOFFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D.

Five Points of Christian Faith.

JAMES MARTINEAU, D.D., LL.D.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. HILL, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

"THE UNITARIAN MONTHLY."

Magazine for Unitarian Propaganda. Adopted by churches with or without local page. Issued for last Sunday in each previous month. One copy post free, 1½d.—1s. 6d. a year; 9d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100; extra charge local page.—Address to EDITOR, 36 Burlington-road, South Shore, Blackpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCS.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, THORALBY, LAYSGARTH, S.O., YORKS.—Paying Guests received.—Particulars from Miss SMITH.

BOARD-RESIDENCE offered one Lady or Gentleman. Separate sitting-room if required. Every comfort, good table. West Hampstead.—Address for terms, C. C., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

SUNNY South Coast Health Resort.—Ideal Winter Boarding House, Central, Garden, near Sea. Hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, electric light, and penny in slot gas fire in each bedroom. Three good reception rooms. Food Reform and ordinary diet.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

COMFORTABLE and refined HOME offered to invalid or elderly Lady in quiet part of Richmond.—Address, M., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

BOOKS

EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY,
TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE,
And for all other Exams.

Second-Hand at Half Prices.

New at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogue 184 (post free) and state wants. Books bought.

BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,

135, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to quote and pay definite prices. Note our quotations: Up to 2s. 3d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 5s. 6d. on silver, 11s. on gold, 32s. each on platinum. Cash or offer by return as desired; if offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Utmost value guaranteed. Testimonials in thousands from satisfied customers. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, January 17, 1914.
* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3735.
New Series, No. 839.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 24, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

Crown 8vo. 88 pp. 1s. net, post free 1s. 2d.

HERESY:

Its Ancient Wrongs and Modern Rights in these Kingdoms.

The Essex Hall Lecture for 1913, with Notes, Chronological Table and Index.

By ALEXANDER GORDON, M.A.

Crown 8vo. 152 pp. 2s. net, by post 2s. 3d.

THE SECRET OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

By WILLIAM WOODING, B.A.

CONTENTS: I. Righteousness. II. Divine Righteousness. III. Human Righteousness. IV. The Culture of Righteousness. V. Social Solidarity. VI. Casuistry.

Roan, gilt edges, 1s. 3d. net, by post, 1s. 4d.

UNITARIAN POCKET BOOK AND DIARY FOR 1914.

With List of Ministers and Congregations.

Paper covers, 3d. net, by post, 3½d.

DIRECTORY OF MINISTERS AND CONGREGATIONS, 1914.

Paper covers, 1s. net, by post, 1s. 2d.

ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK, 1914.

BOOK ROOM, Essex Hall, Essex St., Strand, W.C.

GOLDEN GRAINS

THOUGHTS OF MANY MINDS.

Compiled by LADY AGATHA RUSSELL,
with a Preface by FREDERIC HARRISON, Litt.D.

Royal 16mo. Cloth, 2s. net.

Published by JAMES NISBET & Co., Ltd., 22, Berner Street, London, W.

CHURCH, SCHOOL & HOME

Editor—Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

Monthly, 3d. by post from Mr. Lewis Lloyd, 67, Church-road, Moseley, Birmingham. Can also be obtained from H. RAWSON & Co., Manchester, the Liverpool Booksellers Co., Liverpool, or from Essex Hall.

The Inquirer.

Among recent Articles are the following:—

IS IT PEACE?

By MISS EDITH DURHAM.

Jan. 17.

The Contribution of Our Age to Religious Experience. By Rev. W. WHITAKER.

Jan. 10 and 17.

Yone Noguchi. By ERIC HAMMOND.

Jan. 17.

The Inclusiveness of Christ. By Rev. HENRY GOW.

Jan. 10.

Organisation and Life. By Rev. E. W. LEWIS.

Jan. 10.

The Kikuyu Controversy. By Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

Jan. 10.

The Realisation of Life. By Rev. W. J. JUPP.

Dec. 27.

Man and Environment. By Rev. E. W. LEWIS.

Jan. 3.

Any of the above issues to be obtained from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C., post free, 1½d.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.

January

25. Rev. ROBERT F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D., Assistant Minister of Ullet Road Church, Liverpool.

February

1. Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.
8. Rev. WILLIAM WOODING, B.A.
15. Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A., of Stand, near Manchester.
22. Rev. JOHN HENRY WEATHERALL, M.A., of Bolton.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only.

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church)
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for January 25:

Morning: The Absolute Unity of God.
Evening: What is Justice in God?

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

Lecture Hall adjoining 19, Tavistock Square, W.C.

On Sunday Evenings, January 11 to March 22, 1914, at 7 o'clock, a Course of Lectures on

The Three Objects of the Society

will be given.

Jan. 25. Theosophy and the Treatment of Crime. G. DYNE.

Feb. 1. Theosophy and Education. L. HADEN GUEST.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.—

PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to

C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon. Head Master

CHANCERY MOUNT SCHOOL, BISHOP'S STORTFORD.

Head Mistress: Miss ESTHER CASE, M.A. Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: Miss ESTERBROOK HICKS, B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M.

Contraalto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

MISS LOUISA DREWRY'S Literature

Courses will begin again on Wednesday, Feb. 4, at 7.45 p.m., and Thursday, Feb. 5, at 11.15 a.m. More plays of Shakspeare will be studied, three meetings being given to each play, and the first meeting will be devoted to some talk about Shakspeare, the man and artist. For details apply to Miss DREWRY, 143, King Henry's-road, N.W.

INTERNATIONAL GUILD (London

Branch), Host 1 for Women Students, 3, Brunswick-square, W.C. (near British Museum and University College).—Full Board from £19 to £26 for a term of 13 weeks.—For particulars apply to Miss E. S. WILLIAMS, 3, Brunswick-square, or Miss C. WICKSTEED, International Guild, 6, rue de la Sorbonne, Paris.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartment, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Parlour and Suite on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, January 25.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. DR. MORITZ WESTON.
 Bernondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.; 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.; 6.30, subject, "The Heaven we Hope for."
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. R. W. SORESENSEN; 7, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. DR. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.A.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Mr. P. CHALK.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. P. CHALK; 6.30, Mr. F. COTTIER.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, & Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbeldon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unitary Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. AUSTIN.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 LACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Church-gate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing-street, 11.30, Rev. E. W. LUMMIS.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Mr. W. H. THOMAS, of Liverpool.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN ROW, 10.45, and
 (STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 GEE CROSS, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. W. SAUNDERS, M.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. DR. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN BIRKS.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREAE.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

DEATHS.

RAMSDEN.—On January 17, Mary Ann, wife of D. K. Ramsden, 11, Chorley New-road, Bolton, aged 75 years. Interred at Walmsley Chapel.

YOUNGMAN.—On January 18, Hannah Youngman, wife of the late James Youngman, Charsfield Hall, Suffolk, aged 83.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds of MSS. carefully and promptly copied.—Miss KENNEDY, 20, County Grove, Camberwell, S.E.

LADY seeks re-engagement as Companion or Companion-Help to elderly lady or invalid where maid kept. Domesticated, good needlewoman; good references.—C. M. S., 110, Markhouse-road, Walthamstow.

WANTED, useful COMPANION to old lady. Must be cheerful, good needlewoman, and prepared to do a little housework.—FREEMAN, The Holt, Walton-on-Thames.

MR. A. W. HARRIS (late Hon. Treasurer N.U.T.A.) would be grateful for the opportunity of undertaking Rent Collection and Management of Property, or other part-time employment not involving continuous eyestrain. Good business and personal references.—168, Fleet-street, E.C.

LADY (middle-aged) seeks an engagement as Housekeeper where a maid is kept. Musical. Fond of children.—E. A., 4, Grove-street, Beeston, Nottingham.

HOUSEKEEPER or Useful Companion to lady or couple, where maid kept. Thoroughly domesticated, good plain cook, excellent needlewoman. Middle-aged, good references.—B., 5, South Park-road, Wimbeldon.

HAS any Congregation a few copies to spare of Farmer's Music for Responses in Ten Services?—M., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	51	Chapels where Mark Rutherford Preached	56	MEMORIAL NOTICE :— William Woolley	59
VERSES : The Parable of the Curlew	52	BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—		MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
EARLY ZOROASTRIANISM.	52	Triumphant Dogma	56	The Churches and Peace	60
THE DOVE	54	The Age of Johnson	57	Albanian Relief Fund	61
THE CONTRIBUTION OF OUR AGE TO RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.—III.	54	Literary Notes	58	The Social Movement	61
CORRESPONDENCE :—		FOR THE CHILDREN :—		NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	62
The Kikuyu Controversy	55	Jesus, Our Teacher and Friend	58	NOTES AND JOTTINGS	63

* * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

It is with sincere pleasure that we publish to-day our first list of donations to the Albanian Relief Fund. Miss Durham's appeal has touched many hearts, and in her name, and still more on behalf of the starving peasantry who have found so many generous friends, we would offer them cordial thanks. Readers who desire to contribute are invited to send cheques or postal orders, drawn in favour of "The Albanian Relief Fund," to the Editor at 23, Cannon-place. Copies of THE INQUIRER of the 17th inst. containing Miss Durham's article "Is it Peace?" can be had from the publishing office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. May we here repeat her statement that it is possible to keep one person alive for a penny a day. It is not often that we have an opportunity of making our pennies go so far.

IN the midst of the excitement caused by the rumoured increase in the naval estimates Mr. Norman Angell, with the unflinching tenacity which is one of his most useful qualities, has returned to the attack upon the irrationality of the policy of rivalry in armaments. We are ready to welcome every opportunity of repeating his arguments, for it is only by constant repetition that they can become part of the mental furniture of most sensible men. "How," he asks in a letter to the press this week, "are we to replace a public opinion in which temper and irritation is likely to be uppermost when called upon to dictate policy, by one in which a realisation of true need and permanent national interest is uppermost? The view that I have urged is that that can only be done by a process analogous to that which has already in another field—the religious—stopped the arming of rival groups, and given them relative security. That process is by bringing into current political discussion the broad general principles underlying all international relationship. If ever, in general public opinion, political prejudices and misconceptions are to be replaced by a clearer conception of political truth, it will be by just some such general development of understanding as that which led men, as the (quite unintended) result of the theological discussions of the Reformation, to give up making war in the assumed interest of truth and morality on those who differed from them in religious belief—the differences, by the way, being far more fundamental than those which now create political wars."

THE "general development of understanding" for which Mr. Norman Angell pleads must necessarily be of rather slow growth. What is needed above all is a gradual process of education in saner and wiser ideals of national greatness, which must begin in the schools. It is there that the foundations of sound political thinking should be laid. At present the average citizen is so ignorant of history that he is inclined to leave the whole question of international relationships, with all their vital issues of peace or war, to the expert and the diplomatist. There is no direction in which he finds it so easy to renounce his duty of thinking or is so ready to be worked up into a state of panic by stale watchwords or dishonoured ideals of military pride. It is a problem of education; and again of education. When we learn to think intelligently and to profit by the lessons of the past, most wars will be condemned as insane and lose all popular support.

BUT we are well aware that calm reasoning often breaks down in the conduct of life for lack of emotional support. We must seek peace and ensue it, not merely because we should be traitors to our own interest were we to do anything else, but also because all the noblest and most elevating passion of life is on the side of peace. To put it into religious language, peace based upon brotherly love is the will of God. The fine appeal by Swiss pastors to the Christian churches of the world, which we publish to-day, is based upon this sense of a compelling religious duty. Mr. Norman Angell and those who are associated with him in the campaign of Reason against War have done nothing to discredit the more spiritual appeals of the peacemaker, which have been so often dismissed as weak and sentimental. They have simply revealed once again that the deepest instincts of the Christian heart and the loftiest ideals of the Gospel are in strict accord with the inherent reasonableness of things; and if we do not see that it is so, it is because we are still fools and blind.

THE new temper, which has come over the whole field of theological controversy and made the Bishop of Zanzibar's recent letter seem to most modern Christians like an unwelcome echo from a vanished world, is expressed admirably in some editorial comments in the British Weekly. "The day has gone," our contemporary writes, "for wrath and fear. The theologian who is thoroughly frightened and angry at the whole course of modern thought and speculation makes no impression on reflecting minds. His attitude is like that of the people in 'Water Babies,' who spent their lives in crying, 'Oh, don't tell us!'" and running away. The champions of orthodoxy must be prepared to consider with calmness the opinions of those who differ from them. Criticism must be met by criticism, learning by learning, argument by argument. When the clear stream of reason is swallowed up in hopelessly troubled outpourings of odium theologicum the sceptic has an easy victory."

* * *

THE death of Dr. Newton Marshall, the able and popular Baptist minister at Hampstead, is a grievous loss to the cause of religion far beyond the bounds of his own denomination. A man of ample scholarship and finely trained mind, he was peculiarly fitted to act as a mediator between the older Evangelicalism and the modern world. He had none of the austere aloofness from men of different opinions, which has become almost traditional with some Evangelicals. He was able to understand points of view which he did not share, and to find links of connection in a common religious experience where others, trusting chiefly to intellectual analysis, detected only radical inconsistency. Such men are greatly needed at the present time. There could be no more tragic misfortune to English religion than the decay of its rich inheritance of Evangelical faith, because it is moored too securely in the backwaters of thought, and men of the new day, impatient of its slow and hesitating advance, are more eager to destroy its traditional framework than to conserve its heart of imperishable fire.

* * *

"Do Miracles happen? Mr. G. K. Chesterton says 'Yes.'"^{*} Such was the headline, or something very similar, which appeared in the newspapers on Tuesday morning. The scene was at the Little Theatre, where Mr. Chesterton had announced that he would argue with all comers on the subject of miracles. "The curtain went up, and disclosed Mr. Chesterton, large and rosy, in the midst of a long row of divines and Rationalists, friends and foes." Evidently the debate provided splendid copy for the impressionist reporter, and it makes racy reading for our lighter moods. But we cannot help asking in all seriousness, what good is expected to follow from an entertainment of this kind. In what way is it likely to serve the cause of truth or to promote the real interests of religion? Clever persiflage in an atmosphere of paradox and buffoonery amuses some people, though we doubt whether it does anything to enlighten them; but when they take their amusement in public and arrange for limelight and reporters, it is not only a very squeamish taste which is offended. The net result of the performance is an advertisement for Mr. Chesterton, which he did not need. Of course, no one is a bit the wiser on the subject of miracles than he was before.

THE PARABLE OF THE CURLEW.

(A Cornish Legend.)

BESIDE the Lake of Galilee
The Lord Christ made his moan;
Hunters of men were on his track,
And he was all alone.

For they who followed him till then
Had proved them false indeed,
For they had fled in craven fear,
And left him in sore need.

Each step he took along the shore
Left footprints in the sand;
And they who hunted him would see
The sign and understand.

The Lord Christ saw a curlew small
Had followed by the strand,
And with his fluttering wings had brushed
Each footprint from the sand.

The Lord Christ said: "When men are false
God has his witness still;
The Father's blessing rest on thee,
O bird of faith's goodwill."

So when the curlew's call is heard
By land or on the sea;
It is a voice divine that cries
"Stand firm, though all should flee."

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

[These verses were sent to us by Mr. Axon not long before his death.—ED. OF INQ.]

EARLY ZOROASTRIANISM.

THE Hibbert Trustees are to be heartily congratulated on the publication of the new volume of the second series of their Lectures by Dr. J. H. Moulton. Few scholars have been found to enter the rather remote field of Zend study; and no Englishman has approached Iranian lore with so wide an equipment of learning as the Greenwood Professor of Hellenistic Greek and Indo-European Philology in the University of Manchester. In this volume Dr. Moulton collates the researches of the greatest living Zendists, Bartholomae, Casartelli, Geldner, Jackson, and with rare modesty again and again records their differences from his own judgments: but the reader knows that he is entitled to his own independent views, and soon learns to follow him with confidence, if not with invariable assent. The book is arranged in nine lectures, with very important additions. Chief of these is Dr. Moulton's translation of the ancient Gāthās, on which his exposition of the religion of Zoroaster is based. Next in importance is a series of translations from Greek historians, Herodotus, Plutarch, Strabo, and Diogenes Laertius, with very interesting notes, showing how far Zoroaster's teachings penetrated to the west. These are followed by an excursus on foreign forms of Zoroastrian names. A very clever hypothetical reconstruction of a Median folk-tale as the basis of the story of Tobit is presented in an appendix to Lecture VII.; and excellent indices complete the book.

It has, of course, long been known that the documents collected under the general name Avesta are of very different dates. The Scriptures in the hands of the Parsis of India are only the fragmentary remains of a much more copious literature, belonging, like the books of the Old Testament, to widely separated periods; and very different historical conditions. Among these is a series of five poems (entitled Gāthās) in language of much more ancient type than other hymns or ritual laws, distributed now for liturgical purposes into a series of shorter pieces, embedded in a collection of sacrificial chants. These poems are believed to be the composition of Zarathustra himself, and Professor Moulton's first business is to vindicate their antiquity against the astonishing attempt of the late brilliant French scholar, James Darmesteter, who tried to make them dependent on Philo! More difficult is it to assign them to a definite century. Later tradition embodied in the Pahlavi literature preserved by the Parsis made the death of Zarathustra nearly coincide with the capture of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. He was thus a contemporary of Jeremiah. Tiele pointed out the difficulty implied in archaic forms of language in the Gāthic dialect compared with the later types in the inscriptions of Darius. Geldner and Bartholomae both ask for more centuries of interval, and Dr. Moulton declares himself frankly unconvinced that the traditional date of Zarathustra is early enough.* The locality of the poems is easier to determine than their age. They belong to East Iran, half way between Parthia and the Indus, a district now known as Saishtan; and their language is closely related to that of the Rig Veda. There in the midst of conflicts between the agriculturists and the elder nomads Zarathustra introduces his reforms.

Of course, there was a pre-Zarathustrian religion, and to this Professor Moulton devotes a very interesting lecture; some of its deities re-entered the Persian religion long after the great reform, and have their place in the later Avesta. Under what circumstances Zarathustra first felt the prophetic impulse we cannot tell. He belonged to the highest social caste; his wife is said to have come from a noble family at the court of Vishtaspa, the king whose powerful support brought other followers to his aid. The movement that he led represented on one side the struggle of an advancing and settled civilisation (aristocratic in type) against the turbulence of wandering hordes. In religion it attained apparently at a bound in the prophet's own mind the character of exalted monotheism. Ahura Mazda, the "Wise Lord," once the "clan god" of the Aryans in the midst of a mixed population, rises in the Gāthās into creative might. Here is Dr. Moulton's translation of a few verses from the second Gāthā (Yasna 44⁸⁻⁹), p. 367:—

* The Hibbert Lectures (Second Series). By James Hope Moulton. London: Williams & Norgate. 10s. 6d. net.

* It is a pity that the statement of the Lydian Xanthus (contemporary with Herodotus) that Zoroaster lived 6,000 years before Xerxes (p. 77) awaits explanation till pp. 399⁸, 403⁸, 411.

"This I ask thee, tell me truly, Ahura. Who is by generation the Father of Right, at the first? Who determined the path of sun and stars? Who is it by whom the moon waxes and wanes again? This, O Mazdah, and yet more, I am fain to know.

"This I ask thee, tell me truly, Ahura. Who upheld the earth beneath and the firmament from falling? Who the waters and the plants? Who yoked swiftness to winds and clouds? Who is, O Mazdah, creator of Good Thought?

"This I ask thee, tell me truly, Ahura. What artist made light and darkness? What artist made sleep and waking? Who made morning, noon, and night, that call the understanding man to his duty?

"This I ask thee, tell me truly, Ahura—whether what I shall proclaim is verily the truth. Will Right with its actions give aid (at the last)? will Piety? will Good Thought announce from thee the Dominion? For whom hast thou made the pregnant cow [symbol of good fortune] that brings good luck?"

We have no time to linger over the merits of Professor Moulton's translations compared with the clumsier versions of Dr. Mills in the Sacred Books of the East. Anyone who has handled Bartholomae's great lexicon, or compared the renderings of Bartholomae and of Geldner (in his selected passages in Bertholet's series of Texts of the great religions), will see what advances have been made by laborious scholarship in the last three decades. Dr. Moulton repeatedly acknowledges his indebtedness to his predecessors, but many a happy turn of English phrasing is entirely his own.

The reader will have noticed in the preceding verses the remarkable prominence of certain abstract forms beside the objects of the visible universe. What are "Right" and "Good Thought," "Piety" and "Dominion"? Here are some of the most notable figures in Zarathustra's religion. "Right" (sometimes all but the same as Truth) is Asha, the philological equivalent (as Dr. Moulton rather hesitatingly allows) of the Vedic Rita, the "path" or "course." In the universe it is the principle of Order; in man its voice is the Conscience; so early was it learned that Duty was the power which preserved the stars from wrong, and kept the most ancient heavens fresh and strong. "Right" is the offspring of Supreme Wisdom, not far removed from the Greek Logos, and he is begotten ere the world is made, first-born of the group so intimately associated with the "Wise Lord" that they, too, can be designated by his name ahura. As its Vedic equivalent asura shows, this was no specially monotheistic designation. "Right" and "Good Thought" are most closely allied with the "Wise Ahura," but they are ahuras, too. So are "Piety," and "Dominion" (khshathra), the Rule or Sovereignty, which forms so close a counterpart to that "kingdom" of which Hebrew psalmists sang, and Jesus spoke. In later days this remarkable group, which in Zarathustra's thought bore no special name, and included such figures as Sraosha, "Obedience," or Atar, "Fire," came to be known as the "Holy (or bountiful) Immortals," and their number was fixed at six, or, if Ahura was himself included, at seven. They are so strangely blended with their Author that Dr. Moulton does not shrink from comparing them with the persons of the Christian Trinity.

Over against the Sovereignty of Ahura Mazdah rages the "Lie." Pre-Zarathustrian religion had its evil powers. There are traces of gods of Darkness, Bad Season, Wrath, and the like. But Zarathustra sums them all up under the category of falsehood. The name Ahriman, Aïro Mainyu, "Evil (or hostile) Spirit," belongs to a much later age. In Zarathustra's Gāthās no creative power is assigned to the "Lie." Both light and darkness, a typical pair of opposites, are the work of Ahura Mazdah. Whence, then, came the "Lie"? There is no answer, save that the prophet's vision beheld these two primal spirits as Twins, "The Better and the Bad in thought and word and action."

"And when these twain Spirits came together in the beginning, they established Life and Not-Life, and that at the last the Worst Existence shall be to the followers of the Lie, but the Best Thought to him that follows Right.

"Of these twain Spirits, he that followed the Lie chose doing the worst things; the holiest Spirit chose Right, he that clothes him with the massy heavens as a garment. So likewise they that are fain to please Ahura Mazdah by dutiful actions.

"Between these twain the demons [Daēvas] also chose not aright, for infatuation came upon them as they took counsel together, so that they chose the Worst Thought. Then they rushed together to Violence, that they might enfeeble the world of man."—Yasna, 30³⁻⁶, p. 349 f.

The emphasis on choice here is very significant. The old nature-gods make the wrong choice, and become demons of evil. A well-known passage in the later Bundahish preserves, it is believed, an ancient piece of teaching, which represents Ahura Mazdah as inquiring of the ideal antecedents of man whether they would like to be created so as always to go right, or with the risk of going wrong to take part in the overcoming of evil, and they chose the great warfare rather than sinless impotence. So even the ideal Soul of the kine was bidden to choose whether to depend on a husbandman, or on one that is no husbandman (the cattle-raider of the daēva-worship).

"So of the twain it chose for itself the cattle-tending husbandman as its lord [ahura] according to Right, the man that advances Good Thought. He that is no husbandman, O Mazdah, however eager he be, has no part in the good message."—Yasna, 31¹⁰, p. 353.

Here is a touch of the social strife, the conflict of different stages of civilisation, linked with the intensity of a religious reform. The faith of Zarathustra thus made its appeal to the will; it called for resistance to evil, and, instead of propitiating the "Lie," and his wicked crew, bade men arise and overcome them.

But would humanity after all avail for this? How should the Sovereignty, Ahura's Dominion, the heavenly Rule, be established? The victory of good must be secured. Zarathustra was "the earliest of all teachers to bear this witness for God" (p. 156). But the Gāthās contain no details of the process. The later term for the establishment of Ahura's triumph, the frasho-kereti ("forwards-making," "making the world move onwards") does not occur in Zarathustra's extant prophecies. But the corresponding verb is there. The great change is at hand, and he is its herald. The Kingdom has come nigh, the divine event is no longer far off, the Deliverers (Zarathustra and his followers) have already taken the field. The situation anticipates that of the prophet of Nazareth: the agents of the mighty hope must always believe that fulfilment cannot be delayed. So as Obedience wins the hearts of men, Zarathustra will "bring the Dominion to Mazdah." As one by one of his followers departs, he will be there at the judgment at the Separator's Bridge to plead for them as their advocate, and accompany them as their guide. And at the "Great Consummation," when the Resurrection takes place, he will be there as judge himself, to present believers to their heavenly Lord. The final conflagration of later Parsism does not belong to the primitive teaching. The victory of good is accomplished when the true religion has beaten down false worships; the wicked will be condemned to "long punishment," "darkness, ill food, and crying of woe," while the righteous tread "the straight ways unto Right, wherein Mazdah Ahura dwells."

The details of this picture, drawn with so much skill and sympathy by Professor Moulton, must be studied in his fascinating pages. A vast variety of problems, religious and historical, tax the investigator's knowledge and the reader's attention. The original significance of Mithra, the personal religion of Cyrus or Darius, the derivation of the Magi and their influence on Zarathustra's religion, the recrudescence of pre-Zarathustrian deities, the beginnings of priesthood and ritual, the nature of the strange ideal representatives or guardian spirits of individuals and communities known as Fravashis—involve a series of discussions in which anthropology and philology are constantly called in to aid. The last lecture is devoted to "Zarathustra and Israel," and discusses the possibility of Persian influence in later Judaism, and through that channel on early Christianity. The author's tendency is to minimise it as much as possible. He thinks that Magian influence may have contributed to the development of angelology, but when he says that Paul "took no trouble to endorse or deny its truth" (apropos of Colossae, p. 323), he surely greatly underestimates the part which the angelic hierarchy plays in his interpretation of the world, and his conception of the Messiah's conquering or redeeming work. And it is strange that after describing Zarathustra as "really the earliest apocalyptic thinker," he should wholly omit to consider the place of the resurrection in Jewish eschatology from Daniel onwards. But we must not end on a note of difference. This book gives so much and so generously, so much learning lies behind it, so much sympathy pervades it, there is in its inquiries such ample recognition of the labours of others and such freshness and independence of personal judgment, that it bears on every page abundant testimony to the high qualities of the author, and will long set the standard for English scholarship in his chosen field.

J. E. C.

THE DOVE.

BY EDWARD LEWIS.

O MY Dove, thou art in the cleft of the rock, in the covert of the steep place!

I seemed to wander through the world Sundered from myself. I worked and played, and grasped at satisfaction like a shadow. I looked upon the gains of each day's work, and they were as dust in my hand; and when I played, I was as a Lover who on a sudden remembers that his Beloved is from his side, and Pleasure fell to ashes.

I did not know that Thou art my Soul, my Bliss of Being, my lovely Joy; and though I visited the shrines of religion, the priests told me not; and in all the schools of the wise it was not revealed to me.

Until, one day, in a solitary place, as I watched two mated birds build their nest in a crevice of a towering rock, some far-off remembrance rose like a globe of light from the storehouse that lies beneath the mind; and I knew.

Thenceforward I went seeking Thee, my Dove, through all the world.

I roamed through many woodlands, and listened to the voices of many birds, but none made my heart leap within me; and I waited by many a shore, looking out to sea; and often I sat by the Lakes of Stillness hoping that Thou wouldst come from the blue distances, and, poising thy wings, slant down to the water at my feet. They flew above in flocks; they hovered over the trees; they skimmed daylong the surface of the lake; but Thou camest not. Then, after many fruitless days, a turn in the dusty road brought in view a great Mountain, dark-looming, mist-capped, full of shadows. I overtook an old man, and asked of him,

"What is the name of yonder hill?"

"Some call it the Crag of Sorrow," he replied.

"I must find a way round that somehow," I said. To which he answered in a thin piping voice, "Ay, ay," and was silent.

My way led straight on to it. It grew in bulk as I approached. I could see precipices, and began to catch the noise of torrents. A young man came hurrying towards me; I saw that his clothes were torn and his shoes broken. I asked him, "Is there a way round here?" He said, "I couldn't find it," and as he looked down at his feet laughed the laugh that has no laughter in it.

"What is its name?" I asked also of him.

He said, "Some call it the Hill of Doubt; but I must have missed my way, I am going back."

At the foot of the lower slopes I passed a child gathering wayside flowers. "This is a great Mountain," I said to him. His bright eyes looked first to my face, and then to the hill, and then back to me; "It is the Covert of the Dove," he said.

Oh, the steep places! Sorrow, disappointment, doubt of truth and goodness, disillusionment, temptation, adverse circumstances, the buffetings of fate, the bludgeonings of chance; are these the Covert of the Dove?

Oh, climber, out on the face of the rock, clinging to little crevices, feeling for your precarious holds, hung betwixt earth and sky, the winds screaming around you, the depth beneath sucking you down, the fear of slipping, the deadly impulse to loose hold and fall; can the mortal heart endure? Were it not better to cease? Oh, climber, faint not! Oh, you caught in the steep place, lose not heart! There is a way. Yield not thy highest hope! Above is the covert of the steep place; and the Dove, your heart's Desire, your Bliss, your Power, your Peace! Is the climbing for ever? Is it far to the covert and the Dove? Are there heights after heights, and other heights in other lives? Who shall say? Are we not led by a way that we know not? "In some time, in God's good time," is that not enough?

And there are resting-places in the steep and difficult way; with glimpses of the goal, gleams of the Vision Beautiful, intimations of that which is reserved.

On a narrow ledge, between the hazards, I slept and dreamed a dream. And, lo! I was at the summit of the crag; and there, in the clefts of the rock, was the Dove, as I had ever believed. It fluttered to my breast. A shaft of light broke down from the sky, and beat upon me; and in it the Dove vanished, and seemed with it to enter in my heart. I felt its tremblings within. And as I stood there, I seemed to grow in height like unto the cherubin, my body shone, all depths of peace, all heights of power were mine; I was become even as the gods.

I awaked where I had fallen asleep, but with remembrances of unutterable things like wine strengthening the heart.

O my Dove, thou art in the cleft of the rock, and in the covert of the steep place; let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely.

THE CONTRIBUTION OF OUR AGE TO RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

III.

THE root and germ of most of the difficulties felt by us to-day were already present in Carlyle's essay on "Characteristics" (1831). That essay, with its protest against the over-emphasising of conscious religious states and emotions, and its plea that the higher life of man should be regarded as a self-subsistent whole, was probably the first signal that came to Martineau of the coming change.

The modern mind became Immanentist, Æsthetic, and Naturalist. Religious experience was not so much opposed, as absorbed and submerged in what were regarded as fuller and wider interests. But in being thus "put in its place," it was really put aside. As Martineau reminded Carlyle, this modern view might very well fit an æsthetic, but not a moral universe. It is precisely on the moral side that the Immanentist and Naturalist way of looking at life is weak. There is a profound confusion from which the modern Self cannot escape. On the one hand, among multitudes of busy men of the world, the Self takes itself for all in all. There is no external Lawgiver. The Self is autonomous. All that comes to it in the way of revelation must come as a further projection of the Self and a normal development of human nature. Duty is then felt to be owed only to one's own self. In this way the sense of moral obligation is evaporated. On the other hand, the Self is merged in Nature; and then it cannot even be a law unto itself, for men are not sure that such a reality as the Self even exists apart from the natural world: moral obligation is stifled. Thus the problem to-day is a combination of that of Fox, and that of Wesley; that of finding the Self, and that of finding holiness. For the moral side of our nature refuses either to be evaporated by Idealism, or stifled by Materialism; it insists that our Self, although autonomous, shall find its Other. The reason why so much of the Maurice-Martineau-Eucken work has fallen by the mark, is that both these sides of the matter were not strongly grasped, in all their vital unity, and all their awful contradiction. To show that man had Free Will, and was naturally a spiritual and moral being, as these thinkers did, neither satisfied the modern zest for autonomy on the one hand, nor answered to humanity's deep need of redemption on the other. Turning away, as our moderns did, from the violent revulsions and crises that marked the experiences of the Bunyans, Foxes, and Wesleys, they fell on a time of flatness. It is the work of our day to come again into touch with the greater tradition.

Dr. Ferries' book, "The Growth of Christian Faith" (1905), is only remarkable because with a certain quiet detachment from current tendencies, it insists that we men of to-day need a steady, progressive moral development to prepare us for the needed new insight into the Christian religion. His thoughtful, sagacious, and often charming picture of the stages by which a mind beginning with a bare Theism and the ordinary moral prepossessions of an educated man, passes almost imperceptibly to the full acceptance of a Broad Church "orthodoxy," might be taken as a modern counterpart of the long struggle of soul through which Wesley came to his conversion. The writer has put far behind him the state of things in which an Idealism such as that of John Caird could be supposed to reconcile thinking people to orthodoxy. The stress, now, is not on philosophy, or on Free Will, or on the spiritual nature of the universe at all. The stress is on the actual incidents and crying needs of the moral nature. Of course, the old appeals to the miraculous as the principal object of belief have gone. A critic might even say, with some plausibility, that faith is here recommended only as an instrument to produce works, so strongly is righteousness emphasised as the true end of the whole process of growth. The significance of the book is that a thinker whose inclinations are all towards a high valuation of culture and the more placid aspects of man's life, should find the beginnings for the reconstruction of faith in the very storm-centre of the modern Self, i.e., in the stresses of conscience and the moral life.

We find a much firmer and stronger handling of the same position in the books of Mr. William Temple. When we are reading him, we feel beating through his words the throb of that great movement of the present years which has arisen as a veritable renaissance of the religious life in thousands of young hearts—the Student Christian movement. If anyone wants to feel the contact with a new rush of virile moral energy—the modern youth at its best—he must read Mr. Temple, who has probably received as much as he has given in this matter. There are, of course, other aspects of Mr. Temple's work, scientific and intellectual aspects, but these are not what we are here interested in. What is most interesting is that he poses in a fresh and telling way the situation of the seventh of Romans. The modern man, like the ancient man, wants to be good, and evil is present with him. Take this deeply enough, and you come, with Mr. Temple, to realise that only the religion which posed the problem in all its depth can supply the solution. Only the love of God in Christ is able to remedy the world's otherwise inmedicable woes. On this side of his message Mr. Temple comes near to the supreme heights of the Wesleyan hymns on the Love of God. He has thought much on the question, How does God, without interfering with my free will, win me over to goodness? The answer—which deals with the exhibition of God's Love in the death of Christ—makes up for its want of philosophical depth by the fine intensity of its moral fervour, which is true to the case as far as it goes.

It is on the side of Faith that Mr. Temple falls short of the great treatment given to the whole field of religious experience by Dr. Forsyth. With this writer, also, the moral note is the dominant one, and gives the key to the whole of his theology. But with Dr. Forsyth the whole matter is once more deepened. It is not only morals, it is redemption. It is not only that the mind has to be softened by love; the whole man has to be regenerated by God's grace. The two sides of the moral problem—the autonomous, all-sufficient Self, with its goodness immanent within it, and the inexorable Other than Self, the All-Holy God—these two are trenchantly placed over against one another, and a settlement and reconciliation have somehow to be won. Just as in Fox's case, the enemy was not error so much as dead truth; just as in Wesley's case the enemy was not wickedness so much as "the law"; so with Dr. Forsyth, the enemy is not materialism, or atheism, so much as a soft and liberal spirituality, that refuses to take moral issues down and down to their most sundering oppositions. For him, the Real is the Redemptive. The crisis in man's spiritual life is so vast and fundamental that nothing can be adequate to it but a new creation—the new birth of Faith.

Here these somewhat rapid summaries of modern tendencies must stop. But enough has been said to indicate that there is a stirring of the waters as momentous in our time as in any that has gone before.

W. WHITAKER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE KIKUYU CONTROVERSY.

SIR,—The action of the two Bishops, which has occasioned so much ill-considered condemnation, will prove a beacon-light and landmark for the future guidance of the Church. They have made history. Their censors have, unfortunately for themselves, neither looked backward nor looked forward. Taking a petty parochial view of the case, and contemplating murder, they seem rather to have committed suicide. They would appear to know nothing of the rock whence they are hewn, and the hole of the pit whence they are digged. Their attitude assumes a profound ignorance of the past, a blind indifference to peculiar circumstances, and the very conditions of a missionary outpost. The vanguard of a great army must always travel lightly, and not be burdened with the unnecessary impedimenta which naturally follows later on, when the pioneers have cleared a road, and opened the country. The stern marching orders of the Church forbid superfluous encumbrances. It is difficult to imagine the apostles or St. Paul in one of his great journeys, imposing on the infant Christian communities a system of rigid rules and forms only suitable for an advanced congregation. It is generally agreed that the fewer restrictions at first the better. And, above all, common-sense no less than the Spirit of Christ, counsels a united front among the various forces of the missionary camps in the presence of an active and aggressive enemy. To give the impression of division must strengthen the hostile bands, and prove a source of infinite weakness. United we stand, divided we fall. And the Bishop of Zanzibar and his supporters are playing into the hands of the Mohammedans and others. He has already thrown back the missionary cause by his unseasonable protest and the consequences of his ill-judged and ill-timed opposition to a grand forward movement cannot be calculated.

Obstructionists and bigots and partisans are ever but damaging defenders of the Church, and do far more harm than good. But they produce no permanent results in the conduct of the campaign. They have some uses also and we may conjecture that they may now and then act as the "sleepers" on the pathway of progress, and by their resistance to pressure help on the train of advance that passes over them.

It is the deliberate judgment of all thoughtful missionaries that native churches should be built up, not on exotic lines, but as a natural outgrowth of their own particular races. In the action of the two bishops we recognise this belief, and a healthy new departure from the old routine ruts. To suppose that the Christian hierarchy, with its cast iron organisation, can be transferred bodily to the Mission churches without any adaptation to the time and place and people, is to suppose a violent anachronism. Exceptional conditions demand exceptional treatment. The whole course of history gives the lie to any stereotyped establishment. General agreement in doctrine and discipline, in the fundamentals and essence of our religion, which does not depend on special rites and ceremonies, so long as the two Sacraments are retained, should satisfy all but the bigoted partisans who put last and not first the Spirit of Love or the Spirit of Christ. New wine cannot be put into old bottles. And, we are too apt to forget, the letter killeth but the Spirit giveth life. Assuredly there is room, and to spare, in the splendid spaciousness of the Catholic Church, for any number of new variations in Church development and extension. The two offending bishops may have been premature in their daring effort to promote unity among different though not discordant elements, but the step they took was in the right direction, a step in harmony with the world-wide movement drawing the religious bodies together in a common worship and a common life. And no mops or bars, not even Zanzibars, will stop the tide of progress. The heretics of yesterday are the Orthodox leaders of to-day, and the heresiarchs have ever been the hope of the world. There are bishops now living who would have been burned centuries ago. The pioneers of progress only anticipate the curve of thought. All the greatest names are in the Index Expurgatorius, and the books of at least one Pope. But the name of Heresy has no terrors for the Liberals of our time. The question of inter-communion is difficult, but solvitur ambulando. Ecclesiasticism is the foe and not heresy, that stormy petrel of the great world-process, the creative thought always ahead of institutions. Better for the Church to be disestablished than the right and power to advance to be taken away. What is called Catholicism has often far less catholicity about it than the narrowest Protestant denomination. Dogmata mortalia, principia aeterna.—Yours, &c.,

F. W. ORDE WARD.

Eastbourne, Jan. 17, 1914.

SIR,—As a modern Anglican, may I say I was very glad to see your firm reply to Mr. Lloyd Thomas in the last issue of your paper, which has just reached me. This Kikuyu incident affords a most important opportunity to emphasize the fact that the essential spirit of the Church of England is that of comprehension and inclusion. The various sections noted by Mr. Thomas are all welcome within the fold of our beloved Church. There is no question of "reconciling them"; that is for evolution to accomplish under the guidance of the Spirit of God. A National Church is not an external authority with power to enforce uniformity. She is, or should be, the expression of the religious spirit and experience of the nation—under many and various forms, but all, we believe, the result of the one Holy Spirit moving men to righteousness. This, at least, is the ideal of catholicity for the fuller realisation of which modern Anglicans are hoping and working. We believe the chief glory of the Anglican Church to lie in the fact that she combines within a single fold representatives of both the great Christian types. Anglo-Catholics have every freedom within the Church for their opinions and practices. But when they endeavour to impose these fetters on us who think otherwise, they are acting in a way that is contrary to the spirit of the English Church. A question much to the fore in the Kikuyu controversy is the necessity of Episcopacy. Modern Anglicans value Episcopacy very highly, on account of its practical usefulness and its historical associations, and have no intention of giving it up. But they regard it as no more divine than Monarchy. If Dr. Gore and those who think with him find themselves bound to choose between turning the Church of England into an Episcopal sect—inspired by Roman exclusiveness and the doctrine of nulla salus—and secession, they must choose the latter. Twice before, what I fear I must call the intolerance of the Anglo-Catholic party in the English Church has caused schism—once in the time of Laud and again after the Restoration; we hope it will not do so a third time. But, great as the loss of a prelate of Dr. Gore's ability and earnestness, and of his followers, would be, the loss of freedom and elasticity in the National Church would be far, far greater. One of the chief powers these qualities bestow—and a power which the spirit of English Churchmanship is not likely to relinquish—is the power to administer the Sacrament to Christians of other communions. So strong and loyal a Churchman as Archbishop MacLagan expressed, both publicly and privately, his belief that the rubric which limits the reception of the Holy Communion to those who have been confirmed refers to those who have from the first been brought up in the Church of England—a most necessary requirement that they shall be instructed duly as to their privileges and responsibilities. According to the rubric at the commencement of the Communion office, the priest cannot withhold the Communion from anyone who wishes for it except for "open and notorious evil living"; this is the sole ground of exclusion. According, therefore, to the constitution of the Church of England as by law established, every layman has a statutory right to receive Communion in his parish church. Even the question of the morality of his private life cannot be inquired into, much less his dogmatic opinions.

Shall we, then, accuse the Bishops of Uganda and Mombasa of "heresy" for their generous-spirited and Christ-like action? Shall we not rather rejoice at this further proof of the comprehension and benevolence of the great Anglican Communion, and, refusing to be entangled again with the spirit of bondage, stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

G. T. FIELDING,
Chaplain R.N.

H.M.S. Roxburgh, Gibraltar,
January 14, 1914.

SIR,—Mr. Thomas is aloof and logical, but is he practical? He would seek to put us on the horns of dilemma; he would divide Christendom into two irreconcilable camps, one camp of those who think as they like, the other of those who think as they are told—but does he succeed? His letter as a study in the light of abstract logic is interesting, valuable and timely. But abstract logic pushing to extremes never has decided great issues in this world. The lesson of history is compromise. And although the word may be noxious to Mr. Thomas, the thing is neither dishonest nor unchristian. It is the boast of the Anglican Church that by a certain indefiniteness of credal basis and by the full recognition of the principle of development, it represents a generous compromise between Catholic and Protestant Christianity. Each party in it is at liberty to approach that "wing" of Christianity with which it is in most sympathy just so far as the bonds of corporate union inside the Church permit. Mr. Thomas states that in this controversy the Evangelical party was the aggressor—technically, perhaps. But the two bishops made no innovations in either Conference or Communion Service, and certainly had no thought of an attack on Anglo-Catholicism. Their action was pacific compared with the Bishop of Zanzibar's letter, that started the correspondence, a letter burning with controversial fire. Mr. Thomas also thinks the scheme reactionary, and quotes the phrase "absolute authority of Holy Scripture as the word of God." On account of its association with the theory of verbal inspiration, the phrase is admittedly undesirable; but as admittedly it need not mean verbal inspiration, although it is far from clear what it does mean. It was only a touchstone of belief such as this that kept primitive Christianity from being wholly swamped by pagan rites and credulities. But Mr. Thomas seems to ignore the whole point of the Kikuyu Conference when he assumes that the Bishop of Uganda is trying to alter the Church of England. If he will trouble to read the original sources again, will he re-read paragraphs 16 and 39 in the Bishop of Uganda's letter? "It (the Conference) had in view an ultimate union of native Christians into one native Church, and with this end in view, the Conference sought to find means . . . for averting dissensions between native Christians, barely visible as yet on the horizon." Again: "The scheme of Federation represents a sincere attempt . . . to prepare the way for a union, which, if it is unhappily impossible for ourselves with our inherited controversies, may yet be possible for native Christians in the future." It is a question concerning the future Church of Uganda.

Mr. Thomas is really out against organised unity—that presumably is why he calls the Kikuyu scheme an "ecclesiastical montrosity." But probably, if Mr. Thomas went to Uganda, he would find, as St. Paul found in the Roman Empire, that "order" of a very definite kind is needed to preserve a new faith among primitive peoples. And at times, even at home, we are so near the primitive still, that intellectual liberty is meaning spiritual bondage.

On another page of your excellent paper, Mr. Lewis disparages rivalries among the species of religions (Christianity, Islam, &c.) on the ground that it is the genus that matters. (What is genus without species?) To this height of detached criticism I cannot hope, and do not wish, to attain. It has been an idiosyncrasy of convinced Christians not to be content with such an ethical and emotional residuum. They knew their faith to be unique, and were driven to communicate its uniqueness to others, to evangelise. The dynamic force in Christianity has neither been certain opinions about theism, nor a high standard of ethics, but a belief in a specific and unique revelation of God. And even if I were in Mr. Lewis's position of detachment, I am sure I should never be willing to allow the bad to be converted to a better (and that militant, i.e., Islam) when it might be converted to the best—Christianity.

I submit, therefore, that the Kikuyu Conference is relevant and practical and progressive.—Yours, &c.,

L. STANNARD HUNTER.
Blundellsands, Lancs., January 18, 1914.

THE CHAPELS IN WHICH MARK RUTHERFORD PREACHED.

SIR,—In reply to the inquiry of Sir W. Robertson Nicoll, I beg to say that the late Mr. Chignell, of Exeter, was a Congregational minister of Highbury-street Chapel, long since closed, nor did he ever preach at High-street or St. Thomas's-street Chapels at Portsmouth. Nor do I believe that Mr. Hale White ever did. My memory serves me over sixty years' connection with both places of worship. Perhaps the old volumes of the Christian Reformer may have some reference, and may be of assistance. Yours, &c.,

T. BOND.

2, Waverley-grove, Southsea,
January 21, 1914.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

TRIUMPHANT DOGMA.

Some Loose Stones: being a Consideration of certain Tendencies in Modern Theology, illustrated by reference to the Book called "Foundations." By R. A. Knox. London: Longmans, Green & Co. 4s. 6d. net.

It is difficult to know whether to treat Mr. Knox's book as a jeu d'esprit, or as a serious essay in theological criticism. It is a little too fiery and lacking in real humour for the one, and rather too vehement and self-confident for the other. But on the whole we incline to the latter point of view, and we confess at once that it interests us chiefly as a study in temperament. It bears on every page the marks of warlike youth, ready to throw down the gage of battle to all the heretics in the world. It also betrays the self-confidence of frenzied re-action. If Mr. Knox had always been a High Churchman of the strictest sect, he would have worn his faith a little more lightly and left some of the shouting to other people. Moreover, he still has the supreme confidence in logic—his pages positively bristle with it—of the Oxford honours man, who has not yet learned to adjust the undergraduate temper to the needs of a larger world. Put into a nutshell, his position is that of a strictly orthodox Anglo-Catholic, and he accepts with gusto everything which is involved in its closed and coherent system of thought, no matter what reason or criticism or common-sense may have to say to the contrary. Let us take one passage from his attack upon "Foundations" and upon Mr. Streeter in particular.

"Of course, the Resurrection involves a corollary, and I think it is largely this corollary the modern critics boggle at. It involves the Ascension. 'Christ did truly rise again from death, and took again his body, with flesh, bones, and all things appertaining to the perfection of man's nature; wherewith he ascended into heaven.' Mr. Streeter says he knows of no living theologian who would maintain a physical Ascension in this crude form. I have no claim to be a theologian. I can only say that as a person of ordinary education I believe, as I hope for salvation, in this literal doctrine; I believe, that whatever change may have glorified the Risen Body when it passed beyond the cloud into a new mode or sphere of existence, the earth has ever since the Ascension been the lighter by so many pounds' weight, and the sum of matter in the world the less by so many square inches of volume."

Another of Mr. Knox's statements, delivered with an air of authority from which there can be no appeal, is as follows:

"All I can say is, that if Jesus was not, at the age of twelve, fully conscious of his Godhead, then Saint Luke does record, for what it is worth, a very definite sin on his part, namely, when he caused distress and inconvenience to his parents by running away from them, and going off to hear the doctors in the temple."

A few lines further on he returns to this familiar and terribly risky argument aut deus aut homo non bonus in the statement—

"I confess that if we in any way take a purely human standard as the measure of his actions, and ask whether we should approve, not merely of such actions but of such an attitude, in any convinced social reformer—a Savonarola or a Latimer—my own impression of Jesus of Nazareth would be that of a quick-tempered and intolerant man, perpetually failing to make allowance for the shortcomings of the official class, unduly provocative in his language—in a word, a fair type of the religious fanatic, —with all his virtues and many of his failings."

Clearly the writer of these passages, and we do not think that they are unfair in the impression they convey alike of his manner and his matter, has the courage of his convictions, though he does not always succeed in being very impressive in the statement of them. But even he cannot escape all the snares of private judgment. He is unaccountably timid when it comes to be a question of the infallibility of the Old Testament, and refuses to make "the morality of Jael or David, the credibility of Judges or the edibility of Jonah," matters of faith. "There is no particular detail of the Old Testament," he says roundly, "outside the story of the Fall, which has a direct bearing on the Christian Faith." But who told him so? and how is he going to convict the learned divine of error, who said that any tampering with the story of Jonah and the Whale leads inevitably to denial of our Lord's Resurrection? Through this one small breach in his impregnable walls of logic the modern spirit with its evil brood of heresies will come flooding back, and the influence of "Essays and Reviews," "Lux Mundi" and "Foundations" will continue to increase in spite of all that the latest pattern of ecclesiastical mop can do against them. We do not wish to convey the impression that Mr. Knox is unable to expose weak places in "Foundations," and if it pleases him in his rhetorical way to call them "Loose Stones," no one will be any the worse. The authors of that excellent volume of essays make no profession of authority other than that of adequate learning and careful thought, and the temper in which they write shows that they are open to revision of judgment, wherever just cause can be shown. They would be the last to disdain correction even by Mr. Knox. It seems almost too good to hope that Mr. Knox may ultimately come to see the wisdom of learning from them in that school of intellectual tolerance and quiet love of truthfulness, so different from his bizarre confidence in logic, in which he is still a novice. But many men who begin with his pose of infallibility and his demands for "pulpitfuls of dogma" find that life disciplines them into broader sympathy and serener strength, and from the hardly won vantage ground of experience they look back with amazement to the day when logic possessed their souls, clever argument seemed adequate to unlock the mystery of Christ's religion, and Christians were just the people who agreed with them, all the rest being heretics and outsiders.

THE AGE OF JOHNSON.

The Cambridge History of English Literature. Vol. X. The Age of Johnson. Cambridge University Press. 9s. net.

THE title of this latest volume of the Cambridge History of English Literature reminds us that in the days of the grandfathers of the old men among us there reigned by undisputed right of worth a King of Letters, the like of whom England had never seen before nor probably can ever have again. Of Miss Burney, writer of long forgotten novels, and of a Diary whose clear cut portraits of the famous people whom she met have saved them from like oblivion, the story is told how Johnson once tried to detain her when she rose to go. "Don't go yet, little character-monger," he called out. Burke's comment was: "Miss Burney, die to-night." A trifle this, but showing how much the sovereign's word of praise was esteemed in the highest literary circles of his kingdom. To merit it was the crown of achievement, and when it was won no more remained.

And his rule was a beneficent one. To all his contemporaries he set the example of genuine piety, good sense, decency in life and language. He was eminently respectable in the best sense of the ill-used word. The great Lexicographer, as that "majestic woman," Miss Pinkerton, named him, would indeed have outlived her day in virtue of his Dictionary alone, but this great monument to his memory was already falling into neglect when the present generation came to the birth, and it is Webster whose name is now associated with the daily needs of those who would know and use English aright. "Rasselas" has perhaps a few readers left. Some of "The Lives of the Poets" a few more, but who now turns the pages of "The Rambler" or "The Idler," or looks to Johnson's "Shakespeare" for enlightenment? Yet the great writer lives to-day, and we know him more intimately than we do perhaps any other of the illustrious dead. We read his writings no longer, but his Life as written by his devout admirer is known to all readers, and is an assurance of an immortality in the minds and hearts of his countrymen denied to many a loftier genius.

Of his contemporaries many were distinguished in their own department of literature, and their shades still frequent our lecture halls and libraries. Not one of them perhaps is to be placed in the very highest rank of literary artists, but Gibbon's History, Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations," Hume's "Treatise on Human Nature," Butler's "Analogy," Macpherson's "Ossian," Gray's Odes, the Poems of Thomson and Young, the novels of Fielding, Sterne, Oliver Goldsmith, and Smollett are books which will always have their readers. Others have an importance greater than their intrinsic excellence in the wide-spread influence they exerted on world literature, and of these notably Richardson, whose seven volume novels, teaching by varied examples the uniform lesson that even in this life virtue is sure of its reward and vice of its punishment, are not likely to find readers in these days when books and business are clamorous in their demands upon our time. The chapter of this History devoted to his life and writings has a special interest as the contribution of an illustrious French savant, and it is a matter of pride and interest to the English student while he reads the well-known story of the extraordinary effect which "Pamela" and "Clarissa" produced in his own country, which was "swept with a wave of collective emotion," to learn from the unprejudiced pen of the Parisian professor that from these same "is derived one of those pervading lines of influence out of which was woven the web of European life and thought of the time." His works were eagerly welcomed in France, and their author was worshipped by the swelling crowd of the votaries of sensibility. Even the sceptical genius of Voltaire was carried away by the fashion set by the orthodox and moral Richardson. Diderot wrote his eulogy, and Rousseau owes to Clarissa the suggestion and type of his "Nouvelle Heloise." Hardly less deep reaching or extensive was his influence in Germany. "Truly an extraordinary story of the influence which a writer of no extraordinary ability may exert when he is the first to give fitting expression to the prevailing sentiment of his day." Of other novels of the time, "The Vicar of Wakefield," "Tom Jones," and "Tristram Shandy" have vindicated the immortality of their authors. Here we can only quote the shrewd and comprehensive criticism of Mr. Hubert Child, who, summing up the case of Fielding, writes, "Of human nature that was not perfect, not exalted by any intellectual or moral or religious passion, he knew more than any writer, except, possibly, Shakespeare." It is a comment that might be made—passing the exceptional praise of the last few words—on all the romantic literature of the period.

The chapter on Gray has a melancholy interest, accordant with that of the immortal Elegy, from the fact that the writer, whose name will always be associated with the poet's as editor of his works and letters, did not live to correct the proofs. His last words on the poet of his choice tell of him "as a pioneer, who seems, like Hesperus, to lead a starry host, but really moves with the rest in obedience to the same mysterious impulse." To trace this impulse throughout the world of books and to discover what is possible of its sources is the object of all genuine History of Literatures.

Passing by of necessity much else which tempts us to stay and comment on it, we cannot close this brief notice without drawing the attention of readers of THE INQUIRER to Dr. Shaw's chapter on "The Literature of Dissent," and we will conclude with his tribute to the humble Academies where our ministers of the eighteenth century were trained:—"In their totality they present a brilliant galaxy of talent in fields of learning far removed from mere theological studies. Such a result could not have been achieved had it not been for the powerful solvent of intellectual freedom which the Unitarian movement brought in its train. Few of the Academies, whatever their denominational colour at the outset, escaped contact with it, and those of them which assimilated the influence most freely produced great tutors and scholars. In this matter the Academies trod the same historical path as that followed by the individual dissenting Churches. Their intellectual activity blazed so fiercely that it tended to burn up the spiritual life; and herein lies the secret at once of their first success, their chequered and bickering career and, in most cases, their ultimate atrophy." Which judgment of an impartial historian is well deserving of respectful attention.

C. H.

LITERARY NOTES.

AMONG the important books announced by Messrs. Macmillan, we notice the "Autobiography of Maharshi Devendranath Tagore," translated from the original Bengali by Satyendranath Tagore and Indira Devi, with an introduction by Evelyn Underhill. The writer of this autobiography was the father of Rabindranath Tagore. It is a deeply interesting and intimate revelation of religious experience, and is certain of a cordial welcome by many English readers as it has been accessible hitherto only in an edition published in Calcutta.

"THE Practice of Christianity," by the author of "Pro Christo et Ecclesia," will also be published shortly by Messrs. Macmillan. It is divided into three parts, The Commonwealth of God, The City of Destruction, and The Pilgrimage of the Soul, and will deal among other topics with the penal system, warfare, personal violence, thrift and poverty, and material welfare.

"SPIRITUAL Reformers in the 16th and 17th Century" is the title of a new book by Prof. Rufus M. Jones, author of "Studies in Mystical Religion." It deals with some of the deeper influences in the period following the upheaval of the Reformation. Four chapters are devoted to Jacob Boehme, and among English writers special attention is paid to Vane, Benjamin Whichcote, and John Smith, the Cambridge Platonist, with a closing chapter on Thomas Traherne and the spiritual poets of the 17th century. Messrs. Macmillan will be the publishers.

AMONG other notable books in Messrs. Macmillan's list are Vol. II. of their illustrated edition of "Macaulay's History"; "Notes of a Son and Brother," by Henry James, a sequel to "A Small Boy and Others"; "The Nine Minoan Periods," a summary sketch of the characteristic stages of Cretan civilisation, by Sir Arthur J. Evans; "Roman Ideas of Deity in the Last Century before the Christian Era," by W. Warde Fowler; "The Principles of Greek Art," by Prof. Percy Gardner, being a revised and largely re-written edition of his "Grammar of Greek Art"; "Our Task in India: Shall We Proselytise Hindus or Evangelise India?" by Bernard Lucas; "The Great Society," by Graham Wallas; "A Dictionary of Madame de Sevigné," by Edward Fitzgerald, edited by his great-niece, in two volumes in the Eversley Series; and "Highways and Byways in Shakespeare's Country," by Archdeacon Hutton, with illustrations by Edmund H. New.

WE are glad to notice that Dr. Henry Osborne Taylor's important book on "The Mediæval Mind" has met with so much appreciation that a second edition is in active preparation, and will be issued shortly by Messrs. Macmillan.

The work has been carefully revised, and an important new chapter has been added dealing with the towns and guilds and the Crusades.

MESSRS. DENT announce a new series to be called The Wayfarer's Library, which will include books in a lighter vein than most of the volumes of Everyman. Living authors will be largely represented. The Library will be arranged under Romance and Adventure, Social and Domestic Fiction, Historical Fiction, Humour, Belles Lettres and Essays, and the Open Air. The volumes will be a little larger than the familiar Everyman.

A NEW issue, the tenth, of the "Home University Library of Modern Knowledge" will be made by Messrs. Williams & Norgate on Tuesday, January 27. The five new volumes include two of timely economic interest—"Problems of Village Life," in which Mr. E. N. Bennett, M.A., deals with all the leading factors of the rural land problem; and "Unemployment," by Professor A. C. Pigou, a scientific analysis of the question, with a discussion of remedial and palliative measures. Dr. Robert Munro, in "Pre-historic Britain," summarises the evidence of remains unearthed up to the recent finding of the Piltdown Skull, and marks out the chief periods of human advance from the Great Ice Age to the dawn of history. Professor Paul Vinogradoff, D.C.L., LL.D., under the title "Common-Sense in Law," deals with the elementary principles of jurisprudence; and Professor George Moore, of Harvard, traces, book by book, the origin and growth of the "Literature of the Old Testament." These books bring the list of the Home University Library up to eighty-five volumes.

WE regret that owing to a printer's error the address of Mr. Elkin Mathews was given in an article last week on Yone Noguchi as 4, Cock-street, S.W., instead of 4, Cork-street, W.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

JESUS, OUR TEACHER AND FRIEND.

III.—THE BELOVED SON.

THE beginning of the good news of Jesus Christ, as it is told in the earliest of the Gospels, we saw last week, was that he came to his own people, taking up the Baptist's call to repentance and preaching the Kingdom of God. It is said (Luke iii. 23), that when he began to teach he was about thirty years of age. He had grown up, there can be little doubt, in his home at Nazareth, and had worked with his father, who was a carpenter. There were brothers and sisters, and he was the eldest. Now he was a man trained in the knowledge of the ancient law and the highest religious teaching of his people, familiar with their heroic history, and with the great words of psalmist and prophet, believing with all his heart in the divine future to which they were being led. So, when the time came, he was ready to be a preacher of the Kingdom of God, to declare that the rule of goodness, of righteousness, was very near, and was to be perfectly established in the hearts of men, and, through them, in the world. The great commandment, for him as for all the people, was, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength," and to this, when he went out as a teacher, Jesus liked to add another, as the second great command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Then there were other words, heart-searching and strengthening, which we may be sure were as daily bread to him in his own religious life. Look at a few of these: Micah vi. 8; Psalm ciii. 17, 18; Psalm cxxxix. 23, 24; Psalm li. 10, 11; Psalm xxiii. From such words as these we may realise something of what the religious life of Jesus must have been when he heard the call of John the Baptist and went down with the rest of the people to the River Jordan. We do not wonder that he responded eagerly to the ardent call of the prophet of righteousness.

And when Jesus was baptized, we are told that as he came up out of the water, "he saw the heavens rent asunder, and the Spirit as a dove descending upon him: and a voice came out of the heavens, Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleased" (Mark i. 10, 11). This is told in the other Gospels also, and we have to ask what it means. The answer is that it is a legend, one of the many wonder-stories told about Jesus, which the disciples imagined and then thought of as something that really happened. But when we try to picture it to ourselves, we know that the heavens are not like that, as though they were a curtain that could be "rent asunder," stretched like a great tent over the earth, and on the other side the heaven in which God dwells; nor does he come to us in that outward way, for "no man hath seen God at any time." He is always very near to us, and we have to learn through love and trust to feel that it is so, for we cannot go where he is not, and "in him we live and move and have our being." When he speaks to us, it is in the silence of our own hearts. And so when Jesus says, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," we must understand those words in the deep inward sense. We can never see God in any outward form, but the pure in heart, those who love goodness perfectly, and let the pure breath of it rule and quicken their whole being, know with ever deepening conviction that that is what God is, and nothing can separate them from his love.

But while we see that the baptism story, as it is told in the Gospel, is a legend or picture, imagined by the disciples, we can yet, I think, look through it into the heart of Jesus and understand something of what he was feeling at that time. It shows at least how the disciples realised that the Divine blessing did rest upon him then; and when we remember the religion in which he had been brought up, and the wonderful influence he had afterwards as a religious teacher, the new depth of meaning that he gave to the thought of God as our Father, and the new spirit of love and trust in which he showed men that they might live in the Kingdom of God, it is not difficult for us to realise that he must have been deeply moved in that moment of his baptism, and that what the story tells may very well represent a thing that really happened to him.

Loving God with all his heart and soul and mind and strength, knowing as he did the strength of righteousness as the strength of the Eternal, and eager to give himself to its service, he was ready, with the Baptist, to proclaim the Kingdom of God near at hand, and to help his people to realise it. And of his baptism we may think as an act of confession, out of a heart deeply stirred, and a prayer for the perfect cleansing of his life that he might be fit for such high service, perfectly devoted to the Father's will. We can well believe that there was no cloud in that first pure enthusiasm of his self-dedication to goodness and to God. In the joy of it the whole world was radiant for him with heavenly light. God was very near, God, whom he had learnt to think of always as Father; and in the perfect surrender of his heart he felt the Father's benediction resting on him: "Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleased." The words were not spoken out loud, as the story supposes, but we may rest in the thought that they say in our words just what Jesus felt, and what God was actually saying to him in the silence of his own heart.

Think of the joy of that feeling of the Divine approval and blessing. The dark and sorrowful things were still there in the world, and Jesus was to pass through bitter trials and the agony of a cruel death before his work was accomplished; but here was the strength in which he would be able to face the hardest trial, and for the moment the pure joy of it and the eagerness of a holy purpose filled his heart. It was not of himself that he would be thinking then, but of God's love and his benediction on the love of goodness in the heart of his child. He was receiving the deep inflowing of the Holy Spirit of God into his life, and it was love, joy, and peace. The same self-peacefulness we may see in the heart of the boy in that earlier story (Luke ii. 41-51), when to his mother's reproachful question Jesus answers: "Wist ye not that I must be in my Father's house?"—"You might have been sure that you would find me here." So natural to the fervour of his child-like trust and love had it already become for him to speak of God as his Father.

V. D. D.

SIR K. G. GUPTA, President, and members of the Brahma Samaj in London will celebrate the 83rd anniversary of the Samaj on Sunday, January 25, from 4 to 6 p.m., at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., when Dr. Walter Walsh will give an address.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

WILLIAM WOOLLEY.

WE regret to announce the death of Mr. William Woolley, who was so widely known and honoured in the Sunday schools of Lancashire and Cheshire. We have received the following personal tribute to his memory from the pen of the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson:—

"William Woolley died at the age of 58, at Gee Cross, on January 13, after an illness of between three and four months, and was interred at Hyde Chapel on Saturday afternoon, January 17, the service being conducted by the Rev. F. Heming Vaughan and myself; the memorial service being also held on Sunday afternoon, the 18th inst., both of us joining in it.

"These two occasions were marked by the most impressive demonstration of the respect and affection of the people of Gee Cross I ever remember in my ministry of forty-seven years. Not alone was the chapel overflowing on both occasions, especially with the young people who have been brought up under him, but as the funeral procession passed through the village street the whole population turned out to join in the tribute paid to a man universally beloved, all blinds drawn down, the three publichouses on the route closing their doors in honour of the man who never entered them as a customer, and the Marple Band, who were wont to head the Whit Friday School walk, playing solemn music as they led a long line of mourners past the homes of the children for whom William Woolley laboured so faithfully in the Sunday school, as secretary and presiding spirit for a lifetime. Emotion sat on every face, and affection trembled on every lip. Here was being borne to its last earthly resting place the mortal form of one who was no public character, but to whom the people were giving a public funeral. Why? In Sunday school next day, my wife asked her girls that question. One of them answered, 'Because he loved us.' It was true. His life was one long story of love in deed and word and thought. When I held his hand as he lay on his dying bed, he had something to say to me, but could not find the word. At last it came, as with a sweet smile on his lips, he said 'affection.' He was indeed almost like a son to me, and I loved him back, while he died as he had lived breathing affection.

"Loving service rendered in the Sunday school, of which he was the life and soul, and which now feels lost without him, was his delight. Overtaxing, I fear, his strength, he at length laid down his very life in its service. Remarkable in this record was his real genius for teaching singing to the scholars and youths and maidens. In this he was unique. As a day school teacher he had had the boys and girls under him to train in the tonic solfa notation, and so they entered the Sunday school prepared for further teaching in his famous singing class, led by him for thirty-nine years, and always maintaining the high standard he set before him. The Christmas operas he put on the stage had a reputation all round the district, and were given here and at Denton. In his singing classes, moreover, his spirit of brotherhood banded them together in a beautiful social union, making them the centre of the best life of the Sunday schools. His musical gifts are widely known to-day through his original hymn tunes composed for the Manchester District Sunday School Association, and published by them; but a greater thing than his music was his beautiful character. His heart was pure and sweet and clean. He had a refining influence on his young people that was all his own. He had a brave spirit of allegiance to his ideals in all companies. On Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel and its school, this true Christian has left an influence for good that will never die. I thus lay a wreath of my own on his honoured tomb."

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

THE CHURCHES AND PEACE.

THE following appeal to the Christian Churches of Europe in the name of the God of Justice and of Love, our Heavenly Father, and of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, has just been issued in German, French, and English.

DEAR AND HONOURED BRETHREN,—The two Balkan wars have just shown once again (and with what tragic eloquence!) what are the horrors of war: three hundred thousand men in the prime of life cut down by death, on the battlefield or in the hospital—as many and even more wounded, of whom a large number, maimed for life, will always be incapable of earning their living, and for many years will have to be kept by their fellow citizens—thousands upon thousands of widows and orphans, mourning their natural bread-winner, and abiding in dire poverty—fertile countryside laid waste, towns and villages burnt and destroyed—brutal outrages and cruelties of every sort—new rancours and hatreds added to old enmities and breeding the desire for revenge, the germ of future wars.

Behold what we, the Christians of Europe, have witnessed—nineteen centuries after there was sung, in the land of Judea, the song of welcome to the glory of the Son of Man, "Peace on Earth, Goodwill to Men."

Is it possible for us to console ourselves in some measure for the horrible spectacle of this war by the thought that the efforts of diplomacy have succeeded at least in confining that strife to the Balkan Peninsula, and that the rest of Europe has continued to enjoy the precious benefits of Peace? But does this peace really deserve its name? Fellow Christians, we cannot, and we must not believe so. Think only of the innumerable efforts and precautions which the several Governments have had to take in order to preserve peace—without being able to guarantee it—even for a few weeks in advance. Think of the hundreds of thousands of men who are at this moment under arms ready to fight, and still other hundreds of thousands who can join them in a few days. Reckon up the millions and tens of millions which the nations of Europe are spending on the maintenance of their forces by land and by sea.

May we be allowed in this connection to quote a few figures? In 1880 the six great Powers of Europe—Austria, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, and Russia—spent £144,000,000* for the upkeep of their armies and navies, with a total, on a peace footing, of about 2,650,000 men. Thirty years later, in 1910, the military and naval expenditure of these same States exceeded £284,000,000, a sum which maintained, still on a peace footing, 3,800,000 men. For 1914 we already know that they will have more than 4,200,000 men under arms, and that the total of their military and naval establishment will amount to more than £320,000,000.

Led on by the example of the great Powers, and to safeguard their neutrality in case of conflict among the others, the Powers of second and third rank, according to population, are likewise compelled to increase their military expenses to a very considerable extent. With regard to Switzerland, for example, they have mounted from £480,000 in 1888, to £1,680,000 in 1910. At the present moment the annual total of military expenses for the following countries may be estimated at £48,000,000:—Belgium, Bulgaria, Denmark, Greece, Holland, Montenegro, Norway, Roumania, Servia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey.† And these States, on a peace footing, maintain about 800,000 men.

Thus we may say, that in 1914, without supposing for that year any special political complication, Europe will have a military and naval expenditure of £380,000,000, and 5,000,000 men under arms, to whom, in case of war, may be added three or four times that number.

Notice also that this figure of £380,000,000 does not represent the whole financial burden which Europe endures on account of international rivalry. A notable portion of the European National Debts, which to-day exceed a total of £648,000,000, comes from expenses incurred through past wars or military expenses covered by loans, and from this, for the interest and sinking fund of that part of the debts, there is an annual expense which may be valued at £200,000,000.

Moreover, it is necessary to take into account the loss of wealth due to the fact that these 5,000,000 men, instead of doing productive work, are being maintained by their fellow countrymen. Estimating at £48 yearly the value of the work which on the average might be done by each of these able-bodied men, there is under this head an indirect annual expenditure of £240,000,000. We may conclude, then, that in 1914, if a condition of peace is kept in Europe, that condition will cost approximately £4,000,000,000.

* In these figures, as in those that follow, we have reckoned only the army and navy Budgets, and not the colonial Budgets, which too include military expenditure but incurred outside Europe.

† Needless to say, the expenses of the recent Balkan wars are not counted in this sum.

Does this condition really deserve the name of "civilisation" (we dare not say, out of respect for Christ, of "Christian" civilisation)? To this question, evidently, we can only reply in the negative. Just as to-day we agree to designate as "savage" the condition of people where each individual makes justice for himself, and where the vendetta reigns, because with those people there is neither Law, nor Law Courts, nor Police, even so the centuries of the future will one day rightly give the name "barbarian" to the present international régime—that régime where brute force outweighs law, and where the biggest item of European Budgets is devoted to making millions of men competent to kill other millions.

If the great majority of those who, rightly or wrongly, call themselves Christians, have contributed in part to this wretched condition of things, what then do the Churches say, which formally recognise Christ as their Sovereign Lord, and whose express mission is the establishment on this earth of ours of the Kingdom of Justice, of Love, and of Peace? Have they wrought, as they might, and ought to have done, to bring together the nations on the common ground of Brotherhood, by reminding them ceaselessly that the Fruit of Justice is sown in Peace, and that the true greatness of nations, like that of individuals, consists not in conquering and dominating other peoples, but in rendering to humanity the maximum service that is possible. When the Governments of the countries where these churches are established engage in war—have they always sought—impartially, in the light of God's own Spirit—to know on which side lay justice, which side had the better right? Leaving aside their natural sympathies, as in duty bound, did they ask the Almighty to give the victory to the cause which in their eyes stood for the right? Have they not rather, influenced by the spirit of this world, prayed that victory might be to the armies of their own people, without taking thought for the justice of the cause? Have not many of their spiritual leaders dared to glorify war as a divine institution, instead of seeing therein, as is really the case, one of the most awful manifestations of human selfishness?

To be sure, we are well aware of all the moral and social progress that has been made under the influence of that Gospel which is being preached more or less faithfully by all the Churches. We recognise the action of the spirit of Christ in the international laws designed to mitigate the horrors of war, in the recourse to arbitration made by some Powers, and in these international congresses held in favour of peace. But what the Churches have done during these last centuries, by indirect rather than by direct action, against war and in favour of peace, is little or nothing in comparison with what they could and ought to have done in order to remain faithful to the spirit of their Divine Master, or even simply to follow the example of the Church of the Middle Ages in its efforts towards the establishment of the Truce of God. We ought, in this respect, to humble ourselves before God, and humbly to recognise that in the war on War, in the efforts made hitherto to burst the barriers which sin has raised between the nations, and to lead these to thoughts of peace, the Churches have not taken up the place and the position which was their duty and their right.

This neglect—this, so to speak, official neglect of our Christian duty cannot longer continue without scandalising the world, and without covering with opprobrium the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is absolutely essential that all the Churches which have at heart the glory of their Master and the advancement of the Kingdom of God shall understand and undertake without delay the task which thrusts itself upon their attention. It is absolutely essential that in this Europe of ours—armed to the teeth, the Churches shall uplift their voices with all their strength and cry: "Peace on Earth, goodwill to men." It is absolutely essential that they strive with all their might against prejudice, selfish interest, and that false patriotism which sows jealousy and hatred among the nations. It is absolutely essential that they work together for the substitution of right for brute force—of arbitration for war. It is absolutely essential that they rouse up the nations, not to a ruinous competition in armaments, but to a fruitful emulation in the arts of peace.

By what means shall the Churches acquit themselves of this sacred and noble task? It is not for us to find it out and state it here; we wish this to be the work of a Congress of the Official Delegates of the Churches of Europe. Our own ambition—the ambition of the Churches of a neutral country, where citizens speaking different tongues and confessing different faiths can live together in peace—our ambition and our prayer is this, that the Churches of Europe of all confessions, forgetting for a moment the differences that separate them, and bowed before the Cross on Calvary, shall remember that they all alike confess the same Master, the same Father in Heaven, and the same call, viz., to establish here on earth the Kingdom of the God of Love. May they, forgetting their differences and remembering only these things, assemble together their delegates in congress to seek, under the holy guidance of the Spirit of God, what the Churches, as Churches, might do to promote among the nations the spirit of justice and of peace, and so gradually to bring about a diminution in military burdens and in the risks of war.

With this end in view, and in the conviction that we are acting according to the Will of God, we take the liberty of asking you, Dear Brethren in Christ, if you would be disposed to send official representatives of your Church to a Congress of the Churches of Europe—which, if it be God's pleasure, might hold their sessions in the course of the year 1914, at Berne. We shall be extremely obliged if you will make us acquainted with your answer between now and April 15 next, and, if the number of affirmative replies is sufficient, we will send you later fuller information as to the date and composition of the Congress.

May God Himself inspire your answer; may He bless your Church with His most precious blessings; may He have you in His holy keeping; and may He sanctify our action to the glory of His Name.

These are the feelings, Dear and Honoured Brethren, with which we beg your acceptance of our greeting, Brothers in Jesus Christ our Lord.

Berne, in the month of January, 1914.

In the name of the Conference of the Evangelical Churches of Switzerland:—

Chairman: Rev. G. RIS.
Vice-Chairman: Rev. E. RYSER.
First Secretary: Rev. M. BILLETER.
Assistant Secretary: Rev. CH. SIMON.

In the name of the Synodical Commission of the National Church of the Canton of Vaud (which initiated this appeal):—

Chairman: Prof. Dr. LOUIS EMERY.
Secretary: Rev. J. SAVARY.

ALBANIAN RELIEF FUND.

WE have received the following donations to Miss Durham's Albanian Relief Fund in response to her appeal in our columns last week. Miss Durham asks us to express her cordial thanks to the donors:—

Miss E. C. Abraham ..	£1 0 0
Cedric R. Boulton ..	10 0 0
Edward Chitty ..	5 0 0
G. W. Chitty ..	5 0 0
Rev. W. H. Drummond ..	2 2 0
E. F. ..	2 0 0
E. R. and S. J. G. ..	1 0 0
Rev. Dr. C. A. Greaves ..	1 0 0
Miss A. Garrett ..	5 0 0
J. M. Gimson ..	5 0 0
Miss Gimson ..	1 0 0
E. C. Harding ..	1 1 0
Mrs. Holt and Miss E. G. Holt ..	50 0 0
Mrs. C. James ..	2 2 0
Mrs. R. Crompton Jones ..	2 2 0
Miss E. F. Jones ..	1 0 0
Mrs. R. Keating and Miss Keating ..	5 0 0
Rev. H. M. Livens ..	1 1 0
F. Levey ..	1 1 0
Per L. G. A.—
G. L. Stampa £1, J. H. P.
2s. 6d., H. H. d'E. 2s. 6d.,
R. F. 1s., L. G. A. 4s. ..	1 10 0
R. R. Meade-King ..	2 0 0
J. H. March ..	1 1 0
Mrs. Mahler ..	2 0 0
Mrs. Russell Martineau ..	5 0 0
Mr. and Mrs. Nanson ..	5 0 0
Mrs. Notcutt ..	1 0 0
H. P. ..	5 5 0
Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Pearson ..	1 0 0
Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Paget ..	5 0 0
W. R. ..	1 1 0
Dora Roscoe ..	4 0 0
Miss E. Rawson ..	2 2 0
Rev. C. J. Street ..	1 1 0
Miss Swaine ..	1 0 0
L. Beatrice Swaine ..	2 0 0
A. E. Shaw ..	1 1 0
Mrs. Thornely ..	5 0 0
Alfred Thompson ..	1 0 0

Two Friends 4s., W. H. 5s., Q. 5s., I. I. Rawsthorn 10s., A Southport Friend 10s., R. Simon 10s., S. H. B. 2s., Miss Marion K. Tarr 5s., Anonymous 4s., Miss A. Moulton 2s. 6d., B. Grundy 2s., D. E. F. 5s., the Rev. G. B. Stallworthy 10s., Miss Drennan 2s. 6d., Miss Fuhr 2s. 6d., A. Simpson 10s., Anonymous 5s., Mrs. Reynier 10s., Miss E. D. Gibb 5s.,

J. H. S. 5s., Ipswich (Primary Department Unitarian Sunday School) 2s. 6d., Miss Fullager 10s., Two Friends 13s., Per H. 5s., Miss Tarr 5s., "Vectis" 2s., A. M. 3s., Sibb & Frith 5s., Anonymous 10s., A. and K. Kalthoeber 10s., Senior Classes (Upper Chapel, Sheffield) 12s. 11d. £9 12 11

Total £158 2 11

Further donations are earnestly invited and may be sent to the Editor, 23, Cannon-place, Hampstead, N.W., or to the Union of London and Smith's Bank, College-crescent, Finchley-road, London, N.W. Cheques and postal orders should be drawn in favour of the Albanian Relief Fund.

SIR OLIVER LODGE will deliver a lecture on "The Ether of Space" in the large lecture hall at Bedford College, York Gate, Regent's Park, on Tuesday, Jan. 27, at 5 p.m. Admission free without ticket.

THE Dunkin Lecture in Sociology will be given at Manchester College, Oxford, on Tuesdays at 5 p.m. by Prof. J. H. Muirhead, LL.D., whose subject will be "The Dynamics and Conditions of Social Progress."

WE have received the Essex Hall Year Book for 1914 containing a list of Unitarian and Free Christian Ministers, Churches and Societies. The list of Ministers is official, having been compiled by a joint committee specially appointed for that purpose. The rest of the information has been collected and arranged with his usual skill for short business-like statement by the Editor, the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie. The names of ten ministers appear on the list for the first time. Since the last issue of the Year Book eight ministers have died, and three other names disappear for various reasons. The list of congregations contains 369 places of worship as compared with 374 the previous year, 289 in England, 38 in Ireland, 35 in Wales, and 7 in Scotland. It is stated that upwards of 50 congregations rely at present upon Lay-Preachers, with occasional visits from ministers in the neighbourhood or from a distance. A liturgical service is customary in 108 congregations.

THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT.

THE MINIMUM WAGE IN THE UNITED STATES—THE HOUSING PROBLEM IN SPAIN.

THE social conscience has awakened on the other side of the Atlantic as among ourselves, though, perhaps, not to the same extent, or at least so generally. In some of the States what would be called advanced industrial legislation has been enacted, as, for instance, in Oregon, where a minimum wage law in the interests of women and minors is at work. It is administered by a body known as the Oregon Industrial Welfare Commission, and consisting of three members representing respectively the general public, the employers, and the employed. This body is empowered to fix the hours of employment for women and minors, the standards and conditions of labour, and the minimum wage. It has also the right to examine the books and pay-sheets of employers in order to obtain necessary information. Where it has reason to suppose that women or minors are working under unsatisfactory conditions or at inadequate wages, it may call a conference consisting of an equal number of employers and employees, not exceeding three of each, three representatives of the public and at least one of the Commissioners, to investigate the question and report. The Commission, on receipt of such a report, is required to consider the recommendations contained in it, and may approve or disapprove of any or all of them. If it approves of any of the recommendations, the Commission must give notice, not less than once a week for four consecutive weeks, in not less than two papers of general circulation published in Portland, that it will at a time and place notified hold a public meeting, at which all persons in favour of or opposed to the recommendations shall be allowed a hearing. Afterwards the Commission may make an order to carry out such recommendations as it approves, and to require employers to comply with them, such order having full legal force. As specimens of the regulations imposed by the Commission, the following may be mentioned:

(a) In Portland mercantile establishments the minimum wage for adult women workers shall be 9½ dollars for a 50 hours week, no day to be longer than 8 hours 20 minutes, or to be completed later than 6 p.m.

(b) In Portland manufacturing establishments the minimum wage shall be $8.64 for a maximum week of 54 hours, no day to be longer than 9 hours, with a noon-lunch interval of not less than 45 minutes.

(c) No girl under 18 in the State of Oregon employed in any manufacturing or mercantile establishment, millinery, dressmaking or hairdressing shop, laundry, hotel, telephone or telegraph establishment shall be employed for more than 8 hours 20 minutes daily, or more than 50 hours a week, or later than 6 p.m. The minimum wages for girls between 16 and 18 shall be $1 per day, except as otherwise arranged for apprentices and learners by the Commission.

* * *

An interesting scheme for the housing of the working classes comes from Spain. A donation of $20,000 for the purpose had been given by a Spanish resident of Peru. The King added to this from the Privy Purse, the Government granted a subvention, and the Municipality of Seville has given a free site and granted exemption from taxation amounting to a saving of 25 per cent. on the rental value. Three groups of three-storied houses will be built, each containing lodgings for about 30 families. An artesian well will be sunk on the premises, and—so thoroughly has the Zeitegeist established himself—a cinematograph will be installed for educational purposes. The Savings Bank authorities are being invited to co-operate by means of loans to finance the scheme, which will be extended to Madrid and Saragossa after there has been some experience of its working at Seville.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Blackburn.—The annual meeting in connection with the Unitarian Church was held on the 15th inst. The Secretary's report showed that there had been an increase in attendance at the morning service, while the evening service had been well maintained throughout the year. Reports from the Sunday School, the Ladies' Guild, the Literary and Social Union, and the Young People's Guild showed that each of these departments is in an entirely healthy and vigorous condition, and an increase was also reported in the number of scholars in the Sunday school, and in the average attendances, while several new members have joined the church membership. A sum of £1,700 has been obtained for the building fund. The site, costing £1,650, has been conveyed to trustees in an open trust deed, and the congregation is now endeavouring to raise funds for the church building.

Birmingham.—The Moseley Unitarian Church reports a welcome visit last Sunday from the Rev. A. H. Biggs, of Ilford. It is hoped that the long and unexpected legal delays in connection with the site for the proposed new church will soon be surmounted, and that a time of grave difficulty and anxiety for the congregation will be at an end.

Chowbent.—Much sympathy has been expressed on account of the illness of the Rev. J. J. Wright, who has practically been laid aside since the middle of November, though he took the service at Chowbent Chapel on Christmas Day for the 23rd time. It is hoped that Mr. Wright will be able to resume his regular duties next month.

Horsham.—After the evening service at the Free Christian Church, on Sunday, January 11, the following resolution was proposed by Mr. W. Albery, seconded by the Rev. V. Moody, supported by Mr. W. J. Hoad, and carried unanimously:—"That this meeting of the Horsham Free Christian Church, held on Sunday, January 11, 1914, views with the greatest distrust and alarm the tremendous growth and threatened further increase of armaments in this country and other countries. It is convinced that the competition in armaments such as plagues Europe to-day is a menace to, not, as is alleged, a guarantee of peace, and that a true and lasting peace between the peoples of the world can proceed only from mutual goodwill and respect. It therefore asks the Prime Minister to take such steps as may bring about or help to bring about an understanding and agreement between the Great Powers to reduce the present monstrous expenditure upon armaments; an intolerable burden which seriously impedes the social, moral, and spiritual progress of mankind." The secretary was requested to forward the resolution to Mr. Asquith, Sir John Brunner, and the local Press.

Liverpool: Hope-street Church.—The Rev. S. A. Mellor, Ph.D., of Warrington, has accepted an invitation to the pulpit of Hope-street Church in succession to the Rev. H. D. Roberts.

Macclesfield.—A meeting was held to welcome the Rev. J. Hipperson as minister of King Edward-street Chapel on the 13th inst. in the Memorial Hall, when Colonel Brocklehurst, the Member for the division, presided. The Mayor (Alderman Whitmore) gave a civic welcome. Messrs. H. Rushton and M. Winder gave the right hand of fellowship on behalf of the congregation, and other speakers were the Rev. W. E. Ireland (Congregationalist), from the Free Church Ministers' Fraternal; the Rev. H. E. Perry (Stockport), on behalf of the East Cheshire Christian Union; the Rev. B. C. Constable, for the ministers of the district; the Rev. W. G. Cadman, as the retiring minister of King Edward-street. The Rev. J. Hipperson replied in suitable terms. A musical programme followed.

Merthyr Tydfil.—A sale held at the Drill Hall has resulted in £56 towards the reduction of the building debt on the Unitarian Chapel. The Mayor, Councillor A. M. Lloyd, performed the opening ceremony, supported by Mr. G. Ll. Thomas, J.P., and Mr. John Lewis, of Pontypridd, President of the South-East Wales Unitarian Association.

Horwich.—A nine days' mission was brought to a successful conclusion on Monday last in connection with the above church. The Missioner was the Rev. E. Stanley Russell, B.A., of Presteign, who preached twice each Sunday, and each week-night till Thursday. On Saturday, January 17, a women's night was arranged, when Mrs. Roberts, of Liverpool, spoke on "Women and the New Spirit." The meeting on Monday last was of the nature of a social rally, with opportunities of intercourse with Mr. Russell and others. The mission was opened on the 10th by a gathering of members and friends, and was addressed by the Revs. J. H. Weatherall, M.A., W. T. Bushrod, S. Thompson, E. S. Russell, and the minister. The effort was felt to be somewhat in the nature of an experiment, and it seemed impossible to forecast the result. Extravagant hopes were not entertained, whatever misgivings there might have been proved quite groundless, and the resulting impression is that it was a step in the right direction. The Sunday congregations were large and most encouraging, the chapel being packed on the last Sunday night. The week-night meetings were not large, but sufficiently well attended to make them encouraging and inspiring. Mr. Russell's addresses and sermons were admirably adapted to the end in view—the deepening of the life of the church, and appealing to the community at large. It is impossible to gauge the results in a movement of this kind, but so far they have been greater than the most sanguine dared to hope.

Preston.—The Rev. M. Rowe presided over the annual gathering of scholars and parents at the Unitarian Church, when the reports for the year 1913 were submitted, and brief addresses given by the superintendents of the school. Except for the deaths of Mrs. H. C. Walton and Mr. Crook, amongst the oldest members of the congregation, recent events have brought much encouragement. The annual sale of work, opened by the President of the B. & F.U.A., was successful beyond the expectations of the most hopeful, leaving the Ladies' Committee with £85 10s. in hand as the result of the year's work. A special course of Sunday evening addresses on "A Rational Religion" is at present attracting good congregations.

Sidmouth.—The Committee of the Old Meetings have received with much regret the resignation of the Rev. William Agar, who has just completed fifteen years of ministry among them. The severance, in March, after such a long connection will be keenly felt by the congregation.

Stockport.—On two occasions in the past year Nonconformist ministers from other churches have occupied the pulpit of the Unitarian Church, and given special afternoon addresses. On Sunday last, when the other churches had a general exchange of pulpits at their evening services, an exchange took place between the Rev. H. E. Perry and the Rev. S. R. Laundry, of Hanover Congregational Church. There was a large congregation at St. Petersgate to welcome Mr. Laundry, and Mr. Perry had a most cordial reception at Hanover Church.

Trowbridge: Appointment.—Mr. Frank K. A. Bullock has accepted a cordial invitation to the pulpit of Conigre Chapel, where he has been acting as supply for over six months.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE SOUL OF THE EMPIRE.

Sir Francis Younghusband has privately circulated some notes (from which the Telegraph gives extracts) in which he pleads for an "Empire based on religion," in words which have special significance at the present moment. "At bottom," he says, "all the great Imperial problems depend for their solution, not upon abstract doctrines, but upon the men who have to solve them in practice in actual life on the spot, having the right temper, the right attitude of mind, tone, disposition, spirit—upon their having something more than public or patriotic spirit, upon their having the truly religious spirit in its widest, most comprehensive, and least narrow and bigoted sense. Only large yet deep-flowing religion, only religion in its purity and unmixed with outside elements, can dispose and turn and tune men's souls aright, can put them into that proper attitude of mind or state of feeling which will enable them to solve, in practice, those mighty world-problems which confront us Englishmen frequently enough to-day, but which will come upon us still more frequently and still more insistently to-morrow.

* * *

"AND, further, men must not only be religious; they must be known to be religious—to be beyond the simply material, selfish, and sordid, to be under the refining and elevating influence of a generous religion, and to be working for what they honestly believe to be the good, outside all merely personal advantages. Only when we are thus felt and known to be religious shall we gain the trust and respect and attachment of those three hundred million Indians to whom religion is so much and politics so little. Only by men actuated by deeply religious motive and warm with religious fervour shall we ever be able to melt and fuse together all the various elements of the Empire, and make it what it should be, a supremely effective influence for good in the councils of the nations."

THE AFTERMATH OF WAR IN ITALY.

The toll which an aggressive Imperialism has exacted from the labouring classes of Italy has been aggravated by recent severities of the weather, says the Manchester Guardian, and unemployment threatens to become chronic and general. In the worst centres from 40 to 80 per cent. of the workmen are said to be out of work, and from Apulia there are reports of strikes, explosions of popular anger, and risings which take the form of attack on the municipal buildings and local landholders, in some cases ending in bloodshed. Great sums of money are being assigned for public works and the immediate relief of the unemployed by local bodies and departments of the State, but it is evident that the country must for a long time feel the strain of the two years' war in North Africa, which is said to have cost forty millions sterling, to say nothing of the suffering it has caused. "Half the treasure squandered in the deserts of North Africa would, wisely employed, have made smiling lands of many poor southern provinces, and staunch the drain of their able-bodied population."

POEMS WITHOUT WORDS.

It is the "unheard melodies" that are the sweetest, and in the opinion of Mr. Yone Noguchi, who has been lecturing to the Japan Society in Hanover-square, the very best poems are left unwritten or are sung in silence. The real test of poets, he said, was how far they resisted their impulse to utterance or to the publication of their work; not how much they had written, but how much they had destroyed. As instances of great poets he quoted the names of Basho Matsumo, the 17-syllable hokku poet of 350 years ago, and Mallarmé, the French poet, who, he said, united in the point of denying their hearts free play, with the result of making poetry living and divine, not merely "words, and words, and words." Blessed were they who could sing in silence to the content of their hearts in love of perfection. The crusade of Western poetry should begin with leaving the "words" behind, or making them return to their original proper places.

THE PRESERVATION OF A GEORGIAN HOUSE.

Sir James Thornhill's house, 75, Dean-street, Soho, a fine old Georgian house with interesting associations, decorated with paintings that have long been celebrated, has been preserved from destruction at the last moment by the Office of Works under an Act which was only passed last August. This is said to be the first time the Act (Ancient Monuments Consolidation and Amendment Act) has been invoked, and although the house is only saved for a period of 18 months, probably a purchaser will come forward before the time is up and secure for London one of the best examples of eighteenth century architecture. The staircase, and the mural paintings (said to be the work of Thornhill and his son-in-law, Hogarth) are its special features, and the house would serve admirably as the headquarters of a fine art society or museum.

BOOKS PUBLISHED IN 1913.

The stream of books which pours from the press season after season shows no sign of diminution; indeed, it is increasing year by year. The output in 1913, says the Bookseller, was 12,046, and it exceeds that of all other years. Fiction again leads with a total of 2,285 (five less than in 1912), followed by religious books, 893, essays and belles lettres, 876; children's books, 869; biology and history, 615; poetry and the drama, 582; political economy, 394; and so on down to travels and adventure, 188.

A TRIBUTE TO WILFRID SCAWEN BLUNT.

The following unceremonious verses were read instead of an address to Mr. Wilfrid Scawen Blunt, when a committee of poets presented him at Newbuildings-Place, Sussex, with a carved reliquary of Pentelican marble, the work of the sculptor Gaudier Brzeska:—

TO WILFRID BLUNT.

Because you have gone your individual gait,
Written fine verses, made mock of the world,
Swung the grand style, not made a trade of art,
Upheld Mazzini and detested institutions;

We, who are little given to respect,
Respect you, and having no better way to show it
Bring you this stone to be some record of it.

"We" consisted of W. B. Yeats, John Masefield, Sturge Moore, Victor Plarr, Frederic Manning, Ezra Pound, F. S. Flint, and Richard Aldington. Mr. Blunt, in the course of his reply, said he had written a certain amount of poetry, but it was generally when he had made mistakes in love or politics or some other branch of active life. He never thought of getting it published; he did not even show it to his friends. He did not publish a single verse over his own name till he was about 43. Within the last year or two he had washed his hands of politics and all forms of public life, and having nothing to do had taken up with verse-writing. He had been writing a certain amount in the last year, and was now very pleased to be called a poet.

BEDFORD COLLEGE ENDOWMENT FUND.

Sir Hildred Carlile's gift of 100,000 guineas to Bedford College as a memorial to his mother has given a great impetus to women's education, which has never before been helped by so large a sum. Bedford College was founded in 1849, and among its first students were Jane Martineau and George Eliot. In 1874 it migrated to York-place, Baker-street, and in 1900 the college was recognised as a school of the University of London; a year later an appeal was issued for the £10,000 necessary to make up the £100,000 required for the erection of the premises on the grounds of an old house known as South Villa, Regent's Park. A sum was soon raised which enabled the council of the college to carry out its complete building scheme, and now there are 400 students attending classes at the beautiful buildings which were opened last year. Sir Hildred Carlile has not made it a condition that the money he has given shall be used in any special way, but it is probable that a certain amount will be set aside for the purpose of establishing professorial chairs. The College has as yet only three professors, one of whom is the first woman in England to hold a university professorship.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

BY PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

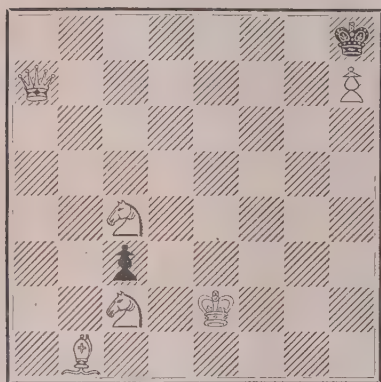

JAN. 24, 1914.

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 41.

By J. TOLOSA Y CARRERAS.

BLACK. (2 men.)

WHITE. (6 men.)

White to play and mate in three moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 39.

(with White P added at QKt4).

1. Kt. Q7 (key-move).

Correct solutions have been received from E. Wright, R. B. D. (Edinburgh), L. G. Rylands, W. E. Arkell, F. S. M. (Mayfield), E. C. (Highbury), R. E. Shawcross, W. S. B., A. J. Hamblin, Rev. B. C. Constable (also No. 38).

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

REV. B. C. CONSTABLE.—I am sorry for the error in No. 39, and also for the unintentional omission of your name. As all correspondence has to be forwarded, there is more chance of some going astray.

GEORGE INGLEDEW and A. S. RODGERS.—No. 38 correct, though received very late.

W. E. ARKELL.—A most amusing if eccentric cutting.

"Three-move Problems," by F. Baird, of Manchester. This book (London: Routledge, price 1s.) is a reprint of a series of articles published in the Chess Amateur, and is a very clear and well graduated exposition of the solution of three-movers. Mr. Baird's style is lucid and chatty, while he has chosen his examples well. After discussing about twenty positions with great detail, touching on themes and celebrated compositions of different grades, he gives a selection of fifty finished problems followed by very full solutions. I select one of these as our No. 41 above—an old favourite of mine, where victory follows on an amusing "running away" from the enemy. The position is as it appeared in Señor Golosa's treatise, published in 1892. Mr. Baird's version differs (perhaps immaterially), but I cannot account for the change. The solution is the same in both.

Now Ready for January.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

Editorial.

Lessons for the Month:

- I. A World of Wonder and Beauty.
- II. I am Alive in this World.
- III. A Life of Choice.

IV. A Good Decision.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.
Senior Department—Bertam Lister, M.A.
Primary Department—Ruth New.

Our Story Pages.

Letters on the Primary Department

By the Way.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

ONE PENNY NET.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.
LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

BARGAIN REMNANT BUNDLES of Irish Linen Huckaback Towelling, for Bedroom Towels; sufficient to make 6 full-sized Towels. Price 4s. 6d. per bundle, postage 5d. extra.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

BARGAINS IN SERVIETTES, slightly soiled. 20 inches square, 7s. 6d. per dozen; 22 inches, 7s. 9d.; 24 inches, 8s. 6d. Postage 4d. extra. Write for Free Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by
Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Triumph of Faith.

STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D.

Five Points of Christian Faith.

JAMES MARTINEAU, D.D., LL.D.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. HILL, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

"THE UNITARIAN MONTHLY."

Magazine for Unitarian Propaganda. Adopted by churches with or without local page. Issued for last Sunday in each previous month. One copy post free, 1½d.—1s. 6d. a year; 9d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100; extra charge local page.—Address to EDITOR, 36 Burlington-road, South Shore, Blackpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCs.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, THORALBY, AYSGARTH, S.O., YORKS.—Paying Guests received.—Particulars from Miss SMITH.

BOARD - RESIDENCE offered one Lady or Gentleman. Separate sitting-room if required. Every comfort, good table. West Hampstead.—Address for terms, C. C., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

SUNNY South Coast Health Resort.—Ideal Winter Boarding House, Central, Garden, near Sea. Hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, electric light, and penny in slot gas fire in each bedroom. Three good reception rooms. Food Reform and ordinary diet.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

A COMFORTABLE HOME offered a business gentleman in attractive but very accessible part of London.—C., 113, Highbury New Park, N.

COMFORTABLE and refined HOME offered to invalid or elderly Lady in quiet part of Richmond.—Address, M., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

BOOKS

EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY, TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE, And for all other Exams.

Second-Hand at Half Prices.

New at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogue 184 (post free) and state wants. Books bought.

BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,

135, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to quote and pay definite prices. Note our quotations: Up to 2s. 3d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 5s. 6d. on silver, 11s. on gold, 32s. each on platinum. Cash or offer by return as desired; if offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Utmost value guaranteed. Testimonials in thousands from satisfied customers. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, January 24, 1914.

Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3736.
NEW SERIES, No. 840.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 31, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

HOME UNIVERSITY

CLOTH
1/-
NET.

LIBRARY

LEATHER
2/6
NET.

EDITORS:

HERBERT FISHER, M.A., F.B.A., LL.D.
PROF. GILBERT MURRAY, D.LITT. LL.D., F.B.A.
PROF. J. ARTHUR THOMSON, M.A., LL.D.
PROF. WM. T. BREWSTER.

Tenth Issue Now Ready.

81 PROBLEMS of VILLAGE LIFE.

By E. N. BENNETT, M.A.

82 PREHISTORIC BRITAIN.
By ROBERT MUNRO, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.E.

83 COMMON SENSE in LAW.
By Prof. P. VINOGRADOFF, D.C.L., LL.D.

84 LITERATURE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.
By Prof. GEORGE F. MOORE, D.D., LL.D.

85 UNEMPLOYMENT.
By Prof. A. C. PIGOU, M.A.

Complete descriptive list post free.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta St.,
Covent Gdn., W.C.

THE RELIGIOUS FREEMAN and CHRISTIAN THINKER.

EDITOR - REV. H. D. ROBERTS.
No. 1. February, 1914.

CONTENTS.—Do we still Need Religion?
Religion and the Kikuyu Rite; The Religious Freeman and the new Social Enthusiasm.

For free circulation. Copy sent on application, or monthly for 6d., by Booksellers' Co., 70, Lord Street, Liverpool.

SUSTENTATION FUND

FOR THE

Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Contributors and Friends will be held at Dr. Williams' Library, Gordon-square, London, W.C., at 12.30 p.m. on Wednesday,
February 11, 1914, to receive the Report and Accounts, elect three Managers, appoint
Officers, and transact other business.

At the close of the Annual General Meeting a special General Meeting will be held to consider, and, if approved, to pass certain alterations in the Regulations for managing the Fund which have been considered and approved by the Board of Managers.

HAROLD F. PEARSON, Hon. Sec.,
22, College Hill, London, E.C.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartment, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

The Inquirer.

Among recent Articles are the following:—

The Parable of the Curlew. By W. E. A.
AXON. Jan. 24.

Is it Peace? By Miss EDITH DURHAM.
Jan. 17.

The Contribution of Our Age to Religious Experience. By Rev. W. WHITAKER.
Jan. 10, 17, and 24.

Yone Noguchi. By ERIC HAMMOND.
Jan. 17.

The Inclusiveness of Christ. By Rev.
HENRY GOW. Jan. 10.

Organisation and Life. By Rev. E. W.
LEWIS. Jan. 10.

The Kikuyu Controversy. By Rev. J. M.
LLOYD THOMAS. Jan. 10.

The Realisation of Life. By Rev. W. J.
JUPP. Dec. 27.

Man and Environment. By Rev. E. W.
LEWIS. Jan. 3.

Any of the above issues to be obtained from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C., post free, 1½d.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.

February

1. Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.

8. Rev. WILLIAM WOODING, B.A.

15. Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A., of Stand, near Manchester.

22. Rev. JOHN HENRY WEATHERALL, M.A. of Bolton.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only,

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church)
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for February 1:

Morning: The Denial of the Doctrine of the Trinity.

Evening: The Kikuyu Controversy.

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

Lecture Hall adjoining 19, Tavistock Square, W.C.

On Sunday Evenings, January 11 to March
22, 1914, at 7 o'clock, a Course of Lectures on

The Three Objects of the Society

will be given.

Feb. 1. Theosophy and Education. L. HADEN GUEST.

Feb. 8. Theosophy and your Religion. Mrs. BETTS.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a
Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20
Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.— PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, BISHOP'S STORTFORD.

Head Mistress: Miss ESTHER CASE, M.A.
Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: Miss ESTERBROOK HICKS,
B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18
years of age.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M.

Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—
Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road,
Maida-vale, W.

MISS LOUISA DREWRY'S Literature

Courses will begin again on Wednesday,
Feb. 4, at 7.45 p.m., and Thursday, Feb. 5, at 11.15 a.m. More plays of Shakspeare will be studied, three meetings being given to each play, and the first meeting will be devoted to some talk about Shakspeare, the man and artist. For details apply to Miss DREWRY, 143, King Henry's-road, N.W.

INTERNATIONAL GUILD (London

Branch), Hostel for Women Students,
3, Brunswick-square, W.C. (near British Museum and University College).—Full Board
from £19 to £26 for a term of 13 weeks.—For particulars apply to Miss E. S. WILLIAMS,
3, Brunswick-square, or Miss C. WICKSTEED,
International Guild, 6, rue de la Sorbonne,
Paris.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, February 1.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. DR. MORITZ WESTON.
 Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PRIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON; 7, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. J. PIPKIN; 7, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. Gow, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND. Evening subject, "Religion and Amusements."
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.A.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. S. MOSSOP; 6.30, Mr. R. W. SORESEN.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. AUSTIN.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Churchgate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing-street, 11.30, Rev. E. W. LUMMIS, M.A.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Mr. W. H. THOMAS, of Liverpool.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN ROW, 10.45, and
 STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LUCKING TAVENER.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, D.D., LL.D.; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. S. A. MELLOR.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN BIRKS.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREAE.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Houtstreet, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

DEATH.

CLEGG.—On January 22, at Blackpool, Sophia Clegg, late of Newchurch and Bury, aged 73. Interred at Newchurch Parish Church, January 26.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds of MSS. carefully and promptly copied.—Miss KENNEDY, 20, County Grove, Camberwell, S.E.

LADY seeks re-engagement as Companion or Companion-Help to elderly lady or invalid where maid kept. Domesticated, good needlewoman; good references.—C. M. S., 110, Markhouse-road, Walthamstow.

GENTLEWOMAN (aged 60) would undertake light duties (housekeeping, &c.) in return for a home in the country; she is musical.—A. N., Newsagent, 17, St. Paul's-place, Clifton, Bristol.

MR. A. W. HARRIS (late Hon. Treasurer N.U.T.A.) would be grateful for the opportunity of undertaking Rent Collection and Management of Property, or other part-time employment not involving continuous eyestrain. Good business and personal references.—168, Fleet-street, E.C.

LADY (middle-aged) seeks an engagement as Housekeeper where a maid is kept. Musical. Fond of children.—E. A., 4, Grove-street, Beeston, Nottingham.

HOUSEKEEPER or Useful Companion to lady or couple, where maid kept. Thoroughly domesticated, good plain cook, excellent needlewoman. Middle-aged, good references.—B., 5, South Park-road, Wimbledon.

HAS any Congregation a few copies to spare of Farmer's Music for Responses in Ten Services?—M., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s. d.
PER QUARTER	1 8
PER HALF-YEAR	3 4
PER YEAR	6 6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	67	The Chapels in which Mark Rutherford Preached	72	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
ARE EARNEST MEN INTOLERANT?	68	Children's White Cross League in Dublin	73	The Temperance Movement in Switzerland	75
MIRACLES	69	The Religious Freeman and Christian Thinker	73	Theism and Wesleyanism	76
BERGSON IN HIS LECTURE ROOM	70	BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—		Sheffield and District Association of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches	77
QUESTIONS AT ISSUE:—		The Samson-Saga	73	Albanian Relief Fund	77
Methods of Training for the Ministry	71	Publications Received	74	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	78
CORRESPONDENCE:—		FOR THE CHILDREN:—		NOTES AND JOTTINGS	79
The Albanian Relief Fund	72	Jesus, Our Teacher and Friend	74	OUR CHESS COLUMN	80

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE terrible labour war which has pursued its short and stormy way in South Africa has been so carefully guarded from intelligent criticism by censorship and imperfect information, that many people, conscious of their lack of material for forming a fair judgment, have preferred to keep silence about it. There is also the instinct of non-interference with the internal policy of a self-governing colony, which makes us slow even to offer our advice. But the ugly events of the last few days will force even cautious and silent men to speak. The sentence of imprisonment upon Mr. Cresswell, though it has been followed almost at once by his liberation, shows a deep-seated distrust of freedom of thought and expression in social and political matters, which is inconsistent with our best English traditions. This, however, might have been passed over as the ill-considered action of men in a panic, had it not been followed by the carefully planned deportation of the ten Labour leaders this week without even the semblance of a public trial.

* * *

As we read the accounts of these strange happenings, the secrecy with which these men were hurried away, their embarkation at dead of night, the instructions to the ship not to touch at any port of call, it is hard to believe that such an outrage upon personal freedom can have been planned and carried out under the British flag. No doubt the familiar argument will be used. It will be said that all things are lawful at a time of crisis; salus populi suprema lex. But we are assured that the strike has died down and life is returning to its normal course. The ten leaders could have been put upon their trial and given the opportunity granted to the worst criminals of defending themselves. The conclusion is inevitable that this was not done, because the law does not provide any such quick and easy means of getting rid of them. Even the Times admits that the mass of the electorate in this country will look upon deportation without trial and without statutory justification as an infringement of the elementary rights of citizenship in the British Empire.

* * *

WE need have no sympathy with Syndicalism or the policy of the South African Labour movement to be of the same opinion. When governments become law breakers the very foundations of civil order are destroyed. All the evil brood of rancours and animosities is let loose to prey upon society, and it becomes simply a question of which party is strong enough for the moment to crush the other. In the event of a wave of religious fanaticism spreading over South Africa, would General Botha and his government be justified in deporting Jews, Roman Catholics, Unitarians and other heretics as undesirables in the interest of the public peace? The issue which has been raised is one which must be faced without flinching by all lovers of freedom, and especially by the minorities in religious or social opinion, whose very existence depends upon the equality of all men before the law and public respect for impartial justice.

* * *

THE centenary of the birth of Bishop Colenso, which occurred last Saturday, has recalled one of the splendid fighting figures of fifty years ago. His work as a critic of the Pentateuch, so novel and startling in its day, has obscured his even greater claims to public gratitude as a far-seeing and sagacious Christian teacher. The dislike and alarm aroused by his Biblical heresies were intensified by the unconventionality of his attitude as a Churchman. It was the difficulties of the mission field which made him what he was. Practical experience among the South African natives was his schoolmaster in freedom. Where English traditions hampered his influence he cut fresh channels, that the Spirit might have free course and be glorified. All this has been repeated in many places since his day, and notably in East Africa under the leadership of the Bishop of Uganda. But it is with this refreshing difference, much of the old acrimony has died away and public opinion has swung round to the side of men who have the courage to bring breadth of mind and a large-hearted sympathy to the solution of new problems.

* * *

THE Westminster Gazette has performed a public service in calling attention in a series of articles to the scandals connected with the sale of advowsons in the Church of England. The abuse of patronage by private contract and sale is not so serious as it used to be; a healthy public opinion has been aroused in many places, and the conscience of the Church is more alert. But it is still serious enough to demand searching inquiry and drastic measures of reform. The state of things disclosed by the Westminster Gazette can only be described as shocking. The word is not at all too strong. It is possible for snug livings to be bought as a safe financial investment, and the control of a cure of souls may pass from hand to hand like shares on the Stock Exchange. It is stated that "the maiden aunt, spinster ladies of all ages, and the wealthy wives of clergymen are usually the readiest purchasers of these rights of presentation. When the incumbent dies they present the man for whom the purchase was made. Nephews who would never secure by force of character or native ability the responsibility of a living are pitchforked into onerous positions. Rich wives nominate their husbands, and frequently these are quite unsuitable for clerical work." It is the whole system of private patronage that is at fault. The wonder is that the bench of bishops has not risen up against it long ago. We are convinced that they could get their way in the matter if they were determined to fight vested interests in the name of religion, and they would have the whole force of respectable public opinion at their back. No one would be injured if the sale of livings was prohibited by law, and steps were taken to transfer all the rights of presentation from private hands to representative boards of trustees.

* * *

THE close association between almsgiving and religion still has a strong hold upon Christian sentiment. It can appeal for support to a long tradition and to the literal meaning of certain words in the New Testament. But the place of the churches in the modern world and the development of an intelligent civic consciousness have made revision of judgment necessary. When the alms of the church, given through its minister, are the token of deep reciprocal regard, nothing could be simpler or more human; but when they degenerate into a bribe, or the beautiful offices of friendship are expected to be crowned with a gift of money, to be followed on the part of the recipient by some form of religious observance, they are almost wholly pernicious.

* * *

In his weekly letter to the Manchester Guardian "Artifex" deals with this subject with much directness and commonsense.

"I am quite sure," he writes, "that such mis-called charity curses those who give and those who take. I could instance at least one case where a man of great personal power and attraction, who could beg almost any sum he wished to get, collected a tremendous congregation in a seemingly hopeless district. But when he, and his supplies of doles vanished, the congregation vanished also. I cannot think that while the apparent success lasted it can have been worth anything. And even when relief is given wholly without any religious test or condition, yet if it is given by a Church worker or a clergyman, there is always the feeling alike in the mind of the giver and of the receiver that some return in the way of attendance at church may be looked for and desired. And this does harm. I think it is Mr. Charles Booth who quotes the case of the decent working woman in a very poor district of London who, on being asked if she attended any place of worship or mothers' meeting, replied, 'Oh, no. We've been pretty bad off this last winter, but never as bad as that.'"

His practical suggestion is that the churches should bring all their knowledge and experience to bear upon the problem of helping those who are in need, but that the actual work of giving should be entrusted to a Civic League of Help.

ARE EARNEST MEN INTOLERANT?

RELIGIOUS people in many directions are on the brink of a great discovery. At present they shrink away from it a little doubtfully, partly because it is unfamiliar, but chiefly perhaps on account of the injury it will do to some of the spiritual values of the past. For a long time we have been familiar with religious earnestness combined with intolerance of spirit and narrowness of mind, and we have been inclined to forgive what we half suspected was ugly and un-Christ-like in its temper in our admiration for its moral heroism and singleness of aim. The quality which is emerging above the horizon is religious earnestness stripped bare of the old partnership and seeking for a new alliance with charity and mutual understanding. But is such a thing possible? To many people it seems like a contradiction in terms. The earnest man as we meet him in the pages of history or, often to our own discomfort, in the highways of modern life is the born fighter. He sees his own aim so clearly that his vision is blurred for everything else. He is so confident that he is right and all who oppose themselves are wrong that he is prepared to stake all he holds dear on the issue. The logic of his position is so convincing that they must indeed be fools and blind who do not agree with him. To him, the courage to be narrow is an essential part of loyalty. But are these the only terms upon which we can be in earnest? If charity and mutual understanding continue to grow, and grow they will, must we be prepared for the high passion of conviction to disappear? Are the days coming when it will seem like a setting back of the clock even to try to persuade men, and we shall settle down to make the best of the uncomfortable conclusion that we are all more or less right, and more or less wrong, and it does not greatly matter?

These are questions which the modern mind has to face, especially in the work of religion. And it can do so best by challenging first of all the value either to truth or human welfare of many of the qualities which have entrenched themselves firmly in the admiration of religious men. Is it after all a matter beyond argument that the intolerance of good people is a point in their favour? Are vehemence of speech and dogmatic self-confidence of manner such sure marks of richness and serenity of faith that we should praise the men who possess them? Exclusiveness is an ugly word, and it is an ugly thing, and it can only be justified in obedience to some high and holy principle. In itself it is a sin against fellowship, and great indeed must be the promised blessing before we dare to pay such a price. In religion we must bring it to the bar of our highest conception of the love of God. In Christianity we must test it by the spirit of CHRIST. And when was the spirit of CHRIST one of exclusion? What human authority, however vehement and sincere, shall raise walls of partition or set bounds to the catholicity of his love? Through the study of the Gospels, and the crumbling of many old forms of doctrine, and the urgent needs of human life which fail to find a remedy in many of the old prescriptions, we are gaining a fresh and unimpeded impression of what that spirit really is, and it bids us accept this plain fact, that if we would be in earnest, it must be in a new way, without a trace of controversial bitterness and the desire to make heretics and outsiders of other men.

We know well that there is a form of tolerance which has about it the savour not of life but of death. The spirit of indifference creeps with its fatal paralysis over the intellect and will and chills every high affection of the heart. It can be tolerant simply because it does not care. There are also subtle temptations of the intellectual life which lead men along the primrose path of indifference. It is so easy to avoid the fateful step of making up our minds, and to play with argument and evidence until they lose all the edge of their meaning. The result is the tolerance of the kindly sceptic who condemns nobody because he is not certain about anything. But the charity and mutual understanding of which we speak are as different from these things as light from darkness. They neither confuse the intellect nor blur the conscience, and in their light all the noblest loyalties of the heart shine with a clearer radiance.

For they have their source not in, a superficial trafficking with appearances, but in a deeper apprehension of the essential values of life. The forms of earnestness to which we have grown accustomed must indeed be preferred to the spirit which cares too little for truth and goodness ever to strike a valiant blow on their behalf; but they are only a half-way house to something better. And this better thing is the discovery of a Divine Love which is "broader than the measures of man's mind," the sense of a purpose which we can never conceive as limited by human definitions. Walking with God is the best school of tolerance. The closer we come to the heart of CHRIST the more we grow in charity and goodwill.

It is thus a deepening of religion, and not its abandonment, which has produced this new temper of which we speak; and made men feel that they are on the brink of fresh methods and discoveries. All through the Christian centuries this larger spirit has existed, and it emerges again and again in the timeless utterances of devotion. But the mass of people had little understanding of its meaning, and those who possessed it were often condemned as heretics or shunned as men of latitude, who made light of the essentials of the faith. Now in these days it is coming to its own. There is a widespread craving for mutual understanding. There is the strong inhibition of Christian charity, as it springs up in the modest and good heart, upon many of the vehement and exclusive forms of propaganda in which religion has been wont to show itself. The new temper demands fresh methods, and the creative spirit is already active in our midst, breaking down barriers, opening up fresh avenues for common work, and making it natural for men to care less for differences of method and more for ultimate aims. Let us make no mistake. Earnestness is not chiefly on the side of the men who still blow dogmatic trumpets, and assure us as they hope for salvation that they stand immovably in the old paths. It is present far more richly where the spirit of exclusiveness and judgment has passed away, no longer blazing its narrow track through an unbelieving world, but diffused like the light with its gifts of health and gladness. These things are happening in men's hearts and in the world, not because they care for their own way of faith and worship less but because they love GOD more.

MIRACLES.

BY EDWARD LEWIS.

A PLAY by Mr. Gilbert Chesterton, entitled "Magic," was saved by a newspaper from what its friends thought an untimely end; and the resuscitation was celebrated by a public discussion upon the question, "Do Miracles Happen?" The séance was attended by not a few men of considerable repute, who forthwith proceeded to show that learning and reputation do not spoil the child-like heart by one and all offering a definition of the term "Miracle." Some one has said that such a procedure is characteristic of an undergraduate discussion. Some of the definitions were interesting. For example, Stopford Brooke defines a miracle as "something which never happened before, and has not happened since." This appeals to my fancy and flatters me, since on my demise I shall become a miracle; I have already happened once, but, if there is rationality at the basis of the universe, I shall not happen again, in spite of the Gospel of the Everlasting Return. The truth is that everything happens once, and nothing happens again. If all is in flux, there is no repetition. Everything therefore is a miracle, and cadit questio.

Mr. Chesterton provided another definition. "I should say that a miracle is anything happening in human experience, perceived by the senses, and therefore not disputed except by those mystics who dispute the evidence of the senses, which indicates that there is a will, or purpose, or intelligence behind the happening thing." Apart from the jibe, this is practically a very prosy epitome of Walt Whitman's familiar poem. The definition is simply an assertion of the spiritual basis of the universe. It makes the commonplace miraculous, and answers the question by making it meaningless. It is interesting to observe about this definition that, if it is valid, the more mechanistic and the less vital a thing is the more miraculous it is. An engine, for example, satisfies the definition perfectly; it can be perceived by the senses, and it gives indication of some will, purpose, or intelligence operating to produce it. In that it can be perceived by the senses, an engine is more miraculous than, say, the consciousness of Jesus, which cannot be so perceived; in that it evidences purpose, it is more miraculous than, say, the leaf of a tree which may or may not indicate purpose.

With all due respect, if definitions are necessary, it would scarcely be possible to frame two more unsatisfactory than those which have been quoted. On the other hand, it would not be easy to improve upon Dr. Warschauer's terse expression: "A miracle is a departure from the observed uniformities of nature, believed to be due to Divine agency." That is good, in its way. It suggests that our "uniformities" are observed uniformities, or uniformities so far as observed; intellectual constructions, which are tentative, limited, hypothetical; and therefore that the departure from them may be less in the fashion of a violation or an intrusion than the evidence of an as yet unrecognised wider law, or broader synthesis. The miracle would cease to be such with the extension of knowledge. We sometimes say that a miracle is disorderly, a violation of a perceived order; but, as Bergson reminds us, that which we call a "disorder" may simply be an "order" whose law we have not yet discerned. Our "uniformities" and "orders" are patterns which the intellect cuts out in the phenomenal stream for the practical purposes of human activities; and therefore that which to our intelligence is "miracle" may be normal, natural, and orderly to the movement of life-reality. Indeed, a "miracle" is somewhat in the way of a practical warning to the intellect as it essays to guide us through the labyrinth of life; it says, "Go cautiously"; or "Be on the look-out."

It must be observed that we are here using the word "miracle" in a different sense from the popular usage. I understand that at a certain point in the development of germ-cells from the fertilised ovum a new kind of cell—a somatic cell—suddenly appears; I understand also that while the purpose of this change is clear, the cause and method of it is not understood. It is a wonderful, inexplicable process. But it is not miraculous; it is part of the orderly development of life-forms; and further physiological or chemical knowledge may make it all quite plain. The advance of such knowledge may also, possibly, explain the sudden appearance of what are called "mutations" in biological science, though in this case there is a tendency to hypothesise the explanation less in physiological and chemical causes than in some unaccountable, spontaneous, original movement of the life-force which energises within all phenomena. In a sense, this fact is more miraculous than the former; for some ulterior cause is postulated. But in that case the "miracle" would simply be a sign that the phenomenal order is but a partial, variable, impermanent manifestation of a profounder. Somewhat which might itself be an Order if we knew everything.

But these and such things are not what the man in the street means by a miracle; and it is the man in the street who has the chief interest in this question. When he thinks of a miracle, he thinks of the sun standing still, or the multiplication of loaves, or the alleged fact that Joseph had nothing to do with the birth of Jesus. And we ought to be perfectly frank with him. We ought not to take his word miracle and use it in a quite different sense from his own, and say "Of course miracles happen; they are continually happening"; neither ought we to say, "Miracles may happen, but they are not essential to our faith." We ought to say with simplicity and directness that the word miracle, in the sense in which he uses it, is a relic of a conflict between Science and Faith which is now practically effete; that his miracle is associated with the deistic conception of an outside, occasionally interfering, God in whom we no longer believe; that the Divine agency operates in the uniformity as much as in any real or apparent departure therefrom; that God is in the ordinary as well as in the exceptional, in the normal as much as in the supernatural; and that so far as a thing is exceptional or supernatural it represents the limitations of our finite understanding, and not the whim or caprice, or dramatic instinct of a God who "could work miracles if He chose to do so." We ought to say that such a story as that of the sun standing still is either a childish explanation of a perfectly natural and scientifically explicable phenomenon, or is a fiction which could only be conceived under an astronomical theory which we no longer hold; that the story of the multiplying of the loaves is either a dramatised parable, or a piece of poetic imagination; that the Virgin Birth, full as it is of spiritual suggestion, is connected with the obsolete idea that human flesh is sinful in itself, and has nothing to do with the fact of parthenogenesis, as scientists use the term.

Why do we continue to mystify the man? Why do we pretend that there are mysteries where there are no mysteries, and so keep him from ever coming to the place where the real and truly religious mysteries lie?

BERGSON IN HIS LECTURE ROOM.

MUCH has been written recently about M. Bergson, and his new philosophy of Intuition. Our periodicals have published numerous articles upon him; his works have been translated into English, and his ideas have been widely commented upon. He has been discussed as psychologist, as critic of philosophical systems, and as creator of a new system, which promises to become the most popular of all. Many books about him are now available in our language, but not one, so far as I am aware, gives an idea of the man as he appears before his class of students. Having had the privilege of hearing recently the first of the great philosopher's new series of lectures, after his absence of some months in America, I venture upon a few impressions.

M. Bergson's lectures are given at the Collège de France, of which institution he is a professor. This college is not connected with the University, but depends directly upon the State. It has had many famous teachers before Bergson, of whom Renan was one of the most renowned. Its lectures are open to all comers without formality or fee. It holds no examinations and awards no diplomas, but exists to impart instruction to anyone who desires it. The hall where the famous author of "Evolution Créatrice" delivers his lectures is the largest of the college, but it is unfortunately much too small for present needs. By the use of very uncomfortable seats the authorities contrive that it shall accommodate about 350 people. There are no desks, but only small benches without backs where one sits almost touching the people occupying the rows in front and behind.

The published time of the lecture was 5 p.m., but on entering the hall at 3.30 I found the room almost filled with an unwonted crowd listening to a lecture on economics. It was an interesting discourse on the function of the limited liability company in modern industrialism; but one felt that the minds of the majority of the members of the audience were not with the speaker. Other people kept quietly entering during the lecture, and by its end, at 4 o'clock, the hall was absolutely full. A few ardent sociologists quitted the room, but their places were quickly taken, and crowds of would-be hearers filled the aisles and surrounded the doors of the room.

The interest of the audience in the lecturer is proved by the fact that they are willing to wait an hour, or even two hours, to hear him. In appearance they are alert and keen, and should inspire any professor to do his best. The majority are evidently University students, men being more numerous than women. There are also a good number of older people—schoolmasters, and men and women of leisure, who wish to hear the most famous teacher in France. There are a few of those somewhat dirty folk who foregather in the Collège de France, as they do in our free libraries, for the sake of the warmth and the human society.

At the appointed hour the hall becomes silent as if by magic. Conversation and laughter cease, and the eating of chocolates and cakes comes to an end. In a minute or two the great man enters quietly into the hall hushed with expectation. He gazes a moment at the crowds before him, in the gangways and at the doors, even outside the windows of the lecture room, and then plunges directly into his subject. This is the same clever-looking, alert little man I saw at Oxford; but here, somehow, he appears bigger, perhaps because the hearers are of smaller stature than our English University men. He has the same distinguished face, almost bird-like with its aquiline nose and strongly marked eyebrows; the same piercing, excitable eyes and fine sensitive mouth; but his manner is entirely different from what I remember at Oxford. Whether he was awed on those occasions when he spoke in England by the presence of Oxford dons or whether he is sensitive to the inspiration of an enthusiastic and fully comprehending audience I know not; but on this occasion he was transfigured. In spite of his slight form and quiet manner he has a remarkably vigorous utterance. Certainly he is one of the best speakers I ever heard. I do not say he is an orator. Philosophy and oratory would, perhaps, go ill together. But his voice is of so fine a quality, his gestures are so well chosen, his subject is treated with such evident interest, even with enthusiasm; his occasional flashes of humour are so delightful, his illustrations are so apt, and given with such perfect finish; and then he employs no notes during the whole of his long discourse. It is not wonderful that he casts a spell upon his hearers.

No doubt his exterior qualities do much to explain Bergson's popularity in France. Many must hear him with delight who have not the slightest interest in philosophy or knowledge of it. But his distinction and personal charm cannot explain his almost world-wide success as a philosophical teacher. This must rest upon the content of his teaching, and into the 80 minutes of his first lecture upon the "Method of Philosophy," he crowded facts and theories with embarrassing prodigality.

He began by a reference to the two great tendencies which have been manifest in philosophy from its very beginning. The first is the tendency to seek unity in existence. He traced this idea through the pre-Socratic thinkers, Plato, Aristotle, the Stoics, the Alexandrians, Spinoza, Fichte, Schelling, and Schopenhauer. He pointed out that most of these thinkers had retained the word liberty, but that they had sacrificed liberty itself. In the most highly developed type of each system, personality had no real existence, because the system necessarily determined each of its acts from all eternity. But while philosophy has attempted to unify and systematise, the human will has always protested against this practical denial of its reality. It has been continually conscious of the absolute independence of personality; but as soon as any thinker reflects on this liberty he is forced to return to the process of systematisation. Then followed a most interesting dialogue between the intelligence and the will, in which each faculty claimed its right as supreme. But M. Bergson maintained that there was something in will more essential than pure intelligence.

The protest has been made against this philosophical tendency to over-systematise life, more often by moralists and poets than by philosophers. And there has come a time in the history of thought when each system has been seen to present evident antinomies. When a fissure is discovered in the neat scheme of things arranged by the philosophers the day of the will arrives, and the doctrine of liberty is vindicated once more. The speaker compared the long effort towards philosophical systematisation to the geological process of the formation of sedimentary deposits, which are destined at rare intervals to be broken up by volcanic eruptions. So the ordered systems of philosophy had been destroyed three times in the history of human thought—by Socrates, by Descartes, and by Kant. The fourth upheaval, which is taking place in the present day, was left to the imagination of the hearers. M. Bergson did not say it, but he left the conclusion to be drawn, that he is the chief agent of another great movement aiming at the justification of the human will against the tyranny of the intelligence. So concluded an extremely intellectual criticism of intellectualist systems; and I escaped into the fresh air after three very crowded and physically uncomfortable hours. A. S. HURN.

MISS M. EDITH DURHAM will give a lantern lecture on "My Work among the War Victims in Albania" at Essex Hall on Monday, February 9, at 8 p.m. The chair will be taken by Mr. H. W. Nevinson, and a collection will be made for the Albanian Relief Fund. Tickets for the lecture may be obtained by forwarding a stamped and addressed envelope to the Secretary, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

QUESTIONS AT ISSUE.

[Under this heading writers discuss freely from their own point of view living problems of Religion, Ethics, and Social Reform, but the Editor does not assume responsibility for the opinions expressed.]

METHODS OF TRAINING FOR THE MINISTRY.

An American Report.

A COMMISSION on Theological Education was appointed under a vote of the American General Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches in September, 1911, but it did not get to work properly till 1912. The Commission consisted of nine members, and correspondence is given also in the report from the heads of four free theological colleges, including Manchester College, Oxford, England. The Commission included Professor Francis G. Peabody, of Harvard University, chairman; Professor Carver, Professor of Political Economy, Harvard; Dr. Crothers; Professor Foster, Professor of the Philosophy of Religion, Chicago University; and representatives from various parts of the United States, including ministers, laymen, and professors. The report in extenso extends over sixty-three pages; the report of the Commission as a whole occupies thirteen pages, the rest being taken up with communications from the Commissioners and correspondents. The inquiries of the Commission were concerned not so much with theological education in general as with the special conditions of colleges on the free basis. Needless to say the Commissioners have not approached the colleges as "critics," but as critics. The colleges wish to adapt themselves to the new needs of the churches, and one purpose of the criticism is to make the colleges truly attractive to the ablest and best young men. Professor Christie, Professor of Church History at Meadville (a college which is similar to our Manchester College), a member of the Commission, has prepared a comparative statement of the actual curricula of several such colleges, by request of the Commission. Professor Wilbur, the head of another college, gives a statistical study of the relation between college training and professional efficiency.

The report draws attention to the difference between free colleges and those founded on a church. The latter must give time and attention and labour to apologetic studies of a kind quite different from the work of the free college. "It must be admitted that this discrimination of purpose has not been generally and consistently made. The curricula of those schools to which candidates for the Unitarian ministry usually resort were originally constructed after the model of Evangelical institutions, with the same departments of study—Old Testament, New Testament, Church History, Theology, and Pastoral Care—maintained as of equal weight and significance. Adaptation to the needs of a new world of thought has been made under the form of an earlier tradition. The expansion and enrichment which theology has received within the last half-century from many contributory sciences has not had adequate recognition, either in requirements of study or in methods of instruction." The report is emphatic in stating that "the School exists not primarily for the sake of its Faculty, but for the sake of the students. It is a vocational school, like those which train young men for the calling of the law or of medicine." As Professor Carpenter justly remarks: "We must have scholars; but, provided we understand their methods, we need not all be scholars." "The Faculty of such a School must be scholars of distinction, but they must also be men of spiritual power. . . . This condition of efficiency is all the more imperative where authority and tradition are subordinated to the immediate witness of the religious life." The report then adverts on attracting by subsidies students who may be well-meaning but who in ability are deficient; mental ability has been thought not to be necessary, or so necessary, in the ministry as in other professions: "and, as fast as this type has been drawn into the profession, the more virile, self-confident, and self-respecting have been repelled from it." The Commission deals faithfully with the arguments brought forward in defence of what it here attacks, but decides that "the quality, even more than the quantity, has failed to keep pace with the demands of the churches." In the free churches, it says, the minister must either lead or fail. There is a uniquely great opportunity here for "men of power, insight, vigour, learning, and vision"; "and, it must be added, there is a very limited opportunity for half-trained, sentimental, limp, or discouraged ministers." "The School of Theology which offers these supreme persuasions may have few students, but they will be worth having; and, where none but the best are welcomed, there the best will want to come."

As to practical suggestions for the teaching in the free theological college, "The Old Testament will be analysed with critical skill, but it will also be interpreted with spiritual insight. The New Testament will provide many fascinating problems of authenticity and relationship; but the fundamental task of the New Testament Department will be to transmit a spiritual tradition, and to rescue from the letter which killeth the spirit which gives life. The History of Religion, and of the Christian religion in particular, instead of being a colourless record of remote and unreal controversies, will become a dramatic picture of social and intellectual evolution, abounding in suggestive lessons for the modern minister." The Commission emphasises the need of studying the technique of preaching, but still adds, "It is important to learn how to preach, but it is much more important to have something much at heart which it is worth while to say." The teaching of the college, moreover, says the report, "should examine the principles and history of Christian symbolism, the psychology of worship, and the relation of religion to education, music, and art." Sociology receives its due discussion and place—an important one.

A point not so unimportant as it looks is this: "The disciplinary studies," Dr. Crothers says, "belong to the college course" (i.e., the undergraduate course at the university).

The report sums up that "new conditions call for a new kind of preparation." It adds advice as to the subjects which ought to be studied in the latter part of the university undergraduate course, before entering the theological college—sociology, German, &c. The report concludes with a paean on the theological calling if carried out in the terms and spirit of its recommendations.

It need hardly be added that other matters of interest and importance are dealt with within the covers of the report: e.g., "student ministry" work, which is considered desirable, if not essential. Dr. Carpenter's communication is an explicit endorsement of the report as a whole, while he points out the importance of the study of literature, as does Dr. Fenn, Dean of the Harvard Divinity Faculty. The latter says truly, "To conduct public worship in such a way as to widen the horizons of life and impart the sense of human fellowship and divine communion is a central and significant task, and for this no other institution exists than the church, and no other profession than the ministry."

The head of Meadville College, Mr. Southworth, says that the minister of to-day is expected to have some knowledge of the following subjects, among others, "biology, psychology, sociology, political economy, ethics, pedagogy, modern literature, and history." "On the other hand," he continues, "there are many subjects which seem to have a rightful place in the theological curriculum that have no vocational value on account of the way in which they are taught. A course in Hebrew Literature, or New Testament Exegesis, or Church Doctrine, might be as devoid of religious significance as a course in the writing of Latin verse," and he adds more on the concrete object of ministerial training. "Attention has probably been too largely centred on the past, and not enough on the present." "Modern literature, portraying as it does the hopes and despairs of modern life, its unhealthful as well as its healthful tendencies, its idealism and its vices, will have such a place in the theological curriculum as it has not had in the past." Mr. Southworth insists that the theological teacher must be a personality, and that he will be a failure if he does not realise that he must "transmute learning into power," and "train self-directing personalities," and "give the zest and material for their work." "The instructor in homiletics is not the only member of the faculty who teaches men how to preach." Mr. Southworth insists that there must be co-operation between the college and the churches. "A company of theological students can render excellent service to the churches in their vicinity, especially the stronger churches, which may perhaps be able to give a financial return." Thus the student may learn. The college will turn its attention "less largely to scholastic problems and historic controversies." Mr. Southworth believes in "a radical modification in theological education, if not a revolution in its aims and methods."

Mr. Wilbur points out that it is the duty of the minister to "nurse" candidates for the theological college, and parents have the duty similarly; but, of course, this can only be done conscientiously when the career provides sufficient guarantees. Mr. Wilbur proves from statistics "that one's probability of gaining a permanent foothold in the ministry is increased from four to eight times by a full college and divinity course, rather than by anything less; and that one's probabilities of achieving distinction are similarly increased from six to twenty times"—there are, of course, exceptions. Ministers deficient in training ought to "make up" and ought to have the opportunities to do so. Mr. Wilbur says: "It is expected that the fully-trained minister of to-day will have mastered the philosophical foundations of religion, no less than the Biblical ones; that he will have a wide knowledge of extra-Biblical literature, ancient and modern; that he will have a just knowledge of the main non-Christian religions; that he will be a specialist in religious education; and that he will be competent to discuss questions of social well-being or social reform from the basis of a fundamental knowledge of the history and principles of economics and sociology. . . . The Philosophy and Psychology of Religion, the History of Religions other than Jewish or Christian, Religious Education, and General and Practical Sociology are to-day as indispensable elements in ministerial training as any others. I also think that, in addition to the subjects named, it would be of great profit to offer courses in the study of great religious or devotional classics, and of great works of literature (Dante, Milton, 'Faust,' the religious poets) dealing largely with religious themes, and that the study of religious music and religious art are worthy of, at least, an optional place in the curriculum."

ROBERT F. RATTRAY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE ALBANIAN RELIEF FUND.

SIR,—I am indeed grateful to all who have answered so promptly to my appeal and contributed such a handsome sum; £200 was more than I dared hope for. The refugees, some 5,000, in Scutari are being cared for; but Colonel Phillips writes that the unfortunate creatures who are houseless on the mountains are beginning to die at the rate of twenty a day. The Rev. P. B. Kennedy, an American missionary, who is at work at Elbasan, writes very gratefully for the help I was able to send him, and says he, as far as possible, is trying to give work as well as charity. He has been paying refugee women to make clothes which he and Mrs. Kennedy then distribute. The Government there is giving bread several times a week, and Mr. Kennedy and his wife are working at clothing the people, and have imported condensed milk for sick children. So far, he writes, he has clothed 2,142 people and given 300 wadded quilts.

I think these details will interest your subscribers. I will send a cheque at once to Colonel Phillips, and with many thanks to you and your readers, yours, &c.,

M. EDITH DURHAM.

116A, King Henry's-road, N.W.

January 27, 1914.

A CONTRIBUTOR who desires to remain anonymous writes to us as follows:—

"The reading of Miss Durham's article in THE INQUIRER brought back to me the tales I listened to fifty years ago about the aftermath of the Napoleonic wars in Central Europe. In the long winter evenings, and all of us leaning comfortably against the warm glazed tiles of the huge stove, an octogenarian great-uncle would give us an account of the stirring times of his youth—when the news came of the storming of the Bastille; how the Tuileries fell after the brave stand of the Swiss Guard; and how, a few years later, the French armies entered our mountain land, welcomed in some parts where feudal laws still prevailed, resisted in Berne and the forest cantons by men, women and children who had lived under democracy for centuries past; how towns were pillaged, villages burned, homesteads ruined, and the surviving left to misery and starvation. Many men being drafted away to supply levies for Napoleon's foreign wars, land got out of cultivation; bad seasons, the 'seven lean years' followed. The stress of want in the winters grew so great that less and less could be spared for sowing and seed-planting. Young and old were longing for the return of spring and new growth of food.

"The same great-uncle was to me such an inexhaustible source of folk-lore, traditions, apparitions, wood-sprites, and 'browny' doings of long, long ago, that it was but human that I should ascertain from my parents whether those war tales were things of living memory or whether 'the seven lean years' were those of Joseph in Egypt. Yes, they both told me, my own grandparents had been through those hard times when people were thankful to gather the young thistles along the hedges to be boiled for food, and when dandelion porridge was a delicacy. And in other parts of the country, where everything had been ruined by the foreign soldiers it was even worse; children would have starved to death had it not been for some large-hearted people, and foremost among them a schoolmaster, Pestalozzi, who gathered the orphan children round him in the forest cantons and in French Switzerland, and not only taught them, but fed and kept them in warm rooms in cold weather. 'And the new way he taught those boys and girls,' added mother, 'you will be taught when your school age arrives next spring, for our old village schoolmaster—by now the oldest in the land—was trained in the teachers' seminary founded by Pestalozzi.'

"It is just thirty years ago this last week of January when a kind fate granted me at least a passing tramp's acquaintance with the classic shores of the Aegean, returning from the coast of Asia Minor via Athens, round Morea, past the Ionian Islands to Corfu, where, looking to the north-east, I could watch the sharp ridges of Albania covered with snow. The sky was beautifully blue, the sun shone brightly, but a keen cutting north-east wind swept across from those heights. In the valleys between those now often shelterless hills the innocent victims of the recent happenings in Albania are going through what happened in Central Europe a little over a century ago. The coming six to eight weeks, until Nature again brings forth her buds and green, are the most trying ones; but for a long time to come will apply that terse, almost cynically grim, but true, Italian proverb: 'Crepa, cavallo! l'erba cresce!' (Die, horse! the grass is growing.) Shall this happen again a hundred years hence, as it stands before us to-day, as it was a century ago? Will a loftier conception of what true religion means dawn over the human race? Or is it not true what they sing up there in Appenzell, in the open square, at the opening of their yearly 'Landsgemeinde':—

'All Life floweth out of Thee!
Pouresth forth in myriad streamlets
Through Thy worlds, and all proclaiming:
Lord, Thy handiwork are we! Lord,
Thy handiwork are we.'

"But of one thing we may be sure, for hill-folk do remember, and the mountain echo of noble deeds never dies out. As the name of Pestalozzi is revered to-day on many a Swiss hillside, so will be Miss Durham's in Albania, 'until the valleys are raised up and the mountains laid low.'"

THE CHAPELS IN WHICH MARK RUTHERFORD PREACHED.

SIR,—In consequence of the letters that have appeared under the above heading asking for information I feel I ought to make a few statements that may be worth considering, for I believe that Mark Rutherford preached in the Friars-street Chapel, Ipswich. Since the first request for information I have been through the chapel-records that are now preserved in permanent form, but I am sorry to say I can find no correspondence or entry referring to Mr. Hale White's visit. There is, however, just a possibility that the chapel secretary at that date, who was a keen collector of autographs, may have destroyed the simple letters that passed, and have just preserved the signatures. The secretary died a few years back, and his collection of autographs was sold and dispersed. But I have a recollection of Hale White occupying the pulpit for at least two Sundays about 1853-4. The strongest impression made upon me was by his extempore prayers; for at that time I was reading Shakespeare with keenness, and Mr. White's fine use of the quotation from "The Tempest"—"the cloud capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces"—remains in my mind. A bookseller of my own age in this town tells me that he quite remembers Mr. White. The book-seller, although not a member of the chapel, attended Mr. White's services at the request of a friend of his, a Mr. Smy. Now this Mr. Smy was a great admirer of Mr. White, and a member of the chapel. He was quite in favour of inviting Mr. White to the vacant pulpit, but the rest of the members thought the preacher too young.

The town of Ipswich shows features corresponding with those mentioned in the Autobiography. The river Orwell passes through the town, and the Gipping above the town. The endowment of the chapel at that time was just the sum named (£100). But the building itself is not of brick. It is plastered. However, the old houses surrounding the chapel are brick, so Mr. White may have relied on a general impression. A gentleman who was at this time a frequent attendant, but not a member, resided in Tanner's-lane, in the only fair-sized house in the lane, the rest of the neighbourhood being very poor. This gentleman would, at times, entertain visiting preachers. From his house it was quite easy to take a pleasant walk by the banks of the Gipping, and doubtless with visitors this would often be taken.—Yours, &c.

W. J. SCOPES

(Warden of the chapel for the past 50 years).
Ardath, Marlborough-road, Ipswich,
January 27, 1914.

THE CHILDREN'S WHITE CROSS LEAGUE IN DUBLIN.

SIR,—May we ask for your hospitality to report progress of the relief work of the Children's White Cross League in Dublin? For the past twelve weeks we have been able to look after some 1,000 mothers and their babies, thanks to Mrs. Rudmose Brown and her band of helpers, who convert daily the generosity of the press and public into bread and milk. Mrs. Brown now writes:—"Matters are in a most critical state here. The privations of the past 21 weeks are beginning to tell on the mothers and children who come under my notice. Those who have had a regular supply of food from here have improved immensely—babies who could hardly hold up their heads from weakness begin to take an interest in our doings—but still I have to turn away many with tears in their eyes and pinched, starved babies in their arms. . . . The various gifts have been so much appreciated, but more are urgently needed—clothes, too, especially boots for the poor mothers, many of whom come out of hospital with no boots and hardly any clothes. Up till now I have been able to supply each new baby with a small set of most needful clothes, and I badly need more children's left-off underclothing" (which should be sent direct to Mrs. Brown, 74, Thomas-street, Dublin).

We have to-day sent our last weekly cheque of £50, and unless further funds come in very speedily, we must close the centre on February 1, but we are very hopeful that Mrs. Brown's appeal will touch many a heart, and open many a purse that cannot remain closed in the face of cold and hungry children.—Yours, &c.

JANE COBDEN UNWIN, Hon. Treas.
BARBARA TCHAYKOVSKY, Hon. Sec.
3, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C.,
January 26, 1914.

THE RELIGIOUS FREEMAN AND CHRISTIAN THINKER.

SIR,—May I ask your courtesy and the publicity of your columns for a few words about the new monthly sheet issued under the auspices of the Liverpool District Missionary Association? The paper is intended for free circulation in the Liverpool district. It is not denominational in the sense of containing "News of the Churches" and the like, but is issued primarily to reach any religious seekers not within the sphere of one of our own worshipping communities. The hope is (1) that it may be read by our own members; (2) that these may be able to circulate copies among friends; (3) that it may prove a stimulus and aid in the systematic distribution of liberal religious literature in the neighbourhood of any congregation. In order to extend the area of its utility, it is proposed to offer copies, outside our district, at the rate of 1s. per 100, or 10d. per 100 for or above 500 copies, carriage forward. Thus a congregation can obtain 500 copies for 4s. 2d., 1,000 for 8s. 4d., which is the actual cost of mechanical production over the first 10,000 copies printed, with a trifling margin for packing. The size is 4 pp. 4to, on good paper. Sample copies have been sent to ministers, and will be forwarded to any one interested on application to Booksellers' Co., 70, Lord-street, Liverpool. Postal missions may have free any number they can effectively employ.—Yours, &c.,

H. D. ROBERTS.

123, Bedford-street, Liverpool,
January 27, 1914.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

THE SAMSON-SAGA.

The Samson-Saga, and its place in comparative religion. By A. Smythe Palmer, D.D. London: Pitman & Sons. 5s. net.

UNDER this title the writer of the volume under notice refers to the story of Samson, contained in the Book of Judges (chap. xiii.-xvi.); and his purpose is to apply to that story the "solar myth" theory in a form based upon the latest materials. Since the theory was first propounded that Samson was a Sun-hero, a great deal of fresh evidence bearing on solar mythology has been collected by workers in the field of comparative religion. Dr. Palmer, in his preface, modestly disclaims any other merit for his book than that which may be due to his advantage over previous scholars in respect of the available material; but not all scholars in the field of comparative religion write so clearly and pleasantly as he does. The book is eminently readable, whether or not one agrees with its argument. The present writer is no expert in the field of comparative religion, and can only say how the book impresses him, without offering an opinion upon the real value of the evidence brought forward.

The author admits (Pref., p. ix) that "the very large number of confirmatory illustrations . . . out of the mythology, folklore and poetry of the most diverse peoples, ancient and modern, may seem to require some apology. They are really the staple of the book. Without them it would have no value. They are adduced under the conviction, which forces itself on every student of comparative religion and anthropology, that man everywhere and at all times formulates much the same ideas about the cosmic phenomena of nature, and often with the most striking resemblances of details. This is especially true of the sun conceived as a solar deity or hero. In no country is Samson quite a stranger." Samson, accordingly, may be called a particular case of a general principle, and the various details in the Biblical story are expounded only so far as they correspond, or seem to correspond, with features in the mythology of other peoples. The parallels are certainly striking and numerous, if they are all sound. But the author does not explain how all these various bits of solar myth came to be pieced together into a fairly compact story, whose intention was evidently not solar at all; nor does he explain how they came to be regarded, as they certainly were, as describing incidents in the life of a real man. He admits, indeed (Pref., p. vii), that "there is no reason to doubt that an historical personage, bearing this name, actually lived and fought and rioted in the fields of Palestine at an early period, and enjoyed a widespread reputation as a popular hero among the Israelites." This assurance, for the encouragement of those who are disturbed by the solar myth theory of Samson, is repeated later in the book. But it is left as a bare assertion. Nothing is pointed out as belonging to the human as opposed to the solar Samson. And, indeed, it is hard to see what there can be in the story to set to the credit of the human Samson when the author has finished with his solar hero. Perhaps there is nothing. But in that case, why not say so? Why keep up the pretence of a real human Samson at all? On the other hand, and all the more if Samson is a solar hero and nothing else, it ought to be shown how and when the original mythological character of the story was lost sight of, and it was taken to be the account of the deeds of a real man. It is easy enough, especially for an expert folk-lorist, to trace parallels of mythology in the most unlikely quarters, and all the easier when he has a theory to guide him towards what he is looking for. But his case is not made out until he has shown that the details to which he ascribes a solar origin cannot be explained on any other lines, and that these solar details can then be, and actually have been, translated from solar into human terms. That the story in Judges, xiii.-xvi. is to some extent coloured by solar mythology may well be true; but it seems to the present writer much more probable that the Samson story, as a whole, derived its interest from the escapades of a real man than that an imported solar myth should have driven out every feature of the popular hero and left him only his name. Is it not reasonable to suppose that the early Hebrews would have more to say about a genial ruffian like Samson, who for some years outwitted and defeated his and their enemies, than about the sun which, like "the poor," was "always with them"? It is not here contended that every incident in the Samson story is historically true. No one would contend that all the exploits ascribed to Robin Hood actually happened. But in the one case as in the other, the human interest had its origin in a human being and not in a solar myth. Otherwise why should the story have been told, and, in the case of Samson, have been taken up into the history of the nation?

Dr. Palmer's book is highly ingenious, and shows on every page the evidence of wide reading; but to the present writer it does not carry conviction. The solar myth itself may be all that its devotees claim that it is, but one is sometimes inclined to wonder whether primitive man knew half so much about it as the learned scholars who are so sure they know just what he meant?

R. T. H.

"Who's Who" is a hardy annual, for it is in its sixty-sixth year of issue; but it is only in recent years that it has bulked largely in the public eye and become the indispensable vade mecum for all whose business it is to know about other people. Every year it grows in bulk (2,226 pages in 1913, 2,314 pages in 1914), and the great ones of the earth will have to cease to be quite so prolific or else settle down to the pleasant conviction that it is rather distinguished to be left out. For the journalist and the man of affairs it has its sober uses, but, unlike many books of reference, it is an amusing companion for idle moments, for it appeals equally to our need of solid information and our insatiable curiosity about all the world and his wife. (London: A. & C. Black, 15s. net.)

With its fourth number, Poetry and Drama completes its first year of life. It came into existence and has maintained itself in its present most attractive form as part of the enterprise of the Poetry Bookshop, under the leadership of Mr. Harold Monro. The quaint shop at 35, Devonshire-street, Theobald's-road, W.C., is a veritable oasis of the spirit in a world of mean streets, and Poetry and Drama is the messenger of its ideals in wider fields. The present number contains original verse by Robert Bridges, Thomas Hardy, Rupert Brooke, W. H. Davies and many others; a play "The Golden Doom," by Lord Dunsany; a study of Francis Thompson, by J. C. Squire; a chronicle of current English and French poetry, an annotated list of recent books, and many other beautiful and useful things. An urgent appeal is made for new annual subscribers (10s. 6d. post free), and the Editor hopes to double his circulation. But he has another hope, which probably lies quite as near to his heart, namely, "that Poetry Bookshops will eventually be established in all the principal towns of England—not as institutions, but as houses of enjoyment."

THERE will probably be loss as well as gain in the amalgamation of the British Friend with the larger and more cosmopolitan undertaking to be known as Present Day Papers. "The journal," it is stated, "will bear an undenominational title, and will be without sectarian marks or badges, but it will be devoted, in fact dedicated, to the propagation of the message, the ideals and the spirit of the Society of Friends. Those who have accepted the responsibilities of the undertaking have primarily in view the spiritual growth and enlargement of Friends everywhere who are ready to go forward to larger things; and, secondly, the presentation of the vital and spiritual principles of Christianity to the wider circle of persons who have kindred views and hopes and aspirations. It will be an attempt to carry this spiritual type of Christianity into the thought and life of the world." Dr. Rufus Jones, of Haverford, Pennsylvania, will be the Editor, assisted by an Editorial Board of English and American Friends and a few others who are in close religious sympathy. Mr. Edward Grubb, 3, George-street, Croydon, will act as the agent for the paper in England. The first number, which has just been issued, contains several articles of value, but we hope that in future room will be found for some reference to the corporate activities of the Society of Friends, which are of no less interest to a large circle of readers than the able and devout discussion of more abstract questions.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS:—The Religious Spirit: P. H. Waddell, D.D. 2s. net.

MR. T. WERNER LAURIE:—A Dictionary of Ecclesiastical Terms: John S. Bumpus. 6s. net.

MR. A. MARTIN:—Memories of Ministry: Alexander Webster.

THE NORTHAMPTON PRESS:—Apostolic Fallibility: S. H. Halford. 1s.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS:—Essays and Studies by Members of the English Association: Collected by C. H. Herford. Vol. 4. 5s. net.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN:—Thoughts on Christian History: Hon. A. S. G. Channing. 7s. 6d. net. The Meaning of Christianity: F. A. M. Spencer, M.A. 2s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE:—Home University Library, 1s. net per vol.: Common-sense in Law, Prof. Paul Vinogradoff, D.C.L.; Literature of the New Testament, Prof. G. F. Moore, D.D., LL.D.; Prehistoric Britain, Robert Munro, F.R.S.E.; Unemployment, Prof. A. C. Pigou; Problems of Village Life, E. N. Bennett, M.A.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Harvard Theological Review, Mind, The Cornhill, Contemporary Review, Progress.

A FULL report of the debate "Do Miracles Happen?" at the Little Theatre is being published as a sixpenny booklet by the Christian Commonwealth, Salisbury-square, E.C.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

JESUS, OUR TEACHER AND FRIEND.

IV.—THE HEALER OF DISEASES.

IN reading the Gospel stories about Jesus as preacher of the Kingdom of God and friend and helper of his people, we come upon many marvellous things, which he is said to have done, such as calming the storm upon the Lake or Sea of Galilee by the power of his word, and himself walking upon the water without sinking in. And it is told of him repeatedly, that by laying his hands on sick people, or by the power of his word alone, he healed them, and even brought back the dead to life again.

Must we think of these things as part of the actual life of Jesus? Was he in that sense a wonder-worker? It was natural, as I have already said, for the people of that time to believe, and to tell wonder-stories about so great and wonderful a man, and we are quite sure that many of the things told of him did not really happen in that way. The value of the stories for us is in part that they show how deep was the impression of personal power Jesus made upon his people. The stories are not all of the same kind. Some of them may have arisen through the misunderstanding of natural things, which the disciples magnified into marvels, and some by the turning of ancient poetic prophecies (such as Isaiah xxxv. 5, 6), or figurative language of Jesus himself, into stories of things he actually did. That might easily happen among those who believed him to be the Messiah, because it was the kind of thing expected of him.

Thus when John the Baptist sent from his prison to ask of Jesus, because he had heard of his wonderful ministry, whether he was actually the Christ (the Messiah), Jesus is represented as answering to the messengers: "Go your way and tell John the things which ye do hear and see; the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up, and the poor have good tidings preached to them" (Matthew xi. 4, 5). That may be meant to refer to actual works of bodily healing; but as the last words are of preaching good tidings to the poor, it may well be that the rest also is speaking in a figurative way of the light Jesus brought, by the power of his preaching and his personal influence, to those who had been blind to religious truth, the cleansing of the purer spirit he kindled in the hearts of men, the new eagerness and power to walk in the way of righteousness he awakened in them, the new life he gave to those who had been dead in sin or stolid indifference to the things of God. It is true to-day, as it has been through all the Christian centuries, no less than in his own lifetime, that Jesus does open blind eyes and make the deaf hear, and cleanses by his pure touch and rouses men to new and better life as they learn to follow him, and learn with him, in his spirit of love and trust, to do the Father's will.

But while that is so, a careful reading of the Gospels, with what we know of the later history and the lives of other men, leads us to think that one reason for these many stories of wonderful works of healing is that Jesus did actually possess and exercise a power of personal control and healing, by which he was able, simply by the influence of his presence, his touch and his word, to bring relief to many people suffering from certain kinds of disease. If that was so, the stories would be sure to be exaggerated and multiplied, and many impossible things would be told of him; but the truth at the back of it all seems to be that it was especially in cases where people were suffering from nervous and mental disorders that he was able to help. The poor sufferers are called in the Gospels demoniacs, possessed with devils or demons, and the people thought that such affliction was the work of evil spirits. What Jesus did was by the commanding power of his pure, loving, and noble nature, first to quiet and so in many instances to cure these unhappy ones. We cannot tell exactly how far this power went, but clearly it was very wonderful, and it is not in Jesus alone that it has been found.

Let me give you an example of a very striking kind, parallel to some of the Gospel stories, from the life of a great religious teacher of a later time and of our own country. George Fox was a young man of twenty-five in the year 1649, the first year of the Commonwealth, after the execution of King Charles I., and had already for some time been bearing his testimony among the people to the inwardness and the spiritual power of true religion. He had been in prison in Nottingham, and when he was set free, he tells us in his Journal, "I travelled as before, in the work of the Lord. And coming to Mansfield Woodhouse, there was a distracted woman under a doctor's hand, with her hair loose all about her ears; and he was about to let her blood, she being first bound, and many people being about her, holding her by violence; but he could get no blood from her. And I desired them to unbind her and let her alone; for they could not touch the spirit in her, by which she was tormented; so they did unbind her. And I was moved to speak to her, and in the name of the Lord to bid her, Be quiet and still; and she was so. And the Lord's power settled her mind, and she mended; and afterwards received the truth, and continued in it till her death."

This is one example, and there are many others in the lives of men of commanding power, down to our own time (Father Mathew, the great temperance worker, is one of these), from which we may see very vividly, I think, how that power of Jesus may have been exercised among his own people. If you read Mark i. 21—ii. 12, remembering the scene in Fox's life, I think you will be able to picture more clearly what actually took place. You will see how the people crowded round Jesus to be healed, how they trusted his power, and begged his help, and how, because he had compassion on them, he did what he could. But that was not the chief work for which he came, and he did not want it to be the chief thing for which the people cared. More than once, when he had healed a man, he told him to go away quietly and thank God, but not tell about it in public, for he did not want that excitement among the people to grow; and often he withdrew himself to a quiet place, to rest and be alone with God. It was the inward truth of the Kingdom of God that he wanted most of all to bring home to the people's hearts and lives.

V. D. D.

ERRATUM.—In last week's article, l. 10 from the end, for "self-peacefulness" read "self-forgetfulness."

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN SWITZERLAND.

WOMEN'S WORK IN ZÜRICH.

THE visitor to Zürich who interests himself in the every-day life of the town soon notices amongst the many inns and restaurants some that bear the name: "Alkoholfreie Wirtschaften." On inquiry he is told that they were conceived and are carried on by the Zürcher Frauenverein. On entering any of these restaurants one finds oneself in an atmosphere of wellbeing even before one takes a place at one of the small tables. The waitresses, who are called Saaltöchter in Switzerland, are bright, intelligent-looking girls, who at once introduce one to the ways of the establishment. You buy a metal token, which represents a cup of tea or coffee, or cocoa. You go up to the buffet and choose bread and butter, or cake, or whatever you fancy; and for the cost of 3d. you can enjoy an excellent cup of coffee and bread and butter, while another penny gives you a slice of wholesome cake, baked on the premises in a kitchen replete with all the aids to scientific cooking which the heart of woman can desire. At dinner time you find various rooms set apart for diners with lighter or heavier purses. For 5d. you can have soup, meat and vegetables, and fruit. If you are a vegetarian you are catered for. There are dinners at 7d. and 9d., and for the person of luxurious habits at 1s. All the food is good, and there is wholesome variety. The tables are attractive with flowers, and blue glass jugs for water; on the walls you may read quotations from the poets. No wonder one feels at home in such inns.

And who are the people who frequent these places? All sorts and conditions of men and women. In the larger establishments rooms are set apart for people who dine more expensively, for those who have the shilling dinners; but in the rooms where one spends only 5d. for one's dinner you may find working men side by side with parsons, students, artists; while in the rooms for women, teachers, shop assistants and working women are dining together. Even school children whose mothers are at work find their way to the dining room, where they are properly cared for, their parents knowing that this will be the case. The Wirtschaften are frequented all day long. In the evening some of the rooms which are required for dinner are set free for other uses, and are often engaged for social purposes. No gratuities are allowed. This gives dignity to the Saaltöchter, who are made to feel by the management that they are helping forward a social work which is gradually influencing the lives of many people. There is never any thrusting forward of the underlying idea of making life better and more worth living by the elimination of the use of alcohol. You are simply served admirably, and with the best of food and drink, and you are grateful for all that is done for you.

Whose is the master-mind which directs this movement? That was the question which presented itself to me at once. I was told that Frau Professor Orelli had been one of the first to take up the question: How to stem the tide of alcoholism which brought disaster to so many. I wrote to her for reports, and she very kindly came to see me. It was a great privilege to meet this modest woman, who said very little about the important share she has had in this movement; but it is easy to guess that she is the soul of it all. A look into her face reveals much, and when I visited some of the Wirtschaften her name was the "open Sesame" to every part of the establishment. She has made this movement her life-work, and she is the inspirer of like-minded women who have joined themselves together as members of the Zürcher Frauenverein.

The history of the movement is of interest. In the summer of 1897 a committee of ladies, anxious to do something in the fight against alcoholism, held a bazaar in order to raise a sum of money which should enable them to start a café. They realised a little over £700. In order to extend the usefulness of the effort they were making, the Committee formed an Association, which took the name "Women's Union for Temperance and Social Wellbeing." In December the café was started. It could accommodate 60 guests. Mrs. Orelli, in her sketch of the movement, says: "Now began our apprenticeship. From the very first day we saw much that required changing, both in management and equipment; but during this wholesome phase of our development, when we were keen to detect drawbacks, we were never without sympathisers. The public did not find fault with our many imperfections, and the café enjoyed such popularity that we were forced to consider the opening of other places. We could not afford high rents, and several inns which would have been suitable were in the hands of the brewers. In spite of all difficulties, however, we were able in the spring of 1899, in only a little more than two years from the time of starting, to open our fifth establishment." It was this desire to learn and to serve which has been the secret of success. To-day the Frauenverein manages 12 restaurants, seven of which are in buildings owned by it. These buildings are centrally heated, and the kitchens are equipped with steam apparatus, some of which owes its conception to the nimble minds of members of the Committee. In one of the inns I saw an immense electrically-heated oven baking the wholesome and delicious fruit cakes which tempt the buyer at the buffet.

In the Volkshaus on the Helvetia Platz the restaurant is on a grand scale. It is in the middle of the homes of the working-class population of Zürich. It was there, in the large hall, that August Bebel lay in state. The Volkshaus is the meeting place and social centre of the workers. The various trade unions have their committee rooms there, and the Pestalozzi-Verein has established a library and reading room in the building. It was a brave thing for the women to undertake the working of the restaurant of such an important place. It was done at the urgent request of the trustees of the Volkshaus. The high rent which the Frauenverein agreed to pay to the trustees, nearly £600 a year, enabled the latter to complete the building, and the women contributed nearly £450 towards the completion of the rooms, and they also expended nearly £1,200 on furnishings. The result justified the daring step taken. The large, lofty, airy rooms, with their polished oak floors, hold 300 people, and the earliest guests arrive at 5.30 a.m. The women have the satisfaction to know that they have helped in the erection of the People's House, which may be justly called one of the grandest aids to social wellbeing.

One more of the establishments requires special notice, namely, the Kurhaus Zürichberg. Situated on one of the loftiest points near Zürich—it is 2,130 ft. above the sea—it commands a magnificent view of the town, the Limmat Valley, the lake, and the mountains. At the back of the building is an extensive wood. In the front of the building and at one side of it there is a wide terrace with awnings, which is often crowded with visitors from the town who come here for afternoon tea or coffee. The Kurhaus can accommodate 60 guests, and there are 30 employees living in the house. The charges for visitors who remain at least 5 days are from 3½ to 4½ francs per day; for service and light 2 francs per week are charged; and in winter 2d. per day for fires. No gratuities are allowed. Only people who are in need of rest and lovers of Nature are welcomed; invalids, who require nursing, cannot be received. When the demand for rooms exceeds the supply Swiss people have the preference. In summer the Kurhaus attracts crowds of people from the town. On Sundays the number may be from 1,000 to 4,000. For these provision is made in the adjoining wood, where tables and seats are placed under the trees, and food and tea and coffee are served from several buffets. Whole families come, and for the children there are open spaces for games. It was on a Sunday last September that I saw the terrace and the wood given over to a most orderly crowd of people who were spending the afternoon there. Amongst them I met Frau Orelli, whose face beamed with pleasure. She was especially pleased to see so many children and young people there. The view from the grounds of the Kurhaus was unusually clear—the snow mountains stood out clearly against a blue sky. One of the men whom I spoke to was eager to point out the Titlis, Tödi, and Glärnisch.

One word more about the financial aspect of this great enterprise of the Zürcher Frauenverein, which is not the least interesting part of the whole matter. The inns pay because they are carried on in an absolutely businesslike manner. The buying is watched over and guided by a special committee. Everything must be of the best—the best being in the long run the cheapest. The milk—about 2,000 quarts daily—comes from the United Zürcher Dairies, who charge the highest price for milk. They are under scientific milk control, and their farms are thoroughly inspected. Not only is the buying done in a thorough manner, but all the cooks and serving maids see that there is no waste anywhere. Further, there is a strict system of book-keeping and a constant supervision by ladies of the Committee. This enables the management to see what prices must be charged in order to have a sufficient surplus for current expenses. In the year 1911 the business expenses amounted to 41.3 per cent. of the gross receipts. The cost of food sold to guests is not included in business expenses. All the bills are paid on delivery or monthly, and no credit is given.

The employees deserve a chapter to themselves. In December, 1894, the café was commenced with three persons. Now the Association employs 400 girls and married women. Only a few men are employed as porters. On Sundays 50 extra helpers are required on the Zürichberg. A few women inspectors supplement the voluntary work of the members of the Association. A secretary, too, is required. The employees live either in rooms in the inns themselves, or in specially provided hostels. I saw the large flat at the Volkshaus, with its balconies and cosy sitting-room, and its comfortable bedrooms, bright with flowers and pictures. The greatest care is exercised in the choice of the personnel. Girls are made to feel that they are helping forward a great movement for the betterment of social conditions. It is hardly necessary to say that proper provision is made for times of sickness. Educational opportunities are arranged for, and every member of the staff has three weeks' holidays in the year. The working hours are 10, in some cases 9, and the cooks only work 8 hours a day.

In order to further the spreading of Alkoholfreie Wirtschaften, the Zürcher Frauenverein affords opportunity for the practical training of manageresses. Only ladies who are over 25 years of age, and who are willing to take a hand in any work that may be required of them, can be received. Intelligence and good character are essential, and especially an open mind which recognises the urgency of this social work. Without such qualifications faithful devotion is impossible. The apprenticeship covers from six to twelve months. Board and lodging are free; after a probationary period of two months a small salary is given. Women who wish to devote themselves to such work could not do better than spend six months at Zürich.

JULIE RAWLINGS.

THEISM AND WESLEYANISM.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

LAST Sunday we were present at two functions which offered sufficient contrasts to set us thinking.

At Essex Hall the Brahma Somaj was celebrating its anniversary. In the morning the service had been conducted in the native tongue, but in the afternoon English friends were invited, and Dr. Walsh, of the Theistic Church, was the speaker. It was pleasing to see the number of young Hindoos present who acted the part of hosts very gracefully, and several ladies in their native costume—some accompanied by their children—added variety to the scene. Sir Krishna Gupta presided, and in his opening speech gave a brief history of the Brahma Somaj. He acknowledged that it had not grown in numbers recently, but found satisfaction in the fact that orthodox Hinduism had been influenced by their teaching. Dr. Walsh, in like manner, had to admit that Theism, as represented by his Church, was hardly so strong as formerly, but he was not prepared to find consolation in the same way as the Chairman. Referring to the Kikuyu controversy, he pointed out that the programme of the broadest party contained professions which no Theist could accept. His correspondence had shown him that there were various Theistic units scattered about the country—couldn't they be focussed at occasional gatherings? He spoke approvingly of the Triennial Conference of Religious Liberals which seemed to have reached high water mark at Berlin in 1910. Any one who has conversed with Dr. Walsh must be conscious of his tender spiritual nature, but, if we may be excused the remark, he seems hardly at home in his new clothes yet. In other words, he is too much concerned at present with the apology of Theism rather than the presentation of its inner content whereby alone souls must be won. We make this remark in view of the problem we have to put.

Passing up Kingsway shortly after 6 p.m., we saw people beginning to assemble at Kingsway Hall, and that the Rev. J. E. Rattenbury, who had recently returned from Rome, was preaching on "The Eternal City." We remembered that we had never seen the new hall, and that when very young our nurse had introduced us to Methodism, so we joined the ingoing congregation. The interior is not unlike a modern sumptuous music-hall, but with only one gallery. A large organ, choir seats, and pulpit take the place of the stage. At 6.30, when a short religious concert begins, the hall was nearly full; at 7 o'clock camp stools were in evidence. An air of geniality filled the place; happy looking sisters, in tight-fitting becoming costumes, flitted here and there giving smiling greetings; among them Mrs. Price Hughes, not looking much older than seven years ago when we last saw her. The opening services do not call for much comment. The hymns were old favourites. We sang "O for a thousand tongues to sing," and as we were nearly 2,000 it was all right. The tune, with its repetitions and little runs, could not have been ventured upon by any other body, but every one sang it. Of course the symbolism was hardly to our taste, but we remembered that the words were symbols. The collection and notices found their place after the lesson. Then—all business matters being discharged—a deeper note was sounded in the prayers which followed. It consisted in a simple powerful plea for forgiveness and communion, eliciting here and there murmured approvals. Following up the tender chord thus struck came a hymn in softer key, "In heavenly love abiding." This time we had to make no reservations.

Mr. Rattenbury is an orator with much of the art of the mid-Victorian period. There were long descriptive passages delivered in rather high staccato notes which seemed to demand all the forces of the speaker, though he ever kept himself well within control, and then, using a deeper register, he would drive home the lesson or appeal in low deliberate speech. The sermon, which took about forty-five minutes to deliver, was simple in construction, and was free from quotations from modern authors. Based upon Heb. xi. 10, the speaker showed how the patriarchs and prophets always laboured and lived in the faith of a heavenly city or state that was to be. Then he urged that this spiritual city was virtually the only real one, for history showed how material ones crumbled and fell. Then came some interesting reminiscences of his recent visit to Rome, and finally the application for which we were hardly prepared. This city of God was to become real, and real in this world by the power of Jesus. Savonarola had inscribed in Florence, "Jesus is King of Florence," but another hand had wiped out the last word, and added "Kings and Lord of Lords." It is easy, said the speaker, to put such general inscriptions up, they mean nothing; it is done in London. But can we make Jesus King of London? Will the merchants and the stockbrokers accept the ethics of the Sermon on the Mount? This must be our object. Faith in Jesus meant faith in all that is true and good and lovely. Thus the discourse ended on a practical note. A communion service followed, to which all who loved Jesus were invited.

What is the dynamic of Wesleyanism? It is very simple. "Are you sick of yourself O solitary Soul? Have you found out that there is no lasting satisfaction in all your self-seeking, your worldly desires and ambitions? Are you weary of sinning? Then come to me, open your heart and receive me. Give up all your striving, be guided by my gentle sway. I love you. I gave my life for my brethren; abide in me. I overcame and my strength will flow into you." And the soul that yields finds peace. Responding to the ideal love itself becomes lovely and seeks to do lovely things. Its joy is fellowship with others who share the same experience.

What is the dynamic of Theism, especially if it deprives itself of the Christian tradition? It will not find it in criticism or science or abundant learning! So far only one man has been able to popularise Theism. Theodore Parker and his writings are waning in influence, while the words of the Gospels still burn into souls. The subject is too great for this article, but it may be urged that if the doctrine of the Son be dropped, the doctrine of the Holy Spirit must be made forceful.

There is a large Fellowship meeting at Kingsway in the afternoon. A leaflet was put into my hands bearing these arresting words: "Fellowship is heaven; the lack of it is hell." Though the Churches may complain of waning numbers, Kingsway is hardly likely to do so, and though Wesleyanism may cling to its old hymns, yet, judging by Mr. Rattenbury, its teaching is adapting itself to the spirit of the age.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT ASSOCIATION OF UNITARIAN AND FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

THE annual meeting of the Sheffield and District Association of Unitarian and Free Christian and Free Congregational Churches was held at Upper Chapel, Sheffield, on Thursday, January 22. In the morning a paper was read to a meeting of local ministers by the Rev. K. Bond (Chesterfield), and the sermon at the afternoon service was preached by the Rev. R. Nicol Cross, of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds. In the course of his sermon Mr. Cross pleaded for a return to the belief in the real presence and working of God. Unitarians had gone beyond orthodoxy in some of their ideas about the character of God, but they had fallen behind it in what was more important in their capacity to lay hold of the power of God. Too often their ministers felt that their congregations instead of being actively sympathetic were non-committal, neutral, and cold. The whole of the responsibility did not lie upon the ministers; the congregations and the members would have to share it with the ministers. A man who was content to spend all the week in the secular world with secular thoughts and pursuits was not going to blossom out into a flower of religious culture and sainthood on the Sunday. Unitarians must return to the evangelical note. They might yet have a revival in Unitarianism, grotesque though the supposition might appear. They needed a return to emotion, not crude emotionalism but legitimate emotion, which was the natural result of great ideas firmly grasped and clearly appreciated. For some reason Unitarianism had been about as afraid of emotion as an inexperienced horse was of a steam engine. They could shout at football matches or horse races, and they could sing and dance for no other reason than that it had been arranged that they should do so, but the thought of God as their friend and helper and the thought of the final conquest of good over evil—those great ideas they were expected to entertain and feel and appreciate and yet let their pulse continue to be normal. Emotion was a perfectly natural and legitimate accompaniment of all mental life.

After tea, which was served in Channing Hall, the business meeting was held, presided over by Alderman A. J. Hobson, J.P., and the reports of the secretary, the Rev. A. H. Dolphin, the treasurer, Mr. T. Beaumont, and the district minister, the Rev. T. Anderson, were read. The work done during the year has been of a satisfactory nature, and thanks were accorded to the lay preachers who had conducted 139 services in the churches and chapels of the district within the past twelve months. Mr. Edward Bramley was elected the new President of the Association. Alderman A. J. Hobson again presided at the evening meeting when addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. G. Turner, W. R. Barclay, the Rev. F. Coleman (Yorkshire Union), Mrs.

W. Laycock (Women's League), the Rev. H. W. King (Rotherham), Mr. J. Dungworth (Lay Preacher) and the Revs. T. Anderson, C. J. Street, and A. H. Dolphin. The chairman referred to the burden imposed by the building of new churches, but added that the same spirit which had animated the congregation at Mexborough was inspiring the efforts being made on behalf of the new church at Upperthorpe, towards the building of which nearly £5,000 had been raised. He hoped the church would be far advanced towards completion a year hence. A striking feature of the evening meeting was the admirable music given by a united choir with Mr. Arnold Bagshaw at the organ.

ALBANIAN RELIEF FUND.

WE have received the following donations in response to Miss Durham's appeal on behalf of the Albanian peasants, in addition to the sum we acknowledged last week:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount before acknowledged	158	2	11
C. H. Bache	1	1	0
J. Bredall	1	1	0
Miss Bowring	1	1	0
E. B.	1	1	0
E. D. C.	1	0	0
Per the Rev. H. Dawtrey— (Dundee Free Religious Movement)	1	10	0
D.	2	2	0
Mrs. J. Evers	1	0	0
Miss Eleanor Garrett	5	5	0
A. E. H. £2 2s., J. H. £2 2s., E. F. A. 5s., B. A. 3s., J. H. S. 2s. 6d.	4	14	6
Miss I. M. Hervey	1	0	0
Charles Isaacs	1	1	0
F. A. J.	10	0	0
J. Johnson	1	1	0
M. B. L.	2	2	0
Miss Lalor	1	1	0
Arnold Lupton	5	0	0
R. H. and E. M.	1	10	0
Mrs. Robinson	5	0	0
Miss C. Scott	3	0	0
T. B. Taylor	2	2	0
"West Kirby"	1	0	0
Mr. Alfred Wilson	3	3	0
A. M. Z. (Dover)	1	0	0
J. C. Ledlie 5s., Dr. Rigg 10s., per Dr. Rigg 1s., Miss Cecilia Jevons 10s., Anonymous 4s., Miss Helen Evans 5s., E. Russell Evans 5s., M. D. 2s. 6d., Readers of THE INQUIRER (Hull) 5s., Mrs. Geldart 5s., Miss D. G. Langelaan 3s., Miss A. Entwistle 10s., X. Y. Z. 2s., the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne 5s., Aberyst- with Congregation 10s., L. P. 10s., "Elgie" 3s., A. Weeks 5s., "F. B., Streatham" 4s., Louisa Hibbert 5s., Anonymous (Letchworth) 1s., "Oban Street" 2s., N. H. and M. W. I. 5s., Mrs. Horace Lewis 10s., Children's Benevolent Fund, Memorial Church Sunday School, Liscard, 10s. 6d., the Misses Lucas 10s., A.T. B. 10s. ..	7	18	0

Total .. £223 16 5

Further donations may be sent to the Editor, 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, or to the Union of London and Smith's Bank, College Crescent, South Hampstead, N.W.

AN interdenominational gathering took place in the old Town Hall, Leicester, on Friday evening last, when the Rev. Will Reason, M.A., gave an interesting and stimulating address on the duty of the churches in the face of modern problems. At least five denominations were represented, and the chair was taken by the Vicar of Belgrave, who cordially welcomed the suggestion of a local association, and proposed the appointment of a committee. This was done, and a member of the C.S.U. was elected secretary.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Ballymoney.—We regret to announce the death of Mrs. David Matts, widow of the late Rev. David Matts, formerly minister of the Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church, Ballymoney, which took place at the residence of her nephew, West Bromwich. Mrs. Matts, who was 81, was greatly esteemed by the congregation to which her husband ministered in Ireland, and her loss will be felt by a large circle of relatives and friends. The Rev. D. Matts, who retired from the ministry a little over 12 months ago, after 47 years' service, and went to reside at West Bromwich, died last November.

Birmingham.—On Tuesday, January 20, a meeting of the Monthly Meeting of Protestant Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire and Neighbouring Counties was held at the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham. There were present the following ministers:—Messrs. Austin (in the chair), Evans, Shelley, Smith, Thomas, Topping, Warnock, Brettell, Gibbon, and I. Wrigley (hon. secretary). The Rev. E. Glyn Evans, of Dudley, gave an exposition of "The Laughter Corrective," as set forth by Bergson. An interesting discussion followed. At the close tea was provided by the friends of the Church of the Messiah, and speeches were made by the Revs. W. G. Topping, E. Glyn Evans, A. H. Shelley, and J. Worsley Austin. Mr. Shelley gave thanks on behalf of the ministers for the kind hospitality that had been shown to them, and Mr. Byng Kenrick briefly replied.

Bolton.—On Saturday, January 25, the annual reunion and welcome meeting was held in connection with Unity Church. After tea the chair was taken by Mr. W. Taylor, one of the superintendents of the school, in the unavoidable absence of Mr. Stephenson, the chairman of the congregation. He spoke encouragingly of the work, while appealing to his fellow-members and friends to continue in their efforts to support a live church, and to maintain the great traditions of the past, the Rev. R. H. Lambley, of Norwich, and Mr. Arthur Hardman emphasising his words in subsequent speeches. The minister, the Rev. Edward Morgan, then extended a welcome to the 40 new members who had joined during the year. The annual Christmas Fair, in connection with the church, was one of the most successful held for years, over £240 being cleared.

British League of Unitarian Women.—A conference of the London branch secretaries of the League was held at Essex Hall on January 21, Mrs. Alfred Wilson, chairman of the Executive Committee, presiding, when a discussion on the formation of junior League branches was opened by Miss E. Rosalind Lee, of Stourbridge. Miss Lee, in the course of an interesting paper, suggested certain ways in which the religious education of girls in the churches might be stimulated, and urged that the idea of a preparation class for young people who wish to become members of the congregations, and of junior branches of the Women's League being formed whose members could organise study circles, help in the Sunday schools or at Happy Evenings, and engage in temperance work and other church activities, should receive encouragement. Mrs. Claxson Drummond and Miss H. Brooke Herford also spoke, and the various secretaries present reported upon the work which is being done by their own branches.

Leeds.—Mr. F. G. Jackson, hon. secretary of Mill Hill Chapel, writes to say that the committee which is entrusted with the duty of looking after the evening congregation is desirous of getting into touch with the casual attenders at the evening services, and any information as to the methods of doing this which have been found satisfactory at other churches would be gratefully received.

Liverpool: Bootle.—On Monday afternoon, January 26, a meeting, which took the form of an "At Home," given by the minister, the Rev. W. Short and Mrs. Short, was held in connection with the Ladies' Work Society, when an address was given by Miss H. Brooke Herford on the functions of the Women's League. There were over 40 present, and the society pledged itself to co-operate in the work of the League.

London: Blackfriars Mission.—The Rev. W. J. Piggett writes:—"Acknowledging that the difficulties of my situation are not singular, I beg a little space as one of the missionary ministers of London to plead the cause of some nearly destitute men and women, able to work, willing to work, but so far, owing to seasonal trade and other causes, without work. If any of your readers could send me news of odd labouring jobs I should be very glad indeed to bring the work and the workless ones together. Then I wish to appeal for one or two ladies and gentlemen who would give up a Monday morning to the duties of collecting for our Blackfriars Provident Bank, for we are short-handed, and sickness has increased our difficulty. Finally our Old Boys' Club hangs like Mohamet's coffin, for lack of a trained, educated, and athletic lover of lads who would give himself to this work. We have the boys, the room, and the necessary equipment; all we need is the man. May he soon appear, for the need and the opportunity is a very great one."

London: Lay Preachers' Union.—At the meeting held on January 26 the Reading Circle continued its study of 1 Corinthians; and a sermon on the chapter which had formed the basis of discussion was preached at the ensuing meeting of the Union by Mr. Percival Chalk, the first member of the Union to become a Pioneer Preacher. After the service favourite religious passages were read by members, the selections being taken from the works of Carlyle, Emerson, H. Jeffs, Thomas à Kempis, Martineau, Theodore Parker, and the Book of Isaiah. Occasion was taken by the Rev. W. H. Drummond to commend to the notice of members the book of devotional readings recently compiled by the Rev. J. M. Connell.

London: Woolwich.—The annual meeting of the members of the congregation of Carmel Chapel took place on Wednesday evening, Mr. T. T. Handcock presiding over a very fair attendance. The reports and balance-sheet were adopted, regret being expressed at the departure some two months ago of the Rev. Fred and Mrs. Brockway, and it was decided to send them a letter of greeting and good wishes in their new sphere at Moretonhampstead. An increase was reported in the attendances at the Sunday evening services, as also in the Sunday school. Officers and committee were appointed for the ensuing year, Mr. William Morgan being unanimously re-elected secretary, and Mr. W. H. Smith treasurer, with Mr. Handcock as chairman of the Church Council. The presence of the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson, as representing the London District Unitarian Society, was very helpful, and highly appreciated. In a homely speech, after the routine business, the district minister remarked on the neat and cleanly aspect of the schoolroom (due to the devoted attention and care of some of the lady members of the congregation), and expressed himself as particularly pleased with the excellent spirit and encouraging tone of the proceedings that evening.

South East Wales Unitarian Society.—The quarterly meetings were held in the Unitarian Church, Pontypridd, on Monday, January 26, when delegates were present from each of the affiliated churches. The president, Mr. John Lewis, Pontypridd, presided over the proceedings. At the Executive Committee, held in the morning, the treasurer, the Rev. Simon Jones, B.A., presented his statements of accounts for the financial year ending December 31, 1913, with a balance in hand of £8 3s. 1d. The Executive Committee reported that arrangements had been completed with the Rev. E. S. Russell, B.A., to hold an eight-days' mission in some of the churches. At the general business meeting of delegates held in the afternoon, very encouraging reports were submitted by several of the affiliated churches, while the Sunday-school sub-committee had a very interesting report to present regarding the graded Sunday-school lesson system now adopted by several of the Sunday schools. The Rev. W. Lucan Davies was welcomed into the Society on taking up his work at Newport. The Merthyr and Dowlais churches are contemplating giving a trial to the system of grouping by electing a joint minister. A resolution was adopted urging the Government to further amend the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, by raising the age of consent to 18. At the close of the business meeting a conference was held on "Alcohol and Efficiency." In the evening a religious service was held in the church, the Rev. Joseph Wood being the preacher.

Stalybridge.—The annual meeting of church members was held at the close of the evening service on Sunday, January 25, Mr. W. Thompson (warden), presiding. A very satisfactory report was presented which stated that 25 new members were enrolled during last year, of whom 22 were from the Sunday school. The total membership at the end of September was 270 adults and 48 juveniles. While attendances at the morning service still left much to be desired, those at evening service showed a marked improvement, and large and enthusiastic congregations assembled on all special occasions during the year. The Sunday school and its institutions are in a flourishing condition, and continue to do good and useful work. The minister, the Rev. John Ellis, was congratulated on entering on the second year of his ministry, and appreciation of his work was signified by an increase of stipend. A scheme for celebrating the jubilee of the church in 1915, which involves improvements to the organ, or a new organ, erection of new choir stalls, building of vestries, installation of electric light, new hymn and service books, and general renovation, at a cost of about £900, was submitted, and will be decided at a special meeting to be held on February 4.

West Kirby.—A congregational meeting was held in the Christian Institute on Wednesday evening, January 21, to welcome the Rev. Charles and Mrs. Roper on their settlement at West Kirby. The meeting was largely attended, amongst the guests from a distance being the Revs. J. Collins Odgers, B.A., H. D. Roberts and Mrs. Roberts, T. Lloyd Jones and Mrs. Jones, J. E. Jenkins and Mrs. Jenkins,

A. E. Parry, S. H. Street, B.A., and Mrs. Street, D. Jenkins Evans, F. Hall, W. Short, B.A., and Mrs. Short, and A. B. Bateman (Wesleyan minister) of West Kirby. The chair was taken by Mr. A. L. Richman, who cordially welcomed the new minister; and Mr. G. Dalby read apologies for absence from various friends and well-wishers. The Rev. H. W. Hawkes, as late minister, offered on behalf of himself and the congregation a hearty welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Roper, and congratulated them upon coming to a place where the social atmosphere is friendly, and where the people are warmhearted and broadminded. He especially welcomed the presence of the Rev. A. B. Bateman as a mark of the growing consciousness of underlying unity in the midst of doctrinal diversity, a promise of the truly catholic church of the future. The Rev. A. B. Bateman extended a fraternal greeting to Mr. Roper, and also voiced the underlying unities of religion. In face of the too prevalent sin and indifference of society, he said he welcomed any man who would work for the kingdom of God. Miss Gotthardt spoke on behalf of the Sunday school; the Rev. H. D. Roberts on behalf of the Liverpool District Missionary Association; the Rev. J. C. Odgers, president of the Association, on behalf of the ministers of the district; and the Rev. T. Lloyd Jones. Mr. Roper replied in suitable terms, and said he was especially glad to see so many friends representing orthodox churches. In seeking a new settlement he had been anxious to find a band of worshipping people, no matter how few they might be, who were really enthusiastic about the religious faith they professed, and who were willing to co-operate earnestly with their minister in the varied work of the church. He regarded religion as something far larger and more important than mere doctrinal belief, namely, the living of the Christian life, and helping our fellows to become in every possible way truer and nobler children of God. Though the population of the community in which their work lay was comparatively small, he believed that within limitations, and on foundations already laid, a worthy achievement was possible, and he sincerely hoped that he would find himself and his church working in hearty co-operation with all the other churches in West Kirby, towards the spiritual uplifting of humanity and the establishment of God's kingdom.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE LATE MRS. WILLIAM MORRIS.

Lady Burne-Jones is now the sole survivor of the three women who were most intimately associated with the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood—herself, Mrs. Rossetti, and Mrs. William Morris, whose death has just taken place. Mrs. Morris, owing to her delicacy of health, was much of an invalid for the greater part of her life, and only known, therefore, to a comparatively small circle; but her extraordinary beauty has been made familiar to the world by Rossetti, for whom she sat repeatedly for some fifteen years after their first meeting. She was a woman conspicuous for her kindness, good sense, and girlish love of fun. She occupied herself constantly with exquisite embroideries after designs made by her husband, her eye for colour being as unerring, either by nature or training, as that of Morris himself. A piece of her work was shown last year at Ghent, but she was not anxious for notoriety, and became famous almost against her will through the paintings which portrayed her fine features, masses of dark hair, and beautiful hands.

* * *

The following passage from the Memorials of Edward Burne-Jones describes how she first met William Morris. "It was in the last days of the Long Vacation that Morris first saw Miss Jane Burden, who afterwards became his wife. She had been born and brought up in Oxford, and her beauty was of so rare and distinguished a type that one would have thought it impossible for Morris to have missed seeing her face during the time he was at College; but fate reserved the meeting until now, when, as it is said, 'by chance,' being at the theatre with Gabriel, Edward, and Hughes one evening, he saw her in a box above them, and so the story began. A pen-and-ink drawing of her by Rossetti (the one now in the Dublin National Gallery) was brought by Edward to Beaumont-street for us to marvel at, and future acquaintance with the original proved to us that it was a faithful portrait as well as a beautiful work of art. Morris's portrait of her also in his poem of "Beata Mea Domina" was equally true."

THE EDUCATION OF WOMEN.

At the annual prize-giving at the High School for Girls, Bridlington, the Head Mistress, Miss Edith Drummond, spoke some wise words on the subject of women's educational needs. "I suppose it is because women's education is still young," she said, "that the belief yet lingers that in many cases we should be better without it. I wish we could banish for ever the curious idea that because a girl has not to teach she need not be educated. And yet I have had it said to me again and again. I am told that because she has not got to get her own living she might as well leave school when she is sixteen, and I would repeat what I have said many times before, that we cannot value education by its money-earning capacity. If a girl is to go home she will have little time, perhaps little chance, and quite possibly little inclination for further intellectual development, and what right have we to neglect one whole side of her nature? I said a moment ago that medical and educational experts have agreed in the advisability of postponing all pressure till after sixteen, since up to that time the physical development is the side that needs most careful consideration. Possibly at the beginning girls' public schools suffered by attempting to copy too closely curriculum, examinations and methods of boys' schools, but at all events we are beginning to recognise now that it is only after the physical development of girls is more or less complete that the intellectual can go forward."

* * *

"It is for this reason," Miss Drummond continued, "that I would say confidently that it is after sixteen that the most important part of a girl's education comes, and that the doors are being opened for her into those wide worlds of knowledge and of beauty of which many women remain ignorant all their lives. I would plead very earnestly, as I know I have done before, with all those who, for no particular reason, take a girl of sixteen away from school. In many cases they are shutting her off from a joy to which she has a right, from a whole world of wider horizon which might have been hers. Sometimes it means a little sacrifice for the mother—her companionship for the time being, but all I can assure them is that it is worth while. We hear constantly that times are changing, that girls are not what they used to be, that what satisfied their mothers will not satisfy them, and a great deal of this is true. And it has its good side, too. But these two things that I have been speaking of will become, I believe, more essential than ever. More and more will social service of some sort be demanded from the individual, while the worlds of intellect and of spirit are now no longer the privilege of the few, but the right of the many. It is incumbent upon us to see that the young receive what is theirs. It is for us to Keep the young generation in hail,

And bequeath them no tumbled house."

A MEMORIAL TO CANON BARNETT AT OXFORD.

The Oxford memorial to Canon Barnett is very appropriately taking the form of the establishment of a permanent centre of social and economic studies, and a house has already been acquired by a provisional committee, to be known as Barnett House, which will lend itself admirably to the purpose if sufficient support is forthcoming. The house would, the Manchester Guardian points out, provide proper facilities for social and economic studies in Oxford, and a specialised library, which has long been needed, would be a main feature of its equipment; it would serve as a centre for different movements connected with social service, and form the headquarters of the work of the Tutorial Classes Committee in Oxford.

THE MIND OF THE SAVAGE.

The Oxford undergraduate need not feel hurt at the comparison made by Mr. McDougall at the Royal Institution between his brain and that of the savage of the interior of Borneo, if it is really true that the old ideas about the brain of the savage are inaccurate. The lecturer argued that civilisation seemed to be due rather to favourable accidents of physical and geographical conditions than to the superior mental endowment of the civilised races, and, indeed, the scientific world, he said, differed from the rest of the civilised world more than the rest of the civilised world differed from the savage. Continental anthropologists took the view that the mental endowment of the savage was not logical, but pre-logical, and operated not by the rational mode which characterised civilised man, but by curious processes in which tradition, emotion, and mass suggestion played a predominant part. It seemed, however, that the savage mind was not indifferent to the laws of logic but to the laws of mechanistic science, and the same indifference might be found in civilised man not merely in the superstitions of peasantry, but in the belief in luck, omens, mascots, unlucky numbers and the like which was common even among cultivated people.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

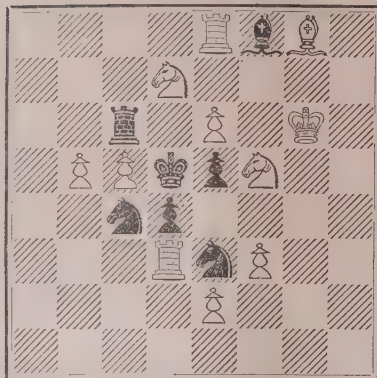

JAN. 31, 1914.

✉ All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 42.

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS.

BLACK. (7 men.)

WHITE. (11 men.)

White to play and mate in two moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 40.

1. Q. R5 (key-move).

Correct solutions have been received from Rev. I. Wrigley, E. C. (Highbury), F. S. M. (Mayfield), Geo. Ingledew, A. J. Hamblin, W. T. M., Rev. B. C. Constable, R. E. Shawcross, D. Amos, A. Mielziner, E. Wright, and W. E. Arkell.

Of No. 39 from Walter Coventry, R. E. Shawcross, H. L., Rev. B. C. Constable, W. E. Arkell, E. C. (Highbury), W. S. B., R. B. D. (Edinburgh), F. S. M. (Mayfield), D. Amos, A. J. Hamblin, Rev. G. Pegler, Dr. Higginson, Geo. Ingledew, W. T. M.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

WALDEMAR THAU (Chesterfield).—Le coup 1. F. 8CD n'est pas juste. Les Noir jouent 1.... C. pr P, et les Blancs ne peuvent pas donner le mat. Il faut examiner le No. 41 de nouveau.

E. WRIGHT.—Position of No. 37 as follows: White K at h6; Q at b7; R at g5; Kts at e6 and h3; Ps at e2 and d2. Black K at e4; Q at a7; B at b2; Ps at d6, d5, e5, and h7. Two moves.

A. S. RODGERS.—Black will play 1.... Q. K6, ch.

Our No. 40 has proved most elusive; those whose names do not appear will do well to study the position again, so as to find out wherein their suggested keys are defeated by correct play. 1. Q. R5 is the ONLY correct solution. Although a very old problem, it has successfully withstood the test of analysis, and is perfectly sound. Our No. 42 is one of my earliest attempts at composition, and was described as a most elusive position. It defeated many solvers when it first appeared.

Now Ready for February.

Price One Penny.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

Editorial.

Lessons for the Month:

- I. Great Prophets are Inspired.
- II. The Great Teacher and His Message.
- III. What Jesus Teaches about God.

IV. His Teaching about Man.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.
Senior Department—C. M. Wright, M.A.
Primary Department—Ruth New.

Our Story Pages.

By the Way.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.
LESLIE T. BURNETT. Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

GENUINE IRISH LINEN TRAY-CLOTHS, hemstitched. Size, 16 inches by 24 inches. Sale price 8½d.; regular price 1s. 3d. Postage 1d. Write for Free Catalogue. —HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

BARGAIN LOTS of White all-linen Damask Table Cloths, superior quality, Floral designs, 2 yards square, 6s. 6d. (usually 10s. 6d.). Postage 4d. Sale Catalogue Free. —Write, HUTTON'S 5, Larne, Ireland.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Triumph of Faith.

STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D.

Five Points of Christian Faith.

JAMES MARTINEAU, D.D., LL.D.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

"THE UNITARIAN MONTHLY."

Magazine for Unitarian Propaganda. Adopted by churches with or without local page. Issued for last Sunday in each previous month. One copy post free, 1½d.—1s. 6d. a year; 9d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100; extra charge local page.—Address to EDITOR, 36 Burlington-road, South Shore, Blackpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCs.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, THORALBY, AYSGARTH, S.O., YORKS.—Paying Guests received.—Particulars from Miss SMITH.

BOARD - RESIDENCE offered one Lady or Gentleman. Separate sitting-room if required. Every comfort, good table. West Hampstead.—Address for terms, C. C., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

SUNNY South Coast Health Resort.—Ideal Winter Boarding House, Central, Garden, near Sea. Hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, electric light, and penny in slot gas fire in each bedroom. Three good reception rooms. Food Reform and ordinary diet.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

A COMFORTABLE HOME offered a business gentleman in attractive but very accessible part of London.—C., 113, Highbury New Park, N.

COMFORTABLE and refined HOME offered to invalid or elderly Lady in quiet part of Richmond.—Address, M., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

BOOKS

EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY, TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE, And for all other Exams.

Second-Hand at Half Prices.

New at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogue 184 (post free) and state wants. Books bought.

BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,

135, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to offer and pay highest genuine prices. Note quotations: Up to 2s. 3d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 5s. 6d. on silver, 11s. on gold, 32s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel, post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Unquestionably the oldest and most reliable firm. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, January 31, 1914.

Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3737.
NEW SERIES, No. 841.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

National Conference.

APPEAL FOR £50,000
FOR SUSTENTATION FUND.

THIRTEENTH LIST.

	£	s.	d.
Mrs. Debenham, London	250	0	0
Mrs. Gladstone, Birmingham	100	0	0
Mr. R. Edgar Haslam, London	100	0	0
Dr. Alfred Holt, Liverpool	100	0	0
Mr. T. Fielding Johnson, Leicester	100	0	0
Mrs. C. Fellows Pearson, London	100	0	0
Miss Bulmer, Leeds (2nd don.)	50	0	0
Mrs. Ellis, Guildford	26	0	0
Mrs. C. G. Beale, Birmingham	25	0	0
Mr. J. H. Every, Lewes (2nd don.)	25	0	0
Mr. R. Norton, London	25	0	0
Mrs. Alfred Tate, Leatherhead	25	0	0
Mrs. J. S. Beale, London	20	0	0
The Hon. A. Hilda Kitson, Leeds	15	0	0
Mr. J. D. Skirrow, Birmingham	15	0	0
Mr. Harry Hirsch, Leeds (2nd don.)	10	10	0
Mr. Wm. Hollins, Mansfield	10	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Lupton, Leeds	10	0	0
Mr. Andrews Crompton, Garstang (2nd don.)	5	10	0
Rev. A. W. Fox, Todmorden	5	5	0
His Honour Judge Greenhow, Leeds	5	5	0
Mr. W. S. Sharpe, London	5	5	0
Miss F. B. Taylor, Bangor (2nd don.)	5	5	0
Mrs. Duncan, Birmingham	5	0	0
Mr. Chas. L. Froeston, Haslemere	5	0	0
The Misses H. and A. Haselden, Lancaster	5	0	0
Mr. Chas. Martineau, Esher	5	0	0
Mrs. C. Simpson, Dean Row	5	0	0
Miss M. E. Smith, Birmingham (2nd don.)	5	0	0
The Misses Reed, London	4	0	0
Mr. W. D. Bond, London	3	3	0
Mr. Simeon Hall, Leeds	3	3	0
Miss Archer, Birmingham	3	0	0
Mrs. R. Crompton Jones, Tunbridge Wells	2	2	0
Miss J. S. Martineau, Birmingham (2nd don.)	2	2	0
Miss Whitfield, Birmingham (2nd don.)	2	2	0
Mrs. Dudley, Warwick	2	0	0
Miss Mabel Holland, London (2nd don.)	2	0	0
Rev. W. B. Mathews, Poole	2	0	0
Mr. John W. Smith, Penwortham	2	0	0
Smaller sums and Collections to be announced later	16	6	0
Total Donations promised (of which £500 is conditional on the £50,000 being secured by next Whitsuntide)	45,498	5	9
Total new and increased annual subscriptions	107	0	6

Donors of Ten Guineas become Life Members of the Sustentation Fund.

Copies of the complete list of Donations to November 10 may be obtained from Mr. Harwood.

Cheques should be crossed, made payable and forwarded to the Treasurer, Mr. F. W. MONKS, Stonecroft, Warrington.

All other communications should be addressed to the Hon. Sec., the Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A., 60, Howitt-road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

Books for the Use of Liberal Religious Teachers & Parents.

Books for Children and Young People.

Lesson Books

On Life and Teaching of Jesus. On Conduct, Religion, Art and Literature, Nature, Biography, Religious History, Infants' Lessons.

Biblical Manuals.

Addresses, Stories, & Readings.

Musical Services and Hymn-books.

Sunday School Methods.

Catalogues on Application.

Books sent on Approval.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex St., Strand, London, W.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.

February

8. Rev. WILLIAM WOODING, B.A.

15. Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A., of Stand, near Manchester.

22. Rev. JOHN HENRY WEATHERALL, M.A. of Bolton.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only,

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church),
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for February 8:

Morning: The Natural Humanity of Jesus.

Evening: Mr. Balfour on a Theistic Universe.

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

Lecture Hall adjoining 19, Tavistock Square, W.C.

On Sunday Evenings, January 11 to March 22, 1914, at 7 o'clock, a Course of Lectures on

The Three Objects of the Society

will be given.

Feb. 8. Theosophy and your Religion. Mrs. BETTS.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M.

Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

MISS LOUISA DREWRY'S Literature

Courses will begin again on Wednesday, Feb. 4, at 7.45 p.m. and Thursday, Feb. 5, at 11.15 a.m. More plays of Shakspeare will be studied, three meetings being given to each play, and the first meeting will be devoted to some talk about Shakspeare, the man and artist. For details apply to Miss DREWRY, 143, King Henry's-road, N.W.

SUSTENTATION FUND

FOR THE

Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Contributors and Friends will be held at Dr. Williams' Library, Gordon-square, London, W.C., at 12.30 p.m. on Wednesday, February 11, 1914, to receive the Report and Accounts, elect three Managers, appoint Officers, and transact other business.

At the close of the Annual General Meeting a special General Meeting will be held to consider, and, if approved, to pass certain alterations in the Regulations for managing the Fund which have been considered and approved by the Board of Managers.

HAROLD F. PEARSON, Hon. Sec.,
22, College Hill, London, E.C.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROAD, LONDON

Leaflet and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, February 8.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. Dr. MORITZ WESTON.
 Brompton, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.; 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. P. CHALK; 7, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH; 6.30, Rev. J. LIONEL TAYLER, M.R.C.S. Evening subject, "Religion and Science—Body and Soul."
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11, Rev. G. CARTER; 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Miss AMY WITTHALL, B.A.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER; and 7.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. A. J. HEALE; 6.30, Mr. P. CHALK.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.; 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. AUSTIN, M.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11, Rev. H. S. SOLLY, M.A.; 6.30, Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Churchgate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing-street, 11.30, Rev. E. W. LUMMIS, M.A.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN Row, 10.45, and STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's Chapel, Castle-terrace, 11, Rev. RAYMOND V. HOLZ, B.A., B.Litt. (Oxon.).
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11, Rev. J. W. SAUNDERS, M.A.; 6.30, Rev. L. P. JACKS, D.D.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. L. P. JACKS, D.D., LL.D.; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREAE.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPTOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

DEATHS.

BARNES.—On January 31, at 22, Park Hill, Ealing, Ellen Nevison Barnes, the beloved wife of Alexander Barnes.

TOULMIN-SMITH.—On January 24, suddenly, at his house near Moscow, Russia, Arthur Toulmin-Smith, greatly respected and beloved, aged 66.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds of MSS. carefully and promptly copied.—Miss KENNEDY, 20, County Grove, Camberwell, S.E.

ARCHITECT, clever Draughtsman and Surveyor, Quantities, &c., will be glad to hear from anyone who can put work in his way.—Address, ARCHITECT, c/o S., 59, Denman's Drive, Hampstead Garden Suburb, N.W.

LADY seeks re-engagement as Companion or Companion-Help to elderly lady or invalid where maid kept. Domesticated, good needlewoman; good references.—C. M. S., 110, Markhouse-road, Walthamstow.

GENTLEWOMAN (aged 60) would undertake light duties (housekeeping, &c.) in return for a home in the country; she is musical.—A. N., Newsagent, 17, Oakfield-place, Clifton, Bristol.

MR. A. W. HARRIS (late Hon. Treasurer N.U.T.A.) would be grateful for the opportunity of undertaking Rent Collection and Management of Property, or other part-time employment not involving continuous eyestrain. Good business and personal references.—168, Fleet-street, E.C.

LADY (middle-aged) seeks an engagement as Housekeeper where a maid is kept. Musical. Fond of children.—E. A., 4, Grove-street, Beeston, Nottingham.

HOUSEKEEPER or Useful Companion to lady or couple, where maid kept. Thoroughly domesticated, good plain cook, excellent needlewoman. Middle-aged, good references.—B., 5, South Park-road, Wimbledon.

HAS any Congregation a few copies to spare of Farmer's Music for Responses in Ten Services?—M., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s. d.
PER QUARTER	1 8
PER HALF-YEAR	3 4
PER YEAR	6 6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken. Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s. d.
PER PAGE	6	0 0
HALF PAGE	3	0 0
PER COLUMN	2	0 0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3 6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4 6

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	83
AUTHORITY AND FREEDOM OF THOUGHT.—I.	85
CENTRE AND CIRCUMFERENCE	86
RELIGION AND THE PALETTE	87
A FRANCISCAN MYSTIC	88
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Almsgiving and Religion	89
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—
Recent American Books	89

John Woolman	90
Christ and War	91
Publications Received	91
FOR THE CHILDREN :—
Jesus, Our Teacher and Friend	91
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
The Manchester District	92

Unitarian Home Missionary College	93
The Protection of Animals in Italy	93
The late Francis de Pressensé	93
Albanian Relief Fund	94
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	94
NOTES AND JOTTINGS	94
OUR CHESS COLUMN	96

* * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N. W.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

A LARGE and representative meeting was held at the Mansion House on Wednesday afternoon in support of the fund for the commemoration of the 100 years' peace between our country and America. The presence of the Prime Minister on the platform gave it special significance. In the course of his speech Mr. Asquith pointed out that the Treaty of Ghent was not so much a diplomatic instrument as the creation of popular feeling, and that was the reason why since 1814 peace had been unbrokenly maintained. "It is not," he said, "that there have not been during those 100 years occasions, and frequent occasions, upon which matters of controversy have arisen between the two peoples—controversies about territorial adjustments, controversies upon matters which as history shows are as much or even more apt to lead to actual warfare—controversies upon points of honour. Those controversies have from time to time aroused deep feelings and caused strong resentments and led to a great effusion of diplomatic dialectics. I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that if controversies of that kind arising upon such matters and so conducted had taken place between any other two peoples in the world, they must, in all human probability, have led to effusion of blood. It is not so between us and the United States of America. And why? Not because there is any special sacrosanctity in the Treaty of Ghent or any other piece of parchment which is covered with diplomatic ink, but because the deep-rooted feeling of which the Treaty of Ghent was, perhaps, the earliest formal embodiment has, year by year and generation after generation, grown and solidified until we two great kindred races have come to feel that the shedding of one another's blood, in any cause, for any difference, would be a matter diverse not only in degree but in character, to the outburst of war between any other two nations in the world."

* * *

At the same meeting Lord Bryce emphasised the fact that there was no war which could not be avoided if the nations wished to avoid it. In the case of the long artificial frontier of 3,000 miles between the United States and Canada, where rivers meandered from one country to the other, where the boundary line ran through lakes, there were endless questions in regard to fishing, navigation, irrigation, and the use of water power out of which a war might be created if the greatest care and good feeling were not exercised on both sides. All those difficulties had been avoided by the sense in both countries that it was their highest interest to avoid a breach of the peace. "In 1817," Lord Bryce continued, "not long after the end of the war of 1812, an agreement was made by an interchange of Notes that there should in future be on Lake Ontario one vessel kept by each nation, not exceeding 100 tons burden and armed with one gun, an 18-pounder. On the Upper Lakes there were to be two vessels of the same size and the same gunnery strength. That Note, determinable upon six months' notice by either party, had remained as the bond of security and assurance of friendship, a pledge of peace between the two nations ever since. Yet the great mercantile marine of the United States on the Great Lakes were not afraid of a sudden descent of Canadian vessels upon them, nor were the Canadians afraid of the sudden descent of an armed fleet upon their shores. Let them hope and trust that the value of the example which the two countries had set in being able to live without armaments directed against one another would arouse the sympathy of other countries, that it would be an example all over the world to those who in every nation seek peace and ensue it."

* * *

In the discussion of the German Naval Estimates in the Budget Committee of the Reichstag on Wednesday Admiral von Tirpitz stated that no positive proposals had yet been made on the subject of armaments by Great Britain to Germany. Should such proposals be made, they would assuredly be examined in a spirit of goodwill. He proceeded to give some interesting figures regarding the recent increase in naval expenditure in Germany, Great Britain, France, and Russia. The expenditure of Germany in the past five years had increased by 55,000,000 marks (£2,750,000), while that of Great Britain, which already had a fleet twice as strong as that of Germany, had increased by 216,000,000 marks (£10,800,000), or four-fold, not to speak of the 60,000,000 marks (£3,000,000), which it was expected would be included in the Supplementary Estimates. Furthermore, the Naval outlay of France had increased by 134,000,000 marks (£6,700,000)—namely, 2½ fold, and that of Russia by 302,000,000 marks (£15,100,000), or 5½ fold, and that only exclusively for the Baltic Fleet.

* * *

In the same debate Herr von Jagow, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, said that the relations with Great Britain were really good (recht gut) and were continuing to develop on lines of rapprochement. He considered that public opinion was very different from what it had been a few years ago. In both countries there had been an increasing feeling that in many questions they could co-operate and that their interests in many cases touched one another. The recent negotiations in London on Balkan affairs were an illustration of this, and had helped to convince people in Great Britain that Germany was not pursuing any aggressive policy. The relations between the two Governments were loyal and based on mutual conciliatoriness.

IN view of these omens and prophecies of peace several passages in Sir Edward Grey's speech to the Manchester Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday will be read with a feeling of disappointment and misgiving. He held out no hope of any slackening in the competitive race, and argued that while any large increase in the building programme of any great country in Europe has a stimulating effect upon the expenditure in other countries, it does not follow that a slackening in the expenditure in one country produces a diminution in the expenditure of another. And so apparently we must fold our hands and do nothing. "While British naval expenditure," Sir Edward Grey tells us, "is a great factor in the naval expenditure of Europe, the forces which are making that expenditure necessary are really beyond our control." This is a confession of political fatalism and impotence of a most alarming kind, especially on the lips of a statesman who has warned us already that our whole civilisation is in danger of being engulfed unless the nations cry halt to their mad rivalry. It is a position, however, which we find it impossible to accept. Nations are not the puppets of a blind fate which first fills them with madness and then drives them headlong to their ruin. They can still be guided and saved by great men. We have heard enough of these dark warnings in recent years, combined with a sort of sad and despairing homage to pacific intentions and ideals. What we need is a leader who has confidence in his own power to control the forces which are dragging us back into barbarism in the interests of peace and goodwill and all the higher aims of Christian civilisation.

* * *

We desire to join in the chorus of congratulations to the Westminster Gazette on reaching its majority last Saturday. It has won a high and distinguished place of its own in English journalism, and proved to an unbelieving world that an evening paper need not descend to sordid and unworthy devices in order to win the popular ear. In F. C. G.'s inimitable cartoons it has disseminated political humour far and wide without one touch of vulgarity or spleen, and added much to the gaiety of nations. In its feeling for literary style and its interest in the higher movements of thought, it has worked consistently for the enlargement of the mental horizon, and Nonconformists will remember gratefully how often their movements and ideals have been reflected with just appreciation in its pages. Some readers may complain that in the midst of thorny questions it has tended to tread the middle path and to represent the spirit of moderation in all things; but in a world of heated partisans we owe much to those who crave chiefly to be just, and realise that it is not always necessary to repel an adversary in order to attract or inspire a friend. It is no small triumph that so many Conservatives have been able to read the Westminster Gazette with pleasurable disagreement.

* * *

WE are glad to see that serious steps are to be taken to put a stop to the scandal of the sale of advowsons in the Church of England, to which we called attention last week. An important committee has been formed "for promoting amendments of the Benefices Act, 1898, and other statutes affecting the transfer of advowsons and registration of benefices." The proposals of reform include the establishment of Church patronage boards in every diocese, and a provision that it shall be unlawful for any owner of an advowson to transfer his right of patronage except to the board of the diocese or to some other public patron. All this is good as far as it goes. The worst scandals of sale would disappear, but the root of the evil, private patronage with its attendant abuses, would remain, whenever the present patron prefers to retain his rights. It would be much better if the whole question of the expropriation of the private patron were taken in hand. So long as he exists the interests of the parish will often be sacrificed to personal whims, favouritism will reign unchecked in many places, and there will be dismal incompetence in spiritual work.

* * *

A STRONG committee consisting of ten clergymen and sixteen laymen has been appointed by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York in accordance with a resolution passed at the meeting of the Representative Church Council last July. The scope of its work is indicated by the terms of the resolution, which was as follows:—"That there is in principle no inconsistency between a national recognition of religion and the spiritual independence of the Church, and this Council requests the Archbishops of Canterbury and York to consider the advisability of appointing a Committee to inquire what changes are advisable in order to secure in the relations of Church and State a fuller expression of the spiritual independence of the Church as well as of the national recognition of religion."

The personnel of the committee, which includes the Bishop of Oxford, Mr. Balfour, Lord Hugh Cecil, Canon Masterman, the Rev. W. Temple, and Mr. A. Mansbridge, will ensure serious public consideration for any proposals it may have to make, and the desire for spiritual independence is one which is worthy of the deepest respect and support.

* * *

AT the same time the suggestion that the Church of England can retain its distinctive and highly privileged position as a national church in a position of greater independence than it possesses at present raises at once a whole crop of difficult questions. The danger of a total misconception of the realities of the situation are seen in the following editorial comment in the Times: "The overtures for union between the two great Churches in Scotland are largely concerned with problems not altogether dissimilar to those to be submitted to the Committee. There is no reason why in England Churchmen should not share the hopes of success which now inspire the leaders of Church and nation across the Border." The suggested parallel seems to us more misleading than helpful. England is in no sense homogeneous in religion as Scotland is. Much that is most powerful and original in English Christianity stands outside the Church of England. The great bodies which sprang out of the heart of Puritanism are true and worthy expressions of national life on its religious side. The claim that one body of Christians is concerned more than the others with "the national recognition of religion" is one that they cannot admit, however peacefully they may seem to acquiesce in their continued exclusion on solemn occasions of state. But if the whole question is to be re-opened, and the Church of England is to win the greater spiritual independence which she craves, the exclusive claims of the past will have to go, and she will have to take other religious communities into partnership in the task of representing national religion, which she is quite unable to perform alone.

* * *

THE Dean of St. Paul's is nothing if not bold and original in his utterances. Even when he runs full tilt against the pleasant optimism which supports many good men in the battle of life, he searches out our weak places and is singularly provocative of thought. In a lecture at Sion College on Tuesday, which has been widely reported in the press, he reminded his hearers that there was real danger of an acute secularisation of Christianity when the pulpit paid more attention to social reform than to preaching the Gospel. He also warned them against the dangers to religion of the anti-intellectualist teaching of the day. He himself distrusted it profoundly, and he thought it would be a misfortune if the valuable lessons which science had taught us in the last hundred years, the marvellous emancipation which it had wrought from all kinds of dark and terrible superstition, were to be in any degree threatened by a recrudescence of an earlier belief in a law of nature which was not uniform, and which was liable at any time to be broken. In view of the rhetorical and ignorant self-assertiveness of the revolt against science in some quarters at the present time, and the delusion that it is all in the interest of Christian faith, we admire the candour of Dr. Inge's description of it as "a mere shallow backwater."

SPECIAL alarm has been aroused in the Congregation of the Index by the teaching of Maeterlinck's book "La Mort" which was published recently in an English translation with the title "Our Eternity." As his other books are supposed to display the same evil tendencies they have all been placed on the Index, and Roman Catholics are consequently forbidden to read them. The futility of such enactments is obvious to all who do not wear ecclesiastical blinkers. No attempt is made to deal with the great mass of modern literature. It would clearly be impossible to do so. Now and then some special author is chosen for condemnation, and the only result is that he gains a big advertisement. As M. Maeterlinck points out in the present case, it will be very good news to his publisher.

* * *

WE feel that there should be some tribute of national gratitude to the University of Manchester for electing Lord Morley as its Chancellor, for few men could fill the office with such dignity and none is so skilled as he in speaking words of far-reaching wisdom even on ceremonial occasions. At the opening of the extension of the Christie Library last week he discoursed delightfully on the spread of learning and the use of books. Our clerical readers will forgive us for quoting the following tribute to the matchless charm of Goldsmith: "I think that critic was not wrong who said . . . that Oliver Goldsmith with his 'Vicar' did more for what is best and kindest in human nature and in human life than a hundred preachers and a thousand sermons." And here is another passage which we have marked for remembrance: "A great library is a warning, a rebuke, a lesson to those unlucky people whose minds are constantly unable to hold more than one idea at a time. A great library is or ought to be a check on that impulse which belongs to the old Adam in us, that frightful impulse to rush to take angry sides at five minutes' notice on the most important and delicate questions that may happen to be raised in the morning or evening newspapers. A library checks that impulse. A library is a place for learning, but let one hope that a library is also a place for unlearning. The sages say that the great difficulty of life is not to learn but to unlearn."

* * *

WE publish to-day the first of three articles by Dr. S. H. Mellone on "Authority and Freedom of Thought," in which he takes up an attitude of strong and critical opposition to the anti-theological prejudice of Professor Bury in his recent sketch of the history of Freedom of Thought. The subject is one of great importance for religious people, and we commend Dr. Mellone's treatment of it to the earnest consideration of our readers.

AUTHORITY AND FREEDOM OF THOUGHT.

I.

THE volume on the "History of Freedom of Thought" contributed to the Home University Library by Mr. J. B. Bury, Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge, may be taken as an indication that the question involved in the title of this paper, so far from being obsolete, is one of the most living questions of the day. We propose, therefore, to suggest the outlines of a point of view from which the problem of Authority and Freedom, as it shapes itself at the present time, may be approached. It is not our purpose to review the book, but to take it as a text. We cannot do that, however, without commenting freely on the point of view adopted by Mr. Bury himself.

We may justly welcome Mr. Bury's wholehearted opposition to any kind of coercion in matters of opinion. "A long time was needed to arrive at the conclusion that the coercion of opinion is a mistake; and only a part of the world is yet convinced. That conclusion, so far as I can judge, is the most important ever reached by men" (p. 14). Religious liberty he rightly treats as an important step toward complete freedom of opinion (p. 92 ff.); "freedom of thought, in any real sense, includes freedom of speech" (p. 8); and, agreeing in this connection with a forcible observation made in his recent Essex Hall lecture by the Rev. Alexander Gordon, the author observes that mere toleration means incomplete religious liberty (cp. p. 112).

These are first principles of civilisation and progress; and those who inherit the tradition of the Churches of the Open Trusts may well feel this is an especial way. These are the things for which our forefathers struggled and sacrificed. And we do feel it; but in this age, in this twentieth century, we are being forced to see that there is another side to it all.

Freedom, in the sense of "freedom from . . ." is of no intrinsic value at all. The value of Freedom depends on the use that is made of it. A man in the full enjoyment of liberty may be, and sometimes is, a pig in morality and in intelligence a fool. Liberty in itself and by itself is a purely negative conception. It means that certain things, certain kinds of compulsion, are absent. Artificial obstacles to the expression of human life and thought are admittedly an evil; but when all these are taken away the essential thing is no nearer being secured.

The truth is, that Mr. Bury, and many other enthusiastic advocates of Liberty, base their whole position on a positive conviction of how that liberty ought to be used. And more or less consciously, more or less explicitly, their advocacy of liberty is an advocacy of a special purpose to which they think liberty ought to be devoted; and the fact that it can be so devoted is the chief reason why they advocate it.

This is especially evident in the case of Mr. Bury. He writes in a temper of extreme hostility to all forms of Christianity. A reviewer in the pages of this journal has already most justly observed that "it is not for nothing that the author has edited the 'Decline and Fall' and drunk deeply of its spirit. He is a second Gibbon, alike in the vast range of his historical knowledge and in the anti-Christian prejudices which he has wrought into the very structure of his work."

The result is that the work before us belies its title. It is not a true history of freedom of thought. It is a history of the destructive criticism of religious belief. When "liberty" is advocated, this is what is meant. We are shown the supposed triumph of "the spirit that eternally decies" in the realm of religion. To the free thought, which is positive and constructive, little reference is made. Take the case of James Martineau. Why is he not referred to? He devoted his great powers not only to a penetrating destructive criticism of orthodox Christianity, but to the defence of a theistic interpretation of the world, just at the period when science, flushed with victories unequalled in the history of human thought, was pushing beyond her mark and claiming once for all to dictate materialism to the mind of the age. Martineau used his freedom in a way which the author does not approve; therefore he is unworthy of mention in a history of "freedom of thought." The evident spirit of the book compels us to assume that this is the reason; and that for a like reason no mention is made of the work of such men as James Ward, Eucken, Bergson, William James. Some light on such omissions is seen in a contemptuous footnote (p. 230) where the author says:—"As this is not a history of thought, I make no reference to recent philosophical speculations (in America, England, and France) which are sometimes claimed as tending to bolster up theology; but they are all profoundly unorthodox." You may, therefore, be a "thinker," and even have the merit of being "profoundly unorthodox," and yet have no place in a history of "freedom" of thought if you have ventured on a constructive treatment of the fundamental ideas of religion! We wonder whether—if the men whom we have named had been militant agnostics—room would not have been found to chronicle their work, even in a brief and brilliant sketch which takes as its field the whole course of Western civilisation from the time of the early Greek thinkers to our own day.

Such an interpretation of "freedom of thought" is one-sided and narrow in the extreme. The simple truth is, that this book, contributed to a deservedly popular series by one of the greatest scholars in an ancient and famous university, is a partisan pamphlet—a manifesto of the hatred and contempt which the author feels for Christianity.

It is not possible within our present limits to quote the numerous passages which might be quoted in proof of the statements which we have just made. We must repeat that this bitter partisan prejudice affects and distorts the author's view of almost every fact to which he refers in the history of the Christian Church. Allowing for the effect of this extreme bias, there remains a definite point of view, standing in direct opposition to that which we desire to defend. This opposition comes to light most fully in the use to be made of the cardinal terms, "Reason" and "Authority."

In the two chapters dealing with the growth and progress of "Rationalism" in the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries, special stress is laid on the destructive work of thinkers like Hobbes, the English "Deists," and the Continental writers who were influenced by them. Now the so-called "Deists," while rejecting much in current Christianity, held more or less definitely to Theism; hence the attacks which were made on the surviving Theism of the Deists are carefully chronicled; and in this connection the critical work of Hume and Gibbon is fully described and extolled. The supposed anti-Theistic implications of nineteenth century science are exhibited with enthusiasm (p. 178 ff.); and attention is directed exclusively to those writers and influences which worked destructively on one or other of the elements of religious belief—particularly on the fundamental ideas of God and the Soul.

This, then, is what is meant by the "triumph of Reason in the nineteenth century" (p. 225). This indicates the meaning of the term "Rationalism" as used by Mr. Bury and others of his way of thinking. Only one of them, so far as we know, has been candid enough—we had almost said, honest enough—plainly to define the word in this way. Mr. A. W. Benn, in his "History of Rationalism," states that by "Rationalism" he means nothing more or less than the destruction of religious belief—the "old-fashioned artillery," as he significantly calls it, of purely negative criticism.

More than 80 years have passed since Carlyle wrote these words: "Cease, my much-respected Herr von Voltaire, shut thy sweet voice; for the task appointed thee seems finished. Sufficiently hast thou demonstrated this proposition, considerable or otherwise: That the Mythus of the Christian Religion looks not in the eighteenth century as it did in the eighth. Alas, were thy six-and-thirty quartos, and the six-and-thirty thousand other quartos and folios, and flying sheets or reams, printed before and since on the same subject, all needed to convince us of so little! But what next? Wilt thou help us to embody the divine Spirit of that Religion in a new Mythus, in a new vehicle and vesture, that our Souls, otherwise too like perishing, may live? What! Thou hast no faculty in that kind? Only a torch for burning, no hammer for building? Take our thanks, then, and—thyself away."

For "Herr von Voltaire" read any one out of a number of distinguished modern names, and for "eighteenth" century read "twentieth," and the message comes home to ourselves, as not less but more needed now than when it first was uttered.

S. H. MELLONE.

(To be Continued.)

CENTRE AND CIRCUMFERENCE.

BY EDWARD LEWIS.

IN the practice of life it is a good rule to take care of the Centre and let the Circumference take care of itself. One may at once confess that, among us, the rule is more often honoured in the breach than in the observance. The outside of the cup and the platter is usually the concern of respectable people. Instead of constantly fortifying and flushing the centre, most of us go tinkering away at the twists, flaws, weaknesses that lie towards the circumference of our lives. And so "not a few are weak and sickly among you."

As Rabindranath Tagore reminds us, "Life never takes Death seriously. It laughs, dances and plays, it builds, hoards and loves in death's face." A general view of creational life would represent it as a great river, or a fountain breaking perpetually forth into manifestation; at the centre, it is vital, urgent, pure, direct, simple like the mid-stream; but shoreward, towards the fringe, it shows twists, vortices, backward eddies; there are a myriad mistakes, failures, deformities, abortions; there is a heavy flotsam of abandoned forms; but life as a whole does not take these things seriously. It continues to pour itself forth at the centre. Sometimes it seems to mend its flaws, and redeem its failures, as it goes along; who has not seen a vortex drawn by a kind of suction towards the mid-current, and swiftly unravel and disappear at the first touch of the strong central waters? But the things which life cannot mend in this fashion, or cannot discard, it carries along with it.

It is sometimes remarked that Jesus had very little to say about human weaknesses and sins. Some try to explain this fact, others to explain it away. The best thing to do is to acknowledge the wisdom of the method. The main business of Jesus was to energise a central spiritual life. He was not in the world to point out weakness in men, but to educe strength. He healed diseases and witheredness, whether physical or moral, not by the external methods of the physician or the surgeon, but by fortifying the spiritual energies in the soul. Over and over again he said that men were made whole by their faith, that is to say, by their self-identification with Life, Love, and Goodness as they found it manifested in him. He did not stand in the marketplace and cry, "Ye sinners!" but rather "Ye children of your Father." The people he combated were those whose formalism made spiritual life impossible. He drew the emphasis away from the "thou-shalt-nots" of the Decalogue, and placed it upon the "thou-shalt" of the greatest commandment of all. The Decalogue had, indeed, looked towards human weakness and sin, but Jesus looked towards the establishing of a central love-life, Godward and manward, in the heart. Long after his death they said that he had come into the world to "remit sins."

He himself said that he came "that the world might have life."

Are we prepared to acknowledge the wisdom of this, and honour it in the practice of personal life?

Our lives are somewhat like a river, also; there is a mid-stream, and there are shoreward parts where the waters begin to feel the drag of the land. We have our inward life with the freedom of the spirit; but the further away we move from this centre the more we come under the drag of our mortal material circumstance. We experience this drag in our minds as intellectual doubt; in our bodies, as the thralldom of earthward desire; in our circumstances, as custom, habit, convention, world-entanglement.

One says, "I would live the Life, but there is this serious doubt in my mind; I must settle it first"; so he turns aside from the main stream of his life to unravel this knot; only to find that it is characteristic of such tangles in the mind that one leads to another, creates another. It is as if the spirit of the river should leave its strong waters at the centre, and busy itself with trying to unravel the twists, or smooth out the eddies, near the banks; the only possible result would be that the whole stream would become more sluggish, and the difficulties would multiply. You must solve your doubts, not by turning aside to attend to them, but by going forward; solvitur ambulando, if at all; and, if they won't unravel, fortify the main stream of your positive, active, onsetting love-life, and carry them along with you. This is another variation of the "telescope to the blind eye" theory. It satisfies the pragmatist test better than any other. All lives that are central, strong, and vigorous and forward, carry along with them in their sweep a hundred submerged possible difficulties; the difficulties only show themselves when you allow the centre to become weak.

Another says, "I would live the Life, but I am full of weakness; my body is a nest of frailties; I must first mend my habits, refine my virtues, eliminate my vices, get rid of this body of death." And so he spends his painful days in tinkering and patching away at his foibles, faults, flaws, funny idiosyncrasies and tricks, mistakes, follies, sins, and what not; he bemoans his lostness and his sinfulness, he is always trying his temperature, gets weary and exhausted. He is a sick man, and remains a sick man. Why cannot he leave these things alone? Why cannot the Church tell him that he must leave them alone, and get to the centre? Why cannot he be told authoritatively that there is a divinely natural forgiveness in life for the man who "loves much"? Why is the Church the slave of respectability and conventional morality? A man has no business to be pottering away in the shallow waters near the bank, when he might be living a strong healthy life at the centre. Let the sweep of the river drain the marshes. Deepen the bed of the river, get your life into central flood, and the stagnant pools will dry up. The sap withdrawing on to the centre causes the leaves to fade, and uprising again to newness of life it pushes the dead things off. Fortify the centre, assert yourself, affirm life, love more, and more passionately; say "yes" to Beauty, Goodness, Power, and particularly to these as they are within yourself, and the crooked will become straight, the dead will fall away from you, and, even if they don't, you will be able to carry them along with you until the day when heavenly death shall deliver you from the body.

A man who tries to make others feel ashamed of themselves is a bad man. A preacher who is for ever pointing people to a scrutiny of their weakness and sins doesn't know his Master's business. God must get very weary of the man who is perpetually seeking His presence in order to lay bare his weakness and confess his stupidities. A Church which lays stress on these things is a machine for the fashioning of weak lives.

RELIGION AND THE PALETTE.

RELIGIOUS art is a memory. Born of the patronage of the Church, it faded as the world adopted the painter and attracted, him from madonnas to duchesses. The saints of the Primitives now dwell in the quiet atmosphere of the museum, their ancient sanctity vanished, prayers no longer stimulated by them, and their only remaining devotees the students and critics of their technique. Does this mean that painters were once religious but are so no longer? Or that the religion of the artist has found other avenues of expression?

A recent book of letters sets one thinking about this. They were written by Vincent van Gogh, one of the most vigorous spirits among the Post-Impressionists—letters of genuine intimacy, written only to his brother and to one friend, with no thought of advertising a method or defending a movement, but simply with the intention of saying just what he was doing day by day, and of sending the kind of thoughts that came to him as he was at work. In the casual confessional of a private letter he may write as he likes, repeat himself without apology, utter the half-thought-out theories or criticisms that are the delight of conversation and the dread of the literary man. There is a touch of the directness and vivid colouring of the school to which he belonged, a terse handling of artistic facts and ideals, that is as much the mark of the real writer as of the painter, and is a refreshing contrast to the luxuriant verbiage and profound vacuities of the defenders of Post-Impressionism. Without intending to be anything of the kind it becomes the note-book of the movement, filled with swift, strong sketches of the aims of a group of eccentrics who were almost excessively in earnest, accounting themselves missionaries to a world that had lost all sense of truth and the power to see primitively—that stimulating illusion of all those who are of the Apostolic Succession.

Now this sketch-book, that is more unconsciously self-revealing than Leonardo's Note Books, Hogarth's Treatise, Reynolds' Discourses, or Fromentin's Maitres d'autrefois, while it would probably be of most value to artists, has an intense interest also for those who care for the deep things of life, character and religion. It is a revelation of the religious soul of a modern artist, and convincing proof that the spirit of the old masters is not dead, though the Raising of Lazarus or the Apotheosis of the Virgin no longer inspire the brush.

What is most striking about it is that it comes from one of those painters whose work has been the easiest of targets for ridicule. How many regretted, honestly enough, the "wasted shilling"—their price of entry to the Grafton—where they saw the jar of flowers, with pot so ill-drawn that it could not possibly stand upright, or the African idol intended to be a portrait, the street of drunken houses, the cube-like apples of acid-green, or the flat figures with boneless limbs? A titter was the mildest form of criticism. Academic minds raged through rooms of blasphemy, occasionally contributing their own share. It was an extraordinary experience for all of us—like taking the Tube to Borneo. None of us will forget the shock of the first picture in the large room—Adam and Eve, by Gauguin. Time has dimmed our ancestors, but we never expected to see them quite so dark: driven from the Euphrates they had taken refuge in Tahiti. Round the walls we went, from picture to picture, ever hoping to get the key to these flaring hues, coarsely savage or splendidly barbaric, these outlines so masculine and determined. Then came the vision of two orchards of Provence, tremulous with sunshine and blossom; trees that really grew out of the earth, petals that were translucent, grass that had all spring in its green. From that moment some of us were more patient in this new strange atmosphere; there must be something serious behind it all. So we turned back to the "Orpheus" of Maurice Denis, and began slowly to feel the decorative charm of the cool blues, greens, and mauves; or the exotic power in Gauguin's riot of hot colours, or the science of Signac's square touches of brilliant mosaic. But now, looking back on it all from two years or more of time-distance, it is Vincent van Gogh who stands out beyond them all, even beyond the Cezannes. The "Orchard in Provence" and the "Garden of Daubigny in Anvers" are the finished and intelligent key to the otherwise mad puzzle; they meant something, these revolutionaries, and that something was intended to increase the joy of the earth, to make men feel its freshness and the almost infinity of surprises in delight. This comes very near a phase of the primitive in religion. It is the other side of the terrible gods.

Taking up the "Letters," one is struck with certain fine traits in the outlook and character of Van Gogh, things that make one understand more why this weird artist holds so affectionate a place in the hearts of his own race. Go from England (where you only hear of him as a crazy dauber who painted in an asylum and committed suicide) and keep your eyes and ears open in Holland, that sanest of countries. If you land at Rotterdam and enter the Boymans Museum, the first picture that greets you on the ground floor, a picture with a screen to itself, is a Van Gogh. It will be the one you will most remember when you leave—a powerful landscape, large and free in handling, with the bending figures of everyday moving through its autumnal trees. In the quiet house of Herr Lambert at Delft, in his bedroom, accompanied by Mauve and others, hangs a chalk drawing by Vincent. Town after town has something of his to show, until you reach Amsterdam, where his self-portrait is an unforgettable revelation of inner fire, of power and dream, all caught in those quiet vivid pastel touches of vermilion and blue and green—that sounds so impossible, yet that makes so many other portraits seem thin and commonplace. And in one house where I stayed, I was caught by a strong drawing, and mentioning it found myself speedily surrounded with portfolios of copies of the "madman's" work. Only the "Letters" can make an ordinary Englishman understand why the Dutch lose their phlegmatic restraint when they pronounce Vincent's surname. For there we find something beyond the mere painter; we are listening to the true soul of all creative art—the spirit that inspires through any medium, from marble to manuscripts. Many will say there is no proportionate achievement, for we live in a school where the standard is too often that of results, and where we forget that

Not on the vulgar mass

Called "Work," must sentence pass, Things done that took the eye and had the price;

But all, the world's coarse thumb

And finger failed to plumb,

So passed in making up the main account;

All I could never be,

All, men ignored in me,

This, I was worth to God, whose wheel the pitcher shaped.'

So, at least, is it with Vincent; the shortest of artistic lives, perhaps eight years of work in all, and most of that spent in feverish experiment. Here and there a work complete—as the brilliant "Bridge" shown this year by La Libre Esthétique in Brussels, where pure sunlight flashed back upon the beholder in spite of the depth of blues in sky and river. But beyond these rare exceptions the general feeling remains of a brief life of passionate sketching, a soul burning itself out in desire to catch the fleeting beauties of the world, its flame glancing day by day towards new things seen and felt. He comes to the easel with almost the urgency of destiny. Born in 1853 in the one land where, in the seventeenth century, every farmer spent part of his savings on the purchase of Dutch pictures, Vincent turns to the world of art for his first employment, serving the house of Goupil at The Hague, and afterwards in London and Paris. The mere handling of beautiful works will not satisfy him, he must make them, and soon starts to make the most beautiful things in the world—human lives. In this art he was not successful; his training to be a schoolmaster in England was too slight, and when, after a brief theological course, he started work among the miners of Belgium, he learned how difficult a medium is humanity to work in; not even time can help, as with old masters, to show the worth of the devoted artist. There is no final system by which to work; the materials are too fluid and react on each other with strange unexpectancies; outward conditions are continually changing the first effects, and there is no last coat of varnish to glorify and harmonise defects. By apparent chance Van Gogh, at the moment he was learning this, took up the pencil and began to draw the people among whom he lived as missionary.

It was the first definite step to painting, and from that moment until his death in 1890 at the age of thirty-seven he is priest in that temple, self-ordained priest. He began a diaconate in the Antwerp School; six months was enough of that. He served under Cruton Mauve, his famous relative; but for even less time. Every waking hour he worked at block or easel, and found himself only when he was alone. When he came to Paris, that inevitable bourne from which so few return as painters, he was weakest when most influenced; he found it hard to keep to the inner vision, which every artist must do, in the midst of a complex and verbose society. It was only when at last he turned to the Midi, and in Provence learned what sunshine means, that he suddenly saw himself a solitary high priest of a solitary faith. In that magical land of sun he bloomed like one of his own flaring sunflowers. All the greys and half tones of the north fled before the eyes of the wild enthusiast. Those friends of his in Paris, old Père Tanguy and Vincent's noble brother Theo, were kept busy out of their own brave self-denials in sending him not only yards of canvas, but countless tubes of the most exhilarating colours, lemon, vermillion, geranium lake, orange, black, antwerp blues, colours that might "fly" fast enough, as the painters say, but that quiver with vitality even to read of them. Here then he worked until the weak physique broke down under the strain of dreams.

But what a devotee! True he painted the Good Samaritan, the Agony in the Garden, and a few other moments of New Testament history; for he lived with his New Testament in hand or mind. But he would reveal, not this to men, but the visible world. Where they lived and worked (as we see in so many of his earlier drawings), or the world of colour they might live in; how to bring a flash of the south into the grey north; to lead them to Nature freshly, as though they heard her speak for the first amazing moment; these were some of the elements of what was verily his Gospel. In that he could serve them, open a heaven close to their eyes, bring the sailor as he landed at Marseilles and saw such work in a brasserie thoughts that quickened deeper things in him. What matter if it be fiercely, rudely done? This man wanted to produce, and evermore produce—not to stay halting and stammering over academic weeks of "finish." He carved out his own new rough way, after his Master, who was not Rembrandt or Titian, but one who flung traditions aside with a "Moses said . . . but I say . . ." It is almost like seeing an early Christian at work in the catacombs, brightening up the dark corridors and chapels with pure colours and crude designs, and an odd blending of Orpheus and Christ. He was keen to express the facts or their effect upon him, and would not give his time to that battle of technique which used up so much of the strength of the nineteenth century. He would have nothing whatever to do with ritualism in art; his aim was the living realities, and especially their human significance. These life was all too short for him to unfold; he could but rush at canvas after canvas and get down what he might. "He seemed hardly to paint his pictures," says Meier-Graefe, "but to breathe them upon the canvas, panting and gasping." But ever about him was a presence that might seem strange company in the minds of those who scoff. Here and there in the "Letters" is a quiet phrase that tells much to those who read with a desire to understand Van Gogh. One such passage may be a fitting note on which to close. "Christ lived serenely as an artist, as a greater artist than any other; for he despised marble, clay and the palette, and worked upon living flesh. This marvellous artist created neither statues, nor pictures, nor even books; he created living men, immortals. In such pure altitudes art becomes a creative force, a pure creative power."

EDGAR DAPLYN.

A FRANCISCAN MYSTIC.

FEW readers of Miss Underhill's "Mysticism" can close her book without some desire to follow up a few, at any rate, of the bypaths of mystic literature of which she gives such fascinating glimpses. One such path is made easily accessible to English readers in the translation from the French of Ozanam's "Franciscan Poets," which has recently been undertaken by Miss Nellen. (David Nutt.) Students of mysticism will value the book chiefly for the two chapters on the Franciscan mystic, Jacopone da Todi, for the discovery of whom we are largely indebted to Ozanam. Miss Underhill quotes Jacopone frequently, and her readers will have had their appetites sufficiently whetted to welcome a larger acquaintance with his beautiful poems; whilst all those who care for the Franciscan spirit, and its manifestation in the popular poetry of Italy, will find much to interest them in the present volume.

Not many of us, probably, know very much about the original of Matthew Arnold's familiar sonnet,

That son of Italy who tried to blow,
Ere Dante came, the trump of sacred song, but his history is a very interesting one, albeit somewhat perplexing to so orthodox a Catholic as M. Ozanam. Jacopone da Todi was born about the middle of the thirteenth century, and started life, like St. Francis, lapped in wealth, popularity and pleasure, but with the added brilliance of considerable intellectual eminence as a Doctor of Law. The awakening came when his beautiful young wife was crushed to death beneath a falling stand whilst watching some public games, and the discovery of which Matthew Arnold sings was made:

Shuddering they drew her garments off, and found
A robe of sackcloth next the smooth white skin.

From henceforth Jacopone, as he was now contemptuously called, was a changed man. He had entered on the Purgative Way; the brilliant lawyer was assailing the doors of the Brothers Minor with his verse:—

"I wish to prove myself a man, to deny myself, and bear my cross. In a word, to commit a singular folly. I am going to cast myself headlong among the rustics and fools, and those who are obsessed with a holy madness.

"Christ, Thou knowest my thoughts and that I despise that world in which I once cherished a desire to master philosophy. . . .

"Now listen to my new intent. I have determined to pose as a fool, ignorant and clownish, and as a man full of eccentricities. . . .

"I will become a contemplative soul and triumph over the world; I will find peace and happiness in an exquisite agony. . . .

"Lord, grant me to know and do Thy will here below, then care I not if damned or saved I be."

He was "drowning his songs with his tears, and when asked why he wept thus, he cried, 'Oh, I am weeping because Love is not loved.'"

He was fearless as Dante in his condemnation of hypocrisy and wickedness in high places. To Celestine V., who has gone down to posterity as "he who from cowardice made the great refusal," he addressed these bold words on his elevation to the papal See:—"What are you going to do, Pietro da Morrone? You are put to the test: we shall see for what work the meditations of your cell have prepared you. If you disappoint the expectations of the world, a curse will follow." After this, one is hardly surprised to find him, later on, excommunicated and imprisoned for his opposition to Boniface VIII., whom he apostrophises thus:—

"O Pope Boniface! Thou hast staked much for a worldly life; I do not think that thou wilt be content to leave it.

"Just as the salamander lives in the fire, so findest thou thy joy and delight in scandal.

"Thou pourest scorn on all religious rule, and thou doest blasphemy and despise all law.

"No king, emperor, or any human being, has ever left thee without bearing away a cruel wound.

"O shameful avarice! unquenchable thirst which can absorb so much money, and yet remains thirsty for more!"

With the accession of Benedict XI., however, Jacopone was absolved, and his last years were spent in peace, with nothing to mar the beauty of that illumination and ultimate union which crowns the pilgrims of the Mystic Way.

Here is an extract from one of the poems of his old age, which recalls Francis Thompson vividly enough to make one realise how near akin are the mystics of every age :—

“O Love, divine Love! Why hast Thou taken possession of me? Thou seemest to have become enamoured of me to the point of folly!

“I will give Thee no rest. Thou hast laid siege to my five doors: hearing, sight, taste, smell, and touch. . . .

“Love, I am filled with the desire to escape Thee!

“Love, I flee in order to release my heart from Thee. I see that Thou dost transform me, and makest me to become a love so like Thee that I no longer dwell in my own heart, and I can no longer find my own way back there.”

And here is an extract from his beautiful hymn to Poverty, in which we seem to hear again the accents of St. Francis :—

“O tender love of poverty, how deeply should we love thee! Poverty, my little one, yet citizen of heaven, nothing earthly can awaken thy desires.

“Poverty, great kingdom, thou hast the world in thy power, for thou possessest sovereign rule over all the goods that thou despisest. Poverty, thou mine of wisdom, in despising riches, the more thou humblest thy will, the more swiftly does she gain liberty.

“Gracious poverty, ever generous and joyful! Who can say that it is a base thing ever to love poverty?”

Jacopone's biographer confesses that “it is not without hesitation” that he enters upon the history of this extraordinary man, whose mysticism bordering on the heterodox, and whose open defiance of his spiritual over-lords is sadly disconcerting to a very rigid Catholicism. Indeed, Ozanam's book is written from a curiously narrow standpoint. He finds it necessary to dwell a good deal on “the faults of the righteous, and, in condemning the errors of this holy but misguided man,” to glorify that Church which, “in pardoning the violence of Jacopone, showed once more that she had sounded the depths of the human heart.” In order to make out a better case, he is sometimes tempted to deliberate suppression of facts—as, for instance, in his attempt to whitewash Boniface VIII. With reference to the forcible seizure of Boniface in 1303, he says that “several even of the political enemies of Boniface remembered that they were Christians, and Dante lashes in immortal verse those who had made Christ prisoner in the person of His Vicar.” Students of Dante will, however, remember that, though in Par. xx. 86 he condemns the outrage on the papal office,

“I see the fleur-de-lys enter Alagna, and in his Vicar Christ made captive,” yet in Inf. xix. 52 Dante is so anxious that there shall be no mistake about the ultimate destination of the hated tyrant, that, though Boniface did not die for three and a half years after the Vision, he makes Nicholas III., whom he meets in the chasm of the Simonists, think that the poet himself is he :—

“Art thou there already standing, Boniface? art thou there already standing? By several years the writ has lied to me.

“Art thou so quickly sated with that wealth, for which thou didst not fear to seize the comely Lady by deceit, and then make havoc of her?”

In spite, however, of this very decided bias, Ozanam is really very sympathetic to his subject, and “The Franciscan Poets” is a book which cannot fail to appeal to all who love the literature of mysticism, and to all who recognise that “poverty,” as Ozanam finely puts it, “is no longer merely the humble rule of the followers of St. Francis, it is the law which governs the spiritual world.”

V. E. CRAFER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

ALMSGIVING AND RELIGION.

SIR,—Your remarks on this subject will find an echo in the hearts of your readers who are disposed to charitable work. With the example and teaching of Jesus before them they feel that as Christians they must do something. With the practice of the churches before them, they are tempted to make their own church the starting point. But they soon encounter the process known among the charitable as “overlapping,” and the dreadful feeling invades them that they are being imposed upon. Sometimes they persist, and console themselves by reflecting upon the one genuine case they may have aided out of a large number of doubtful ones. Many are prepared to admit that a church is not the best unit of social activity, and only continue on the old lines because a better way has not disclosed itself. “Artifex” mentions the Civic League of Help. As an ex-helper of the Manchester League I venture to endorse his remarks. Where a League exists the charitable work of a church should be linked on to it.

There are not a few towns, however, where it is not possible to organise a Civic League. In these places the churches remain the units of social activity, if there be such a thing. The county borough of Bootle lacks a Civic League, and, unfortunately, is deprived of the attentions of the Liverpool Voluntary Aid Society. Happily there is a progressive Education Authority. Necessitous scholars are fed at school, the Canteen Committee distributes clogs and clothing; the school doctors are assisted by a paid nurse. There is an inspection clinic. Many of your readers may not be aware that the Education (Administrative Provisions) Act, 1907, allows Education Authorities to associate with them voluntary workers who shall seek the wellbeing of school children. The voluntary workers are coming together as School Care Committees. The great advantage of these Care Committees is that they are officially recognised, and act in co-operation with the teachers and other public officials. With the Council school as the unit of activity it is possible to reach the poorest child, and thus scientifically heal social wrongs. Only here and there will an Education Authority set up a Care Committee. As a rule the impulse must come from outside. I write to suggest that our own churches, with their special emphasis upon the practical side of Christianity, are the best starting places for organising School Care Committees. I should be very pleased to answer any inquiries.—Yours, &c.,

WALTER SHORT.

Bootle Free Church, Jan. 31, 1914.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

RECENT AMERICAN BOOKS.

HERE are five volumes recently issued by the American Unitarian Association (Boston), whose publishing motto is “In Luce Veritatis.” That the truth in whose light is the only path towards perfection has different aspects comes home as we read these books. One is entitled Freedom and the Churches (price $1), and gathers up nine addresses given a year ago at a Liberal Religious Congress at Rochester, New York—a further chapter being specially contributed to this volume. The ten authors represent as many different religious fellowships, and each sets forth in turn the service rendered by his community to religious and civil liberty. And each is fully justified. Baptist, Congregationalist, Friend, Jew, Methodist, Presbyterian, Reformed Church, Unitarian, Universalist, and “Religious Radical”—they do all speak of that Spirit which gives freedom to man. They record various endeavours to serve this Spirit. Each has noble names and worthy deeds to tell of. True, the course has been less open here, more there; but all have pursued it in some measure, if none perfectly. The volume is an encouragement to men of broad outlook, and a rebuke to any who in dejection or in conceit have claimed to be the only friends of free religion and free citizenship. Our friend, Dr. Wendte, to whom these conferences are chiefly indebted, edits the book.

Dr. David Starr Jordan, Chancellor of Stanford University, adds one more to his numerous occasional essays, in America's Conquest of Europe—a title to be wisely read. It was originally published (in French) with a title less startling—“What America can Teach to Europe.” It is a fine plea for sense in matters international, based on the experience of the States of North America. A supplementary address was given at Ghent last August, and deals with the Peace Treaty ratified there a century ago between Great Britain and the States. The little book is clear-headed and timely, and well deserves to be read. (Price 60 cents.)

Evolution is the principal theme of two substantial volumes which preserve some of the wit and wisdom of a notable Unitarian minister, the Rev. John C. Kimball, who died in 1910, in his 78th year. Those of us who have had any long acquaintance with the Christian Register (Boston) well remember many articles from his pen—racy, straightforward, incisive comments on life and religion. Mr. Kimball, who kept up his literary activity to the last, had a thoroughgoing belief in the compatibility of religious theory and culture with an acceptance of the evolution scheme according to Herbert Spencer. One of the present volumes is entitled The Romance of Evolution; it will give an admirable illustration, in days to come, of the dauntless courage, even eagerness, with which the Unitarian preacher in the last third of the nineteenth century set his face toward the dawn of a theism based wholly on science. Some of these chapters, we learn, were delivered as lectures to an Ethical Society; the whole book would probably help a good many people who, for want of skilful guidance, have failed to find room in their thought for the primal conceptions of God and the spiritual life. Certainly, many a young preacher would find rich material in these well-stored pages; and brethren who knew our own William Binns will often be reminded of him by Mr. Kimball's style. In the companion book, Ethical Aspects of Evolution, serious problems are attacked which press for solution; the reader will gather that Mr. Kimball's verdicts were on the optimist and affirmative side, but far from weakly so. A few representative sermons are included in this volume; one of them on "Stand-Bys," is particularly delightful. Others show us the author manfully standing by his Unitarianism in the face of the "Liberal Orthodoxy" which still moors itself to the old dogmas. Altogether the two volumes give us something very typical of the vigour and temper of the American Unitarian preacher. (Price $1.25 each.)

The fifth and last of our books is the most important to-day. Its title is Bergson and the Modern Spirit (price $1.35), the author is Dr. George Rowland Dodson. Books on Bergson abound; Dr. Dodson is evidently acquainted with the many previous writers in this field, but has not considered them exhaustive. The present writer would have much regretted if he had so thought, for (after creating some misgivings by the opening chapter or two) the new book turns out to be distinctly one of the best of its kind. The author adds to the vivacity which we somehow expect from an American writer, even in philosophy, a precision and perspicuity too often lacking, especially in philosophy. Modestly confessing that some parts of Matière et Mémoire beat him (whom they do not?), he sets himself the task of displaying Bergson's characteristic methods and conclusions, and accomplishes it with remarkable success. It is obvious that in the author Bergson has a keenly sympathetic hearer, especially in that alluring but risky flight of his towards the mystic heights of inward vision. Dr. Dodson rather surprises us, not unpleasantly, by his wholehearted praise of Emerson as a "sage" and philosopher; is this a sign that the fashion to belittle yesterday's prophet is already passing away, and that Emerson is rising to his permanent place in the ranks of thinkers? Of course there is no space to enlarge here on the many highly suggestive points raised by Dr. Dodson. His reply to the "mechanist" criticism of Bergson written under the sponsorship of Sir Ray Lankester (not "Lancaster," p. 89, et seq.), is apt and adequate; and the long chapter on "Bergson and Pragmatism" (though containing much more about Pragmatism than Bergson, and seeming to be really a specially written essay introduced here) is highly exhilarating and instructive. In fact, when Dr. Dodson is writing as a philosophical student he is very good; it is only when he has to become an apologist for religion that he suggests weakness and mere generality. Not that he has fallen into the pit of which he is very well aware, and where some preachers in a hurry have found themselves. Bergson may have value for theism, or he may not; till we know something more clearly as to his conclusions on several points of critical importance we may do well to be wary, and at most (if we tend that way) to argue with Dr. Dodson that thus and thus Bergson's method must emerge. In regard to two matters, not discussed by the author, further light is very desirable.

As readers of Bergson will remember, he conceives of the creative vital impulse making its way, or rather its ways, experimentally, where it can, in the search—conscious or not—for a truly "free" activity. In the vegetable sphere it attains a utilitarian faculty of storing up potential energy, which is released in turn by the mechanisms of animal life; but in this sphere mere "torpor" prevails, while in the animal sphere there is "lethargy" among molluscs and echinoderms, and "instinct" and "intellect" are disproportionately large in insects and in men, respectively. Men, indeed, may as time goes on, happily develop more of "instinct"—the direct intuition—to repair the damages done to truth by mere "intellect"; but for the rest, Life would appear to have reached "dead-ends," in its experiments, and at each it stands at terminus. But is such a ragged plan of existence satisfactory, or answerable to the actual world in which we live? Having flung out this line and that, is the World-Force so destitute of economy as not to be able to relate them all throughout to its trunk system? And, as a matter of fact, is not man what he is precisely because he is in such a world—with all his "created" neighbours, torpid, lethargic, instinctive, or intellectual, as they may be? As to the question of "intuition," again, whence (we must inquire) are those "values" of truth and beauty which confront us most surely in our most deeply living moments? Dr. Dodson very cleverly exposes (with the aid of Prof. J. B. Pratt) the futility of the attempt to escape a transcendent view of "truth," dismissing the merely pragmatist view with an adroit quotation of the form of oath suggested by Prof. Royce: "I promise to tell whatever is expedient and nothing but what is expedient, so help me future experience." But, then, how has the conviction of a "truth" beyond the "expedient," and of a "beautiful" beyond art and beckoning it on, pressed in upon Life most surely where it has risen highest in our human nature? And whence, and what are these transcendents?

It is interesting to observe, in the last place, how fully Dr. Dodson subscribes to the doctrine of Dr. L. P. Jacks, as given in the "Alchemy of Thought," that no view of the universe, whether Haeckel's or another's, can be regarded as other than mutilated that leaves the philosopher standing outside. Obviously, this reflection effectually bars the way to a materialist and "mechanist" solution of the world-problem, as Huxley undoubtedly saw at times, if not always—a fact which seems to have escaped the author, who classes him without qualification among the "materialists." The question still comes back, as Dr. Martineau said, to whether we start from within or without. Too much modern thinking has been done as if the thinker himself were a negligible quantity. Dr. Dodson's book, besides being extremely useful in the special work of popularising Bergsonism, certainly gives the promise of larger work from the same pen, and if he will only be merciful enough to give more references to his quotations, we shall be the more in his debt. Perhaps it is too much to hope that the book we want contrasting and comparing Martineau with Bergson will come from him, but it is a book to be done.

W. G. T.

JOHN WOOLMAN, HIS LIFE AND OUR TIMES. Being a Study in Applied Christianity. By W. Teignmouth Shore. London: Macmillan & Co. 5s. net.

THIS is a disappointing book, which offers in its title a promise that is hardly fulfilled. Much has been done of recent years by such writers as Professor Rufus Jones and William C. Braithwaite to bring home to us the profound human interest of the early Quaker history and to throw fresh light on its spiritual significance, as bearing upon present-day religious thought and life; and John Woolman stands, in the simplicity of his own record, as the most perfect example of what the Society of Friends could produce in a later period of the history among the American colonists of the eighteenth century. There are many who have responded gratefully, at any rate, to the latter part of Charles Lamb's well-known suggestion: "Get the writings of John Woolman by heart, and love the early Quakers." That saying Mr. Teignmouth Shore has printed for a motto on his title page, and we turned eagerly to a book that seemed to offer a new study of Woolman. But we do not find in it what we hoped for. The story of Woolman's life is told, indeed, and for the most part in the words of the Journal itself, whole pages of it being sometimes transferred bodily into the narrative. There are passages from Woolman's other writings, and a certain amount of illustrative matter, topographical and historical, is introduced. But there is no study in the sense of illuminating interpretation of the record. The reader finds the material presented to him thrown together not in the happiest manner, and he is left to make the study for himself. We confess that, to our mind, anyone who should wish for the first time to make acquaintance with Woolman, would do better to buy a shilling copy of the Journal (in Everyman's Library or one of Headley Bros.' editions, or Whittier's Centenary edition), and in quiet companionship let the book make its own impression. For an adequate study of the Journal, which would be a very valuable gift, we have still to wait.

CHRIST AND WAR. By William E. Wilson, B.D. London: James Clarke & Co. 1s. and 1s. 6d.

"THAT war in which we are all called to take our share involves no destruction of men, but the destruction of evil; no conquest of nations, but the conquest of self." These words occur at the end of one of the chapters in "Christ and War," and they fitly sum up the teaching which it has been the author's purpose to set forth at the request of certain members of the Society of Friends to which he belongs. They also form a point of union between pacifists of all schools, from the enthusiastic followers of Norman Angell with their insistence on economic facts and the training of the individual mind, to the followers of Tolstoy (who receives no direct mention, curiously enough, in an otherwise admirable little book) with their doctrine of non-resistance and obedience to the law of love. For, however glibly we may talk about the folly and futility of war and the reasonableness of methods of arbitration, war will not be abolished until the mass of men have themselves learned to be more restrained in speech and action, and until they are firmly convinced in their minds that it is both ridiculous from a practical point of view, and wrong from a moral point of view, to try to get the upper hand, individually or collectively, by physical force. No reform can be permanently established while it is so far in advance of the prevailing sentiment of the times as to be completely unintelligible to the majority of those whose actions it will restrict; and it is surely obvious that peace will never achieve her lasting triumphs while nations are still wasted by internal strife, swayed by selfish ambitions, and tormented by the constant fear of rebellion and anarchy which is one of the direct fruits of social injustice. Upon this, then, we are all agreed, that the work of educating public opinion with a view to effecting a complete change in the thoughts and ideals of men is of paramount importance as far as the Peace Movement is concerned. Whether it is right for a Christian to bear arms and fight it must be left to the individual to decide. Mr. Wilson argues the matter from the Quaker standpoint in a way which to many will doubtless not be sufficiently convincing; and indeed, though we whole-heartedly accept his conclusions, we could wish that this branch of an important subject had been dealt with at greater length and supported more effectively by historical illustrations. A useful bibliography is appended, and references are given at the end of every chapter to the works of other authors dealing with the subject of war and peace.

In "The Foundations of Duty" (London: Williams & Norgate, 3s. 6d. net) the Bishop of Carlisle has given us a series of chapters on the ethics of common life, especially in their relation to religious faith. "The Duty of Thinking," "The Duty of Believing," "The Culture of Conscience," are some of his suggestive titles. Those who are familiar with Dr. Digges' robust common sense, his broad Protestant sympathies and his dislike of clericalism will be prepared for the directness and simplicity of his teaching and his concern for the needs of the average lay mind. His interest is not in problems of emancipation and re-adjustment, but in what he conceives to be the plain path of Christian duty. In the last two chapters he pleads for the permanent value of the Decalogue and the Christian obligation of Sunday.

IN "A Manor Book of Ottery Saint Mary," edited by Catherine Durning Whetham and Margaret her daughter (London: Longmans, Green & Co., 7s. 6d. net), we have at once a pleasant chapter of local history and an interesting experiment in education. "This little book," so the preface tells us, "contains the result of a series of schoolroom lessons in local history made possible by a fortunate combination of the requisite material within the range of a day's journeying." Fortunately, the available material was ample, and much use has been made of a survey of the manor compiled in the seventeenth century. The volume might well be used as an introduction to the study of social conditions and the development of land tenure in England, which have created so many of the urgent problems of modern politics; but it should also prove an incentive to the use of similar local records in education. At present these records, though they exist in abundance, are the monopoly of a small band of antiquarians instead of being the common property of the people of the district, stimulating their curiosity and helping them to understand the conditions of their own life. Even an intelligent use of the romance of local place names in school lessons would do much in this direction. Mr. Whetham has added some account of the dependent Manor of Cadhay, of which he is the fortunate owner.

We have received the second issue of the King's Weigh House "Pulpit." It contains an admirable sermon on Rewards, by the Rev. E. W. Lewis. The "Pulpit," which is issued monthly, is got up in an attractive manner in a small size just suited to the pocket. Copies can be obtained by post from Mr. E. Howard, 24, Inverness-terrace, W.; single copies 1½d., post free, 12 copies for 1s., post free. They can also be ordered through any bookseller or newsagent, or from the publishers, Messrs. Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

We have also received the first number of the "Religious Freeman and Christian Thinker," edited by the Rev. H. D. Roberts. In form it is a four-page leaflet, printed on excellent paper (a distinct point in its favour), and very suitable for distribution. The present issue contains articles written for the plain man on "Do we still Need Religion?" "Religion and the Kikuyu Rift," and "The New Social Enthusiasm." It is published by the Liverpool Booksellers Co., Ltd., 70, Lord-street, Liverpool, and will be forwarded for one year free on receipt of 6d. to cover postage.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & SONS, LTD.—Poetical Works: Edward Dowden. 2 vols. 6s. each.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.:—The Mediaeval Mind: Henry Osborn Taylor. Second Edition. 2 vols. 21s. net. Our Task in India: Bernard Lucas. 2s. 6d. net.

MR. DAVID NUTT:—The Religious Philosophy of Rudolf Eucken: The Rev. W. Stuart Macgowan, M.A., LL.D. 2s. net.

MESSRS. SHERRATT & HUGHES:—Manchester City League of Help Handbook. 1s. net.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN:—The Unfolding and Personality: H. Thiselton Mark. 1s. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

British Review, Nineteenth Century, The Vineyard, Review of Theology and Philosophy.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

JESUS, OUR TEACHER AND FRIEND.

V.—THE POWER OF LOVE.

THE picture in the Gospel, which came at the end of the passage I asked you to look at last week (Mark ii. 1-12), is one of the most vivid scenes in the ministry of Jesus, in which he is exercising his wonderful power as a healer of disease. Whatever we may think of what he did for those who were suffering from physical pain and bodily infirmity or illness, he certainly had the power to heal diseases of the mind, and heart, and soul, and that power, as a good physician, a friend and teacher of the people, he still has over his fellow-men for all who will learn of him, and in true companionship come to be of the same mind, and share in the spirit of his life.

This picture, which I want you to look at again, shows him to us as the healer both of mind and body. The man "sick of the palsy," who was brought to Jesus by the four others, who carried the mattress or stretcher on which he lay, was not one of the unhappy demoniacs over whom Jesus appears to have exercised his wonderful calming and healing powers, a modern parallel to which I quoted to you last week from the Journal of George Fox. He was suffering from another kind of disease, some form of paralysis, a loss of nerve energy, which left him with trembling limbs, unable to walk. And to such a one it seems quite possible that Jesus would be able to bring relief and healing, as in the case of the demoniacs, by the insight of his sympathy, the power of a pure, unselfish love, and the commanding energy of his nature. That seems to be what actually happened.

The house in which Jesus was teaching at the time was crowded to the doors, and the men who brought the poor paralytic to be healed could not get in. But it was easy to get up from the outside on to the flat roof of the house, and to break it up

(it may have been a very light covering) over the place where Jesus sat. Then they could let down the mattress, with the man lying on it, into the midst of the crowd.

The people were naturally astonished, and some of them, perhaps, impatient and indignant, as the disciples were when the mothers came with their children and interrupted their talk with the Master. But Jesus, looking upon the poor sufferer, saw much more than they could see, and understood at once. It was a common belief of the people that the sufferings of bodily illness were a punishment for sin, and we can imagine how that poor man may have thought it was so in his case, and with that belief was brought to Jesus. He had heard of the great Teacher, the new Prophet of the Kingdom of God, and how he had helped so many sufferers, and in his utter weariness of himself and the misery of his penitence, he longed to be brought to this strong helper, in the hope that he also might be healed. Jesus was touched by the confidence of those who brought him, but most of all by the look in the man's own face. What he saw was the wistful longing of the sufferer for relief, for new vigour of life, but deeper still the longing of misery and penitence to be forgiven, to have a heart once more at peace with God. And, understanding this, with his deep insight into the law of goodness and his perfect trust in the love of God, looking upon the man with his own heart overflowing with that love, and with sympathy and desire to help, his first words were to give the poor sufferer the assurance that all was well: "Son, thy sins are forgiven." He was not thinking of himself, but of the Father's great love and compassion, ready to welcome such a one back again into the joy and peace of the true life. You will realise that, and with what deep feeling Jesus said the words, if you remember his story of the Prodigal (Luke xv. 11-32), and what it was in that parable that he desired all the people to understand.

But there were those standing round who did not understand, and thought that Jesus was presumptuously claiming for himself the right to forgive sins, and so was guilty of blasphemy against God. To them, knowing their hearts, the reply of Jesus was, that a man who understands the truth of God has the right to declare it, in his name, and is bound to do so, where the truth is needed. That, I think, is how we should take the words, "that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins." As it is put in the Gospel, it may be intended to imply that Jesus was claiming a special right, as the Messiah, to speak in the name of God. But if he actually used there the expression "Son of man," it may simply mean, in the common Hebrew phrase, "a man," "a man, who knows what God's love is, has the right on earth to forgive sins," or to give the assurance that sins are forgiven to the truly penitent, and surely this was true of Jesus at that moment. He was not speaking in self-assertion, but out of a heart overflowing with the love of God, with absolute conviction of the truth he spoke, that the Father's love does forgive and heal; and in the true spirit of the prophets of old he declared it, "in the name of the Lord."

Then he turned again to the sufferer, to complete the act of help and healing he had begun. The first impulse came with the assurance of forgiveness, the peace and the expectant hope it brought, and to this must now be added the gift of strength to will and to do; with rejoicing confidence that the Divine Love that forgives will also cleanse and uplift the inner man and at the same time the enfeebled bodily frame, Jesus looked the man full in the face, with the commanding and encouraging look of power and sympathy and love, and bade him "Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thy house." And the man did it. The burden of self-despair, of distrust, of helplessness was lifted off, and in the strength of the love and confidence that enfolded him, he found that he could stand upon his feet again and walk. So he went out, while the people were amazed and filled with rejoicing at this glorious power which God had given to his prophet, who made them feel that the Kingdom of God was indeed close at hand.

How far the power of Jesus may have gone to heal bodily disease by his simple presence and touch and word, we cannot tell; but, whatever it was, we may be sure that it came out of the heart of his own pure and self-devoted life, resting with perfect trust in the love of God, of which his own overflowing love and sympathy became the instrument, always eager to help. What remains with us is the inward truth of that life of love and service, which lights up the scenes of his ministry, as he went about among his people doing good. With him we learn to enter into the true spirit of life, as children of our Father in heaven.

V. D. D.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

THE MANCHESTER DISTRICT.

BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

THIS New Year, like every year that has gone before, brings us face to face with new tasks and problems in this great centre of industry, and there is gratifying evidence that they are of the sort to brace our energies and call for a deeper faith. We have recently had to bow beneath losses that are inevitable, through the removal by the death of such memorable figures as Miss Gaskell and Mrs. Thomas Ashton, and we also mourn with friends outside, but only just outside our district, at the departure of Mr. Alderman W. Healey and Mr. William Woolley. But in all such instances death does but establish and deepen the impression made upon the whole of society by high and noble character. Our own churches are reminded by such events that they must seek for ever fresh springs of inspiration to meet the changing conditions of the age, and its challenge to show what we have to give to the world. It is good to know that these needs are being strongly felt. The autumn meeting of the District Association, as a result of this feeling, took a new shape. Instead of the regulation sermon, anthems, public meeting, &c., devotional services were arranged for the Saturday afternoon and evening, leaving time for silent prayer. Papers were read on the more intimate, spiritual aspects of church work. The same purpose was kept in view at a special united service held at Oldham-road Church on January 28, when addresses were delivered on "Knowing God," and on "Worship." We shall have to seek out more of these unusual and unstaled ways of reviving the religious life. The Tuesday Mid-day Services at Cross-street Chapel have evidently met a want that has been felt by a certain number of our people. It is too early as yet to say whether the experiment will develop into a permanent arrangement. The attempt has been made since Christmas to continue the services without the help of newspaper advertisements, and after the break during the holidays there was a falling-off in the attendance. This, however, seems now to have been overcome. It is hoped that business men will find the quiet service and the beautiful organ recitals a true spiritual oasis amidst the hurrying city life. The Study Circle for Social Questions, which takes its impulse from the National Conference Union for Social Service, and from memories of Swanwick, is another sign of the times. The book under discussion is the first of the volumes entitled "Converging Views of Social Reform." If the members of the Circle which has been meeting at the Memorial Hall can carry their enthusiasm into the individual churches and set up Study Circles in each of them, a fine work will be accomplished. We cannot help feeling that there must have been some dying down of interest in certain of our older forms of activity to cause the disappearance of the Sunday School Union. It is hoped that the larger body, the S.S. Association, may be able to take over all the work that is necessary, with the exception, of course, of the Whit Sunday Festival in the Free Trade Hall. This is too characteristic and too rooted an institution to be managed by any other than a Manchester committee, and we look forward with confidence to the continuance of that joyful and impressive gathering. One other Sunday School activity that stands out among the year's interests is the appeal of the President of the Association, Mr. Hugh Broadbent, for money to complete the fund for the purchase and enlargement of Barleycrofts, Great Hucklow. Here is a concrete piece of social work that bears directly on the welfare of our elder girls and women who need rest or "convalescent" help. And the more ordinary work of the congregations and missions goes on, with steady and often unrecorded support of zeal and faithfulness which are beyond praise. Longsight is to be congratulated on its renovation and other schemes. Bazaars and sales of work are always with us, but it is a special pleasure to record the heartening success of such efforts at Altrincham and Chorlton-cum-Hardy. To meet an Altrincham man nowadays (especially if it be the minister) is to taste the sweets of optimism in its rarest essence, for have they not passed their Congregational centenary? The whole district rejoices with them. The same cheerfulness descends upon us when we think of the recent revival of interest and activity at Upper Brook-street. When the circuit scheme was discontinued, there was in some quarters a natural feeling of dismay with regard to the future. The situation, however, became a stimulus to the Upper Brook-street people, and they reacted to it in a way that deserves to be remembered as an example in the meeting of difficulties. They decided to throw themselves frankly on the good feeling of their members, and especially of the young men and women. The result was beyond all expectation. Church life has in so many cases become so much a matter for a few officials and influential people, that we do not realise what resources there are in the general membership and the general mass of our friends outside all membership. It is these resources that have been drawn upon in this instance. The same lesson is to be learnt from the spread among our congregation of the Women's League, for here, again, there are resources that we have scarcely even begun to organise. Manchester district may well learn from the united women's meeting at Stalybridge in November. For such things we need all the new life that comes to us. The settlement of Mr. Flower at Sale, of Mr. Redfern at Swinton, of Mr. Lewis at Pendleton, of Mr. Tavener at Willert-street, and of Mr. Davies at Blackley, will be welcomed among our reinforcements. We are all glad to hear that Mr. J. J. Wright is better, and will soon be active again at Chowbent. And how proud they must all be at Chowbent of their grand old man, Mr. Charles Eckersley, who recently celebrated his 80th birthday. But we have to regret the removal from the district and from Moss Side of Mr. Cunliffe Fox. From the active business side of our district organisation his departure to Bath takes a force and an indefatigable industry that will be impossible to replace. The amount of secretarial work devoted to the interests of our churches by Mr. Fox has been a continual cause of admiration among all who knew about it, and the deepest gratitude of his colleagues, and the best wishes of all, go with him.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE. ANNUAL MEETING.

A LARGE and influential meeting of subscribers and friends of the Unitarian Home Missionary College was held on Wednesday in the Memorial Hall, Manchester, under the Presidency of Mr. Richard D. Holt, M.P., who was supported by Sir W. H. Talbot, Mr. F. W. Monks, J.P., Mr. J. O. Kerfoot, J.P., Mr. G. H. Leigh, J.P., Mr. A. S. Thew, J.P., Mr. G. S. Woolley, Mr. Albert Nicholson, the Revs. C. J. Street, Dr. Mellone, H. McLachlan, E. L. H. Thomas, H. D. Roberts, Alfred Hall, and many other ministers, laymen, and lay women.

The President, in proposing the adoption of the report and balance sheet, referred with regret to the severance of Mr. J. R. Beard's official connection with the College, for which he had acted as treasurer for 28 years. He regarded the decision to extend the theological course to three years for all students as a step in the right direction, since it was necessary in these days for the students to attain the highest pitch of excellence. It was absolutely essential for the welfare of their ministry that they should maintain the very high standard which that ministry had always possessed, not only for piety, but for learning. The religious body to which they belonged was not one which could well be served by an uninstructed ministry. They certainly required, as a body which made its appeal more especially to reason, and had been in the habit of cultivating independence of thought and independence of character, that this appeal should be based on knowledge and accurate information. There was, he believed, a growing demand for churches which were free in thought and practice, and it would be found that their churches were free of deliberate conviction and not by mere accident. He also drew attention to the financial aspect, and considered that the College was worthy of generous support.

A special feature of the meeting was the recognition of the long and faithful services of Mr. J. R. Beard, J.P., and a resolution of thanks was moved by Sir W. H. Talbot in an eloquent and reminiscent speech, which was ably seconded by Mr. F. W. Monks, and carried with acclamation. The eclipses occasioned by his trying illnesses, Sir Wm. Talbot pointed out, were not able to blot out the sunshine that was in his disposition and character, for he was able to kindle in others a thrill of enthusiasm corresponding to his own. The President was re-elected for a second year, and Mr. J. Hall Brooks was appointed treasurer, on the motion of Mr. G. H. Leigh, who considered that never in the history of the College had it stood in a better position. The Rev. C. J. Street seconded the resolutions. The officers and committee were re-elected, the name of Mr. Percy Healey being added to the Committee. Thanks to the visitors, examiners and medical officers were accorded on the proposition of the Rev. E. L. H. Thomas, seconded by the Principal. The meeting closed with thanks to the President, proposed by Mr. Edward Talbot, and seconded by Mr. J. Taylor-Jones.

THE PROTECTION OF ANIMALS IN ITALY.

AN interesting account has been sent to us, taken from an American journal, of the work of the Society for the Protection of Animals in Rome, of which Mr. Leonard Hawksley, the son of Mr. Charles Hawksley, is honorary director. The work of those interested in animal protection in Italy has always been encompassed with difficulty, but it has been heroically carried on ever since the memorable meeting in 1874 at the house of William and Mary Howitt, when a number of influential people gathered together to see what could be done. Mr. Leonard Hawksley first became associated with the humane efforts resulting from this meeting in 1895, when, passing through Naples as a pleasure-seeker, he was so horrified at the sufferings of the animals he saw there that he resolved to return to Naples to live and occupy himself in activities for the amelioration of their condition. Under his able administration an incredible amount of good work was done by the "Società Napoletana per la Protezione degli Animali," founded in 1891 by the Princess Mele Barese (née Mackworth Praed), and, in spite of a dastardly attack by street roughs who nearly murdered him one night, as the result of which his health was shattered for a considerable time, Mr. Hawksley persevered in his efforts, and gradually succeeded in winning the respect and admiration of the cabmen and carters who at first could only speak of him with hatred. Mr. Hawksley is doing the same kind of work in Rome, where he now lives, as he did in Naples, and the society to which he devotes his time and energies has been incorporated by decree of the King, and received the special benediction of the Pope. In one room of the building in the Piazza di Spagna the walls are literally covered with implements of torture such as are used constantly by ignorant and cruel drivers, and have been confiscated by the inspectors. In another room are the lethal chambers in which sick and wounded animals are quickly and mercifully put to sleep. Letters asking for help and advice are always pouring into the office, and books and leaflets teaching lessons of kindness and humanity are distributed gratuitously among the people. The Society aims at dealing as leniently as possible with those who transgress the laws of mercy and kindness, and is always endeavouring to educate the public mind rather than to condemn individual offenders. It depends almost entirely for its existence upon the contributions of foreigners, and there can be few causes either in our own country or any other which are more deserving of the support of generous and sympathising friends.

THE LATE FRANCIS DE PRESENSÉ.

THE following resolution in memory of the services of M. Francis de Pressensé has been passed by the Committee of the Society of Friends of Russian Freedom, of which Mr. T. Fisher Unwin is chairman and Mr. J. Fredk. Green hon. secretary:—"The Committee of the Society of Friends of Russian Freedom records its sincere regret at the death of Monsieur Francis de Pressensé, President of the Ligue des Droits de l'Homme et du Citoyen. Monsieur Pressensé was a valiant champion of the cause of Liberty, whether for the individual or nationalities, and rendered conspicuous services in the aid of those who are struggling for the establishment of constitutional government and liberty in Russia. The Committee further expresses its profound admiration and gratitude for the ability and devotion with which M. Pressensé worked for the welfare and progress of humanity."

THE annual general meeting of the National Education Association will be held at the Westminster Palace Hotel, on Tuesday, February 17, at 5 o'clock, when the chair will be taken by Lord Sheffield.

ALBANIAN RELIEF FUND.

WE have received the following donations in response to Miss Durham's appeal on behalf of the Albanian peasants, in addition to the sum acknowledged last week:—

Amount previously acknowledged..	£223 16 5
Mrs. Thomas Atkins ..	1 1 0
A Few Friends at All Souls' Church, Belfast ..	1 5 0
S. R. Courtauld..	5 0 0
Miss Cassellis ..	1 10 0
Miss Else ..	1 0 0
"A Friend" ..	2 2 0
Miss M. C. Martineau ..	5 0 0
Mrs. Thomas Worthington 10s., A. B. W. 5s., B. T. and J. D. 7s. 6d., the Rev. W. J. and Mrs. Jupp 5s., E. K. C. 1s., L. L. 5s., Mrs. Vesel 4s., "A Friend" 2s., Jonathan Nield 10s., Mrs. R. B. Hope-Pinker 10s., Miss F. A. Short 12s., per the Rev. H. Dawtreay (Dundee Free Religious Movement) 5s., "Diogenes" 5s., the Rev. W. Horsfall 5s., the Rev. F. Hankinson 3s., Collected by Mr. A. H. Laws 10s., Mr. G. Scrine 5s...	5 4 6
Total ..	£245 18 11

Further donations may be sent to the Editor, 23, Cannon-place, Hampstead, or to the Union of London and Smith's Bank, College-crescent, South Hampstead, N.W.

SIR OLIVER LODGE will deliver the annual lecture in connection with the Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire in the Small Concert Room, St. George's Hall, Liverpool, on Thursday, March 19, at 8 p.m. His subject will be "The Unseen Universe."

PROFESSOR EUCKEN, of Jena, will be entertained at a public dinner by his friends and admirers, at the Savoy Hotel, on Thursday, May 28. The Right Rev. Bishop Boyd Carpenter will preside. Those desiring further particulars should apply to Professor Eucken's publishers, Messrs. Willaims & Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, W.C.

THE annual general meeting of the Peasant Arts Fellowship will be held at Morley Hall, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W., on Wednesday, February 11, at 3.30 p.m. The chair will be taken by Lord Henry Bentinck, M.P., and among the speakers will be Mr. L. March Philipps, Mr. George Sandeman, Mr. Godfrey Blount, and Dr. Greville Macdonald. An exhibition of spinning, weaving, &c., from various centres where the Fellowship has started these industries will be held.

THE Secretary of the National Peace Council has forwarded us the following resolution for publication:—"The quarterly meeting of the Society of Friends of Sussex, Surrey, Hants., and part of Dorset, met at Brighton on January 28 and 29, 1914, views with regret and alarm the constantly increasing demands made upon the resources of this country for the building of new warships and other warlike preparations. These preparations excite the apprehensions of other countries, lead to similar expenditure on their part, and create feelings of mutual distrust and animosity, thus aggravating the danger which they are supposed to avert. The meeting appeals to the Government to stop this wasteful and demoralising expenditure at home, and to initiate concerted action amongst the Powers for the reduction of armaments throughout the world."

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Blackpool.—The Unitarian Church at North Shore has sustained a severe loss by the death of Miss Sophia Clegg, which took place on January 29. Miss Clegg was a native of Newchurch, but prior to coming to Blackpool had resided in Bury for sixteen years. For the last twenty-two years, along with her sister, Miss D. Clegg, she has been a staunch supporter and enthusiastic worker at the Dickson-road Unitarian Church, where she will be greatly missed. The interment took place on Monday at Newchurch Parish Church.

Brighton.—At the annual scholars' party, which was held on Thursday evening, Jan. 29, the Sunday school was reported to be as large as the accommodation allowed, and teachers and other friends were heartily thanked for their faithful services. The congregational "At Home," at which the minister and officers of the church welcome new friends and old, also proved a very successful gathering, with a full lecture hall.

Carlisle.—The 31st anniversary was held at the Unitarian Central Hall on February 1 and 2. The preacher on Sunday was the Rev. H. V. Mills. At the meeting on Monday, which was well attended, the Rev. T. P. Spedding was present, and spoke as the representative of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. The reports of the first year after re-organisation were full of promise, and the congregation is steadily growing in numbers and usefulness.

Leicester: Appointment.—Mr. Sidney Spencer, B.A., of Manchester College, Oxford, has received and accepted a unanimous invitation to the ministry of the Free Christian Church, Narborough-road.

London: Forest Gate.—The annual meeting, which was held at the Unitarian Church on January 31, was of a very encouraging character. The reports showed a considerable increase in activity during the year, and as a result of the open-air work and van missions, together with various new forms of institutional work, the average evening attendance has almost doubled during the year. The Pioneer Preachers—particularly Messrs. Mosop and Piper—are to be congratulated on these first fruits of their work at Forest Gate, whilst the good work done by Sisters Seymour and Knights cannot be too highly estimated. This district has always been regarded as a very difficult one, but it is hoped that at last the various efforts of the past twenty-five years are to meet with a measure of success. During the evening the Rev. H. W. Perris, formerly minister of the church, made a presentation (subscribed by present and former members) to the late Secretary, Mr. E. Moseley, in recognition of his zealous service for nine years.

Stockton-on-Tees.—A social meeting was held in the school-room of the Unitarian Church on Tuesday, January 27, when the Rev. T. P. Spedding, the representative of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, gave an address to the assembled members and friends. The Rev. A. Scruton and other speakers testified to the valuable stimulus given to the Stockton Church by the visits of the Unitarian Van Mission and by the open-air addresses.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

MR. MANBRIDGE, who has just returned from a missionary tour to Australia to explain the work and aims of the Workers' Educational Association, has given some interesting impressions of his visit to a correspondent of the Manchester Guardian. He found a spirit of eager welcome for his message both in the universities and among the manual workers. The former, unhampered by long academic traditions, evidently respond readily to the educational demands of the democracy. He found no antagonism between the universities and the labour movement. Representatives of the Universities met in the Trades Hall and representatives of the trade unions met in the universities, and it was quite clear to his mind that a great rapprochement had taken place between the two.

MEMORIAL TO SIR ROBERT HUNTER.

It has been felt by many friends and fellow workers of Sir Robert Hunter that there should be some suitable memorial to commemorate his life of service to the nation, and a committee has been formed of which Mr. S. H. Hamer is secretary, and Canon Rawnsley treasurer, to carry out the proposal. They have resolved to appeal for funds to obtain a permanent record of Sir Robert's public career, not only as the legal adviser to the Post Office for 30 years, but as the founder and chairman of the National Trust, and an untiring worker for the Commons Preservation Society, and other kindred organisations for the protection of open spaces and rights of way. It would be a suitable final record of his life's work, and consonant with the wishes of his family, that some special open space should be dedicated to his memory. It has been announced, by the way, that the National Trust's option on High Down, a notable hill-top near Godalming, shall be taken up as a memorial to the late Miss Octavia Hill.

THE USE OF STEEL TRAPS.

A letter has been addressed to Mr. Lloyd George by the Committee of the Humanitarian League, pointing out that the proposal made in the Land Report, that farmers should be allowed to extend the use of the steel trap, would, if carried into effect, be an aggravation of what is already a great evil. The torture caused by the use of this barbarous instrument is notorious, and if the present very inadequate restrictions should be relaxed, the most horrible sufferings would be inflicted not on rabbits only, but on many other animals, both wild and domestic. The Committee express a hope that Mr. Lloyd George will use his influence for the withdrawal of the suggestion.

FOR THE PROTECTION OF WILD BIRDS.

Mr. Paget-Tomlinson, in a letter to the Times, refers to the information he has received from Miss L. Gardiner, secretary of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, as to the useful work that is being done among the elementary schools in the way of "bird and tree competitions," although, unfortunately, only a few counties appear to have taken advantage of the scheme. An appeal to the kindly feelings of children in regard to the protection of bird life should certainly come first, he agrees, but so many boys turn a deaf ear to such appeals, and continue to destroy eggs, nests, and young birds, that he thinks every education authority should send out a circular letter to the head teacher of every school in its area urging that (1) an appeal should be made to the kindly interest of the children, (2) a clear statement given of the birds and eggs protected in their own county, and (3), a very plain warning that those who persist in breaking the law would be punished. "It is important," he adds, "when drawing up lists of birds for protection during the whole of the year, to obtain permission from the Home Office to add such birds to the schedule of the Act of 1880. If this precaution be not taken, all owners and occupiers, and also those authorised by them, are exempt from the provisions and penalties of the Act, and such an order would to a large extent be futile. The Home Office is careful to point out the importance of this fact when granting orders."

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

The various temperance societies are combining, on the eve of another Session, to bring pressure on the Government for further legislation in regard to the licensing laws. That effective reform of the licensing laws which Mr. Asquith declared in 1908 was long overdue is still more overdue at the present time, as Mr. Lief Jones, M.P., presiding at a meeting of the Alliance Metropolitan Council on Monday, pointed out, and it is hoped that the long-promised Licensing Bill will follow the forthcoming Education Bill. The National Temperance Federation, which includes thirty national, provincial, and denominational bodies, has despatched to each member of the Government a memorial on the subject signed by the Countess of Carlisle, Sir Herbert Roberts, Sir Victor Horsley, Sir Alfred Pearce Gould, and others, urging that the needful measure which has been so long delayed may be introduced and pressed forward during the year 1914. The United Temperance Council is considering the desirability of instituting a commission of inquiry into the causes of increased intemperance among women. It is shown by a reference to Blue-Book figures that the relative increase of drunkenness is between three and four times as great among women as among men.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION AND MANCHESTER.

The British Association will meet in Manchester for the fourth time in September, 1915, and arrangements are already being made for its reception. In 1842, when the first general meeting was held in Manchester, the president was Lord Francis Egerton, M.P., and among the distinguished scientists present was John Dalton, the famous chemist and author of the Atomic Theory. Lord Egerton delivered his address in the Friends' Meeting House, Mount-street, more than 2,000 persons being present. On the occasion of the last visit of the Association to Manchester in 1887, the year of Queen Victoria's Jubilee, when a record number of tickets were taken, the president was Sir Henry Roscoe, M.P. In the course of his address he reviewed the past fifty years of progress in science, and called special attention to the changed condition of things in chemical science compared with that of 1837, and to the work of Priestley, Lavoisier, Davy, Faraday, Dalton, and Gay Lussac. Writing to the Lord Mayor of Manchester the other day expressing his regret that he could not attend a meeting which had been convened to discuss arrangements, Sir Henry Roscoe referred to this meeting in 1887, the largest which had ever taken place in connection with the Association.

"PARSIFAL" AND CHRISTIANITY.

Nothing can be more interesting than to trace the development of Wagner's ideals through all the phases of doubt and negation culminating in "The Twilight of the Gods" up to the final triumph of faith in the "festival play" of "Parsifal," which has just been produced so triumphantly in London. In "Parsifal" he seems to break once and for all from the numbing influence of Schopenhauer to proclaim his belief in goodness and purity, and the conquest of love over sin and suffering. Dr. Forsyth pointed out in his "Religion in Recent Art," published in 1889, how in "Parsifal" Wagner depicts not so much a Hero as a Saviour, how the redemptive idea had risen to dominate the poet's imagination and in great measure to redeem him from pessimism itself. For pessimism is "a cry more than a speculation; . . . it bears the cross; it sups full of sorrow. . . . It has also the note, the thought, the Promise of Redemption." It is difficult to realise that Wagner's music was at one time regarded as "blasphemous," and that Dr. Hueffer (the father of Ford Madox Hueffer, and at one time musical critic of the Times) was warned by a correspondent that unless he abstained from upholding it "he would be respectively stabbed, ducked in a horse-pond, and beaten to death by hired roughs."

THE PEACE YEAR BOOK.

The Peace Year Book (the National Peace Council, 1s.) comes to us again in its familiar green cover, full of useful information connected with the Peace Movement, and containing notable articles by Dr. Starr Jordan, Norman Angell, Canon Grane, Mr. P. A. Molteno, M.P., and others. The Editor, Mr. Carl Heath, gives a summary of events bearing on peace and war which have taken place during 1913. The outlook is not altogether promising, as the displacement of power resulting from the Balkan struggle "has been the excuse for increased armaments in Germany and France," but the one happy feature has been the negative unity of Europe under the lead of Sir Edward Grey which has averted the colossal war that was once thought to be inevitable. It is, however, gratifying to know that "Peace is no longer the tender infant of the Peace organisations, but has become the problem of the whole world." War, with all its horrors, "is passing away under the growing and persistent pressure of world organisation, economic necessity, human intercourse, and that change of spirit, that social sense and newer aspect of world-wide life which is the insistent note, the Zeitgeist of the age."

SWEATING IN FACTORIES.

The Rev. Percy Dearmer has recently been pointing out that, contrary to the general opinion, sweating is by no means confined to women homeworkers, comparatively few in number, who are competing with factory machine labour. In a short report published by the Research Committee of the London Christian Social Union, of which he is the chairman, it is stated that in many factory trades, such as fruit preserving, pickle making, confectionery, tea packing, coffee and cocoa packing and biscuit making the wages are quite insufficient for subsistence. "One striking fact emphasised is that widely different rates are paid for the same process in different factories. Thus, while one employer pays 20s. a week to girls over 16 engaged in boiling jam, another only pays 11s.; chocolate packers of the same age group receive wages varying from 16s. to 7s.; and married women are paid 4s. a day for peeling oranges for marmalade in one factory, but 2s. in another for the same work. All these factories are in the London area, and the cost of living cannot vary in such a way as to justify these discrepancies."

* * *

"AGAIN, the tables of wages which the committee has made illustrate the remarkable fact that the average for married women is nearly always less than the average given to single women for the same process. As a rule a married woman in London rarely spends her day in factory labour unless she is driven to do so by dire need, and for some reason has to provide not only for herself but also for dependents, whether children or a husband unemployed or unemployable; yet it appears that she has to put up with a wage less on the average by 2s. 6d. than that paid to single girls, who may be free to spend their whole earnings upon themselves. Neither average is large; for all the processes we investigated the figures are only 8s. 11d. and 11s. 5d. respectively; but the lower wage for the woman with dependents is hard to explain or to justify."

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

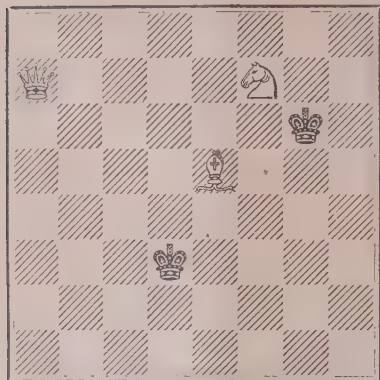

FEB. 7, 1914.

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 8, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 43.

By OTTO WÜRZBURG.

BLACK. (1 man.)

WHITE. (4 men.)

White to play and mate in three moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 41.

- | | |
|-----------------|--------|
| WHITE. | BLACK. |
| 1. Kt. Kt2 | P x Kt |
| 2. Kt. R1 | P x Kt |
| 3. Q x P, mate. | |

Note that if 1. Kt. Q4, 2. Kt. B5, Black has time to advance his P, claiming a knight, giving check.

Correct solutions have been received from L. G. Rylands, W. E. Arkell, A. J. Hamblin, R. B. D. (Edinburgh), W. T. M., A. Mielziner, Rev. I. Wrigley, Rev. B. C. Constable, E. Wright, Dr. Higginson, J. Williamson, E. C., and F. S. M. (Mayfield).

"PITFALLS ON THE CHESS BOARD." By E. A. GREIG. (London: F. Hollings, Great Turnstile, Holborn, W.C. 1s. net.)

This is a revised and enlarged edition (edited by M. W. Stevens) of a work published in 1910. I am not well versed in the technicalities of the game proper, so my review is given with diffidence. The opening moves of many games are given, and the "pitfalls" which sometimes occur in standard openings are plainly stated, and should act as a warning to the average match-player. Here is one quotation:—

Queen's Pawn Counter Gambit.

Be careful when you play P. KB3.

- | | |
|----------------------------------|---------|
| 1. P. K4 | P. K4 |
| 2. Kt. KB3 | P. Q4 |
| 3. Kt x P | P. KB3? |
| 4. Q. R5, ch. | P. KKt3 |
| 5. Kt x P, winning the exchange. | |

This example is perhaps rather elementary, but it is just such a position which might occur, and as there are 100 similar situations listed, the book should be of much service both for attack and defence. Nowadays the standard openings are so much played that it is as well to be versed in possible traps, and so avoid drifting into an inferior situation during the first 10 moves.

Now Ready for February.

Price One Penny.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

Editorial.

Lessons for the Month:

- I. Great Prophets are Inspired.
- II. The Great Teacher and His Message.
- III. What Jesus Teaches about God.

IV. His Teaching about Man.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Senior Department—C. M. Wright, M.A.

Primary Department—Ruth New.

Our Story Pages.

By the Way.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

GREAT REMNANT SALE of White Art Linen, in bundles of ½ to 1 yard pieces, suitable for D'Oyleys and Tray-cloths. 2s. 6d. per bundle, postage 4d.—Write, HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

MAKE YOUR APRONS AT HOME.

Bargain bundles of Union Apron Linens. Large pieces for aprons; price 6s. per Bundle. Postage 6d. Write for Free Sale Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by
Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Triumph of Faith.

STOFFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D.

Five Points of Christian Faith.

JAMES MARTINEAU, D.D., LL.D.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

"THE UNITARIAN MONTHLY."

Magazine for Unitarian Propaganda. Adopted by churches with or without local page. Issued for last Sunday in each previous month. One copy post free, 1½d.—1s. 6d. a year; 9d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100; extra charge local page.—Address to EDITOR, 36 Burlington-road, South Shore, Blackpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCS.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, THORALBY, AYSGARTH, S.O., YORKS.—Paying Guests received.—Particulars from Miss SMITH.

DELIGHTFULLY-SITUATED furnished Cottage to Let, in Sussex. Twenty-five miles from London; 2 sitting-rooms, 3 bed-rooms, good garden, lawn. Terms, 30s. weekly.—G. H., INQUIRER Office, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

LADY living alone wishes to receive Lady or elderly Gentleman, for Board-Residence in quiet, comfortable house near Golders Green Tube. Terms, 2 guineas; with private sitting room, 2½ guineas. Good cookery, and no others taken.—Address, C. M., 20, Alyth-gardens, Golders Green, London, N.W.

SUNNY South Coast Health Resort.—Ideal Winter Boarding House, Central, Garden, near Sea. Hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, electric light, and penny in slot gas fire in each bedroom. Three good reception rooms. Food Reform and ordinary diet.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

A COMFORTABLE HOME offered a business gentleman in attractive but very accessible part of London.—C., 113, Highbury New Park, N.

BOOKS

EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY, TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE
And for all other Exams.

Second-Hand at Half Prices.

New at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogue 184 (post free) and state wants. Books bought.

BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,

135, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to offer and pay highest genuine prices. Note quotations: Up to 2s. 3d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 5s. 6d. on silver, 11s. on gold, 32s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel, post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Unquestionably the oldest and most reliable firm. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 8, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 7, 1914.

Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

[ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 3738.
NEW SERIES, No. 842.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.]

MACMILLAN & CO'S LIST.

THE PRIMATE and KIKUYU.

The Missionary Conference in East Africa. The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY'S Answer to the "Formal Appeal" made by the BISHOP of ZANZIBAR, February, 1914. 8vo sewed, 6d. net.

QUO TENDIMUS?

The Issue of Kikuyu.

A Sermon preached before the University of Oxford, in S. Mary's, on February 1st, 1914, with an Appendix. By HENSLEY HENSON, Dean of Durham. Crown 8vo sewed, 6d. net.

A Father in God: the Episcopate of William West Jones, D.D., Archbishop of Cape-town and Metropolitan of South Africa, 1874-1908. By MICHAEL H. M. WOOD, M.A. With Introduction by the Ven. W. H. Hutton, B.D., and portraits and other Illustrations. 8vo, 18s.

DR. SWETE'S NEW BOOK.

The Last Discourse

and Prayer of Our Lord. A Study of St. John xiv.-xvii. By HENRY BARCLAY SWETE, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

The Church Times—"The present volume is marked by the sobriety of style and the carefully balanced thought which are characteristic of all Dr. Swete's work. . . . There are many to whom it will come as a valuable addition to their theological library. It is certainly well worthy of its distinguished author, and forms a companion to his other works upon the concluding portion of our Blessed Lord's earthly ministry."

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "PRO CHRISTO ET ECCLESIA."

The Practice of Christianity. By the Author of "Pro Christo et Ecclesia." Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

BERNARD LUCAS'S NEW BOOK.

Our Task in India:

Shall we Proselytise Hindus, or Evangelise India? By BERNARD LUCAS, Author of "The Faith of a Christian," &c. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

The Times—"Few writers have earned a better right to be heard on the subject of Indian missions than Mr. Bernard Lucas, of the London Missionary Society—whether on the ground of his long experience, the freshness and insight of his views, or his literary ability."

Sale over 5,768,000 Copies.

Mrs. Henry Wood's

Novels. Cloth, 1s. net per Volume. May be obtained at all Booksellers, where a list of the 37 stories may be seen.

 Macmillan's Spring Announcement List post Free on application.

MACMILLAN & CO., Ltd., LONDON.

Books for the Use of Liberal Religious Teachers & Parents.

Books for Children and Young People.

Lesson Books

On Life and Teaching of Jesus. On Conduct, Religion, Art and Literature, Nature, Biography, Religious History, Infants' Lessons.

Biblical Manuals.

Addresses, Stories, & Readings.

Musical Services and Hymn-books.

Sunday School Methods.

Catalogues on Application.

Books sent on Approval.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex St., Strand, London, W.C.

THE KING'S WEIGH HOUSE PULPIT

No. 1.—The Holding of the Eyes.

No. 2.—Rewards.

By EDWARD LEWIS.

One Penny Each.

By Post, 1½d. Each.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE: 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH.

For the Worship of the One God only.

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church),
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for February 15:

Morning: Jesus: Man? or Miracle?

Evening: Mr. Balfour and the Theistic Setting of Life.

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

Lecture Hall adjoining 19, Tavistock Square, W.C.

On Sunday Evenings, January 11 to March 22, 1914, at 7 o'clock, a Course of Lectures on

The Three Objects of the Society

will be given.

Feb. 18. Theosophy and the Arts.

J. COUSINS.

Feb. 22. Theosophy and the Boundaries of Modern Science.

E. L. GARDNER.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M.

Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15.

Evening, 7.

February

15. Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A., of Stand, near Manchester.

22. Rev. JOHN HENRY WEATHERALL, M.A. of Bolton.

March

1. Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Minister Emeritus of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds.

CHURCH, SCHOOL & HOME

Editor—Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

Monthly, 3d. by post from Mr. Lewis Lloyd, 67, Church-road, Moseley, Birmingham. Can also be obtained from H. Rowson & Co., Manchester, the Liverpool Booksellers Co., Liverpool, or from Essex Hall.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartment, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning, N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, February 15.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Mr. W. T. COLYER.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. DOUGLAS W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.; 7, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.; 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. R. W. SORENSEN; 7, Mr. F. COTTIER.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.; 7, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. Gow, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH; 6.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A. Evening subject, "Religion and Public Life."
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Mr. A. W. WHITEHEAD.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Mr. F. W. ROSS.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER; and 7.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. S. MOSSOP; 6.30, Mr. A. J. HEALE.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. AUSTIN, M.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45, Mr. S. HOLDEN; 6.30, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Church-gate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing-street, 11.30, Rev. E. W. LUMMIS, M.A.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN ROW, 10.45, and STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's Chapel, Castle-terrace, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. V. HOIT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.; 6.30, Mr. W. H. JACKSON.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDRAE.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

DEATHS.

DALE.—On February 7, at Grange-over-Sands, Elizabeth Ann, wife of Rev. John Dale, of Selby, who died suddenly from heart failure, aged 74.

MOTT.—On February 10, at Detmore, near Cheltenham, Clara Elizabeth, wife of the late Albert Julius Mott, F.G.S., aged 80.

WICKSTEED.—On February 9, at Bryn Hafod, Kettering, Mary Jean, wife of Charles Wicksteed, aged 62.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds of MSS. carefully and promptly copied.—Miss KENNEDY, 20, County Grove, Camberwell, S.E.

MAID ATTENDANT to invalid lady. Two in family, other two servants kept. State age, wages.—Apply, 70, Grosvenor-road, Highbury.

GENTLEWOMAN (aged 60) would undertake light duties (housekeeping, &c.) in return for a home in the country; she is musical.—A. N. Newsagent, 17, Oakfield-place, Clifton, Bristol.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Rev. H. W. HAWKES, 59, Trinity-road, Bootle.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s. d.
PER QUARTER	1 8
PER HALF-YEAR	3 4
PER YEAR	6 6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£ s. d.
PER PAGE	6 0 0
HALF PAGE	3 0 0
PER COLUMN	2 0 0
INCH IN COLUMN	0 3 6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0 4 6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	99	Chapels in which Mark Rutherford Preached	104	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
THE INVISIBLE FELLOWSHIP	100	BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—		Religion and Social Service in Liverpool .	107
"J. B."	101	Lord Lister	105	Among the War Victims in Albania . . .	108
VIRTUES AND VIRTUE	101	The Stories of William Morris	105	Sustentation Fund	108
AUTHORITY AND FREEDOM OF THOUGHT.—II.	102	Publications Received	106	Albanian Relief Fund	109
"PARSIFAL"	103	FOR THE CHILDREN:—		Southern Unitarian Association . . .	109
CORRESPONDENCE:—		Jesus, Our Teacher and Friend.	106	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	109
The Albanian Relief Fund	104			NOTES AND JOTTINGS	110
				OUR CHESS COLUMN	112

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE new Session of Parliament was opened by His Majesty the King on Tuesday afternoon. The Speech from the Throne contained the following passage, which goes far beyond the usual formal announcements of policy:—"I regret that the efforts which have been made to arrive at a solution by agreement of the problems connected with the government of Ireland have so far not succeeded. In a matter in which the hopes and fears of so many of my subjects are keenly concerned, and which, unless handled now with foresight, judgment, and in the spirit of mutual concession, threaten grave future difficulties, it is my most earnest wish that the goodwill and co-operation of men of all parties and creeds may heal dissension and lay the foundations of a lasting settlement."

WE have never discussed the difficult problems of Irish government in these columns. We recognise that it is a subject upon which our readers are strongly divided and that men of good judgment and ardent patriotism are to be found on both sides. But we feel that we shall not be going beyond our province, if we express our heartfelt gratitude for the words which we have just quoted. They breathe the spirit of conciliation. They are a good omen of peace. It is in this temper that we have always desired to approach questions of acute controversy. To foster this spirit of goodwill and mutual understanding in the divided world of religion is one of the reasons of our existence.

WE shall perhaps be forgiven if we say that Irishmen of all creeds and parties have some ground of complaint, that hitherto there has been only a very meagre acquaintance on this side of the Channel with their needs and ideals. Irish studies are ignored in general education. Irish history is not taught in the schools. The noble line of Irish patriots wins no admiration from the general mind. And unfortunately there are many inherited prejudices and reproachful memories which make it easy for us to accept the heated rhetoric of the platform at its face value. Some of the current axioms of our political thinking about Ireland are at any rate worthy of re-examination with all the powers of intelligence and sympathetic insight which we can command.

WE have no wish to dogmatise on these matters, but it is at any rate open to question whether Catholics and Protestants in Ireland are really the irreconcilable foes of popular imagination. It is certain that they have often co-operated in great movements, which they believed to be for their common good. The modern Home Rule movement was largely Protestant in its origin. And at the present time Catholics and Protestants dwell together in peace and good comfort all over Ireland. Then again it may be asked whether there is any ground for believing that there is real danger of Irish Catholics adopting a policy of persecution. In this connection there are two facts which are worthy of consideration. The Irishman, like everybody else, has many faults of his own, but the temper of the persecutor is not one of them, and history shows that he has not belied his character. Ireland has never had a Smithfield, and lacking this doubtful glory she has had to borrow her noble army of martyrs from elsewhere. The fear of clerical domination is, we know, very real in many minds; but it may at least be urged in mitigation of judgment that the tragic mistakes of the past have had much to do with the present influence of the priest, while the Nationalist party shows no sign of clerical domination. As history has proved over and over again, men may be devout Catholics without being clericalists in the political sense of the term.

WE do not bring these matters forward as arguments on one side or the other of the present controversy, and we know that there are many other considerations of grave importance which must influence our judgment. But they may at least suggest some fruitful lines of inquiry, and anything which encourages a closer study of the problem in the light of history and the realities of Irish life will help forward the policy of conciliation which has just been urged upon us by the highest authority in the land.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury has definitely declined to institute proceedings against the Bishops of Uganda and Mombasa for heresy and schism in connection with the Kikuyu affair. In this decision we believe he will have the hearty support of most sensible people. The whole matter both in regard to the proposed Federation and the "Open Communion" is to be referred for consideration and report to the Central Consultative Body of Bishops. In the statement which he has drawn up the Archbishop writes:—"The practical questions which have at this time been brought to an issue are not wholly novel in character, nor are they applicable only to East Africa. They have already on more than one occasion come before me in regard to Missionary work in China, in Japan, in West Africa, and elsewhere. In the stir and glow of modern Missionary work, and in the now frequent interchange of experience and counsels among Missionaries belonging to different branches of the Church of Christ, and in view of the ultimate growth and extension of purely Native Churches, such questions call imperatively for patient thought and for definite answer. In the consideration of them, points may obviously present themselves which call for wider deliberation and for a larger voice of Episcopal authority than can be given in final form by what is only a Consultative Body. But definite and practical counsel upon the particular points raised will, I am sure, be forthcoming without delay. To push such questions aside, or indefinitely to postpone their consideration, is not only undesirable and unfair—it is impossible."

* * *

THE slow and dignified procedure outlined by the Archbishop is a welcome rebuke to the rash inquisitor. The Church of England is not going to be stampeded into mediævalism by the intolerance of the Bishop of Zanzibar. But it remains to be seen whether in the end anybody will be satisfied. The Consultative Body can express an opinion and offer advice, but it cannot demand obedience. There is also the fear, openly expressed by "Artifex" in the Manchester Guardian, that it is a further step towards "oligarchical government by secret conclave." Here we think there is real danger. The more important the functions which are assigned to this small company of bishops, the more it will claim deference from all the clergy to its opinions, until it assumes in the public eye the importance of a general council, with plenary powers not only in matters of policy but also in doctrine. "I know many thoughtful people," "Artifex" writes, "who regard the present tendency to concentrate not merely all the executive but also all the legislative functions of the Church in the hands of the bishops as a grave and growing evil."

* * *

IT is with deep regret that we have to refer to-day to the irreparable loss which religious journalism has suffered in the death of "J. B." of the Christian World. A personal tribute to his memory by his old and intimate friend, the Rev. Joseph Wood, appears in our present issue. As Mr. Wood points out, when owing to ill-health the Rev. Jonathan Brierley abandoned the pulpit for journalism he entered into his kingdom. His weekly article in the Christian World gave him ample scope for his special gifts, and he spoke to a vast unseen congregation instead of to tens or hundreds gathered together in one place. His triumph was unique, and in the largeness of his vision and the nobility of his aims he was always worthy of it. He was probably the greatest missionary influence through the written word which the churches have possessed in this generation. He raised the whole profession of religious journalism to a position of dignity, and gave men a new vision of its possibilities as a spiritual force in the world. If we need strong men in our pulpits, we need mighty men for the weekly religious press, which wields a vast and incalculable influence over the unseen kingdom of souls.

THE INVISIBLE FELLOWSHIP.

WE depend in our religion greatly upon visible fellowship. Christianity is nothing if not social. The soul, it is true, has its quiet and solitary moods. Perhaps its deepest experiences must always be too intimate for partnership. When we are most ourselves we cannot shake off what is distinct in our individuality. "Je mourrai seul," was the cry of PASCAL. "No one has gone this way before" is the confession of all of us as we face the duties and critical decisions of life. And yet for the brightness and joy of religion, for the confidence it inspires in daily life, for much of its richest utterance in worship, we require the sense of hearts beating in sympathy with our own. If the touch of a comrade's hand, the fellowship of common aims, the "joyous swing of advance" mean much for us in the ordinary affairs of the world, we have tenfold more need of them when we make the ventures of faith and lift up our hearts to God. The company of men and women of one mind with us, with whom we habitually worship, and the wider Church with its common memories and usages to which we have pledged our troth, the visible fellowship whose name we bear, these things are an intimate part of ourselves. They create our spiritual atmosphere. They determine to a large extent the direction of our thoughts. They guide and support our steps even at the moments when we are least conscious of their influence. It is not only weakness which shrinks from the solitary path in religion. There are revelations of love and power which we cannot understand or trust to the uttermost until we share them with others and find them confirmed in the common life.

It is for this reason that the religion of many men blossoms most happily in a fellowship which is large enough to find room for many varieties of experience and to offer the sense of a multitude, which cannot be numbered, to the need and loneliness of the individual soul. Here no doubt small religious minorities are at a great disadvantage. They pay dearly for the dissidence of their dissent, if they live entirely within a narrow enclosure, thinking their own thought and content to substitute fervent domestic pieties for the far-flung loyalties of the Church universal. But fortunately there is no need for them to be in this parlous state. Smallness of numbers may be combined with largeness of heart, and the very narrowness of our surroundings may provoke us to more inclusive sympathies. The size of the visible fellowship to which we belong is seldom a matter of our own choice. The Spirit leads us by strange paths, and often a man of the most catholic temper finds himself fixed irrevocably by ancestry and affection or by deep scruples of conscience in the smallest of the sects. But he does not on that account contract his sympathies or try to persuade himself that his own tide-pool is as wonderful as the ocean. Here is the visible fellowship to which he belongs, few it may be in numbers, limited in influence, much spoken against and greatly misunderstood, and he will glorify it as much as he can, and if it means separation—Protestant from Catholic, Nonconformist from Churchman, Unitarian or Quaker from Evangelical Dissent—he will accept it with quiet dignity. But all the time he is conscious that he is a citizen of the spiritual world. There is an order of sanctity to which our labels do not apply. There can be no such thing as a monopoly in goodness. Even the Church of Rome has to find a place for the anima naturaliter Christiana. Nothing but our own unworthiness can banish us from the invisible fellowship of those who walk with CHRIST, though we may still forbid one another to remember him in the same act of worship and draw the lines of division hard and clear, till the great and holy things which we possess in common are almost blotted out.

There is good reason for making much of the reality of this invisible fellowship at the present time. Those who have even some dim perception of it, and have felt the joyous breadth which it imparts to the affections, would not exchange it for any other form of certainty which the religious world has to offer. When once we have tasted its freedom of spirit and breathed its heavenly air we know that we have passed from death unto life. But it is a strange thing that this experience does so little to heal the wounds of rivalry and misunderstanding. We are perplexed by the conflict of opinions more than we are gladdened by the deeper harmonies of goodness. Theologians and men cunning in argument still count for more in the counsels of the churches and the presentation of their message to the world than the whole fellowship of the saints. The experiment remains to be tried of putting love and goodness, which in our hearts we acknowledge to be the principal things, in the first place. There is something grievously wrong with religion when this seems an unnatural thing to do, and men begin to suspect themselves of laxity if they stretch their sympathies too wide and make the earthly temple too like the pattern in the heavens. Shall we never have the courage to give the hidden admirations of the soul free play? It is the man who lives habitually in the invisible fellowship of all who love God who is not far from the kingdom of heaven. It is a very simple and perhaps a very obvious thing to say. But how faintly this healing truth is recognised among Christians, how seldom it reigns in triumph in the hearts of men!

"J. B."

By the death last Sunday morning of the Rev. J. Brierley, the well-known "J. B." of the Christian World, Liberal Christianity loses one of its ablest prophets and most effective exponents. While retaining to the end his connection with Evangelical Nonconformity, he, more than any other man of his time, gave it a new meaning and direction by inducing it to accept freely and gratefully the transforming work of science and criticism. For over a quarter of a century his weekly essay appeared in the Christian World, and largely contributed to that journal's wide influence and circulation. Ministers especially, of all denominations, Roman and Anglican, Jewish and Nonconformist, took in that paper solely for "J. B.'s" articles, and it would be interesting if it could be known in how many pulpits they were translated into sermons. Many of them were suggestive re-statements of the great doctrines of religion, distinguished by wide knowledge and fine scholarship. Others were marked by a psychological skill rarely equalled even by its professors, lightened by a delicate humour, and humanised by generous and catholic sympathies which never failed. They sounded the note of a real experience which made them the most delightful reading.

Mr. Brierley received his ministerial training at New College, London, and entered the Congregational ministry in 1870 as the pastor of the church at Torrington. Subsequent settlements at Leytonstone and Balham proved his power, and drew large congregations. His gifts of speech were great; he talked exactly as he wrote, and his wonderful and easy memory enabled him to dispense with manuscript in the pulpit. A serious failure in health compelled him most reluctantly to renounce the pulpit for the pen. But the gain to influence and power by the exchange was great. He now addressed every week tens of thousands, where before he addressed hundreds, and his writings carried his message far and wide. He was an omnivorous reader, and appeared to forget nothing that had once come under his eye. His quotations from all likely and unlikely sources, always apt and telling, were a striking feature of his essays. What Thackeray said of Macaulay might with slight alterations be said of "J. B."—"Take at hazard any two or three pages, and glimmering below the stream of the argument, as it were, you, an average reader, see one, two, three, a half-score of allusions to other writers, characters, literature, poetry, philosophy, with which you may or may not be acquainted. Your neighbour who has his stock of reading stored away in his mind shall detect more points, allusions, happy touches, indicating not only the prodigious memory of the writer, but his appreciation of the unities in widely divergent minds." He laid under contribution not only the Fathers and the great classical authors, but a crowd of French, Italian and German writers, many of whose names were quite unknown to his ministerial brethren.

Like R. L. Stevenson and J. R. Green, he scarcely knew what a day's good health meant. Yet, like them, he kept a cheerful outlook on life, scorning to whine of his ills and pains whether in public or private. Perhaps his greatest tribute is the gratitude of thousands of doubters and tremblers, for whom he made religion once again a reasonable thing and a thing of infinite joy and hope and peace.

J. W.

VIRTUES AND VIRTUE.

BY EDWARD LEWIS.

THE etymological significance of the word Virtue is heroic manliness. "Vir" is hero; "virtus" is valour. The suggestion is of some high quality, and worth, of the individual soul. Our "virtues," however, have little to do with heroic manliness, and are the characteristics of a law-abiding citizen, or a member of respectable society. Socrates defined the Good partly in terms of beauty (partly also in terms of usefulness) and Plato related Virtue to the perception of the Absolute Good; but both of them insist that Virtue can be taught. Now, heroic manliness cannot be taught, it can only be expressed; the Platonic virtues—temperance, courage, justice, and the like—can be taught. By whom? By the representatives, guardians, agents of the community. In whose interest, then? In that of the community, first. The virtues stand for that practice of the individual life which is useful and advantageous to the community as a whole.

It was the Stoics, in a time of revolt, who picked up a chance phrase of Plato's and asserted that virtue is the health of the soul. Our virtues represent our obedience to the commandments of society. They are a kind of ordained uniform. Ethics, as commonly understood, is largely a philosophy of clothes. The Decalogue is a bunch of decrees issued from the centre of authority in a community, and imposed upon the individual members thereof in the interests of the common life as then constituted. The moral education of children consists, in the main, in the imposition of certain habits, practices, manners within the boundaries of which it is to the advantage of the community that individual life should be lived. A child is so highly imaginative and poetic that it does not distinguish clearly between fact and fancy; so universalist, that it draws no clear line between meum and tuum; so full of spontaneity that it is unconsciously a rebel in many directions; so, for the sake of the stability and security of the social order, we put the child under the restraint of virtuous habits. It may be good for the child, but the first consideration is that it is good for the social order. To be good is to be useful to the order. To be virtuous is to conform to the recognised moral standard which the community sets up first for its own self-preservation.

So it happens that the virtues differ with different races, ages, or classes of men. With us, Justice is a primary virtue; but not with the Japanese, among whom it may even be a wrong if it conflicts with loyalty to ancestors. What is virtuous in a soldier on the battlefield would ostracise the civilian from any decent society. A soldier may not be naturally or necessarily ruthless and cruel, but the safety of the community requires that he should be this in war; so it is made a virtue. The virtues of the serving class are humility, docility, obedience and the like; these obviously have nothing to do necessarily with the individual soul of the servant, but are the qualities which the community praises because it gets advantage by them. "She is a good girl, she is so obliging," said a woman to me the other day in reference to a housemaid; her goodness, her virtue, was in her obligingness. But who determines that? In whose interest is that? A commercial company praises the diligence of its employee. The man may be stifling his soul, undermining his health, robbing himself of leisure and the gifts of leisure, suppressing himself at every turn, making himself into a machine, yet his diligence is praised; it is his virtue; but it is quite clear who determines it to be a virtue, and why. Regularity of habit and conduct is a virtue. Society praises the regular, orthodox, conventional man because it knows where to find him, and what he will do next; he is useful to the stability and security of the order.

Of course, we are members of a community, and have no existence as isolated individuals; the preservation of the community is, in a sense, necessary to our own; further, it is only in association with our fellows, and therefore under some limitation in regard to their rights, that we get the necessary foothold for our self-expression; still further, the community nourishes and protects us until such time as we have developed a personal centre which may ultimately arise within the order as a criticism, a challenge, a defiance, a disrupting power. But, admitting all this, it remains true that our virtues are subtly, and perhaps necessarily, imposed upon us by the community in its own interest first, not in ours; and we must distinguish between virtues which are social utilities and virtue which is heroic manliness, a power which goeth forth from us.

Religion has gone hand in hand with social authority, and the Decalogues are attributed to God, as if God could not also communicate His will to the individual soul; or as if there were some superior quality of divine authority in published moral codes. This notion, if uncomplemented and uncorrected, may work much damage. It may be admitted that the Will and Purpose of God is expressed through the wisdom and insight into practical needs on the part of legislators and leaders of public opinion; it may be admitted that the Voice of God is mediated through tradition, through the accumulated experience of an institution like the Church, or through the slowly formed general opinion, deposited from experience, of the community; but the counter-assertion must be made of the ever-fresh and direct revelation of the Divine Will to the sensitive and eager soul. The medium, especially with the passage of time, may at times smother and stifle the original Voice. The ultimate and final authority, even for morals, is in the soul of man. I, for one, will not allow either Church dogmas, or community-made virtues, to silence or override this in me. The ultimate religious duty is truth to myself; and this is not a social virtue.

There is no reason to praise a man for having the social virtues than there is to praise him for wearing clothes. Not a few people nowadays are uncomfortable inside this virtuous skin; as uncomfortable as many an intelligent and thoughtful man is when he is reciting the Church creed. They have the virtues, but something within them doesn't quite fit all the way round. They conflict with something which is profoundly the interest and concern of their soul; they are stifled, their mouth stopped, their spirit cramped; they are prevented from some particular form of self-expression which feels tremendously important within them. But the word holds them up. Are not these "virtues"? It is a beautiful word! Surely they must be good, with such a name. This is one of the tricks! With subtle wisdom the community has given a fair-sounding name to its self-preserving devices. "Give a dog a bad name, and hang him"; society gives its virtues a good name, and throttles you! A man must not allow his soul to be the victim of his virtues.

The critical virtue is the health of the soul. Your soul is your virtue—not your social habits, your manners, your observances. These are secondary, it is primary. These are derivative, it is original. They are imposed, it is your endowment. They represent the safety of the community, this involves your salvation towards God. They harmonise you with the external order, this harmonises you with yourself and God. Will you have your virtues in exchange for your soul?

Your other virtues are your dress; this heroic manliness, this virtue which is the health of your soul, is your life. They may give you a good conscience before men, this alone gives you a good conscience in the sight of God.

"That your very Self be in your action, as the mother is in the child; let this be your formula of Virtue."

AUTHORITY AND FREEDOM OF THOUGHT.

II.

THERE are numerous modern writers who would cordially assent to Mr. Bury's claim that when "Rationalism" has destroyed the last trace of "Theology, Mysticism, and Metaphysics, the world will find its salvation in an outlook on life based entirely on Science." What is the value of this anticipation?

A strange illusion besets many men in this matter. They see that science has contributed to the destruction of a great deal of harmful superstition; they see that science puts into men's hands means of practical invention and achievement to which no limit can be set, and they run to the conclusion that because science has been or may be used for good, therefore science itself is good. Science is power; and power in itself, and apart from its use, is neither good nor evil.

Science is essentially limited, in the first place, to the endless ascertainment of physical facts and the physical conditions under which they occur, and, in the second place, to the criticism of error. This limitation is all-important. To understand it is to dispose once for all of the current cant about "Science and Progress." The facts and the laws of their causation exhaust the realm of science. Science belongs to the "world of Analysis." She can lay down no judgment of value or worth; all such judgments belong to a world beyond that of science—the "world of Appreciation." Her findings may, indeed, be turned to practical purposes, good and bad; but she knows nothing of their goodness or badness. Her results may be employed equally to save life or to destroy. It is possible that some day science may find out enough about the constitution of matter to enable men, if they so desire, to destroy the visible universe and all it contains, and disintegrate its very atoms into their component electric forces. It is also possible that some day science may enable men, if they so desire, to live in an earthly paradise from which pain and everything inconvenient is removed. But science cannot demonstrate that the one desire is any better or worse than the other. Hence it is simple or rather complex nonsense to assume as "scientific facts" that the process of natural evolution leads to good, or that the increase of human life is good, or the stability of society good, or the happiness of the greatest number good. If a man chooses to deny any of these statements there is not a word, from the merely scientific point of view, to be said against him.

Why is this? It is because "good" means good for something, and that always means, in the end, good for some kind of human purpose, and human purposes belong to the "world of Appreciation." Science cannot sit in judgment on human purposes and decide on their relative worth. She can deal with them only by making them parts of the "world of Analysis," and ascertaining the natural conditions under which they occur.

What, then, is the inevitable conclusion?

"An outlook on life based entirely on Science" means an outlook which does indeed leave out every ground for accepting any religious belief as true; but it also leaves out every ground for distinguishing degrees of worth or goodness and badness in human purposes. The whole world of appreciation—that is, the distinctively human world—is dissolved into chaos. By implication all the distinctive tendencies of human nature (as distinguished from animal nature) are disregarded, save the one ideal—the ascertainment of laws of cause and effect.

No reader need be troubled by all this dogmatism about the happy disappearance of "theology, mysticism, and metaphysics," leaving "Science" as the sole basis of life and progress. An obstinate attempt to think clearly dissolves the whole of it into smoke. There are many indications at the present time (though we cannot now turn aside to discuss them) that by the thoughtful part of the world the fraud is beginning to be found out, and it is deplorable that a scholar of Mr. Bury's eminence and ability should be found complacently repeating these worthless formulas.

So far, then, as we can attach any definite meaning to "Reason" as the word figures in the pages of this book, we must affirm that to acknowledge the exclusive supremacy of "Reason" is to acknowledge the irretrievable bankruptcy of the greater part of human nature. The result would be the rehabilitation of David Hume's famous Articles of Inquisition: "When we take in hand any volume of divinity or school metaphysics, for example, let us ask: Does it contain any abstract reasoning concerning quantity or number? No! Does it contain any experimental reasoning concerning matter of fact and existence (i.e., concerning facts of sense-observation)? No! Commit it, then, to the flames, for it can contain nothing but sophistry and illusion." And, as Hume was well aware, not only "Divinity or School Metaphysics," but other things more indispensable to humanity would disappear also; for, "if we think that fire warms and water refreshes, 'tis only because it costs us too much pains to think otherwise!"—if sense-perception is our only test of truth.

From this point of view, "Reason," like "Freedom," becomes a negative conception; in other words, to be "free" comes to mean to be detached from or cut loose from; and to "reason" means to deny, save in so far as it means to trace the mere order of succession in physical facts. At this point we reach the fundamental question: What is the resulting view of "Authority"?

In Mr. Bury's view of history, "Reason" is pitted against "Authority" as "light against darkness" (p. 232). By authority he appears to mean the inculcation or protection of belief by force: e.g., the coercion of belief by the power of a dominant political or ecclesiastical institution. Provided that we do not take the word "force" in any crudely narrow meaning—provided that we do not, for example, limit it to mere physical violence—the definition may be accepted as historically true.

It is true that authority, so understood, has played a very great part in the history of belief. Such was the authority of the Catholic Church when she spread out her arms to clasp, if it might be, the entire world in her embrace; when she sounded the note of the absolute and the eternal through her dogmas, her ordinances, her ritual; when there was no part of human life from the cradle to the grave which she did not claim to control and direct, with a power which was the result of long ages of gradual growth, and which has taken a firm hold on the heart and the intellect of man. Such, again, was the authority of the Bible, when the words of Joseph Blanco White were true—"the Bible is to Protestants a true idol, and they consider the worship of it as an oracular idol as the first condition of being a Christian"—words which were true of orthodox Protestantism as recently as half a century ago, and which, to some extent, are true still.

In both cases the sources of religion were not only separated from human life, but assumed to be outside the utmost range of humanity, and were found in infallible persons and infallible books. It has not been left to modern Agnosticism alone to emphasise the historic evils that have sprung from this far-reaching assumption. The root of all these evils is to be found not in the existence of the authority—not in the attribution of authority to Church or book—but in the assumption that an authority exists which is absolute and final. Mr. Bury himself distinguishes the two facts when he speaks of the authority of the Homeric poems among the Greeks: "Their authority was immense; but it was not binding like the authority of an infallible book; and so Homeric criticism was never hampered like Biblical criticism" (p. 24).

If the author had developed all that was implied in this distinction, the historical perspective of his book would have been very different from what it actually is: for, in fact, during the nineteenth century the mind of the modern world at large passed half consciously but very decidedly from the one to the other of the two views of authority here suggested. In doing so, we have accomplished not an evolution, but a revolution; we have crossed a gulf that cannot be re-crossed. On the further side of it, the claim is a command, the authority absolute, the sanction eternal; on this side, the claim is an appeal, the authority relative, the sanction "pragmatic." Thus, the claims of a ritual of the Catholic type are urged because it "works," that is, it satisfies real or supposed needs, it appeals to the sense of the dignified and the beautiful, it symbolises ethical and spiritual realities. And the claims of the Bible are urged because the Bible is through and through a human record of human experience, having the working value naturally belonging to a literature moulded by the powerful religious genius of Hebrew prophets and lawgivers and Christian apostles.

The sources of religion are now sought for in human life itself. Life itself is our authority; and, to our outward vision, life seems to break up into endless authorities.

S. H. MELLONE.

(To be concluded.)

"PARSIFAL."

Few great works of art can have made their first appeal in this country under more difficult and exacting conditions than those in which Wagner's sacred festival-play is now presented to us. "Parsifal" has received the doubtful honour of a sensational newspaper "boom," as if it were the latest opera of a Strauss or Debussy; for thirty-two years the law of copyright has enabled the Bayreuth authorities to confine its performance to their own theatre, and consequently, for the majority of music-lovers, it has been veiled with the glamour of an unsolved mystery, intensified by the religious character of the story, which sets it apart even from the rest of Wagner's own works. On the other hand, it does not possess the advantage of real novelty; the music belongs to a past generation, and the "purple patches"—prelude, grail scenes, and Good Friday music, are already familiar in the concert-hall, where each hearer forms an imaginary picture of the incidents, compared with which any actual representation will probably fall short of the ideal; again, the theory still flourished that at Bayreuth alone was real perfection of rendering possible, a tradition long since exploded in the case of the "Ring," but lingering about "Parsifal" from the mere fact that no rival production has hitherto been possible.

Finally, there was the question of surroundings: how could a drama of this religious nature make its due impression in the secular atmosphere of Covent Garden, with its associations of Italian opera and evening dress, amid the roar of London traffic instead of the peace of a Bavarian pinewood?

With all these drawbacks to contend with, any hope of avoiding complete disillusionment might have seemed vain; and yet the hope is triumphantly justified, and the production rises above all such incidental dangers to success. After all, we now realise, those who see "Parsifal" at Bayreuth are not sitting in a cathedral, but in a particularly bare and ugly theatre, possessing no qualities of religious suggestion; in any case, the auditorium is kept in darkness during the acts, so that the attention cannot be distracted; no one considers it incongruous to go to church in the middle of London traffic, and the habit of putting on special clothes for that purpose is not unknown among us. And on the musical side, the Bayreuth tradition demands a harsh declamatory style which is neither speech nor singing, and is utterly out of harmony with present day methods of rendering Wagner's music, however well it may have suited his ideas of dramatic expression.

The festival-play, however, certainly does demand no ordinary standard of care and insight, and we must willingly admit that Covent Garden has approached the work in the right spirit, and avoids any suspicion of presenting it merely as an entertainment. The scenes of greatest religious and mystical significance, where any jarring element would be disastrous, are treated with restraint and reverence, while musically no such beauty of singing has been or could be heard at Bayreuth, while the present tradition persists there. The listeners, on their part, feel the meaning of the occasion: curtains fall in complete silence, and the audience disperses as quietly as from a cathedral festival.

The story of the drama must now be well known from much description in the press, but it is interesting to consider how Wagner treated the mediæval legend, and in what respects he altered and amplified it. The story of the grail originates in a Pagan myth, where it appears as a kind of talisman or sacred jewel, which had the power of miraculously strengthening those who beheld it, in an actual physical sense, without any spiritual application; later on, this legend was Christianised, like so many of the Pagan festivals and customs, and was connected with a Christian myth about the sacred cup used at the Last Supper. This relic was described as guarded in some remote sanctuary to which only the pure in heart might penetrate, and the "quest of the grail" became a favourite subject among the poets of mediæval chivalry, and found its way into the Arthurian romances, where Galahad, Gawaine, and Percival were distinguished in its service.

Wagner derived his version from a poem on "Parzival" by Wolfram von Eschenbach (a minstrel whom he had introduced as one of the characters in Tannhäuser), according to which the grail was delivered by angels into the keeping of a band of knights at Monsalvat, in Spain. It was still regarded as a talisman, with the miraculous powers already described, and Wagner retains this quality in it, since even the bodily strength of the knights is said to wither when the grail is no longer uncovered; but on to this material element he imposed the doctrine of transubstantiation in its most literal form, so that the "holy meal" at which the grail is shown becomes also a sacrament. It remains, however, an actual meal, like the Last Supper; many, who have not visited Bayreuth, have wrongly supposed that the grail scenes take place in a church, whereas the building is described in Wagner's stage directions as the refectory of the knights.

The powers of goodness, represented by the knighthood and their leader Amfortas, are opposed by the fallen Klingsor, symbolical of the power of evil and the temptations of the world, which have so far prevailed that Amfortas has lost to him the sacred spear which was treasured with the grail, and has received a wound which can only be healed through the recovery of the spear by the "reine thor"—the man of guileless innocence.

The character of Kundry, to whom Amfortas succumbed, appears to be a creation of Wagner's own, and he endows her with weird and mysterious qualities; in a former existence (the Oriental belief of transmigration of souls being here assumed) she was Herodias, and she tells Parsifal that for mocking Christ on the cross she was condemned to a curse of laughter. From time to time she comes under Klingsor's magic power, and is used by him as a temptress for the knights, a task which she can only escape when one is found with strength to resist her; when the spell does not hold, she attempts to make atonement by serving the knight-hood, so that in Wagner's scheme she typifies a mixed character, good in intention, but unable to remain always free from evil influence.

Parsifal himself is dramatically quite colourless, and the two stages of his development which are shown are hardly human in an ordinary sense; until nearly the end of the second act his innocence is that of mere ignorance, like the stupidity of a young animal, while in the third, when he returns with the spear after long trial and wandering, he is exalted to an almost superhuman calm and dignity, in which we are meant to trace a reflection of the character of Christ.

Wagner had, in fact, many years before sketched out a Christian drama, "Jesus of Nazareth," in which he would have attempted a direct representation of the Gospel stories, and ideas for a possible religious subject were always floating in his mind. At one time he thought of combining the legends of Parsifal and Tristan to point the contrast between sacred and profane love, and Parsifal in his wanderings was to have appeared in what is now the third act of "Tristan and Isolde," where the hero lies mortally wounded in his castle.

At another time, his thoughts turned to a Buddhist theme, of which we may perhaps see evidence in the idea of Kundry's pre-existence.

These earlier plans were laid aside till the storm and stress of his life were happily over, and his great project at Bayreuth completed, and the music of "Parsifal," while lacking some of the force and passion of the earlier works, shows a serene mastery over a fully developed style which is in harmony with the sacred character of the story.

We are so accustomed to think of Wagner as a supreme musician, that it is curious to remember that he regarded himself first and foremost as a philosopher, then as a dramatic poet, musician, and scenic artist, probably in that order of importance; but who would now think of reading the book of the "Ring" as a poem, much less as a philosophy of life? and his achievements in the setting of the stage show all the deplorable taste and lack of colour-sense which characterised the German art of his period. But as a composer he is still unapproachable; the impressiveness of "Parsifal" is almost wholly due to the music, which at times reaches an atmosphere of religious feeling far above changes of fashion or developments of technique; indeed, we feel its effect most deeply in just those scenes which are not strictly dramatic at all. Considered as a subject of dramatic action, the story is undeniably weak, and fulfils none of the Aristotelian requirements as to plot; it is impossible to feel any interest in Parsifal as a personality, up to the moment of his enlightenment by Kundry's temptation, while in the last act the trials and sufferings which give him redeeming power are already over. Kundry, too, is strange and supernatural, and her subjection to Klingsor as a kind of living instrument deprives her of the human appeal made by Isolde or Brunnhilde.

The musical emphasis not only varies inversely with the dramatic effect, but it adds beauty and interest even to the long narratives which seem to be inevitable in Wagner's poems. Thus, almost as soon as the drama opens, the action remains at a standstill, while the knight Gurnemanz relates to his companions the whole history of the grail (with which they must have been perfectly familiar) in order that the audience may know the circumstances in which the scene begins—a purely theatrical device, long before satirised by Sheridan in the "Critic." But the music which accompanies and explains it is as splendid as in any part of the work, and a similar pause in the third act is used to recall again the pathetic music associated with Amfortas.

In the present production, it happens, somewhat unexpectedly, that the finest results are obtained in just those scenes where the religious element is strongest and dramatic action least important. The second act, which is entirely secular, and calls for the ordinary resources of theatrical art, is here quite unconvincing as an example of Klingsor's dangerous wiles. His magic garden is garishly lighted and crude in colouring, and neither the gaudily-dressed flower maidens nor the crimson draperies of Kundry contribute anything to its attractions. It is certainly better than the dreadful exotic vulgarity of the picture at Bayreuth, but it shows the worst side of the English "realistic" scene-painting, without a spark of the imagination which enables Bakst and the Russian decorators to create on a plain back-cloth an enchanted garden of unearthly fantasy. The first essential of a "magic garden" is that it shall be more, and not less, alluring than a natural one; but in this case we can only conclude that those knights who did succumb must have been singularly easy to please. For a few seconds only it is impressive, when at the close of the act it falls to ruin under Parsifal's exorcism, and the withered branches are dimly seen against a lurid sunset sky.

The third act, however, is more satisfying; the scene is simple and picturesque, though rather too brilliantly lighted, and forms an appropriate setting for the exquisite Good Friday music. Here Wagner approaches most nearly to a direct introduction of a Gospel incident; the returned Parsifal, representing as closely as possible the traditional appearance of Christ himself, rests by a spring, and the repentant Kundry washes and anoints his feet and dries them with her unbound hair. It is the most critical moment in the drama from the point of view of stage effect, since a single awkward or incongruous movement would be fatal. But the acting shows perfect dignity and restraint, and the whole scene suggests some old German sacred picture of the school of Albert Durer.

The climax of effect is attained in the grail scenes of the first and third act. The architectural setting follows the Bayreuth model, and shows a hall of Romanesque design with a central space surrounded by upper galleries and covered by a dome. A wonderful illusion of space and distance is produced by the darkened foreground, and the vista of side aisles dimly lighted by a mysterious blue haze filtering through barred windows. Every musical resource at the command of Wagner's matured power is called upon to reinforce the impression; an undercurrent of pealing bells runs through the whole scene; processions enter to the sound of solemn marches; the chorus of the knights is answered from remote galleries by hidden choirs who sing unaccompanied chorales of austere beauty; the uncovered grail glows with a miraculous light, and the music rises to sublime heights of religious intensity.

So far is all this from mere theatrical display, that we seem to lose the sense of the stage altogether, and on the fall of the curtain feel a perceptible shock in returning to lights and conversation, as from some real and vivid religious experience.

RONALD P. JONES.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE ALBANIAN RELIEF FUND.

SIR,—I need hardly say I am delighted with the generous reply to my appeal made by your readers. I think all contributors will be interested to know that I have received a letter from Mr. Kennedy, the American missionary, telling me that he and his wife and Mr. and Mrs. Tsilka (who are Albanians) have been given the use of a large room by one of the big Mahomedan Beys and have a regularly organised party of refugee women employed at making clothes. And that they have clothed 220 families, and given out a quantity of bed covers (the native wadded quilts), and also have distributed 1,950 yards of cotton and flannelette, and 50 tins of condensed milk, and 200 of the straw mats which form the usual bed of the peasant. This is the report of the work done in the past four weeks. The money sent to Colonel Phillips at Scutari is used almost exclusively for food.—Yours, &c.,

M. EDITH DURHAM.

116a, King Henry's-road, N.W.,
February 11, 1914.

CHAPELS IN WHICH MARK RUTHERFORD PREACHED.

SIR,—May I ask you to afford space for the following brief statement with regard to the correspondence in your columns as to "Chapels in which Mark Rutherford preached." My brother-in-law, Mr. William Hale White, afterwards so widely known as Mark Rutherford, and my sister were living, some time between 1854 and 1857, near the Camden-road, N.W., and my home was within a very short distance of theirs. I perfectly well remember starting quite early one Sunday morning and walking with Mr. White to Battersea, to what was then the terminus of the Brighton Railway, Victoria Station not yet being in existence. From there we took the train to Hassock's Gate, and a walk of about a mile and a half brought us to Ditchling, where, in the Unitarian Chapel, my brother-in-law conducted the service and preached. We went afterwards to dinner with some prominent member of the congregation, whose name, though—if ever I knew it—I cannot recall, and in the early evening returned to London. I am glad to be able to place one item in the controversy beyond doubt. —Yours, &c.,

JOHN ARTHUR.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

LORD LISTER.

The Life of Lord Lister. By G. T. Wrench, M.D. London: T. Fisher Unwin. 15s. net.

EVERYONE knows that Lord Lister discovered the antiseptic method in surgery, and that by so doing he has saved innumerable lives. Mr. Bayard, the American Ambassador, at a banquet given by the Royal Society in 1902 to Lord Lister, expressed the feeling of all the world in one memorable sentence. "My Lord," he said, "it is not a profession, it is not a nation, it is humanity itself which with uncovered head salutes you." This Life by Dr. Wrench helps us to realise the character of the man whose services merited so splendid a tribute. As we read Lister's life, and follow him through his work and difficulties, we gain an ever deeper reverence for the man as well as greater admiration for the surgeon.

Lister, like Ruskin, was the son of a London wine merchant. He was born in West Ham in 1827. He is one of many distinguished men and women sprung from the small and formerly despised sect of Quakers. "The home atmosphere in which he was brought up may be said to be that in which he continued to live all his life. It was one of comfortable affluence, earnest faith, and practical goodwill, qualities distinctive of a great number of Quaker families, added to which was the devotion to science and to microscopical study which was the chief occupation of his father's leisure hours." Lister took his degree without any special distinction in University College, and then passed into the medical school. He distinguished himself as a student and house surgeon. His favourite Professor, Dr. Sharpey, at the close of his studies at University College, sent him with a letter of recommendation to the famous surgeon, James Syme, of Edinburgh. From that time for many years Lister worked as surgeon and teacher in Scotland. It was there that he made his great discovery of the cause of suppuration in wounds. It was the Scottish hospitals in Glasgow and Edinburgh which were first revolutionised by the new methods.

Lister, it has been well said, "had the genius to see the obvious instead of the conventional." Genius does not usually consist in discovering the extraordinary; it sees the obvious, something that is perfectly plain and simple—when once it is seen. The conventional view of suppuration was that the oxygen in the atmosphere sets up in some way fermentation in the juices of the wound. That sounds satisfactory, like the famous old phrase "nature abhors a vacuum," to the multitude who are content with a smooth sounding explanation that explains nothing. Lister was not content with the explanation. If oxygen was the cause, why should hospital wards be far more dangerous to open wounds than private houses? He examined statistics and found that out of 2,089 amputations in hospital practice 855 died; out of 2,098 amputations in country practice 226 died. This set him on the right road. There must be something in the air of a hospital more poisonous than in the air of a country house. Our imagination is obsessed by germs to-day; in Lister's day germs were as little regarded by science as ghosts.

There is not space in this article to dwell upon the wonderful story of Lister's progress. Essentially the idea was absolutely simple. Give the healing tendency of nature its full chance, exclude the poisonous germs in the atmosphere. Be clean. One is inclined to think the orthodox conventional surgeons might have said:—

There needs no ghost, my lord, come from the grave
To tell us this.

It needed more than the ghosts of the many slain by ignorance: it required a living man of tremendous force and persistence to compel the surgeons of the world, and above all the surgeons of London, to recognise the dangers of dirt. Now we all know it: then, it seemed to many like the foolish fussing of an old woman. If Lister had discovered something recondite the London surgeons might have listened with more respect. But they felt insulted at being told to "wash and be clean." Carbolic acid, like the waters of Jordan of old, seemed too commonplace a remedy.

Theology is often credited with being the source of all the persecution which science has sustained. In Lister's case it was not theologians who hindered him, and hardened men's hearts against him; it was those of his own profession who were filled with most prejudice against him. The fact is, orthodox bigotry is not a disease confined to religion. The conventional dull acceptance of a tradition with which the interests and prejudices of a community are intertwined is a danger which threatens every corporate body. Doctors are no more immune from it than theologians or policemen. Lister gained a European reputation long before the London surgeons would admit there was anything in his methods. His hospital wards were visited by leading surgeons from the Continent, but the London surgeons stayed stubbornly at home. It is to the honour of King's College Hospital that in 1877 they ventured to invite this man, who was still generally regarded in London as little better than a quack, to become Professor of Surgery in their Hospital. "At this time of day it is nearly impossible for us to realise the boldness of this appointment," writes a King's College official. The London surgeons were now compelled to admit the cures they had hitherto ignored or explained away. Lister did several operations which no London surgeon would have dared to do, owing to the suppuration which always followed their antiquated methods. One distinguished surgeon said, on hearing of a particular operation, "When this poor fellow dies some one ought to proceed against Lister for malpraxis." But the "poor fellow" did not die; he recovered with amazing celerity. Scientific men, however obstinate, are usually capable of conviction by facts, when these facts are forced upon them. The opposition gradually died away, and Listerism was adopted or developed in one way or another by all serious surgery.

Success did not change Lister's character. He remained to the last a modest, reticent, resolute, quiet man. Kindness, courage, and humility are the characteristic qualities of his life. Henley's sonnet on him, written in the Edinburgh Hospital, is a touching and beautiful tribute to him in his earlier days by one who had been a patient in his hands:—

His brow spreads large and placid, and his eye
Is deep and bright, with steady looks that still.
Soft lines of tranquil thought his face fulfil—
His face at once benign and proud and shy.
If envy scout, if ignorance deny,
His faultless patience, his unyielding will,
Beautiful gentleness, and splendid skill,
Innumerable gratitudes reply.
His wise, rare smile is sweet with certainties,
And seems in all his patients to compel
Such love and faith as failure cannot quell.
We hold him for another Heracles
Battling with custom, ignorance, disease,
As once the son of Zeus with death and hell.

H. G.

THE STORIES OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

THE lovers of good books will be very grateful for the issue of William Morris's Prose Romances in Longmans' Pocket Library. They fill thirteen volumes, but they may be bought separately at two shillings a volume. Hitherto most of them have seemed beyond the dreams of avarice, whether in their original form or in the noble collected edition edited by Miss May Morris, whose possessor must have a well-filled purse and a roomy house. It is a new world of delight that is thus opened to the wayfaring man, for it is strange how little these books are read. With the exception of "News from Nowhere" and "A Dream of John Ball," which have owed not a little of their popularity to their appeal as Socialist tracts, these far-reaching reaches of romance are almost unknown. Their titles—"The Story of the Glittering Plain," "The Water of the Wondrous Isles," "The Well at the World's End," and the rest—are full of pleasantness for ears which are still sensitive to the beauty of words; and the world of adventure into which they transport us is one of freshness and delight, of high spirits and the open air, in which morbid fancies and ugly problems have no part. We have called them stories, for Morris was a born story-teller in the old sense of the word, before the novelist had narrowed our interest to the few years of courtship, when the whole intricate tapestry of human life with its glowing colours and dark masses of shade was spread out before men for their admiration, their pity and their tears, as they gathered on long nights round the fire. We would advise our readers, if they want new food for their imagination and new health for their souls, to save on sevenpenny novels, which are of small profit, and to buy volumes of William Morris instead.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS:—
A Primer of English Literature: W. T. Young.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK:—History of Religion, Vol. I.: G. F. Moore, LL.D. 12s.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON:—The Bed-Book of Happiness. 6s. net.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co.:—Men and Matters: Wilfrid Ward. 12s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. THOMAS NELSON & SONS:—Conduct and Character: J. H. Wicksteed. 1s. 6d. net.

SIR ISAAC PITMAN & SONS, LTD.:—Fenelon, His Life and Works: Paul Janet. 5s. net.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS:—Cavour and the Making of Modern Italy: Pietro Orsi. 5s. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The International Journal of Ethics.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

JESUS, OUR TEACHER AND FRIEND.

VI.—STRONGER THAN DEATH.

I HAVE come to the last of my six articles, and seem to have got only a little way in what I hoped to say to you about Jesus; but perhaps some other time I may be able to ask you to look at other pictures from his life that will help us to get still nearer to him.

The name of Jesus, for Christian people, is the greatest in all history, but he is not simply a character in history, even the greatest and most famous; what we find in him is the deepest truth of our own life, a spirit of life which we feel to be the highest and best; and the centuries that have passed since he lived among his fellow-men, in a land and among a people so different from ours, cannot separate him from us. Jesus is an actual, living friend and teacher to those who will learn of him, and realise the power of that true life which was in him. For this is how God, our Father, teaches us. God is with us always, in the secret places of our own life, and gives us the power to understand and feel what is right and true and beautiful and good; and he gives us friends, to whom we look up, whom we know that we may admire and trust and love. He gives us our homes, and the love of father and mother, and the happiness of home is the deeper when we realise that it rests in the unchanging love of God. So with our friends. They make clearer to us what is beautiful and noble in our life, what are the better things towards which we must be striving; and it is God, our Father, the Spirit of the hidden life in us, who in the silence of our own hearts tells us this, and gives us these good gifts, and through them the joy of the true life with him. That is how he gives to us Jesus, as the friend and helper of our better life. We look to him, and through his teaching, through what is told of him in the Gospels, through the influence he had on his disciples and through them on the world, we realise something of what his life actually was, and there is that in our own hearts that responds. God makes clear to us, reveals to us, the truth of Jesus. We know that is the right kind of life, the true manhood, the true spirit of life, to which we also must be surrendered as children of God.

What I have been trying to make clear to you is that it is an actual life that touches ours when, in the circle of the disciples, we come into the presence of Jesus. When he began to teach, as a prophet, of the kingdom of God, we are told that the people heard him gladly, and felt that he taught as one having authority, that is to say, as one who knew in his own heart and could declare with power the truth of what he taught. And that is what we feel, as we follow the steps of his ministry and see how he went about among the people doing good. I have touched upon some of the points in the story which help us to realise the commanding power of his presence, the pure, unselfish goodness of his life, his wonderful insight and helpful sympathy, and through it all we are brought back at every moment to the central thought of the inward truth of his life, in harmony with the Father's will, resting in the love of God. The people were glad because they felt the reality of that better, happier life of which he spoke, the grace and truth of which they felt to be in him. And so it is with us. It is the life that prevails, and gives to the words of the teaching their kindling power, the new spirit of life in him and in us.

You remember Theodore Parker's hymn, taken from a sonnet in which he spoke of Jesus as the "great Friend to all the sons of men." There is another hymn which I want to repeat to you here. It was written originally by J. W. Chadwick, but has been remodelled by Mr. Gannett, so that we owe it to the two friends together. It speaks of Jesus as "Our Brother."

O Brother of the righteous will,
O Brother full of grace,
What human glory is revealed,
Foreshadowed in thy face!

As once the homes of Galilee,
It lighteth ours to-day;
And still to men it showeth clear
The Life, the Truth, the Way.

Thou art the Way: for still, to know
The love that reigns above,
There is no other way than thine,—
To live the life of love.

Thou art the Truth: alone on eyes

Like thine the visions fall.
Blessed, with thee, the pure in heart,
Who see the God in all.

Thou art the Life: in thee we own
The glory all may wear,
Who will like thee, for truth and right
But learn to do and dare.

O Brother of the righteous will,
O Brother full of grace,
With deepening faith the sons of men
Still gaze upon thy face!

The story of the ministry of Jesus grows very sad towards the end. He seems to have clearly foreseen that he would have to suffer, like the older prophets, for the truth, and that through the enmity and hardness of heart of the leaders of his people he would be put to death. Yet nothing could shake his confidence that the kingdom must be established and that the power and love of God were yet over all. It seems that he came to be convinced, through the experience of his ministry, that he was not simply a prophet of the kingdom, but that he was actually called to be the Messiah of his people (Mark viii. 27-34). But if that was so, it was in a deeper, more spiritual sense than the people in the glowing dreams of their imagination could understand. And when the disciples confessed their belief in him as the Christ, the Messiah, he bade them not speak of it to the people. He knew that they would only misunderstand, and that the claim in public must mean death to him. Yet he held steadfastly upon his way, speaking out the truth with all his heart, ready to give his life for the cause. Though he could not see how it was to be, and how the Father's will would be done, there was yet in his heart the deep conviction that death could not be the end. (Mark viii. 31 must not be taken as a literal word of Jesus, though it may clearly represent his expectation. As to the last words, compare Hosea vi. 1, 2). I cannot speak of this more fully now; but keep a clear hold upon this thought. Jesus, in his pure devotion to the kingdom, and his great love for his fellow-men, was faithful unto death; even in the darkness where he could not see the way, he was utterly surrendered to his Father's will. And so he triumphed over death. He triumphed in that perfect surrender, and the Cross has been, from that time to this, the emblem of the victory of love over hate, of life over death, of the power of a pure self-sacrifice. For truth could not be so destroyed, and God was not dead. Out of the very darkness of that tragedy, and what seemed the utter failure of their cause, the new light of victorious conviction broke in the disciples' hearts; for to them came the witness of the Spirit, the deep inward assurance that neither the truth nor their Master could be so destroyed, that he was not dead, but had passed through the shadows into the new life, radiant with the light of God. So the assurance of the better life was once more renewed in them, in their hearts where it had been kindled by the touch of Jesus. In their faith and love it was made actual again, and Christianity as a living power in the world was born.

That was how the life triumphed, the inward truth of the life with God, through the death of Jesus; and he is with us still, the friend and helper of our better life, an inspiration to all high endeavour, the "Chief of faithful souls." In his teaching it is a living voice we hear, and we may look into the living face. There we see such faithfulness, such understanding sympathy, such high appeal and searching purity, such power, such love, as make us very humble, and at the same time very thankful that we are called to follow him. It is God who calls, and bids us be of the same spirit. He gives to us this friend and brother, this leader of our race. In fellowship with him and his true followers of every generation, we are to grow up into the fuller knowledge and joy of life, the more perfect faithfulness and love and trust, to find our own place in the Father's house and in the service of the kingdom of God.

V. D. D.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

RELIGION AND SOCIAL SERVICE IN LIVERPOOL.

A MEMORABLE GATHERING.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE dinner given by the "Eighty-eight" and "Ninety-six" Clubs in Liverpool, in honour of Councillor Herbert Rathbone, Lord Mayor of Liverpool, and Chairman of the Council of the Ancient Chapel, Toxteth, proved a memorable occasion. In the happy words of the Rev. T. Lloyd Jones, the Lord Mayor, however, "Rathbone-like," turned all the honour into another direction. So it came to pass that the minds of all those in this great gathering of religious Liberals, of whatever shade or tone of opinion, were focussed, not upon the Lord Mayor, but upon the religious and civic services implied by the Domestic Missions in Mill-street and Hamilton-road. The great "toast" of the evening was "The Missionaries and Their Cause," coupled with the names of the Revs. T. Lloyd Jones, Joseph Anderton, and J. L. Haigh. Nor can even this be said to cover the deeper motives and positive aim of the gathering. As Richard D. Holt, M.P., the Chairman, put it, "We are met here, not as a chance conglomeration of persons, but by reason of one clear and definite common bond. We are members, most of us, of a certain small group of allied churches." Religion provided the motive impulse, and the whole course of the proceedings hinged on the relation of religion to life. The history, the tradition, the present practice of a group of fellow-worshippers formed the great theme of discourse. And, curiously enough, in these days of presumed decadence of Church life and of pulpit power, the emphasis was laid, not so much on the evident and eminent services of Liverpool Unitarian laymen, but rather on the work of ministers. The Chairman reminded the assembly that the guest of the evening was not only a nephew of John Hamilton Thom, but had had the advantage formerly of living next door to him. Of Mr. Thom, one observation might be fairly permitted to any person who was acquainted with the Unitarian body in Liverpool. "If it be permissible," the Chairman continued, speaking in the pastoral terms possibly suggested by the hilly district of his constituency, "to judge of the merits of a shepherd by the fleeces of his flock, or the quality of the mutton, never was a shepherd more justified than Mr. Thom. I think, if you look back on the record of those who were educated at Renshaw-street Chapel, under the ministry of Mr. Thom, it will be difficult to find a single other congregation in which such a large percentage of the occupants of the pews had rendered more valuable public service in the rank of life in which they were stationed." The speaker found such stimulation in this fruitful thesis that he suggested it would not be a bad plan to hold their ministers responsible for the individual character of their congregations. They certainly would be held responsible in "the other world." An apostolic and humbling thought! Dr. Carpenter pursued a similar vein, and cited William Rathbone as quoting from that same venerated and revered pastor the great truth and principle: That for every moral wrong the Providence of God has provided a moral remedy. It was not only the influence of the older time ministers which served as a text for the profit of those present. The Lord Mayor not only mentioned his own minister, Mr. Craddock, but read at some length from the MS. of a sermon lately delivered at the Ancient Chapel, thus proving that the Word of the Lord is not silent, even in these days, in that prayerful little place. Mr. Rathbone had been emphasising the meagre response of many "decent and law-abiding" citizens to public service, and suggesting their probable indignation if told that their lives not only did not help forward the cause of progress, but that their neutral quality, their slackness, and sometimes their cowardice occasioned almost as much harm as the man who had done positive wrong. It was interesting to see the Chief Magistrate of this city, manuscript in hand, reading more than a page of his minister's sermon, in which was asked the question: Which class of men has more hindered the advance to the ideal good—the openly contemptuous of the great hope, or those who have trifled with it?

It is often asserted by the praisers of past times that the true art of speech-making is lost, and it may be true that we have no Burkes among us to-day. Yet, on this occasion, the speaking was of a high order and worthy of an occasion which was itself "in praise of" practical religion. The Chairman gave a pertinent exposition of the religion of free men: free from State control, and what was of even more importance, free from a worse evil—the control and paralysis of the dead hand. The control of almost any living man was less intolerable than slavish submission to the control of the person who had been deceased for some thousand years. . . . Nobody except a theologian would have dreamt of urging the necessity of conforming finally and for ever to an obligatory point of view. This was to put a great inducement on everybody to reject new knowledge. Imagine any of the great industrial organisations of this country being conducted on the basis that every person who ventured to suggest that, after all, a new process or method might be better than an old one should promptly and immediately lose his salary. The Lord Mayor said he realised only too well that he was really reaping where he had not sown. He realised more fully every day that while it might be true to say the sins of the fathers were visited on the children, in Liverpool it was far more true to say that the good deeds of the fathers were remembered by the citizens of Liverpool and visited on their children, even to the third and fourth generation. No greater tribute to the name of Rathbone, we may remark, could be given than this. "The call upon us all," he said, "is to see that any increase in our powers and in our opportunities is utilised to the fullest possible extent to help forward the upward march of man." Dr. Carpenter, prefacing by saying that he came there from academic seclusion, spoke sympathetically of the arduous work of the Domestic Missions. "The whole of our civilisation rests," said he, "on a vast body of labour, some skilled, some unskilled; where men are daily immolating themselves for our welfare. These have no opportunity of knowing or realising the part they play in the common life, or sharing in those higher aspirations of endeavour after conscious fellowship with the purpose of the Eternal." Again, a living minister, a missionary, was cited. Dr. Carpenter quoted from Mr. Haigh's report words regarding the mission held last spring: "The missionaries had brought a message of beauty, a message of peace, a message of reconciliation, and a message of gladness."

The Missionaries responded in suitable terms, Mr. Lloyd Jones dwelling characteristically on the support and sympathy accorded to him; Mr. Haigh on the example and influence of his master, H. W. Hawkes; and Mr. Anderton making an impassioned appeal to the citizens present to stem the dreadful tide of drink. In conclusion, the Lord Mayor called on those present to honour the toast of Mr. Lawrence Holt and Mr. Sydney Jones as the organisers of what the Chairman termed "that most agreeable and delightful festivity." Mr. Sydney Jones, in reply, disclaimed any share in the actual work, and Mr. Lawrence Holt said that it had been a very great pleasure to him to be associated with such a memorable occasion as that.

This ended a gathering which had insisted throughout on the impossibility of limiting the field of religious inquiry; on the ministry, not of a theological dogma, but of a gospel of honest, sober, Christian life; on the plain duty of civic responsibility for fellow citizens, regardless of sectarianisms; on the infinite diversity of the great drama of existence; on the present industrial unrest as an emergence of the significance of souls, and as a world-wide movement towards the right of a higher kind of self-expression.

AMONG THE WAR VICTIMS IN ALBANIA.

THERE was a large attendance at Essex Hall on Monday evening when Miss Durham gave an address, illustrated by lantern slides, on her relief work among the Albanian peasantry. Mr. H. W. Nevinston presided, and a collection amounting to £140 was made for the Albanian Relief Fund. The Chairman, who has himself been associated a good deal with Miss Durham in her noble work, paid a warm tribute to her enthusiasm and practical energy, and the personal influence which she has been able to exercise as a result of her intimate knowledge of the Balkan people in championing the cause of the Albanians. He proceeded to give an interesting survey of the history of this ancient race—the most ancient now existing in the whole of the Balkan peninsula—from the time when it came under the power of the Roman Empire to the present day, when it is struggling to retain its nationality and autonomy in spite of its neighbours, who are anxious to steal as much of it as they can for themselves. It was difficult, Miss Durham said, in the course of her lecture, to give any idea, to people who had experienced nothing of the kind, of the appearance of a country in which village after village had been destroyed by fire, trees felled, crops ruined, and the people reduced to a state of destitution and misery for which there was very little relief. With the winter coming on they had no shelter but the blackened walls of roofless dwellings, or the wretched sheds or tents which they were able to rig up. Under these they crept, soaked with rain, stricken with fever, and weak from starvation and hunger. Women could be seen chopping up grass and leaves to boil for food for the children, but this concoction made them ill, and malaria and typhoid and smallpox were rife, as many as seven people in one house being found dead. From the first the Montenegrins had behaved treacherously to Albania, who believed them to be her friends, and their aim was to starve the people out in order to render them helpless and easy to conquer. Many people to whom assistance was given were threatened with imprisonment, and even in one case with hanging. Miss Durham had pledged herself to help the Albanians. At first, when she was acting as war correspondent, she took her part in helping the wounded, but she grew rather impatient when she saw how much was done for them while the starving peasants who were the greatest sufferers from the war were left to rot and die. Graphic descriptions were given of the scenes at Scutari where the people had begun to die at the rate of 30 a day when the town was taken. The entire flour supply was held up by the Montenegrins, and while the Powers were debating, and in doubt as to what was the best thing to do, the people in Scutari were counting the minutes in agony, waiting to be relieved. Two English ladies helped Miss Durham at this juncture, and they instituted a house-to-house visitation, carrying a can of condensed milk and cordials, and looking for the people who were too weak to come out, in order that they might give them succour. In this way many lives were saved. It was, the speaker added, very touching to find that in many cases the children were fairly well nourished, while the father and mother were half starved and ill. Later Miss Durham tackled the questions of the villages. She had no idea how many were burnt, but every day or every other day she used to ride out and see what was to be done in the way of feeding and clothing the people, and distributing corn seed to be sown for the harvest. She used to take these journeys with as much as £200 in her possession, and without any escort, and was never once molested—a fact which she commended to those people who regarded the Albanians as a lot of savage brigands. On arriving at a village the method was to summon the priest, or hodja, and the House Lords (the Lord of the House is the head of a large family group) and ask for details as to the number of people in the village, and the condition they were in. A rough estimate was then made as to the amount to be given. It was a wetter season than usual, and, though they did not get more than one third of the ground sown, the crops were good, and the gratitude of the people for the help they received was very touching. The money did not hold out, however, and terrible scenes were experienced when applications for assistance had to be refused. Miss Durham now decided to return to England in the hope that she might raise more money to meet these urgent needs, but when she was on the point of starting she received a telegram begging her to go to Elbasan, where the refugees were pouring in from the territories annexed by Servia. She started on horseback, and in three and a half days reached Elbasan. There a most awful state of things awaited her which has been already partly described in our columns on Jan. 17. After doing all she could at Elbasan, where the work was of a particularly arduous and heart-breaking character, Miss Durham rode away from the mass of misery she was no longer able to relieve, and returned to Scutari. Want of funds made it equally impossible to stay there, however, and she returned to England, where she is at the present time endeavouring to raise money in order that some, at least, of the miserable victims of the war who still remain may be saved, and the trying time tided over until the spring.

At the close Miss Durham was warmly thanked by Mr. Nevinston on behalf of the audience for her address, and a vote of thanks to the Chairman, proposed by Dr. H. F. Morley, brought the meeting to a close.

SUSTENTATION FUND. ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting of the contributors of the Sustentation Fund was held at Dr. Williams's Library, Gordon-square, W.C., on Tuesday the 11th inst. The chair was taken by the President, Mr. W. Byng Kenrick, and there were also present the Revs. H. E. Dowson, J. Harwood, F. K. Freeston, W. Copeland Bowie, C. J. Street, W. L. Tucker and W. H. Drummond, and Messrs. F. W. Monks, L. N. Williams, C.

F. Pearson, E. J. Blake, B. P. Burroughs, G. J. Noteutt, O. Lee, R. P. Jones (Treasurer), and H. F. Pearson (Hon. Secretary).

The report of the managers which was presented by the Hon. Secretary recorded the death of three managers, viz., Mr. Frank Preston, Mr. Frederick Nettlefold, and Mr. Edwin Ellis during the year, the resignation of Mr. William Long, one of the original managers and a past President of the Fund, which had been received with deep regret, and the appointment of Mr. W. Byng Kenrick, Mr. Ronald P. Jones, and Mr. Lawrence Durning Holt as new trustees of the Fund. During the year six new managers were appointed to represent the National Conference, namely, the Revs. J. Wood and C. J. Street, and Messrs. Hugh R. Rathbone, F. W. Monks, G. H. Leigh, and J. Harrop White. The report further records that in making their grants last June the Board did not consider that they were yet in a position to commence to administer the Fund on the new lines, but they think it probable that if, as is confidently anticipated, they receive before next June a substantial further payment from the Special Fund Committee they will be able to make considerable progress towards the realisation of the policy of bringing stipends in England and Wales up to the minima set out in the Special Appeal. A Conference, which should have useful results, was held last December between Special Committees of the Board, the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and the Ministers' Stipend Augmentation Fund for the purpose of, as far as possible, preparing the ground in advance.

The following is a summary of the grants for the year:—

England	£985
Wales	355
Ireland	180
	£1,520

In consequence of the resignation of some of the ministers during the year, the full amount of the grants made was not paid in several cases. The Treasurer, in presenting the accounts, explained that £6,000 of the National Conference Appeal Fund has been paid over and invested. The balance in hand of £359 was due partly to the non-payment of certain grants and to new and increased subscriptions, which would be utilised as soon as the new scheme came into operation. Mr. Kenrick, in moving the adoption of the report, referred in highly complimentary terms to the services of the honorary secretary and honorary treasurer in their new work. "Since the close of the financial year," he said, "we have obtained fuller knowledge of our probable resources for the future. We hope in June next to be able to consider a largely increased number of applications, and we confidently expect that we shall be able to deal with all cases where grants are needed to bring up the stipends to the minimum. We have also to consider how we can relieve the British and Foreign Unitarian Association of grants to establish congregations, and we expect to make progress in this direction at an early date." It was fitting, he continued, that he should recall the words of Mr. William Rathbone in regard to the doubt he felt of the benefit of a local endowment, but a permanent central fund making yearly grants might be made the means not only of doing much-delayed justice to a fine body of men, but might also be the means of stimulating a healthy local life. These were the principles which would still be followed in the administration of the fund. The resolution was seconded by Mr. H. F. Pearson and carried. Subsequently Mr. G. J. Notcutt, of Ipswich, and Mr. T. Oliver Lee, of Birmingham, were elected to fill vacancies on the Board of Managers. In moving that the thanks of the meeting be given to Mr. Kenrick, and that he be re-elected President for the ensuing year, Mr. Harwood said that the honoured name of Kenrick had received fresh distinction through the connection of their Chairman with the Fund. The motion was seconded by the Rev. H. E. Dowson and carried. Mr. R. P. Jones and Mr. H. F. Pearson were re-elected honorary treasurer and honorary secretary respectively, and special votes of thanks were passed to Mr. E. W. Marshall for his services as hon. auditor, and to the Trustees of Dr. Williams's Library for their courtesy in allowing the use of their room for meetings of the Fund.

Subsequently a special general meeting of the contributors was held to consider certain alterations in the regulations which had been already approved by the Board of Managers. The chief of these related to the enlargement of the Board so as to include three representatives of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, to be appointed at its annual meeting, of whom two at least shall be laymen. This recommendation was passed, and the other alterations, which referred chiefly to the drafting of the rules, were approved.

ALBANIAN RELIEF FUND.

THE following sums have been received on behalf of the Albanian peasants in addition to the amount acknowledged in our last issue :—

Amount previously acknowledged.. ..	£245 18 11
K. L.	2 0 0
L. O. M.	0 10 0
Two Friends	0 5 0
Total	£248 13 11

SOUTHERN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE thirty-seventh annual meeting was held at Bournemouth on Wednesday, February 4, representatives from the churches at Southampton, Portsmouth, Newport, I.W., Ringwood, Wareham, Parkstone, and Poole, being present. The chair was taken by the president, the Rev. H. S. Solly. Of the vice-presidents, the Rev. C. C. Coe, Mrs. Cogan Conway, and Mr. Charles Isaacs were present; also the Rev. Charles Hargrove, representing the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, who received a cordial greeting. The meeting was held at an interval of only eight months from the last annual meeting, owing to a decision to close the financial year on December 31, and not on June 30 as hitherto, and only an informal report of the work of the past half-year was made. It was agreed that the next report and balance-sheet should cover the eighteen months, and be presented at the close of the present year. The officers and representatives of the Association, as appointed last June, were re-elected. The President, during the absence of Miss Spencer in Egypt, is acting as Treasurer. The Rev. A. R. Andreae is undertaking the Association's Postal Mission work.

After tea in the lecture hall, and an organ recital during the interval by Mrs. Belben, of Poole, a public meeting was held in the Church, when addresses were given on "The Appeal of Liberal Religion." The President, in opening the proceedings, said that while they were never afraid of controversy in defence of their Unitarianism, people were not as much interested in that as formerly, and they were now going on to something else. Their plea was for a juster appreciation of liberal religion by orthodox believers, and of orthodoxy by liberal religious thinkers. As to the position of the latter he quoted a statement in a recent address by Dr. W. C. Gannett, that the "liberal" in religion holds four things to be supreme: "Freedom of reason and conscience, as the method in religion, instead of tradition and authority; Fellowship as the spirit in religion, instead of sectarianism; Character, as the test, instead of ritual or creed; and service, as the aim, instead of salvation of self." The Rev. Charles Hargrove, speaking of religion in progressive thought, paid a fine tribute to the memory of Bishop Colenso, a man of the sincerest Christian piety, whose courage in the critical study of the Bible, and in speaking out, made his name to be remembered in the history of religious thought. All thought must be progressive, Mr. Hargrove said later in his address, and religion must not depend on any external authority, but on its own innate strength. It belonged to human nature.

The Rev. G. W. Thompson, of Portsmouth, spoke of Religion in Social Unrest, which he described as world-wide and due to many causes, to be welcomed as a sign of life. He dwelt upon the great unity of life, and the need for co-operation, and insistence on the interdependence of all things, at least a pragmatic monism, on the part of religion. It should enjoin upon all men the primal and imperative duty of seeking to understand and obey this united co-operation of forces, and so to co-operate with Nature, with God.

The Rev. A. R. Andreae, of Southampton, in a closing address, on "Liberal Religion, Inward and Devout," said that its basis must be personal experience, subject to the experience of the race, and a trained intelligence and conscience; all life was its subject matter, and the distinction between secular and sacred was broken down. It must draw not only from the Bible, but from all literature, with unfettered search for truth, always open to the light and by nature devout. Such devotion they found in their own great men, and in such a one as Rabindranath Tagore. They must be devout, and keep the soul open. Their work as religious thinkers was simply a cleaning out of the flues that the fire might burn. The soul must be under discipline, set free to grow, to seek and to find and sink itself in God.

A vote of thanks to the speakers and to the Bournemouth Congregation, moved by the Rev. J. Ruddle, and seconded by Mr. H. Maguire, B.Sc., the newly-appointed minister at Wareham, brought the meeting to a close.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Acton.—The members and friends of the Acton Church are passing through a period of deep sorrow. They have lost a staunch friend and a devoted worker in every movement for the welfare of the church by the death of Mrs. Alexander Barnes, wife of the Secretary. She had from the very beginning of the movement in Acton worked always for its advancement, and whatever of success in its social and religious life it has attained is largely due to her influence and character. As President of the Women's Working Guild she won the affection of its members, and infused into them something of her spirit and energy.

Advisory Committee.—The Rev. Harold Johnson, B.A., of Osborne, Aughton, Ormskirk, Lancashire, and late of the Moral Education League, has been granted a certificate of fitness to occupy a ministerial position in the provinces by the Advisory Committee of the Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire.

Bedfield.—Mr. W. H. Sands, a member of the London Lay Preachers' Union, has accepted the post of Suffolk Village Missionary, with the charge of the Bedfield Chapel.

Downpatrick.—Referring to the Kikuyu controversy in his sermon on Sunday morning, February 1, the Rev. M. S. Dunbar, minister of the First Presbyterian Non-Subscribing Church, discussed the origin of the present attitude of the High Churchman, and pointed out that the spirit and teaching of Jesus Christ are inconsistent with the sacerdotal ideal of Christianity involved in the Catholic theory of Apostolic Succession which the High Anglican has adopted. There was one good result of these discussions and divisions among the sacerdotal party, he said, "the religious inquirer may feel somewhat awed and inclined to give in, so long as only one great and venerable organisation makes a claim to divine authority, but when a rival springs up, one's course is clear. There is nothing for it but to use one's reason and judge between them; and entering on the path of reason, one is most likely to continue therein, and to find that both claims are equally groundless, and to come to the conclusion that rest for mind and soul can only be got by trusting in the reason and conscience God has given us to guide us into the truth in this perplexed world of infallible books and authoritative churches."

Gateshead.—At Unity Church, Coatsworth-road, under the auspices of the Missionary Conference, the Rev. H. D. Roberts, of Liverpool, conducted a series of special services from January 31 to February 4.

Ipswich.—The Rev. Arthur Golland, M.A., who for the past four years has been minister to the Unitarian Church at Ipswich, has resigned, and leaves in May to take up mission work in London. Mr. Golland's resignation has been received with great regret by the congregation.

Leeds.—A special meeting of the congregation of Mill Hill Chapel was held in the Priestley Hall on Tuesday, February 10, Alderman Lupton presiding. The business was to consider a recommendation by the Chapel Committee that an invitation be given to the National Conference of Unitarian, Liberal Christian, Free Christian, Presbyterian, and other Non-Subscribing or Kindred Congregations to hold its Triennial Meeting in Leeds in 1915. The chairman moved and Mr. C. H. Boyle (chapel warden) seconded a resolution approving the recommendation of the Committee. The resolution having been supported by Mr. Grosvenor Talbot and the Rev. R. N. Cross, was carried unanimously.

Liverpool.—At Ullet-road Church last Sunday morning the service, at which the offertory was devoted to the domestic missions, was conducted by Dr. L. P. Jacks. The Lord Mayor, wearing his chain of office, attended the service, and the church was filled. In the evening Dr. Jacks conducted the mission service at Hope-street Church, which was filled also. The offertories exceeded those of previous years by a large amount.

London : Bell-street Mission.—The Rev. R. P. Farley, B.A., has resigned his position as minister at the Bell-street Mission and will close his ministry in May. The Rev. A. Golland, M.A., of Ipswich, has accepted the invitation of the committee of the London Domestic Mission Society to take charge of the work at Bell-street in succession to Mr. Farley.

London : Blackfriars.—Professor L. P. Jacks has consented to preside at the annual meeting of the Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel on Tuesday, March 31, next.

London : Wood Green.—The annual meeting of the Wood Green Unitarian Society was held in Unity Hall on February 6, when Mr. H. B. Lawford, of Wandsworth, presided over a well-attended and successful gathering. The report showed the Society to be in a distinctly better position than at the end of 1912, the Treasurer being able to close the accounts for the year with a balance on the right side. A very encouraging circumstance has been the large number of strangers who have attended the services at Unity Church each Sunday, many of whom have already commenced to take an active interest in the work of the church.

National Unitarian Lay Preachers' Union.—At a meeting of the Committee of the Union held at Essex Hall on February 7 the resignation of Mr. S. P. Penwarden as hon. secretary was received with regret, and Miss M. Francis was elected in his place. At the next meeting of the Committee to be held on March 11, the programme of work and revision of rules will be discussed. Miss Francis will be glad to receive suggestions either from individual members or from federated societies for the consideration of the Committee. Address: 128, Broadwall, London, E.C.

North Cheshire.—The quarterly meeting of the North Cheshire Unitarian Sunday School Union was held at Flowery Field, on Saturday last. The president, Mr. George Cocks, presided over a meeting of the Committee in the afternoon, when a preliminary scheme of visiting the schools of the Union was approved. About 100 teachers and friends sat down to tea, after which the President again took the chair, and the Rev. J. S. Burgess gave a lecture upon "The Revival of Beautiful Play." The lecture was illustrated by games and dances given by 30 members of his classes, which have been so successful during the past five years. A vote of thanks to Mr. Burgess, the children, and the Flowery Field friends for their arrangements was moved by the Rev. H. E. Perry, and seconded by Miss Dornan. During the evening a resolution was passed expressing condolence with the relatives of the late Mr. William Woolley, who had been a most active worker in connection with the Union, having been a member of the committee for 25 years, and had occupied the positions of president and vice-president. Among those present were the Revs. H. E. Dowson, Albert Thornhill, and E. G. Evans.

Nottingham : The late Mrs. W. B. Thorpe.—

It is with much regret that we record the death of Mrs. W. B. Thorpe, of Lenton House, near Nottingham, which took place on February 1. Mrs. Thorpe came of an old Congregationalist family, and her uncle (Dr. Richard Alliot) and her paternal grandfather and great-grandfather were independent ministers. The two former were successively ministers of Castle Gate Congregational Chapel, in Nottingham, during a pastorate of nearly 50 years; and her father, the late Mr. Alexander Alliot, and her husband were devoted adherents of the same chapel. Mrs. Thorpe joined the High Pavement congregation about ten years ago, during the ministry of the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, and to the end remained a loyal and generous supporter of the chapel and its institutions. She had strong literary tastes, and was also deeply interested in social work. No charitable cause in Nottingham or its neighbourhood went without her support, which was not confined to generous pecuniary help, but included devoted personal service. For a number of years she was honorary secretary for the Lenton Orphanage, and a member of the Nottingham Board of Guardians, and she acted on many committees. The Leaside Mothers' Meeting, which is chiefly carried on by members of the High Pavement Chapel, owes to her in great measure its establishment and maintenance, and one of the events of the meeting's year was the annual visit of its members to her home in the summer time—a home which had the added association to all connected with the High Pavement that it was for many years the abode of the Needham family, so well known to members of the congregation in earlier days. Apart from public work Mrs. Thorpe was a woman of broad sympathies and kindly heart, and her name and memory will be gratefully cherished in Nottingham.

Southport.—The Rev. William Jellie, B.A., late of New Zealand, has accepted a unanimous invitation to become the minister of the Unitarian Church, and will enter upon the duties on March 1.

Urmston.—On Sunday, February 1, the fifteenth anniversary service was conducted by the Rev. E. L. H. Thomas, B.A., and on the following Saturday, February 7, the annual congregational soiree was held. There were encouraging attendances on each occasion.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A SONNET BY ROBERT BROWNING.

The following sonnet by Robert Browning, addressed to the memory of his parents, was among the papers disposed of at the Browning sale in May, 1913. It is published for the first time by the Cornhill Magazine for February, and reprinted here by permission.

Words I might else have been compelled to say
In silence to my heart—great love, great praise

Of thee, my Father—have been freely said
By those whom none shall blame; and while thy life
Endures, a beauteous thing, in their record
I may desist; but thou art not alone:
They lay beside thee whom thou lovest most;
Soft sanctuary-tapers of thy house,
Close-curtained when the Priest came forth—on these
Let peace be, peace on thee, my Mother too!
The child that never knew you, and the Girl
In whom your gentle souls seemed born again
To bless us longer. Peace like yours be mine
Till the same quiet home receive us all.

WHAT THE PUBLIC OWES TO SIR ROBERT HUNTER.

An interesting account of the late Sir Robert Hunter's work as a great public servant and national benefactor, by Canon Rawnsley, appears in the current Cornhill Magazine. The following passage describes how he came to be associated with the founding of the National Trust. "In 1895," says Canon Rawnsley, "more work came to him to do that perhaps was nearer his heart than any he had yet undertaken for the public benefit. Circumstances had made the writer feel that it was imperative that some association should be formed for the securing and the permanent holding of places of historic interest and natural beauty. The first person consulted was Robert Hunter. He threw himself into the scheme at once, but begged that Miss Octavia Hill might be consulted. When consulted, not ten minutes elapsed before she said, 'If Sir Robert Hunter will help us and the Duke of Westminster will allow us to meet in Grosvenor House, the scheme will go forward.' That it has gone forward is evidenced by the fact that, in addition to the public monuments held in trust, forty-five properties in eighteen years have been secured for the nation's enjoyment, and Sir Robert Hunter, in addition to the 6,000 acres which he gained for the public when he won the famous Epping Forest case, has helped to secure another 6,060 as recreation grounds for the people. In his own countryside in Surrey, Hindhead Common and the Devil's Punchbowl—750 acres in extent—Ludshott Common, Bramshott Chase, Nutcombe Down, Grayswood Common, Waggoner's Wells, and Marley Common remain as monuments to Sir Robert Hunter's enthusiasm, and to the trust which was placed in him by the donors as adviser and arranger of details in negotiation."

MR. MACNAUGHT AND HIS BISHOP.

In the latest instalment of "Sixty Years in the Wilderness," in the Cornhill Magazine, Sir Henry Lucy gives a capital story of the Rev. John Macnaught, at one time Vicar of St. Chrysostom's Church, Everton, who incurred the disapproval of his bishop as a result of his liberal religious views. "Naturally a broad-minded man, lacking in sympathy with the narrowness of creeds," says Sir Henry Lucy, "the course of his study and reflection led him to question the accepted doctrine of the verbal inspiration of the Scriptures. He set forth his views in a little volume of which I possess a rare copy given me by the author many years after this turning path in his career had been courageously traversed. The book created a profound sensation in all the churches and religious seminaries throughout the country. The furor was exceeded only by the earlier publication of the more famous 'Essays and Reviews.' Strong pressure was put upon the Bishop of Chester to inhibit the Vicar of St. Chrysostom's from performing church duties. He stopped short of that, but after a brief interval the bolt fell obliquely. Macnaught invited the Rev. H. B. Wilson, one of the contributors to 'Essays and Reviews,' to preach in his church. The invitation was cordially accepted. Public announcement of the engagement was made. On the morning appointed St. Chrysostom's was thronged. Macnaught as usual read the Service. At its close, instead of making way for the visitor, he ascended the pulpit. Explanation was forthcoming in startling fashion. He read a communication from the Bishop of Chester inhibiting Mr. Wilson from preaching. Having slowly read the formal document, he paused for a moment, looked round the hushed congregation, and with gesture unconsciously reminiscent of Burke with his dagger in the House of Commons, flung the paper to the ground. 'And now,' he quietly said, 'I will read Mr. Wilson's sermon.' Which he forthwith did."

HEBREW MSS. IN ENGLAND.

Speaking at the annual general meeting of the Jewish Historical Society of England this week, Mr. Elkan N. Adler, the President, who was in the chair, remarked that one of his predecessors, in an article on Hebrew MSS. in the Jewish Encyclopædia, found that in 1904 of the 15,059 Jewish MSS. then known, England possessed 6,677. He was able to add over 4,000 to the number, so that they were fairly entitled to state that half the world's Hebrew MSS. were to be found in this country, and also that they were those of the greatest value and importance. It was meet and proper that Hebrew should be so well represented in England, for it was more than likely that in the next generation or so half of the Jews of the world would be speakers of English. That was the result of persecution in Eastern Europe, and liberty and tolerance in England and America.

A NEOLITHIC CEMETERY IN THE ABRUZZI.

An important discovery is announced, according to the Times, in the shape of a burial-place of the Stone Age, which has just been found by Professor Dall' Osso, of Ancona, in the Valle Vibrata, in the Abruzzi. The bodies are not buried, but are all laid in small cabins containing from two to eight each, and are arranged on either side of these little huts on low platforms sloping towards the centre.

With a single exception the bodies all rest on one side with the knees drawn up, and it is assumed that the dead were placed in this position to give them the attitude of prayer in their death chamber, for it has been established that the custom of praying on one's knees was already in existence in the Stone Age in Egypt. In one of the cabins, almost in the centre of the group, there are no bodies, but a big circular hearth, around which it is assumed, from the quantities of bones of animals and fragments of broken earthenware pots around it, the funeral banquets were held. The objects found in the cabins with the bodies have remarkable importance from the archaeological point of view, as they prove the existence of a degree of civilisation, especially as regards vases and such utensils, never hitherto observed in the Neolithic Age.

LONGEVITY IN A KENTISH VILLAGE.

Canon Horsley has been studying the records of a little village in Kent which is four miles long, and holds a population of 270 souls, with a view to discovering whether the economic and sanitary progress of the last half-century makes in this sort of environment for longer life and a decrease in infant mortality. The answer is in the affirmative, for of seven nonagenarians and 56 octogenarians 38 died in the second half of the century and 25 in the first half, while excessive infantile mortality is found to be entirely a thing of the earlier years. These facts are of importance, he pointed out recently in the Westminster Gazette, since a rustic argument against elementary proposals making for health is "our grampies knowed nothing of drains and damp-courses, and see how long they lived!" As the village in question nestles on the wooded side of "the backbone of Kent," "a long chalk range which shelters it from north and north-east winds, three hundred feet above sea level in its lower part, over six hundred and fifty in its higher part, a high rate of mortality is not to be expected. There have been 633 funerals in the century under review, an average of a little over six a year; but some years were worse than others, and these occur early in the century—fifteen funerals in 1818, fourteen in 1819, fourteen in 1826, and fourteen in 1850.

BLIND PEOPLE AND THEIR OCCUPATIONS.

According to the volume of the census of England and Wales issued lately, dealing with infirmities, there were 26,336 persons either totally blind, or suffering from a defect of vision which forbids the ordinary means of earning a living, in 1911. Of these, 13,257 were males and 13,079 females—that is, one person out of every 1,370 is blind, one out of 1,316 males, and one out of every 1,424 females. A great number of the former are engaged in willow, cane and rush working, or in basket making, about 69 per thousand. About 35 per thousand are employed as musicians, music-makers and singers, and about 3 per thousand as teachers and as coal and coke merchants. Willow, cane and rush working also claim the largest number of blind women, with a total of 18 per thousand, but the proportion of retired or unoccupied blind women is much greater than in the case of males, and amounts to 910 per thousand and 90 per thousand respectively.

AN INDIAN NOVELIST.

The author of "An Unfinished Song," Mrs. Ghosal (Srimati Svarna Kumari Devi), an Indian love story which has just been published in England, is, we learn from the Bookman, the sister of Rabindranath Tagore, and in her native country attracts almost as much attention as her brother. The chief interest of the story is said to consist in the excellent pictures which it gives of the life of the wealthy natives of Bengal, of their European manners and their very un-European outlook upon life.

For over Eighty Years

The Leading Literary Journal

The Athenæum

FOR THIS WEEK

(FEBRUARY 14)

Contains in addition to the usual features a Special

THEOLOGICAL SUPPLEMENT,

Including among its contents

A LEADING ARTICLE entitled

"The Task of Theology in the Twentieth Century,"

And Reviews of Books under the following and other headings:

Modern Views and Discussions.

The Old Testament.

The Message of Jesus.

St. Paul and the Early Church.

Every Friday. Price Sixpence.

Specimen Copy and Further Details on Application.

Next Week's Issue (Feb. 21) will contain a Supplement devoted to Publishers' . . .

SPRING ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE ATHENÆUM OFFICE,
11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

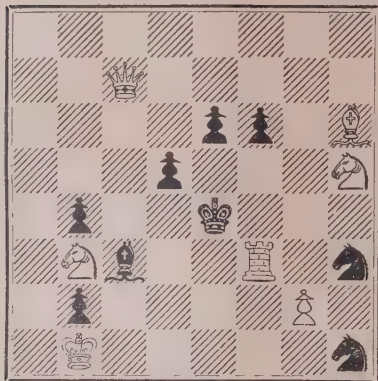

FEB. 14, 1914.

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 44.

By ANDREW BOLUS and PHILIP H. WILLIAMS.
(Joint composition.)

BLACK. (9 men.)

WHITE. (7 men.)

White to play and mate in two moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 42.

1. R. B8 (key-move).

Correct solutions have been received from R. B. D. (Edinburgh), W. E. Arkell, John White, Rev. B. C. Constable, A. S. Rodgers, A. J. Hamblin (the dual is inevitable), F. S. M. (Mayfield), A. Mielziner, W. S. B., E. C. (Highbury), Dr. Higginson, Rev. I. Wrigley, R. E. Shawcross.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

I did not personally see the proof of the issue of last week. Problem No. 43 has two Black Kings. That on the square d3 should be White. The solution will be deferred another week.

"Changed Mates."—I am writing a book with a collection of at least 100 two-movers with changed mates, of which our No. 44 is a sample. It took Mr. Bolus and myself days of analysis to perfect and much correspondence. The book will probably appear in the autumn. As the publication of chess books is extremely hazardous and invariably unremunerative, I should be much obliged if any of my readers will volunteer to promise their support to the extent of two shillings per copy. No necessity for anything but a promise at this early date. To those interested in problems I think I can guarantee value for money in this venture of mine, which involves much labour and patience.

This week's column has to be made up unusually early, so there is a reason for apparent omission of solvers' names.

Now Ready for February.

Price One Penny.

THE
SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

Editorial.

Lessons for the Month :

- I. Great Prophets are Inspired.
- II. The Great Teacher and His Message.
- III. What Jesus Teaches about God.

IV. His Teaching about Man.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.
Senior Department—C. M. Wright, M.A.
Primary Department—Ruth New.

Our Story Pages.

By the Way.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

SALE! SALE!! Remnant Bundles of Irish Pillow Linens, sufficient to make 6 full-sized Pillow Cases, 6s. 6d. per bundle. Postage 5d. extra. Send for Free Sale Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

BARGAIN BUNDLES of White Art Linen, for drawn-thread work. Suitable for Tray-cloths, afternoon Tea-cloths, and Sideboard Cover. Price 5s., postage 4d. Write for Free Sale Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by
Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. HILL, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

"THE UNITARIAN MONTHLY."

Magazine for Unitarian Propaganda. Adopted by churches with or without local page. Issued for last Sunday in each previous month. One copy post free, 1½d.—1s. 6d. a year; 9d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100; extra charge local page.—Address to Editor, 36, Burlington-road, South Shore, Blackpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCS.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, THORALBY,
AYSGARTH, S.O., YORKS.—Paying
Guests received.—Particulars from Miss SMITH.

DELIGHTFULLY-SITUATED
furnished Cottage to Let, in Sussex. Twenty-five miles from London; 2 sitting-rooms, 3 bed-rooms, good garden, lawn. Terms, 30s. weekly.—G. H., INQUIRER Office, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

LADY living alone wishes to receive Lady or elderly Gentleman, for Board-Residence in quiet, comfortable house near Golders Green Tube. Terms, 2 guineas; with private sitting room, 2½ guineas. Good cookery, and no others taken.—Address, C. M., 20, Alyth-gardens, Golders Green, London, N.W.

SUNNY South Coast Health Resort.—Ideal Winter Boarding House, Central, Garden, near Sea. Hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, electric light, and penny in slot gas fire in each bedroom. Three good reception rooms. Food Reform and ordinary diet.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

BOOKS

EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY,
TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE
And for all other Exams.

Second-Hand at Half Prices.

Now at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogue
184 (post free) and state wants. Books bought.

BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,

135, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to offer and pay highest genuine prices. Note quotations: Up to 2s. 3d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 5s. 6d. on silver, 11s. on gold, 32s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel, post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Unquestionably the oldest and most reliable firm. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C. and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HETWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 14, 1914.

Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3739.
NEW SERIES, No. 843.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

1/-
NET

A NEW "EVERYMAN"
IN LIGHT LITERATURE

1/-
NET

THE WAYFARERS LIBRARY

Fcap 8vo. Beautifully bound in six different shades of Binding Cloth. Frontispiece in Colours and Silk Bookmark

12 VOLUMES READY TO-DAY

ROMANCE AND ADVENTURE

A. E. W. MASON
H. G. WELLS
H. DE VERE STACPOOLE
ARNOLD BENNETT
PERCEVAL GIBBON

RUNNING WATER
THE WHEELS OF CHANCE
THE BLUE LAGOON
GRAND BABYLON HOTEL
ADVENTURES OF MISS GREGORY

SOCIAL AND DOMESTIC FICTION

MRS. SIDGWICK

THE PROFESSOR'S LEGACY

HISTORICAL FICTION

STANLEY WEYMAN
MARY BRADFORD WHITING

SHREWSBURY
THE PLOUGH OF SHAME

HUMOUR

SIR A. T. QUILLER COUCH
CHARLES LAMB

TROY TOWN
ESSAYS OF ELIA

BELLES-LETTRES, HISTORY, Etc.

LETTERS FROM DOROTHY OSBORNE to SIR WILLIAM TEMPLE
G. K. CHESTERTON THE DEFENDANT

SEND FOR PROSPECTUS.

J. M. DENT & SONS, Ltd., 72, Aldine House, Bedford Street.

Cambridge University Press

Forgiveness and Suffering. A Study of Christian Belief. By DOUGLAS WHITE, M.D. Crown 8vo. 3s net.

The Interregnum. Twelve Essays on Religious Doubt. By R. A. P. HILL, B.A., M.D. Crown 8vo. 4s 6d net.

The Puritans in Power. A Study in the History of the English Church from 1640 to 1660. By G. B. TATHAM, M.A. Demy 8vo. 7s 6d net.

The Parables of the Gospels in the Light of Modern Criticism. By LAURENCE E. BROWNE, M.A. Crown 8vo. 2s 6d net. Hulsean Prize Essay, 1912.

The Elements of New Testament Greek. By Rev. H. P. V. NUNN, M.A. Crown 8vo. 3s net.

The Gospel according to St. Luke. The Greek Text. Edited, with Introduction and Notes for the use of Schools, by W. F. BURNSIDE, M.A. With 2 maps. Extra fcap 8vo. 3s net.

The Poem of Job. Translated in the metre of the Original. By EDWARD G. KING, D.D. Pott 4to. 5s net.

Lectures on Dryden. Delivered by A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. Edited by MARGARET DE G. VERRALL. Demy 8vo. 7s 6d net.

Euripides the Rationalist. A Study in the History of Art and Religion. By A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. New Impression. Demy 8vo. 7s 6d net.

A Primer of English Literature. By W. T. YOUNG, M.A., Lecturer in English Literature in the University of London, Goldsmiths' College. Small crown 8vo. 2s net.

Lamb: Essays of Elia, and Last Essays of Elia. Edited by A. HAMILTON THOMPSON, M.A., F.S.A. Two vols. Price 2s 6d each. Pitt Press Series.

The Purpose of Education. An Examination of the Education Problem in the Light of Recent Psychological Research. By ST GEORGE LANE FOX PITT. Crown 8vo. 2s 6d net.

A National System of Education. By J. HOWARD WHITEHOUSE, M.P. Demy 8vo. 2s 6d net. Issued with the general approval of the executive committee of the Liberal Education Group of the House of Commons.

The Reign of Henry the Fifth. By JAMES HAMILTON WYLIE, M.A., D.Litt. Volume I. (1413-1415). Royal 8vo. 25s net.

Essays and Studies Presented to William Ridgeway, Disney Professor of Archaeology and Brereton Reader in Classics in the University of Cambridge, on his Sixtieth Birthday, 6th August, 1913. Edited by E. C. QUIGGIN, M.A., Ph.D. With Portrait in photogravure, 17 plates, and 71 illustrations in the text. Royal 8vo. 25s net.

Cambridge University Press
Fetter Lane, London

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION

Just Published.

LESSONS FROM THE PAINTERS

Lessons Founded on Celebrated Pictures.

By LUCKING TAVENER.

With 15 Illustrations. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

During thirty years of ministry, including pulpit, platform, and class work, I have found the use of works of Art most valuable. This little book is written in order to show how reproductions of pictures might be used to illustrate ideals and duties.

From Preface.

HEROES OF FAITH.

From Wicliff to Priestley.

By ALBERT THORNHILL, M.A.

With 14 Illustrations. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

In writing this little book the author has been impelled by the conviction that our young people have only to learn the story of the lives of the great Heroes of Faith to be moved with the desire to emulate their noble examples in the field of daily duty.

 A Complete Catalogue of the Publications of the Association will be sent post free on application.*

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

For over Eighty Years

The Leading Literary Journal

THE ATHENÆUM

JOURNAL OF ENGLISH AND FOREIGN LITERATURE, SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS, MUSIC, AND THE DRAMA.

Every Friday.

Price Sixpence.

The Current Issue (Feb. 21)

INCLUDES AMONG ITS CONTENTS REVIEWS OF

A History of Education in Modern Times
By FRANK PIERREPONT GRAVES;

A Cyclopædia of Education. Vol. V.
Edited by PAUL MONROE;

A Corner of the Cotswolds.
By M. STURGE GRETTON;

Poems. By EDWARD DOWDEN;

The Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics, Vol. VI.
(Fiction—Hyksos)

Edited by JAMES HASTINGS; and

A number of Short Notices of Theological Works.

Specimen Copy on Application.

Next week's issue (Feb. 21) will contain Reviews of a number of books relating to Ireland.

The ATHENÆUM Office, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	115	Lady Gregory's Personalia	120	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
THE SPRINGS OF SOCIAL RENEWAL	116	History of Religions	121	German Notes	122
SELF-PRESERVATION	117	A Sower went Forth	121	The Putumayo Criminals	123
AUTHORITY AND FREEDOM OF THOUGHT. — III.	118	Memories of Ministry	121	Albanian Relief Fund	124
AN IRISH ANCESTOR OF VISCOUNT BRYCE	119	Publications Received	121	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	124
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—		FOR THE CHILDREN :—		NOTES AND JOTTINGS	125
Charles Eliot Norton	120	A Cat and a Dog	122	OUR CHESS COLUMN	128

* * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE Kikuyu controversy has been lashed into fresh vitality by the imperious letter of criticism sent by the Bishop of Zanzibar to the Primate. He waives aside the latter's sober and conciliatory policy, denies the fairness and competence of the proposed tribunal, and even accuses the Archbishop of having prejudged the case because he describes non-conforming bodies of Christians as "branches of the Church of Christ."

"In the concluding passage of your answer," he writes, "you speak of the different religious bodies with which the Bishops desire to federate as 'branches of the Church of Christ.'"

"Your Grace will, I am sure, pardon me if I point out that this phrase implies the validity of the ministries of the bodies in question, and the use of it by your Grace, in an official pronouncement, justifies the Bishops of Mombasa and Uganda in all that they proposed and did at the Kikuyu Conference.

"If your Grace accurately interprets the mind of the English Bishops and clergy when you grant to the non-conforming bodies of Christians the title of 'branches of the Church of Christ,' I shall at once admit that my whole action in this matter has been, from your Grace's point of view, contrary to Church order and discipline. But I venture most humbly to submit to your Grace that the exact point in the controversy between the Bishops of Mombasa and Uganda and myself is the lawfulness of regarding such bodies, however, venerable and however spiritually effective, as 'branches of the Church of Christ.'"

"And I plead that your Grace's use of the phrase is evidence that you have in your own mind prejudged the whole case."

It is hard to reconcile sacerdotalism of this type with the tradition of the Church of England and the definitely Protestant elements in the Prayer Book. The extreme High Church party seem anxious to disown much of their own past and at all hazards to secure ecclesiastical control for themselves. With this end in view they are starting a campaign against Modernism, in which heresy is to be pursued with relentless logic. One section of the clergy, in expressing sympathy with the Bishop of Zanzibar, urges that "it is especially necessary at this time to maintain the infallibility of our Lord Jesus Christ during his ministry upon earth." A sentence like this would at once place the Bishop of Oxford among the heretics and make the whole field of Biblical criticism dangerous. Thus do men sacrifice generosity and good judgment to their own bigotry, and stumble blindly along the path which leads to schism and all uncharitableness. If this struggle is to be forced into the open it is one which will concern us all. There is a great deal about the position of the Bishop of Zanzibar, and those who are prominently associated with him, which to the plain man is quite inconsistent with the teaching of the Prayer Book. In his Open Letter the Bishop speaks of "the Rite, or Sacrament, of Confirmation," and "the Rite, or Sacrament, of Absolution," in spite of the explicit statement in the 25th Article that Confirmation and Penance "are not to be counted for Sacraments of the Gospel." The men who are so critical about the honour of other people will have to be examined very carefully about their own.

THE death of Dr. Augustus Jessopp at the ripe age of 90 will revive many gracious memories. He belonged to a type of clergyman of widely cultivated mind, tolerant in all his instincts, free from professional prejudice, which has almost passed away under the pressure of modern conditions. If any man ever deserved a deanery alike by his personal charm and for his work's sake, it was he. But the counsels of the Church of England in these matters are hard to understand, and he lived to see younger men of far less ability chosen before him. He was known to a wide circle of readers by his delightful volumes of essays, "The Coming of the Friars," "The Trials of a Country Parson," "Before the Great Pillage," which a few years ago did much to revive interest in English mediæval life and local history. He had the gift of stimulating imagination and intellectual curiosity in an unusual degree, and many minds must have been captured for the serious study of history by his vivid pen.

At a time when the rural problem is once again looming so large before the public eye the work which Dr. Jessopp accomplished in the parish of Scarning in face of strong local prejudice is of special interest. It is admirably summarised by a correspondent in the Times: "He began by building two good cottages with large gardens on the glebe land for want of another site, sinking his capital, of course, in doing so. He ended by being the builder, with funds provided by an anonymous donor, who had been touched by his article on 'the cry of the villages,' of a first-rate village hall, standing with three pairs of cottages, provided from the same source, in about an acre of ground given by the chief landlord of the parish, a hall which has changed the whole life of the place by the opportunities it gives of social life, and with an endowment partly provided by the rents of the said cottages. Dr. Jessopp came to a village of hovels. He left a nucleus of good cottages, putting the still existing hovels to shame and leaving some of them untenanted. He found a church much out of repair and left it in excellent condition. He was met by parishioners prejudiced against him and left them loved and regretted by all."

At the last meeting of the Committee of the Sunday School Association a resolution was passed in the following terms:—

"That owing to the increasing importance of the Sunday-school in the life of all the Churches and in national education, and owing to the demands made upon ministers by the higher standard of its work, it is desirable that instruction in the theory and practice of the Sunday-school and training in teaching should, if practicable, be included in the preparation for the ministry, and that the secretary be directed to write to the Committees of Manchester College, Oxford, the Unitarian Home Missionary College, and the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, and invite them to consider this question."

* * *

This resolution is in close agreement with the policy which we have urged frequently in these columns. We believe that at the present time there is a vast amount of incompetence among ministers in branches of work where they ought to be experts, with the result that religious education, which is passing more and more into their hands, is dull and ineffective. An educated ministry is of little avail unless it knows how to make its stores of learning intelligible and attractive to the average mind. It is a good thing in itself that the minister should be able to argue with the philosopher in the gate, and to hold his own with the newest of the critics; but his chief concern is with quite ordinary men, women and children, and no pains should be spared in training his faculties so that he may be able to help them in the best way. The preference of some congregations for men who have never been to college is not all due to ignorance and stupidity. There is a feeling that the theological college often tends to immerse a man in special studies of his own, and to separate him in the whole style of his thought from the world around him, instead of creating ties of closer and warmer sympathy with the common life.

* * *

THEN there is the argument from the neglect of training for the work of teaching among ministers compared with the growing importance which is attached to it elsewhere. School is a brighter and more interesting place than it used to be; the teachers are more alert; far more attention is paid to right methods both in teaching and organisation. But the Churches on the teaching side have lagged far behind the schools. The minister knows quite well that he is not as competent as trained teachers of quite ordinary gifts in these directions. He flounders about helplessly where they succeed with ease. In many cases he would much rather preach a sermon than face a class of eager and critical young people. The Bible lesson, the children's service, the whole organisation of the Sunday School tend to become second-rate. And yet it is one of his chief glories that he is called to be a teacher, and he ought to possess the teacher's sympathy and directness and trained insight.

* * *

We know well what can be said on the other side. The teacher is born, not made. It is true—we cannot by any amount of training produce a Thomas Arnold or an Edward Thring; but average material can be vastly improved. Then there is the scholar's plea, that the field of knowledge becomes vaster every day, and the curriculum is already overcrowded. We do not underrate this difficulty, nor do we deny for a moment the need of an equipment of wide and varied knowledge for the minister in the modern world. We have no sympathy with short cuts to efficiency which would avoid the discipline of hard thinking and real learning. But we think that the time has come for a fresh survey of the whole field. The cargo needs to be lightened. Possibly some parts of ancient learning must be jettisoned to meet the vital needs of a new age. The problem is essentially that of combining the claims of scholarship with the highest standards of efficiency from the practical point of view. Resolute and earnest men can solve it if they will. The needs of quite ordinary people must be recognised as a dominant factor in the situation, and the theological college, cutting itself loose from the false standards of the intellectual coterie, must learn to take as much pride in the successful teacher of little children as it does in the man who excels in languages or writes a learned book.

* * *

HERE, perhaps, we may venture upon a suggestion, which we make quite tentatively. Not long ago we heard Dr. Figgis say to a High Church congregation that they had not realised the immense advantages of giving up the belief in Biblical infallibility. The same thing may be said with far greater truth of the adherents of the liberal school. Biblical study with its vast array of scholarship is still based upon the assumption of the priceless value of every word, syllable, and letter in the sacred records. The result is that students are enmeshed in the minutiae of verbal criticism and the mind is rendered almost incapable of sensitive literary appreciation. We have discovered the mistake of studying Shakespeare in this fashion. Shall we be less just to the Bible? Possibly our whole method of approach to Biblical study needs to be revised, with the result that there would be considerable saving of time and inestimable gain in the freshness and delight with which the mind would explore the wonderland of the richest and most varied religious literature in the world.

THE SPRINGS OF SOCIAL RENEWAL.

SPEAKING at the annual meeting of the Peasant Arts Fellowship last week, Lord HENRY BENTINCK said that, in his opinion, to teach men an art, to bring back the old joy of making useful and beautiful things in healthful conditions, which stimulated both the mental and moral activities, and which belonged to us before the industrial revolution turned the people of England into mere machines, was the finest work that could be undertaken in this country at the present time. His words were re-echoed and amplified by subsequent speakers with a directness and urgency that brought those of us who heard them back to the fundamental things of life, liberating ideas which are apt to get suppressed, if they are not actually destroyed, by our constant preoccupation with all the empty nothings of the hour. We were not in an atmosphere of political controversy, but of spiritual aspiration, growing quite naturally out of the idea that hand and heart and brain should be continually associated in the production of things needful for human existence and pleasure, of wealth "not in Rock, but in Flesh," as RUSKIN understood it, while preserving that close communion with nature which has been forfeited by millions of people at the bidding of the god of Progress. Like pioneers who turn to countries beyond the seas in search of that simple and ardent life which it is impossible to enjoy in an over-civilised society, we fared forth in imagination to a new heaven on earth; but its boundaries were fixed by the waves that wash our shores, and the fields and woods of our vision were none other than those of our own land. For the whole object of the Peasant Arts Fellowship is to restore the joy and gladness of which the chairman spoke to the heart of England, and to recreate, in spite of the labour unrest, class antagonisms, and religious dissensions which provide the newspapers with so much exciting copy, an ideal of sanity and simplicity of life, of fruitful toil "unsevered from tranquillity," of brotherly union between fellow-craftsmen working in close contact with nature which is the only source of beauty, harmony and happiness.

Perhaps Mr. SANDEMAN, the writer of a recent book on "Social Renewal," gave the most fitting expression to this comprehensive ideal when he said that in his opinion the first aim of the Fellowship and of its organ, The Vineyard, a monthly magazine devoted to the literature of peasant life, was to re-quicken once again the spirit of lowliness, the sense of the sacredness of humble toil, and the purity and blitheness of heart which characterised St. FRANCIS of Assisi. Over and over again in the course of history men and women possessed of this spirit of meekness had made their influence felt in the world, and their inspiration was wanted more than anything else at the present time to counteract the failure of Christianity, as generally understood, to meet the real needs of the people. Their movement was inspired by religion: those who had accepted it believed that in love, and love alone, and work for love's sake, lay all beauty and strength, prosperity, joy and truth. This gave their efforts a constructive and synthetic value which could scarcely be over-estimated. They had discovered that which neither denominationalists nor legislators, nor science nor education nor philanthropy could supply—a new spirit; ancient, indeed, and universal, but new in our own time and country; and this spirit would enrich the nation more than commerce, defend it better than the soldier, and finally conquer the souls of men just because it was that for which their very being craved.

If such a claim can be justified—and its supporters are more than ever persuaded that it can—here is a cause worthy of adoption by those who are temperamentally unable to follow the tedious methods of Social Reform, with its plethora of Blue Books and its atmosphere of officialdom, still less to accept the theories of certain enthusiastic Socialists who cannot realise that the most perfect material environment will fail to produce an ideal state if man does not bring to it a power enabling him to transcend it for higher purposes. Its whole significance lies in its opposition to the tyranny of modern industrialism, which turns man into a machine, and then, because this involves starvation of the heart and mind and soul, making his life a misery, sets up still more elaborate machinery of State to ameliorate the conditions in which he is forced to exist. No education of the masses, no improvement of their material surroundings, no aggravation of the discontent of the agricultural labourer which ends in driving him away from the “deadly monotony” of the country into the far more deadly monotony of over-populated cities, can give human beings a true sense of the value and purpose of life while they are deprived of all power of self-expression, and compelled to supply the artificial needs stimulated by our craving for luxury and pleasure. The essential thing, therefore, is not that we should go to the people with the sole idea of “improving” them, or even to teach them to make “pretty” things—that last degradation of art!—but that we should help them to win back their native freshness of spirit, and the power to use the old “hand-language,” setting free those creative energies and aspirations which are latent in all of us as children of God. The real social renewal is less a matter of looms and spinning wheels, after all—though these are an essential part of the equipment of the peasant in his efforts to improve his condition—than of a complete change in the hearts of the people from the highest to the lowest. And this change can only be brought about by a “lavish rejection” of many ideals, political and otherwise, which are at present unhappily in vogue, and the gradual permeation of all classes of society with that Christlike spirit which gives beauty for ashes, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.

L. G. A.

SELF-PRESERVATION.

BY EDWARD LEWIS.

THE authorities of the Roman Catholic Church have placed the books of Maurice Maeterlinck upon the Index; partly, it is said, because of his views of death and the life after death, and partly also because he advocates the dissolution of marriage by consent. What is it that forces so ancient and deeply-rooted an institution to protect itself against an Idea? Why is it that the community—if I may refer to what I wrote in this column last week—is under the necessity of preserving itself by imposing virtuous habits upon its members? Let us state the answer in general terms: a thing which needs to be preserved is, by that sign, under the doom of decay and death. Self-preservation characterises only mortal things; and the instinct of self-preservation becomes a conscious method of life only where, and when, there is the ebb of life and the fear of death.

In the early years of a man's life the anabolic process dominates the katabolic; life almost lives itself; self-preservation is in the background; we “live to eat,” then, rather than “eat to live.” Youth is prodigal rather than preservative; there is recklessness, squandering, superfluity, exuberance. Energy is in excess. Youth is not struggling for existence; it is health and abundant life. Then, with the rhythm of life, the katabolic processes come into ascendancy, and the instinct of self-preservation becomes a method. Life begins to slip away. Disintegration has set in. We husband our resources when we are conscious that they are becoming exhausted. We become cautious when we are no longer quite sure of ourselves. We become prudent when the beginnings of fear are upon us. We conserve energies when we have sighted bankruptcy. The instinct becomes most conspicuous in things which are weak and old; in extreme cases, it is a signal of distress.

The community endeavours to preserve its order, just because that order is inherently liable to decay and dissolution. There was a time when the Christian Church was very little concerned about preserving itself; it was under an expansive movement, full of boldness, exuberance, joy, romanticism, heroic enterprise. It was daring, challenging, governing, eager, overflowing with nascent vigour. The anabolic process was dominant. It met obstacles, but flung itself upon them with a kind of triumphant recklessness; its method was full of venture and risk; its organisation, such as it was, was less for self-protection than for self-expression, self-declaration. Nowadays, katabolism supervenes; the instinct of self-preservation is almost the most alive thing about the Church now. See it, but yesterday, fighting Darwin and the idea of evolution; see the Roman Church to-day excluding Maeterlinck; see the Protestant Churches trying in many ways to galvanise the fading life within them, trying to come closer together like shivering sleep-companions with bad circulation, taking tonics in the form of evangelistic missions, special conventions, excursions into social reform to catch the sympathy of the working classes. For all the world like an ageing or a sick body.

The situation presented to us in our Gospels is perpetually recurring. On the one hand, Judaism, the status quo, the established order, hoary, reaching its term, self-preservative in the extreme; its officials spent their lives in elaborating its defences; the scribes interpreted the law to the last jot and tittle; the elders preserved the tradition; the priests were on guard with the shibboleths. Contrast all this elaborate machinery of self-preservation with Jesus who had simply his soul, naked, strong, faithful, enduring by the Invisible. He had no plan, no rules, no Order, no organisation; he was superbly indifferent in respect of what might happen to him or to anything he said or did; if some of his words have been preserved, it was not his fault. He made no provision for the possible interpretation or misinterpretation afterwards of any syllable or action. He was not concerned about having many people to listen to him, nor as to the setting of his message—the temple-court, the synagogue, the cornfield, the well-side, were all one to him. He just went about speaking as occasion asked, acting as opportunity offered, breathing his spirit out, raying his illumination out, uttering his Words of Life as he passed by. He trusted the vitality of his seed, and was willing to cast it anywhere.

What an imposing structure the established order is! How massive its battlements, how powerfully garrisoned! How entrenched its vested interests! How close-drawn the cordon of its conventions! How moated round with creeds and codes! How secure behind the barbed entanglements of the law! Think of the law, think of public opinion, of the authority of the Church, of the "compact majority"! And then think of the Soul of a man; something impalpable, intangible, a breath, a spirit! Surely this fortified, gated, garrisoned, redoubted Order is under no necessity to preserve itself! In its unconscious wisdom it knows better than that. Let a Soul, announcing itself with original and challenging voice, appear before the walls, and up will go the bridges, down will clang the portcullises, the marksmen will be at their places on the walls, the bows strung, the swords unsheathed; the whole Order will simply bristle with defence! Why? It is the difference between mortality and immortality; between form and life; between that which has authority, and that which has the power.

The "old order changeth, yielding place to new," and always by the power of the Soul which knows not how to preserve itself, but only how to give itself away.

The instinct of self-preservation is strong in the bee-hive; it is organised for that purpose; its manifold labours seek that end; it knows how to defend itself. But there is a different power at work when the queen bee starts on her nuptial flight, followed by the swarm of suitors. In their minds the instinct of self-preservation has no place. As the pursuit proceeds, the weaker ones fall out of the race, and at some height beyond ordinary ken the strongest of that eager company receives the prize in a consummation wherein Love and Death are one. He lived for one act in which he gave himself wholly and finally away. That act creates the future. If there were only the self-preserving instinct, the race would speedily die out; it is this other instinct, the instinct of Love, the instinct to give all away and die in the giving, which perpetuates the race in life.

The Order has a skeleton in the cupboard. It is Death. So the Order is afraid. The instinct to self-preservation is the sign of conscious or unconscious fear.

You preserve your health because it can be taken from you; your reputation, because it can be lost, and you are afraid to lose it; your world-gains, because they are perishable; the virtue and conventions of your class, because they can be challenged, and if challenged successfully would throw you into discomfort and insecurity and chaos. And all the while you are preserving yourself in these directions it is at the cost of your deepest and truest self-life; self-preservation always works limitation and restriction on the expansive, self-expressive, life of the Soul. You neither can, nor need to, preserve your Soul. Or, in other words, the only way to preserve the Soul is to announce it, fling it out on life, thrust it out into the open, venture it, risk it, give it away. It cannot be destroyed; it may be called a Breath, but it is the Breath of God. It is the plasm of God. It is the immortal substance. "He saved others, himself he cannot save." "Whoso loseth his Life shall save it."

AUTHORITY AND FREEDOM OF THOUGHT.

III.

WE are now facing the central question involved in the position taken by Mr. J. B. Bury in his book on the history of what he calls "Freedom of Thought." What is "Authority"?

To emphasise the vastness, variety, and pervasiveness of the forces in human life which may be classed as authorities, we perhaps run the risk of widening the meaning of the word too much. We shall understand by it all those forces which mould, or at least affect, our belief, either unconsciously as far as we are concerned, or, if consciously, then by means other than conscious reasoning. Such are "custom," "education," "public opinion"—our own past training, our social environment, the contagious convictions of countrymen, family, party, or church, and, not least, "the spirit of the age," producing a certain mental atmosphere or climate, favourable to the life of certain modes of belief, unfavourable or even fatal to the life of others: all these contribute, with or without our conscious consent, to the making and forming of our beliefs.

Deeper and more pervasive still is the working of the historic life of the community and the race to which we belong. In his striking and original work on "Adolescence," Professor G. Stanley Hall works out a suggestive theory of "Ancestral Inspiration," the truth of which appears to be independent of any special view of the enigma of heredity. The unfolding of mental life from childhood to manhood and womanhood consists partly in the opening up of springs which have their origin in ancestral depths—"the resonance of racial emotions which had their day and strength in the dim recesses of pre-historic times." Try to realise what this means. The evolution of humanity has proceeded on this earth for not less than twenty thousand years; twenty thousand years of progress bought with a price indeed—at the cost of struggle and conflict, suffering and death. And the outcome of it all has been the creation of the central forces which penetrate our conscious and unconscious being. At the end of his semi-scientific romance, "The War of the Worlds," Mr. H. G. Wells closes the strange story with a touch of genius. After all human devices had failed, the terrific invaders from another world all perished, slain by the humblest things to be found on this earth. "Those 'germs' of disease," he says, "have taken toll of humanity since the beginning of things—taken toll of our prehuman ancestors since life began here. But by virtue of this natural selection of our kinds, we have developed resisting power; to no germs do we succumb without a struggle, and to many . . . our living frames are altogether immune. . . . By the toll of a million million deaths, man has earned his birthright of this earth, and it is his against all comers; it would still be his were the Martians ten times as mighty as they are."

These things are a parable of our mental as well as of our physical endowment. What we have inherited from the past is not only a survival of instinctive prejudices, half-animal stupidities, and blind passions. Stanley Hall is right in speaking of "the life wisdom, depth below depth, that has been organised into our bodies, brains, impulses, and instincts—a wisdom which is vastly and incomparably greater than all that is in the consciousness of all men now living combined." There is organised into our bodily and mental frame not only a confusion of instincts and impulses ready to run wild, but a rich and many-sided life-wisdom as well, a wisdom deeper than consciousness, and bought at the price of all that natural selection and the struggle for existence imply. It is like the "Buried Life" of which Arnold speaks:—

Fate, which foresaw

By what distractions man would be possessed,

How he would pour himself in every strife,
And well-nigh change his own identity—
That it might force him to obey,
Even in his own despite, his being's law—
Bade through the deep recesses of our breast

The unregarded river of our life
Pursue with indiscernible flow its way;
And that we should not see
The buried stream, and seem to be Eddying at large in blind uncertainty,
Though driving on with it eternally.

The "buried life" in Arnold's poem means to him our "hidden self," our "genuine self." The thing we have in mind here means both more and less than this: as it were, the raw material out of which distinctively human life and character are to be moulded and made; the "raw material" of humanity—drawn from "that great transmitter of spiritual possibilities, heredity."

Within the realm of man's conscious thinking, the principle is the same, different as the conditions are. It is the past out of which we have grown that has helped us to whatever of wisdom we possess. From the 1900 years of Christendom we have a heritage containing that within it which is of everlasting worth. It is well to have our eyes fixed on the future and the vision of things yet to be; but that vision will be most truly seen by him who can most truly estimate the increment of truth received from many generations of men. There is no "infallibility" here; but there is authority, and authority which we need. Yet, for this very reason, living truth may harden into a crust of tradition, morality may stiffen into routine; and it becomes the interests of established institutions to perpetuate the tradition and routine as inviolable. Hence arises the demand for freedom.

Here, perhaps, we have traced the problem of authority and freedom to its central point. We men, in our rational and spiritual life, are, and must be, products of history before we are its producers. In this double relation of ours to history lies the source of a problem of adjustment, a problem of thought and of life, which was never harder than it is to-day. Hard as the ever-recurring problem may be, one thing is certain: we have nothing to learn from these blind guides, who speak as if the whole duty of man in spiritual things is to disown the heritage of the past, thus leaving whole realms of truth behind him and "advancing" to nothing.

"It is obvious," says Mr. Bury, "that every one's knowledge would be very limited indeed, if we were not justified in accepting facts on the authority of others. But we are justified only under one condition. The facts which we can safely accept must be capable of demonstration or verification" (p. 15). The significance of this admission depends entirely on what is meant by "demonstration" or "verification." The examples given in the context of the passage, together with the general mental attitude represented in the book, imply that "demonstration" is meant to consist exclusively in "observation and experiment," which, in the last resort, are reducible to sense-perception. This criterion of what is credible would, however, rule out most of the various kinds of authority on which we, as rational beings, are wont to rely in theoretical and practical matters; since we can find not one fundamental principle of logic, or mathematics, or ethics, and not one psychological fact in the way of thought, feeling, or will, whose reality and validity can be warranted by sense perception alone. This may be said to be one of the assured results of modern philosophy since the publication of Hume's "Treatise of Human Nature."

The greater part of the spiritual trouble and intellectual turmoil of our time is due to the fact that while we must have authority, infallibility or finality we cannot have. Hence we have innumerable kinds of authority, with no perception of a central unity pervading them; many different possible ways to go, each with claims of its own, but—

No one broad way for all to go,
Where none can wander, and which all may know.

In this respect, the contents of the Hibbert Journal are typical of the mind of the age. The difficulties are increased to an indefinite extent through the absence of men of genius to lead. The contrast in this respect with the last century is very striking. Four years of the nineteenth century had passed when James Martineau was born. Contemporary with his childhood was the childhood or boyhood of a group of men whom the world will not soon forget—Thomas Carlyle, J. H. Newman, Emerson, F. D. Maurice, Gladstone, Tennyson, Charles Darwin. All these have gone—some for many years. Martineau outlived them all, and he passed away before the first day of the twentieth century dawned. Thirteen years of this century have now gone. Does the world's young life of to-day include any who will prove worthy to rank with Martineau and others that we have named? Who can tell? It may be that the tasks of the coming age are committed to the charge of weaker hands and brains than these. But one thing will ever abide with us and last as long as we shall last, and having this, we have the root of all the authority we need. As long as humanity remains, in this world or any other, there will remain those elemental trusts, endeavours, and aspirations which are the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things unseen; those elemental movements of man's nature which are the source of all vital religion in every age, which are capable of infinite expansion in depth and power, and yet are the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, and prove themselves at last to be the very life of God in the soul of man.

S. H. MELLONE.

AN IRISH ANCESTOR OF VISCOUNT BRYCE.

WHEN Pitt determined to destroy the Irish Parliament, he called to his aid Robert Stewart, Viscount Castlereagh. How that young nobleman persuaded the Irish Parliament to commit suicide is well known. It is not so well known how he persuaded the Ulster Presbyterians to "lie low" meanwhile. It was important that something should be done to disarm Presbyterian opposition, because Ulster Presbyterians were the backbone of the United Irishmen as they had been of the Irish Volunteers, and it was the Irish Volunteers who had compelled Great Britain to concede Free Trade to Ireland and the independence of the Irish Parliament. Robert Stewart, Viscount Castlereagh, was peculiarly well fitted to deal with the Ulster Presbyterians. His father, also Robert Stewart, was a New Light Presbyterian and a member of the Newtownards Presbyterian Church, and the Viscount had been baptized by a Presbyterian minister. Robert Stewart, the father, moreover, had taken an active part in the Volunteer movement. He was a considerable landowner in County Down, and had sat as one of the members for that county in two Irish Parliaments. He had been elevated to the peerage in 1789, but continued his connection with the Presbyterian Church. His son, however, became an Episcopalian, but, this notwithstanding, the young man was regarded as a friend by the Presbyterians, and was greatly trusted by them. The Viscount appears to have counted upon this, though it would seem that he had no higher opinion of his Presbyterian admirers than he had of the members of the Irish Parliament. He proceeded on the principle that Presbyterians and Parliamentarians alike had their price.

Accordingly, shortly before the Union was effected, an intimation was conveyed to the Synod of Ulster that Government contemplated a substantial augmentation of the Regium Donum or Royal Bounty—an annual payment made by the State in supplement of the ministers' stipends. There was nothing original in this proposition. The Bounty had been granted in the first instance by Charles II. in recognition of the loyalty of the Presbyterian ministers and of the suffering they had endured on his account. The amount at that time was £600 per annum. For some reason or other the Bounty was discontinued during the latter years of Charles' reign and throughout the reign of James II. It was renewed by William III. and increased to £1,200 a year. It was further increased by George I. as a reward for Presbyterian support of the House of Brunswick. Two further increases brought the amount, in 1792, to £5,000. The method of distribution was simple. The Government paid the money to an officer appointed by the Synod, and that official disbursed it under the instruction of the Church Authority. It was now proposed to increase the amount of the Bounty very considerably, so that influential ministers should receive from £100 to £200 per annum, others £80 and others £60. The scheme did not mature, however, until the Union had become an accomplished fact, and then it appeared that the increase was not to be quite so large. Influential ministers were to have £100, others £75, and others again £50 per annum, and the money was to be paid through a Government official direct to the individual minister. And every minister on his appointment was to be required to ask for the Bounty and furnish a certificate, signed by two magistrates, declaring that he had taken the oath of allegiance. The idea was, as the Duke of Portland, writing to the Lord Lieutenant (August 31, 1799; Castlereagh Correspondence), very frankly said, to make the ministers "more dependent and more amenable to the Government." There was much protesting, especially on the part of the laity. But the Government was obdurate, and at the annual meeting of the Synod, in 1803, the Bounty was accepted on the Government terms.

Six years later, viz., in 1809, the Secession Presbyterians associated with the Secession Church of Scotland, after much importunity, also obtained an augmentation of the Bounty, and on the same conditions. Here, again, there was similar protesting—and nearly similar acquiescence. The Anti-burgher Synod of the body twice voted against accepting the bounty on the Government conditions; at the third time of asking, however, the motion to accept was carried, but—with one dissentient, and he, as it turned out, a very remarkable one. His name was James Bryce, minister of Killaig, in the parish of Aghadoey, in County Antrim, one of the poorest congregations of the Synod. This gentleman would have none of the Bounty on terms which, in his judgment, placed him in a position of dependence on the Government of the day. "Christ is my king," he said. Many of the laity warmly commended this attitude, and Mr. Bryce was frequently asked to preach in other churches of the communion, and, of course, he became "a disturber of the peace." Equally of course, he was excommunicated. His conduct was "brought to the notice" of the General Associate Synod of the Secession Church in Edinburgh, and he was, in May, 1811, suspended from his office. Inasmuch, however, as he had the unanimous support of his congregation, he disregarded this proceeding and went on his way as usual. For five hard years he stood alone. But, during that period, he formed seven congregations of people like-minded with himself, and, in 1816, dared to ordain a minister to one of them. Later on ministers were found for the others, and together they formed "the Associate Presbytery of Ireland."

Now, this James Bryce was a scholarly, capable, and resolute man. He managed to exist without the State Bounty, and yet to rear a remarkable family. To him was given the great joy of seeing several of his sons in distinguished positions. One, the Rev. Dr. Bryce, he saw at the head of the Belfast Academy. Another son, James Bryce, LL.D., he saw head of the Mathematical Department of the Glasgow High School. A third son, Archibald Hamilton Bryce, he saw one of the masters of the Edinburgh High School; this son afterwards became head of the Edinburgh Collegiate School. A fourth son he saw occupying a high place as a physician in Edinburgh. Then, when times had changed and he was greatly stricken in years, a remarkable distinction came to himself. He was called back to full communion in his old religious fellowship at Edinburgh—the entire assembly standing and receiving the venerable man with every mark of respect and affection.

The James Bryce of to-day—profound scholar, luminous historian, sagacious statesman and great ambassador, now called to the House of Lords as Viscount Bryce—is the son of the James Bryce of the Glasgow High School. Another son is John Annan Bryce, LL.D., Member of Parliament for Inverness, and both are proud grandsons of James Bryce, the one man whom Castlereagh could not "persuade."

HAROLD RYLETT.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

CHARLES ELIOT NORTON.

Letters of Charles Eliot Norton: with Biographical Comment by his Daughter Sara Norton and M. A. De Wolfe Howe. London: Constable & Co. 2 vols. 21s. net.

MANY fine chapters in the history of literature are enshrined in the letters of literary men, and few collections of such letters excel in interest the two volumes dedicated to the memory of Charles Eliot Norton. It is his best memorial, and surely the one which he, the genial editor of the correspondence of other people, would have chosen for himself. There is nothing derogatory to his own excellent gifts in saying that he will be remembered chiefly for his friendships. To be the fidus Achates of Carlyle, Emerson and Ruskin, and many another lesser luminary in the firmament of letters, is more than enough good fortune for one man to enjoy. These letters, indeed, are a record of friendships which, in their richness and intimacy, must be very rare. It is not very clear why from the days of early youth every door flew open to his touch and the casual acquaintanceship of the dinner-party or the afternoon call ripened so quickly into lifelong intimacy. There must have been not only a quiet persistence in following up the first clue, but also some indefinable element of frankness and personal charm which threw down the barriers of natural reserve. The letters themselves hardly explain it. They are wonderfully even in tone, well composed, a little stately, but seldom enlivened by humour—it is only with Ruskin that he unbends, and allows himself just for a moment to be playful—and with hardly a trace of intimate self-revelation. Even in his darkest moments Norton never forgot the well-bred reserve of his New England training and his Stoical creed. For this reason the book is not so much companionable as interesting, and it will appeal chiefly to people who share Norton's literary tastes.

He belonged to the best New England type, and shared not only its ideals of culture but also its great traditions of freedom. In later life he lost the religious faith of his early surroundings and found a sort of calm delight in the agnosticism which he shared with Leslie Stephen, but this never blunted his enthusiasm for liberty. In a letter written in 1855 he says, "The miasma that broods over Carolina in the summer seems to me but the emblem of the invisible, unrecognised, blindly guessed at moral miasma that rests over the lands where slavery exists. If I ever write against slavery, it shall be on the ground not of its being bad for the blacks, but of its being deadly to the whites." He believed "in the full rights of independent and equal citizenship" for the Negro; and only a few years before his death he incurred a good deal of short-lived obloquy by his stern disapproval of the popular jingoism at the time of the war with Spain. But these were not the chief interests of his life. He was happiest in his literary companionships, a hobby which comfortable circumstances enabled him to indulge to his heart's content. Perhaps the very ease with which the pleasures of art and books and congenial friendships came to him helped to dull, not his principles, but his active sympathy with the mass of ordinary lives around him, and made him gently blind to the fact that he himself was living in a guarded paradise. Thus we find him writing: "London forces you into queer company. We are more select at home. Is a society worth saving—can it be saved, that has lost its fastidiousness?" And again in the same vein: "'Society,' the very rarest and best thing that the world proper can give us. It is the thing that our modern materialism is largely killing out—that is, in its highest form, the society that bears witness to leisure and culture, and good breeding, made up of men who though versed in affairs are still idealists and lovers of poetry; not all novi homines, but men with traditions and independence."

There is not a trace of snobbishness in this attitude of mind; it is all accepted quite simply as the best and most natural order of things for himself. But it helps to account for the absence of the note of religious passion, even of genuine religious interest, in these letters. We have referred already to the fading away of the calm and rational Unitarianism in which he was trained. In an interesting letter to Miss Gaskell in 1867, he says: "It will be the glory of Unitarianism to have been the last step of the ascending series by which men reached at length the platform of the true Church Universal," but apparently this is to be a natural human brotherhood, which has left theology completely behind. Many years later, in 1892, he wrote to Leslie Stephen: "People talk of the consolations of religion, but they seem generally to be delusive. You and I, I believe, who have given them up, stand really upon firmer ground for the meeting of sorrow." As happens so frequently with people of an artistic temperament, religion and its observances appealed to him chiefly in circumstances where there could be no question of agreement. Thus there is a singularly unsympathetic account of a service at Westminster Abbey, after a pleasant visit to Dean Stanley at the Deanery: "the forms and words of the service seemed to me more than ever irrational and superstitious." But it is the lover of Italy who writes as follows to his daughter:—

"What you say of the conflicting feelings which the Catholic Church awakes in you is most true, and yet the abiding sentiment is what Dr. Johnson so well expressed when he said: 'I never read of a hermit but in imagination I kiss his feet; never of a monastery but I fall on my knees and kiss the pavement.' I cannot enter an old church, worn by the feet and the knees of generation after generation of those who have brought their cares, and sorrows, and desires there for relief, for comfort, for new hope, but my heart shares with them in their emotions, and the tawdry adornments and trifling ex votos only add to the impression; they are the witness to the perpetual incongruousness between the ideal and the realisation of it in expression. I wish I were with you."

But we must call a truce to quotations, and still more to criticism. We are content to take a book like this just as we find it, and not to ask it to be other than it is. It is in all its parts a magnificent tribute to the power of human friendship. Of all his friends Norton spoke nobly. One of the few remarks with a trace of bitterness refers to Froude, whom he denounces for his "insincerity of nature," but that was part of his chivalrous defence of Carlyle. Affection unstinted in its generosity of judgment and depending little upon the visible accidents of life was the heart of his creed. Nothing could be more characteristic of him than the approval with which he quotes the words of Donne, "In such a spiritual thing as friendship time is of no account."

LADY GREGORY'S PERSONALIA.

Our Irish Theatre: A Chapter of Autobiography. By Lady Gregory. London: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 5s. net.

LADY GREGORY has chosen exactly the right method of telling the story of the early struggles and growing success of the Abbey Theatre and the movement which it represents. Her narrative is of set purpose autobiographical and pleasantly discursive. We do not wonder that page after page is warm with the glow of triumph, for the adventure was a desperate one except for people of boundless faith in their ideals, and no movement of the kind in recent times has been so loyal in its refusal to sacrifice art to popular clamour or commercial success. Incidentally the book throws many side-lights upon Irish life and its elements of unconquerable idealism, which many people find it hard to understand. It emphasises, for instance, the growing fascination which Irish subjects exert over cultivated minds in France and Germany. Lady Gregory recalls how M. Salomon Reinach described to her a visit which he paid in Dublin to Professor Mahaffy, who was "much astonished that I was no longer taken up with Greek things, and that I found Irish antiquity so much more interesting." Lecky, the uncompromising Unionist, we are told, regarded Mr. John Redmond and his leadership with great admiration and esteem. There is a delightful description of John O'Leary, the Fenian exile, in his old age, with his downrightness, his honesty, and his dislike of flattering tongues. "I think it probable," he said, "that the English national character is finer than ours, but that does not make me want to be an Englishman." There is also a sketch of Synge, based upon personal intimacy, and a passage about Bernard Shaw and Theism, which should make the book worth its weight in gold to all members of the Shavian cult. "All this problem of the origin of evil," he wrote à propos of a passage in Blanco Posnet, "the mystery of pain, and so forth, does not puzzle me. My doctrine is that God proceeds by the method of 'trial and error,' just like a workman perfecting an aeroplane; he has to make hands for himself and brains for himself in order that his will may be done. He has tried lots of machines—the diphtheria bacillus, the tiger, the cockroach; and he cannot extirpate them, except by making something that can shoot them, or walk on them, or, cleverer still, devise vaccines and anti-toxins to prey on them. To me the sole hope of human salvation lies in teaching Man to regard himself as an experiment in the realisation of God, to regard his hands as God's hands, his brain as God's brain, his purpose as God's purpose. He must regard God as a helpless longing, which longed him into existence by its desperate need of an executive organ. You will find it all in Man and Super Man, as you will find it all behind Blanco Posnet." We do not quote this passage in order to comment upon it; but rather as a bait to lure the reader on in the path of exploration. He will find himself at the end the willing victim of Lady Gregory's contagious enthusiasm, and the happy possessor of many bits of wayside wisdom like the following, "History comes only next to religion in our country."

HISTORY OF RELIGIONS. By G. F. Moore, D.D., LL.D. Vol. I. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 12s.

No recent addition to the International Theological Library is likely to receive such a cordial welcome as the "History of Religions," by Professor G. F. Moore, of Harvard, the first volume of which has just appeared. There is a distinct need for a work planned on this scale to take the place for English readers, which the well-known manual of De la Saussaye has occupied in Germany and France. The material to be dealt with is too intractable for a small popular handbook, while the more elaborate books are only suitable for the specialist. The present volume deals with China, Japan, Egypt, Babylonia, Assyria, India, Persia, Greece and Rome. A second volume is to be devoted to Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism. The bibliographies have been kept wisely within moderate limits. Any attempt at completeness would have resulted only in baffling the ordinary reader by excess of knowledge. As Professor Moore points out, "through the books whose titles are given the student will be able to find his way as far as he chooses into the voluminous and often most important literature on special topics in periodicals and the transactions of learned societies." By means of a careful system of cross-references in the index, comparative study of customs and beliefs which are common to several religions is rendered easy. We hope that the fact of its appearance in a "Theological Library," in a rather sombre binding, will not succeed in fencing this book off from the lay-mind. It deals with a subject of general interest within a reasonable compass, and its pages are pleasantly free from learned footnotes.

A SOWER WENT FORTH. Sermons by T. W. M. Lund, M.A. London: Longmans, Green & Co., 5s. net.

MR. LUND, the Chaplain to the School for the Blind, was for many years one of the most familiar figures in the religious life of Liverpool. A man of very broad sympathies and much common sense, he gathered around him a remarkable congregation of men and women, who shared his strong civic enthusiasm and his many-sided interest in life. One of the most distinguished of them, Dr. G. H. Rendell, formerly Principal of Liverpool University, has edited this volume of sermons and enriched it with a prefatory memoir and appreciation. Unlike some members of the Broad Church school, Mr. Lund was little of a theologian. In saying this we do not mean that he was not a careful thinker, and did not keep himself in close touch with the chief movements in the intellectual world; but his main concern was with the expression of religion in terms of goodness in personal and social life, and his sympathy went out instinctively to all, by whatever name they might be called, who battled for the right and sought to maintain the high standard of Christian rectitude and charity against fearful odds. "To him religion was intensely practical," Dr. Rendell says in a revealing passage. "He felt impatient of professions, of sentiment, of piety, that did not take effect in act. They seemed to him unreal. He was of a will so prompt and resolute that perhaps he hardly made allowance for the average weakness of will-power in face of obstacles or criticism, of the thwarting power of circumstances, or of conflicting and disapproving wills. He hardly gave full credit to the disabilities of diffidence, reserve, and self-distrust. He could not understand how people could be sincere and yet so easily daunted. His own sensitiveness rather stung him into action or reply, than reduced him to mute or numbed inaction. And the religion of action appealed to him more than the religion of inward disposition." These were no doubt the defects of his qualities. The wide range of his interests is illustrated in this selection from his sermons. They are a fit memorial of a ministry which possessed in an unusual degree the savour of salt in the life of a great city.

MEMORIES OF MINISTRY. By Alexander Webster. Published for the Author: London: Essex Hall. Aberdeen: A. Martin.

MR. WEBSTER'S many friends on both sides of the border and beyond the seas will welcome this little volume, in which he has told the story of his life and has brought together some sermons illustrative of the message which he has delivered in the various Scottish churches where he has ministered—at Paisley, Perth, Glasgow, Kilmarnock, and Aberdeen. His has been a truly pioneer ministry; he has broken much new ground, and very stubborn ground too, in the interest of unpopular doctrines, social as well as religious; and the joy and the bitterness of the pioneer he has experienced to the full. The courageous and ever-hopeful temper in which he has carried on his work is well reflected in these sermons and in the prayers by which they are accompanied. To some southern readers the discourses may seem to be overweighted with anti-Calvinist argumentation; but the reasoning is relieved by touches of imagination and sympathy; and, despite certain oddities of expression here and there, the style is clear and simple. We are glad to see included in the volume the address which Mr. Webster delivered at the Boston International Congress; in it, as in the narrative parts of the book, his pawky humour reveals itself. It is good to learn from these pages that though "out of office" and in impaired health, he is still as keenly interested as ever in the work to which he has given himself so unsparingly, and that he would gladly be up and doing again on behalf of the good cause—if he only had a motor car to take him about! Excellent portraits of the author and pictures of the churches of which he has had charge, add to the value and interest of the book.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

AMERICAN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION:—Clear Grit: Robert Colyer. $1 50 c.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL:—Herb Moly and Heartsease: Sintram. 1s. net.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK:—Theological Symbolics: C. A. Griggs, D.D. 10s. 6d. Karl Curtius (Berlin), Religionen und Heilige Schriften: H. Hackmann. 1s. net.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & SONS:—Gothic Architecture in Spain: G. E. Street. 2 vols. 6s. net.

MESSRS. HEATH, CRANTON & OUSELEY:—The Godhead of Jesus: G. S. Hitchcock, D.D. 2s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON:—The Master and His Method: E. Griffith-Jones. 1s. net.

MESSRS. T. C. & E. C. JACK:—Luther and the Reformation: Leonard D. Agate, M.A. 6d. net.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

A CAT AND A DOG.

A LITTLE grey and white cat called Dolly has lived some eight or nine years in a very happy home in Scotland, to which her mistress took her when she was a little kitten, lying all the night journey on her mistress's lap in the train. Dolly has a rare good time there, with a large garden and fields and sheds, where she can roam and catch mice and rabbits. But when autumn comes her mistress goes away, and shuts up the house, and Dolly has to be taken to a farm for the winter, where she has a kind woman to look after her, and every care. She has usually been content, and made herself at home in each place in turn, but one autumn, soon after she had been left at the farm, Dolly vanished. No sign could be found of her, and no one had seen her. The woman with whom she lived sent over to her other home to ask if she had been seen, but no. No one had seen her, and days and days went by till almost two weeks had passed, and people feared that she must have been killed.

But at last a message came to the farm to say that Dolly was at her old home, but would not let the man who was working there come near her, or catch her.

There are more than $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles between the two homes, and the road goes past the railway and the station, and over a long bridge across a big river, which she could not cross in any other way.

So the woman went over, taking a basket and a bit of meat, as she was sure Dolly would be hungry. At first she could not find her, but when she went into the garden and called her she came running to her, and ran to the house door to ask to be let in. But when she saw that the house was empty and deserted she just got into the basket and curled round, as much as to say, "Then you can take me back." And the woman took her back all the way to the farm, and she settled in and waited contentedly till her mistress came back and fetched her when the summer came.

The same thing happened the next winter. Dolly vanished again from the farm, and for five weeks not a trace could be found of her. Then, just as the woman had posted a sad letter to Dolly's mistress, saying that she was afraid she was really lost this time, as nothing had been seen or heard of her for five weeks, a note came from the gardener saying that Dolly had come home. And as he and his wife and little boy are living in that house this winter, Dolly has now stayed there with them, and is quite happy, and runs after the little wee boy when he calls her.

But where can she have spent those five winter weeks? And how could she find her way back to her home all those miles? She must have passed noisy trains, and the dangerous river, and dogs and men, and great cows and sheep in the fields, and had nothing to eat but what she could catch. And she had always been taken over to the farm in a shut-up basket, and usually in a carriage; and her mistress had been very careful not to let her see anything as she went.

We can only wonder at the marvellous sense given to the dear animals, and the power to keep and protect themselves. We call it instinct, but we cannot explain what that is. No one will ever know the inside of Dolly's story, all those long, cold winter weeks.

You have heard of Captain Scott, and his expedition to the South Pole with his party. He tells a story in his journal which is quite as mysterious, and still more wonderful.

They took a lot of dogs with them to drag their sledges over the ice, with their tents and provisions; and they had to camp and build a hut for the winter time (which is our summer); and they spent the winter in exploring all round about over the frozen regions, and making observations about the air, and the ice, and the creatures which were so made that they could live in such tremendous cold.

One day some of Captain Scott's companions went a long expedition over the ice, where everything was entirely frozen up. They took some of the dogs for exercise, and they went a long way, and when they returned to the hut Captain Scott wrote in his journal this account:—

"One of our best dogs, Julick, has disappeared. I am afraid he has been set on by the others at some distant spot, and we shall see nothing more but his stiffened carcase when light returns. Mears thinks the others would not attack him, and imagines he has fallen into the water in some seal hole or crack."

And a month later on he writes:—"Ponting and Gran went round the bergs last night. On returning they saw a dog coming over the floe from the north. The animal rushed towards, and leapt about them with every sign of intense joy. They realised that it was our long-lost Julick. His mane was crusted with blood, and he smelt strongly of seal blubber. His stomach was full, but the sharpness of back-bone shows that this condition has only been temporary. By daylight he looks very fit and strong, and he is evidently very much pleased to be home again.

"We are absolutely at a loss to account for his adventures. It is exactly a month since he was missed. What on earth can have happened to him all this time? One would give a great deal to hear his tale. Everything is against the theory that he was a wilful absentee—his previous habits, and his joy at getting back. If he wished to get back he cannot have been lost anywhere in the neighbourhood, for the barking of the dogs can be heard at least seven or eight miles away in calm weather; besides which, there are tracks everywhere, and unmistakable landmarks to guide man or beast. I cannot but think the animal has been cut off by his being carried away on broken sea-ice, and as far as we know the open water has never been nearer than 10 or 12 miles at the least. It is another enigma."

Perhaps your parents would read you a beautiful poem by Wordsworth, which is a story of a faithful dog. The poem is called "Fidelity." G. M.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

GERMAN NOTES.

PASTOR SCHULTZ OF HAMBURG—THE LATE PROFESSOR VON SODEN—AFFAIRS IN DORTMUND—SECESSION FROM THE STATE CHURCH—PROF. HARNACK'S GIFT TO THE BERLIN ACADEMY.

ONE of the most telling personalities of Hamburg, and even of North Germany, Pastor Clemens Schultz, of St. Pauli, has just passed away in his 51st year. His most important work was amongst the young people just leaving school. Both by precept and example he has shown how modern religious work should be carried on amongst the young. It had been felt for some time that the methods of the Young Men's Christian Associations, were no longer sufficient, and the success of Schultz's work gave a strong impulse to the movement, which is now consolidated in the union of the German Jugendvereine, whose honorary president he was. While he recognised the importance of personal religious influence, he did not think that the means which were employed were the best. He was anxious to bring faithful and ardent workers into the churches, but against the direct appeal of the churches he made it his aim to stimulate thought, so that through thought the desire might be created to take an active part in the religious life. He never married, though he adopted a boy; he wished to give his whole time to the work to which he brought his great gifts. The fame of the unparalleled success of his union of apprentices at St. Paul's spread abroad, and his activity and methods became widely known. He believed implicitly in the young, and he hated nothing more than lament over the increasing corruption and degeneration of young people. "Take the young rightly, and you will fire them with the desire for the best"; that summed up his belief in them. His glowing optimism never failed him, even when occasional disappointments fell to his lot. Until last August he laboured unceasingly. Then suddenly the strong and vigorous man was attacked by an insidious disease, and the doctors could do nothing to save him.

Berlin mourns the loss of the well-known Professor of Theology and Pastor of the Jerusalemer Kirche, D. von Soden, whose life was brought to a premature close by an accident on the underground railway. He was the author of a number of valuable books. The most important are the four volumes on the Writings of the New Testament in their oldest available texts. This involved research which occupied him and a staff of scholarly helpers for 20 years.

His next work was to have been a history of the text. His ministry at the Jerusalemer Kirche commenced in 1887, and he gathered a large congregation round him. But his social activities went far beyond his congregation. He was the President of the Central Committee for the Care of the Young. In Church politics he belonged to the Middle party, but whenever liberty of conscience was in danger he spoke fearlessly against the aggressors. The loss of a man so upright and noble-minded will be deeply felt by members of all parties.

* *

Dortmund is still without a successor to Gottfried Traub. Reinoldi is a parish of 65,000 souls, with three churches and 11 ministers. When the Presbytery of such a populous parish comes to a unanimous decision it means a good deal. But it looks as if there were a sinister influence at work trying to humiliate and vex the people of Reinoldi. What has been going on there during the last few months? In June, 1913, Pfarrer Fuchs, of Rüsselsheim, Hessen, was elected successor to Pfarrer Traub. The Consistory of Münster, who has to confirm the election, took at first no notice. Not until September did they communicate with Pfarrer Fuchs. Then they asked whether he had been one of the signatories of the declaration of 87 Hessian ministers against the Spruchkollegium and its proceedings in the case against Jatho, and if so, whether he had taken steps to recant. Of course, Pfarrer Fuchs, who is an honourable, upright man, had not recanted. In consequence the Consistory washes its hands of him, and after prolonged correspondence decides, on December 16, 1913, that it cannot confirm the election of Pfarrer Fuchs. And what kind of man is he who has been thus rejected? He is 39 years of age, and has been Pfarrer at Rüsselsheim during the last nine years. Rade, in the Christliche Welt, calls him one of the best ministers. Rüsselsheim, with a rapidly growing industry, presented many difficulties. He mastered them, and won the confidence of his congregation, and his influence spread. He is a student and writer of no mean power. For Dortmund he seemed just the right man. But the Consistory of Westphalia was blind to all this—it only asked: Had Fuchs signed the declaration, and had he recanted? The Reinoldi Gemeinde has decided to appeal to the Evangelische Oberkirchenrat in Berlin.

* *

The so-called Austrittsbewegung in the Prussian State Church is going on apace. The Committee Konfessionslos has been holding 12 largely attended meetings in order to stimulate the resignations of church membership, and Vorwärts announces that as a result of the meetings 4,209 people gave notice of their intention to resign. To counteract this the Berlin Superintendents Händler and Lahusen appointed for January 11 special Sunday services in order to strengthen the loyalty of churchgoers. It is said that 65,000 people attended the services in 88 churches. On the same Sunday 16 meetings were held by the strikers, with the result that 2,343 announced their intention to resign their church membership. The Liberal section of the Berlin churches held a mass meeting in December, when about 5,000 people filled the large hall at Friedrichshain, about half of the audience being opponents. The speakers endeavoured to show that their aim was to make the Church a people's Church, and to bring about far-reaching reforms. When, however, they criticised the methods of the Committee Konfessionslos there were stormy scenes, and the chairman closed the meeting before all the speakers had been heard. On Sunday, January 25, the orthodox party of Berlin held a meeting in the building of the Circus Busch, which was well attended. The leaders of the party addressed the audience on the theme: "Repent, and believe in the Gospel." Pastor D. Phillips admitted that the orthodox believers do not consider the Austrittsbewegung the greatest danger of the Church. It might serve to bring purification and new strength to church members. Much greater was the danger from another quarter. So many profess to belong to the Church who are yet out of harmony with it, who have broken with its dogmas, and who try to make their views triumph over the old belief. That was the real danger. Many within the Church sympathise with its enemies, try to undermine its foundations, open the gates to the assailants, and call out to them: "Come, help us to modernise the Church, to make it more in accordance with the results of scientific research, and not with divine revelation." If they allowed this to go on; if no one tells them to leave the Church, then the Church of the Reformation and the Prussian State Church are indeed in great danger. There is only one remedy, namely, the whole, full, Biblical Gospel, with its proclamation of sin and mercy, of justification and reconciliation. These are words which throw a clear light on the situation—no concession to present-day needs, enmity towards all freer conceptions and results of scientific research. How can such a church hope to hold the masses? Will it not in the end be left stranded, while the stream of the life of the day flows on and find its way to the great ocean of infinite Love and Truth?

* *

The following incident, quoted from the Kirchlich-liberale Zeitungskorrespondenz, is an indication of the causes which create a distrust of the State and the State Church amongst the workers:—"In Landerbeck, near Rechlinghausen, the miner Stock, of Drewer, who died in consequence of an accident in the mine, was carried to his grave on July 6, 1913. After the minister's address the miner Neuhaus approached the grave, and deposited a wreath with the words: 'In the name of the Branch of the Social Democratic Party at Drewer I deposit this wreath. Sleep well, comrade!' This was followed by a similar short farewell from a representative of the Miners' Union. The Public Prosecutor thereupon accused the two miners of holding an unauthorised public meeting in the open air. The Assessors' Court at Recklinghausen pronounced the men not guilty, the action of the men being considered merely one of piety. But the Public Prosecutor was not satisfied. The case was taken to the criminal court at Bochum, and the men were found guilty of a political offence; and were fined 5 marks each. Further comment is unnecessary.

* *

Professor Harnack has made over to the Berlin Academy of the Sciences the sum of 21,600 marks, the gift presented to him on his sixtieth birthday. It is to form a fund for the promotion of the study of the history of religion during the first six centuries of the Christian era.

THE PUTUMAYO CRIMINALS.

THE Committee of the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society wrote to the Foreign Office at the end of December last asking whether the Peruvian Government had yet brought to justice any—and, if so, how many—of the principal criminals of the Putumayo, and further inquired whether the Government intended to publish any papers dealing with labour conditions in the Amazon Valley. The following reply was received:—

"I am directed by Secretary Sir E. Grey to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo regarding conditions of labour in the valley of the Amazon, and to inform you in reply that His Majesty's Government have been kept informed by their representatives of the steps taken by the Peruvian Government to bring to justice the principal criminals of the Putumayo. His Majesty's Consul at Iquitos has reported that Armando Normand arrived there in custody on October 3 last, and was lodged in the prison at Iquitos.

"The answer to the second paragraph of your letter is in the negative."

To this letter the Committee of the Society has sent the following reply:—

"It is a matter of deep regret to our Committee that not a single Putumayo criminal has yet been brought to justice by the Peruvian Government, whilst out of some 250 warrants of arrest issued by Judge Paredes only 16 individuals have been arrested, and of these only two or three appear to be in the long list of criminals in Sir Roger Casement's report, which was in the possession of the Peruvian Government nearly three years ago. According to the telegram despatched by Judge Paredes on July 25, 1911, three persons in the list supplied to His Majesty's Government have been in the hands of the Peruvian authorities for over two years, whilst the man against whom 'innumerable crimes' are alleged has been under arrest, owing to the activity of the Bolivian Government, since October last. The Committee of the Society believe that this failure of the Peruvian Government to administer justice in a tragedy so appalling as the Putumayo horrors, cannot fail to bring grave reproach upon the name of Peru throughout the civilised world. We beg to express to His Majesty's Government the appreciation of this Society for the manner in which they have been pressing upon the Peruvian Government the importance of arresting and punishing the criminal agents of the Putumayo."

ALBANIAN RELIEF FUND.

THE following sums have been received on behalf of the Albanian peasants in addition to the amount acknowledged in our last issue:—

Previously acknowledged	..£248 13 11
"Helper"	.. 10 0 0
A. B. C., 10s.; J. R. W., 5s.;
H. M. S., 2s. 6d.; Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry, 10s.;
E. C. H. H., 5s.	.. 1 12 6
Total	..£260 6 5

DR. BLAKE ODGERS, K.C., will give a lecture on Sir Thomas Gresham and his School of Law at the New Gresham College, Basinghall-street, E.C., on February 23, 24, 26, and 27, at 6 p.m. each evening. Admission is free.

DR. W. T. GRENFELL, C.M.G., who is now in England, will give his first public lecture in London at the Queen's Hall on Monday, February 23, at 8.30, when the chair will be taken by the American Ambassador. The lecture will be entitled, "My Life in Labrador," and will be illustrated with lantern slides and cinematograph films. The proceeds will be devoted to Dr. Grenfell's work in Labrador.

A COURSE of five lectures, "In Quest of the Historic Jesus," will be delivered on Tuesdays (5 to 6 p.m.) during March, by Mr. G. S. R. Mead, editor of the Quest, at Caxton Hall, Westminster, S.W. The subjects of the lectures are as follows:—March 3, "The Traditional and Generally Orthodox View"; March 10, "The Quest of the Historical Jesus"; March 17, "The Christ Myth Controversy"; March 24, "The Jewish Jesus Stories"; March 31, "The Jesus of the Gnostics and Earliest Heretics."

THE Rev. R. T. Herford, B.A., has accepted the invitation of the Trustees to succeed the Rev. F. H. Jones as Librarian of Dr. Williams's Library and Secretary to Dr. Williams's Trust at Midsummer. Mr. Herford, who was educated at Owens College, Manchester, Manchester New College, London, and the University of Leiden, has spent nearly 30 years as the devoted minister of Stand Chapel, near Manchester, combining unflagging zeal in all the varied work of the ministry with a rare devotion to his own pursuits as a scholar. He is a Hebrew scholar of distinction. His published work includes "Christianity in Talmud and Midrash," a book of laborious research in a field where he has few competitors, and more recently "Pharisaism," a study of the Pharisaic movement in Judaism, in the Crown Theological Library.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Bournemouth.—At the last two Wednesday evening meetings of the Social Society (February 11 and 18) in the lecture hall of the Unitarian Church, the Rev. C. C. Coe, who on Sunday week celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday, gave two lectures on Dickens' "Dombey & Son." They were new lectures, written for the occasion, and were followed with unflagging interest and enjoyment by keenly appreciative audiences. The first lecture concluded with the moving scene of Paul Dombey's death, the second was devoted specially to Florence, with a final picture of the old man and his tender affection for the little grandchildren. At the close, the Rev. C. Hargrove, who is staying for a time in Bournemouth, congratulated Mr. Coe on the achievement of the lectures and moved a vote of thanks, which was seconded by Mr. G. H. Isaacs, and passed with warm acclamation. The Rev. V. D. Davis, who was in the chair, said that those lectures would be a memory which would be long and gratefully cherished by them all.

Brisbane.—The Rev. Douglas Price, M.A., reports that the Liberal religious movement at Brisbane is making good progress. The congregation are considering the question of securing a church building or hall for Sunday services and week-evening meetings. The minister himself prefers to carry on his work in a public hall. At present the services are held in a large picture palace which holds two thousand people. The copies of "The Secret of Righteousness," by the Rev. W. Wooding, B.A., forwarded from the Essex Hall Book Room, have all been sold. The book was greatly appreciated by members of the congregation at Brisbane.

Crewkerne.—On Thursday, February 12, a special service was held at the Unitarian Church in connection with the opening of the organ, which has just been erected. The total cost of these improvements is about £250, and practically the whole of this amount has been raised without any appeal to the outside public. The dedicatory service was preceded by a public tea in the schoolroom, which was crowded. Mr. Bonning, of Ilminster, then gave a short recital, which brought out admirably the powers of the new organ. The Rev. W. Holmshaw, of Ilminster, conducted the devotional part of the service, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Rudolf Davis, B.A., of Gloucester. An excellent rendering of the anthem, "I was glad when they said unto me" (Sir Geo. Elvey), was given by the choir; and solos were sung by the minister (Rev. A. Sutcliffe, B.A.) and Mr. Percy Holman.

Liverpool.—In the course of an address delivered at Ullet-road Church on Sunday, February 15, on "The Religious Message of Bernard Shaw," Dr. Rattray laid emphasis on the fact that Mr. Shaw has a religious attitude to life, a religious message to deliver, though it is greatly misunderstood. Owing to his somewhat bizarre methods, however, he has succeeded in permeating the minds of men with his ideas, even where they have awakened the bitterest opposition. His apparent egotism, his impatience with people who cannot see life as he sees it, his keen humour and his determination to achieve a reputation first of all, in order to have a better opportunity of driving home the truths which are so clear to him, sometimes led him to be exaggerated, one-sided, and even cruel in his utterances, but he deserved our gratitude for the way in which he had revealed things that ought to be known, exposing evils which respectable people countenance for motives which they think adequate but into which they do not inquire. Mr. Shaw is a good and tender-hearted as well as a highly gifted man, who is influencing public opinion in a very significant way. He stands for truth, even when it is unwelcome. His message is "Be yourself: do not immolate yourself on the altar of convention." Behind the world there is, he believes, a Spirit that is striving through evolution to fuller and fuller expression, and for the individual, knowledge of life as it actually is becomes of value because it puts him in harmony with this Spirit and its aspirations concerning the world and the creature. Religion is the sense of identity with others in co-operation with the friendly, strong Spirit which includes us all. "Mr. Shaw," Dr. Rattray concluded, "preaches the sanctity of life. Nothing is base if it be used by the good will to good ends. We must use life in this way. Mr. Shaw believes in the reality and worth of the present. He is an idealist, a Puritan, an optimist, all in the good sound sense of the words. It is possible to find this world divine, and it is on this that Shaw insists. It is possible for him to say truthfully, as he has said through one of his characters, 'I have been myself: I have not been afraid of myself: and now I have escaped from myself and am become—a voice for them that are afraid to speak, and a cry for the hearts that break in silence.'"

London: Dingley-place Domestic Mission.—On Saturday, February 14, the sum of £5 8s. 5d. was realised at a soirée arranged by Mrs. Summers to raise money for the purpose of providing a B.O.B. drum and fife band with instruments.

London: Walthamstow.—By kind permission of the minister and congregation of Rosslyn Hill Chapel, a sale of work was held on the afternoon of February 11 in the Hampstead Church schoolroom, when a sum of £26 was raised in aid of the expenses at Walthamstow. The congregation desire to express their gratitude to all the friends who came to their aid, and especially to Mrs. Classon Drummond for her kindly interest, which has been shown on many previous occasions.

Melbourne.—The Unitarian congregation at Melbourne have appointed as their minister the Rev. Wyndham S. Heathcote, B.A., formerly an Anglican clergyman at Bundaberg, an important town in Queensland, where for five years he attracted quite a large congregation.

Midland Guilds' Union.—The first united conference in connection with the new Union was held at Kidderminster on Saturday, February 14. The Rev. W. H. Lambelle, president of the National Conference Guilds' Union, read a paper on "Guild Work, its Duties and Responsibilities." A discussion followed, which was opened by the Rev. Stanley Gibbon, of Tamworth. The Revs. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, J. E. Stronge, and E. Glyn Evans also took part, together with several of the Guild members. Guild members assembled from Birmingham, Tamworth, Handsworth, Coseley, Walsall, and Dudley. Excellent arrangements had been made at Kidderminster. It is hoped that the future conferences and meetings of the Union will be equally successful.

Newport, Mon.—A social gathering was held on the 12th inst. to welcome the Rev. W. T. Lucan-Davies. During an interval in the musical programme, the president of the congregation, Mr. W. Pritchard, expressed the hearty goodwill of the church towards Mr. and Mrs. Lucan-Davies upon their settlement in Newport. He assured them that, though the church was not a large one when compared with those of some other denominations, it provided, in a unique way, an open platform for the expression of progressive religious thought, and a home for the spirit of free religious fellowship. Mr. W. Sutherland having also spoken, Mr. John Lewis (Pontypridd), President of the South-East Wales Unitarian Society, extended a cordial welcome on behalf of the other Unitarian Churches in the district. In his reply, Mr. Davies appealed for the active co-operation of the entire congregation, so that the Unitarian Church in Newport might be not merely a preaching station, dependent chiefly upon Sunday sermons, but a living brotherhood, united in a common aspiration and the desire to serve humanity. They did not seek to disturb the beliefs of any who were content with their beliefs. There were, however, an increasing number of earnest souls seeking new light upon the problems of life and religion. The free Unitarian gospel could meet their need; it was the Church's duty to bring in these seekers, and to this end all could help. He thanked them for the generous welcome he had received. Mrs. Lucan-Davies also responded and pleaded for more of the missionary spirit. Messages were received from the Revs. F. Blount Mott (Cardiff), W. J. Phillips (Porthcawl), Simon Jones, B.A. (Swansea), Mr. L. N. Williams, J.P. (Aberdare), and others.

Northampton.—The annual meeting of Kettering-road Church was held on Thursday, February 12, the Rev. W. C. Hall presiding. The reports of the various organisations connected with the church showed that the past year's work had been of an exceptionally satisfactory character. Never before had the church and school buildings been so frequently used; all the societies were financially sound, and had contributed to the church funds. The congregation had lost several most valued members by death and removal, but there had been a net increase in the membership. As the result of voluntary subscriptions in the early part of the year and the ladies' effort in December, an adverse balance of £58 had been wiped out, and the congregation finished the year with £14 in hand. On Sunday, February 1, Mr. Hall formally welcomed into the institute, which steadily increases its membership and its activities, 16 new members from the Sunday school.

Selby: The late Mrs. Dale.—We regret to announce the death of Mrs. Dale, wife of the Rev. John Dale, minister of the Unitarian Church, Selby, which occurred on February 7 at Grange-on-Sands. She had endeared herself to a large circle of friends in Selby. An active Liberal, she threw her whole soul into the work of the Selby Women's Liberal Association, of which she was president; and it was only a few weeks ago that in recognition of her untiring and self-sacrificing labours her colleagues made a presentation to her as a token of their esteem and regard. In spite of failing health, she entered fully into the spirit of the work of her husband, and strove to do her share in the tasks around her. At a meeting of Liberals held on Tuesday evening, a vote of condolence was passed with the Rev. John Dale in his bereavement. The funeral took place in the Selby cemetery on Wednesday, a large number of friends being present. The service was conducted by the Rev. W. R. Shanks, of Holbeck.

Sheffield: Resignation.—The Rev. J. W. Cock has resigned the position of assistant minister to the Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B., at Upper Chapel, which he has held for over seven years, having signified his intention of taking a year's needed rest. In addition to the superintendency of the Upper Chapel Sunday school, Mr. Cock has acted as minister-in-charge of the daughter church at Attercliffe, which has prospered under his care. The resignation has been accepted with great regret and cordial appreciation of his work.

Stand: Resignation.—The Rev. R. T. Herford has resigned the pulpit of Stand Chapel on his appointment as Librarian of Dr. Williams's Library and Secretary to Dr. Williams's Trust.

Walmesley (Bolton).—The annual congregational tea party took place on Saturday last, when about 200 sat down to tea. At the entertainment that followed, when the school-room was crowded, Mr. Lindsay Cropper, of Eagle, occupied the chair. Before starting with the programme of the entertainment, the Chairman called upon the Rev. E. E. Jenkins to move a vote of condolence with the family of the late superintendent of the Sunday school, Mr. Thomas Ainsworth, whose sudden death was a shock to them all. The audience stood in silent assent. The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon, February 17, and was conducted by the Rev. E. E. Jenkins. At the service in the chapel Mr. Jenkins referred to the noble example which their late superintendent had given them by his long and honourable connection with the chapel and school, and his faithful and diligent service in all social movements in the district. In 1863, when he was thirty years of age, he was asked by the Rev. W. Probert, the minister, to fill the office of the Superintendent of the Sunday school. He continued to hold this office for 45 years, serving with an unbroken record during the ministries of the Revs. Hardinge Matthews and Edward Allen, and the present minister for four years. When he retired in 1908 on account of his deafness, he was presented with an illuminated address by the scholars who had been under him. He was never known to be late anywhere. During that long period of 45 years he was only absent about six times. He was presented with a special medal of merit in 1899 by the Manchester District Sunday School Association. He was made a trustee of the chapel in 1871. His death came suddenly in his eighty-first year.

Wellington, N.Z.—The Unitarian Church at Wellington, New Zealand, has sustained a great loss by the death of Mr. John Gammell, a prominent member of the congregation, who has recently died. Mr. Gammell was a distinguished scholar, but his life was much more than the life of the student. By descent on his father's side he came from the Covenanters, and, like them, he passed through storm and stress to vindicate the right of the individual to worship God as he pleased without interference by others. He was educated at New College and became a Congregational minister, but as Sir Robert Stout, the Chief Justice, said, in the course of a memorial address delivered as a tribute to his old friend in the Unitarian Church, "he had not entered a haven of peace. He studied, and he gained knowledge, and he came to the conclusion that he could not maintain his own self-respect and preach the doctrines his congregation desired to hear expounded. Midst storm and stress he retired from the ministry. He must follow truth wherever she led." After his retirement he became a Unitarian minister. He also took up the teaching profession, and, about forty years ago, went to New Zealand. "He has never been idle," the Chief Justice added, "when there was a defender required to plead for tolerance and freedom. All that I have said of him is known of him by many. But all I have said will not reveal the man. You had to come into personal touch with him to know him. His unswerving rectitude, his kindness of heart, his devotion to truth, impressed every one who came in contact with him. He never compromised his opinion to please majorities or minorities. He uttered what he believed to be true, and he did not think that the highest type of humanity was that which spent its time in endeavouring to please the people. He thought the type that should be revered was that which strove to ascertain the truth, and fearlessly proclaimed what was proved to be true. You cannot, he believed, remain a good citizen if you proclaim as true that which you know to be false, or that of which you are really ignorant. Notwithstanding this stern determination to proclaim his highest ideals, he was kind and considerate to those who saw the universe from a different point of view. He was free from bigotry or any sectional narrowness. He lived the simple life and died poor. Truth, wisdom, freedom, love of friends—all these were his. I do not think we can set before our youths a nobler exemplar of a good citizen than John Gammell."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

FRANCIS GALTON AND FINGER-PRINTS.

The name of Alphonse Bertillon, the famous criminologist who has just died, will always be associated with the system of identifying criminals by means of finger-prints, but Galton invented the system, and Bertillon adopted it with some unwillingness when he could no longer do without it. Galton had to carry out a long series of investigations before he could prove that the patterns are constant through life, and that they can be indexed in exactly the same way as the words in a dictionary; but the results were entirely successful, and he was able to show, says the Manchester Guardian, that the number of characteristics which could be compared was so great that there was as much chance of two towns being built exactly on the same plan, with every street, every by-way, every house exactly alike, as of two finger-prints of different individuals being identical.

AN EMIGRATION DEPARTMENT OF THE Y.M.C.A.

We understand that, in response to many appeals, the National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations has organised a special Emigration Department, of which Mr. Adam Scott is the secretary, for the benefit of the many thousands of young men who leave our shores each year for other lands. Secretaries of the Association are now at work at the ports of Liverpool, London, Southampton, Bristol, and Plymouth, interviewing young men on sailing days, supplying them with information and advice, and giving personal introductions to branches of the Y.M.C.A. in all parts of the world. The service of these secretaries is free to all young men, irrespective of class, or creed, or nationality. Representatives of the Association now meet arriving passenger vessels at all the larger foreign and colonial ports, and are ready to assist in the matter of lodgings, information, and advice regarding employment. Over 20,000 men leaving the United Kingdom were helped in some way by the Association Emigration Department during 1913. No passages are booked and no fees of any kind are charged for the services rendered. Young men who have decided to emigrate are cordially invited to communicate with the secretary of the Emigration Department, National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s, 13, Russell-square, W.C., or with the emigration secretaries at the various ports, in order to avail themselves of the privileges offered.

CHRISTMAS EVE IN A RUSSIAN CHURCH.

The following description of a church at Kieff, "the Canterbury of Russia," which he has re-christened "the Russian Bethlehem," is taken from a recent article by Mr. Stephen Graham in the Times:—"You tread," he says, "with gentle steps across the giving snow and enter one of the churches, and find yourself in an irregularly grouped crowd of antique, hairy, patriarchal-looking men in sheepskins and birch-bark boots. There are no pews or seats, there is no electric light, but there is the gloom and the effulgence of much gold and of many half-illuminated paintings and frescoes. You stand with peasant Russia on a stone floor in the glimmer and shadow of an immense candle-lit temple. You pass through with a candle to the front, to the altar-rail lit by scores of steady silver flames, the votive tapers of the pilgrims; you find yourself in the presence of a radiant line of calm, attentive, singing faces. This is Holy Russia independent of historical association. The music you hear in Russian churches robs you of the sense of time. On Christmas Eve in Russia you hear the music of the herald-angels, and see at the same time in the likeness of the listening Russian peasants the shepherds who heard the angels sing. You veritably escape from 'the world' and from 'to-day,' and are so potently reminded of the beauty and mystery of man's life that you shake off all dull cares and the reproach of failure or success, the soil and stain of circumstance, and know that what is you is something utterly beautiful before God."

TEA-DRINKING.

When the crusade against alcohol becomes less urgent, and the nations have learned to abstain from intoxicating drinks, the reformers will have to turn their attention to the question of tea-drinking which also has its dangers if too much is consumed. All over Europe the habit of drinking tea is on the increase, but in no country (says the Manchester Guardian) has the consumption of tea increased so much as in Russia during the past year. The total shipments of India, Ceylon and Java teas to Russia during the twelve months ending September 30 were 82,119,695 lbs., as against 56,641,162 in the previous year. Americans are becoming more and more addicted to the habit of tea-drinking, but our brothers and sisters in the Dominions would appear to have beaten the record, for "per capita consumption in Australasia continues to be higher than in any other part of the world. New Zealand takes the lead with a consumption per head of 7.45 lbs., followed by Australia with 6.83 lbs."

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD

Principal:

REV. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER,
M.A., D.D., D.Litt.

SESSION 1914-1915.

Candidates for admission should send in their applications without delay to the Secretaries.

Bursary of £50 a year, Exhibition of £70 a year, Scholarship of £90 a year, offered to Undergraduate Students for the Ministry.

Bursaries, tenable at the College, offered to Students for the Ministry.

Dr. Daniel Jones Bursary offered to Ministers for further period of study.

Arlosh Scholarship of £120 per annum, open to Students for the Ministry who have graduated with distinction at any British or Irish University.

For further particulars apply to the PRINCIPAL, or to the Rev. HENRY GOW, 12, Glenloch-road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

A. H. WORTHINGTON, B.A., } Hon.
HENRY GOW, B.A., } Secs.

GRESHAM LECTURES.

DR. BLAKE ODGERS, K.C.,

Gresham Professor of Law, will deliver

FOUR LECTURES

ON

"SIR THOMAS GRESHAM AND HIS SCHOOL OF LAW,"

AT

Gresham College, Basinghall St., E.C.,

ON

Feb. 23rd, 24th, 26th and 27th, at 6.0 p.m.

LIMELIGHT ILLUSTRATIONS.

ADMISSION FREE TO MEN AND WOMEN.

THE KING'S WEIGH HOUSE PULPIT

No. 1.—The Holding of the Eyes.

No. 2.—Rewards.

By EDWARD LEWIS.

One Penny Each.

By Post, 1½d. Each.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE: 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

PENDLETON UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

GRAND BAZAAR

to raise £300 in aid of Church Funds.

Opened each day at 3 p.m.

March 5th. GEORGE H. LEIGH, Esq., J.P.
President, British and Foreign
Unitarian Association.

„ 6th. The MAYOR of SALFORD,
(Alderman Desquesnes).

„ 7th. ARTHUR W. COWBURN, Esq.

Contributions in money or goods will be thankfully received by the Chairman, Mr. J. WIGLEY, 7, Halton Bank, Eccles Old-road, Pendleton, Manchester.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Society will be held at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, on Wednesday, March 4, at 8 p.m., and will be followed by a Conference on "School Methods," to be opened by Mr. Harold Titford.

All interested in Sunday School work are cordially invited to be present. No tickets are required.

Tea and Coffee will be served from 7.30 to 8 o'clock.

R. ASQUITH WOODING, Hon. Sec.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

At the Annual General Meeting of Contributors, held in Dr. Williams' Library, London, at 12.30 p.m. on Wednesday, February 11, 1914, Mr. W. Byng Kenrick in the Chair, the Annual Report and Balance Sheet were presented and the following Resolutions adopted, viz.:—

THAT the Report and Accounts as now read be adopted and printed for circulation among the contributors and friends of the Fund.

THAT the retiring Manager, Sir E. Chatfield Clarke, whose term of office has expired, together with Messrs. Geo. J. Notcutt and T. Oliver Lee, having been nominated, and the requisite number of voting papers having been produced, be and are hereby elected as Managers of the Fund.

THAT the sincere thanks of the Contributors be tendered to Mr. W. Byng Kenrick for his services as President during the past year, and that he be re-elected for the year 1914.

THAT the thanks of the Contributors be given to Mr. Ronald P. Jones for his services as Honorary Treasurer during the past year, and that he be appointed to the office for the coming year.

THAT the thanks of the Contributors be given to Mr. Harold F. Pearson for his services during the past year, and that he be appointed Honorary Secretary for the year 1914.

THAT the services of Mr. Edwin W. Marshall, as Honorary Auditor, be gratefully acknowledged, and that he be requested to accept the office for the year 1914.

THAT the Contributors heartily thank the Trustees of Dr. Williams' Library, who have generously granted the use of rooms for the Meetings of the Fund during the past year.

At the close of the Annual General Meeting a Special General Meeting of contributors was held, at which it was resolved that the alterations in the Regulations recommended by the Board of Managers and set forth in the notice convening the Meeting be approved subject to the amendments agreed to at the Meeting.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartment, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, February 22.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15, Mr. E. BRIDGER ATHAWES; 7, Mr. C. WILKES SMITH.
Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. Dr. MORITZ WESTON.
Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON; 7, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.
Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. P. CHALK; 7, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15, Rev. H. Gow, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. G. H. VANCE.
Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH; 6.30, Rev. E. M. DAPLYN. Evening subject, "Religion and Art."
Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11, —; 7, Rev. F. K. FREESTON. Lantern service, "The Story of Religious Liberty."
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Mr. J. W. PETERKEN.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Mr. A. M. STABLES.
Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER; and 7.
Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. R. W. SORENSSEN; 6.30, Mr. F. COTTIER.
The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.
Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN; 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. STANLEY RUSSELL, B.A.
BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING; 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Church-gate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing-street, 11.30, Rev. E. W. LUMMIS, M.A.
CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
{DEAN ROW, 10.45, and
{STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle-terrace, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
EXETER, George's Chapel, South-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
GEE CROSS, 11, Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON; 6.30, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREAE.
TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

MARRIAGE.

STONHAM-LEIGH.—On February 12, at the Unitarian Church, Vancouver, British Columbia, by the Rev. F. W. Pratt, Ernest Stonham, of the Bank of British North America, to Constance Mary, third daughter of George H. Leigh, of Moorfield Swinton, Lancashire.

DEATH.

HOLLINS.—On the 19th inst., suddenly, at his residence, Woodbank, Stockport, Sydney Hollins, in the 63rd year of his age. The interment will take place at Dean Row Chapel, near Wilmslow, on Monday, the 23rd inst.

ORAM.—On February 12, at Worthing, after a long illness, Lillian Gertrude, eldest daughter of Richard and Emma Oram, of Cremyll, Wandsworth Common. No flowers.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds of MSS. carefully and promptly copied.—Miss KENNEDY, 20, County Grove, Camberwell, S.E.

HOSPITAL SISTER seeks post as Secretary or Amanuensis to doctor, dentist, nursing home. Speaks fluent German, some French.—W., c/o INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

SITUATION WANTED as House-keeper to one or two gentlemen, or Nurse-Attendant to invalid or infant. Experienced, references.—M. H., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses. Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children in residence.—For particulars apply to Hon. Sec., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont-street, Liverpool.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Rev. H. W. HAWKES, 59, Trinity-road, Bootle.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken. Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

By PHILIP H WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

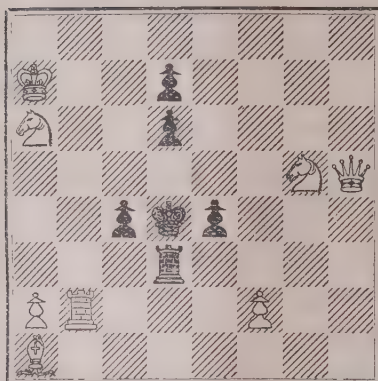

FEB. 21, 1914.

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 45.

By ARTHUR G. STUBBS
("The Black Dagger.")

BLACK. (6 men.)

WHITE. (8 men.)

White to play and mate in two moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 43.

(The King on d3 should be White.)

- | | |
|---------------------------------|-----------|
| White. | Black. |
| 1. B. B4 | Any move. |
| 2. Kt. R6, and mates next move. | |

Solutions have been received from W. E. Arkell, Dr. Higginson, F. S. M. (Mayfield), E. C. (Highbury). There may be others, but the unfortunate misprint will delay the receipt of additional cards.

Further solutions of No. 42 have been received from Geo. Ingledew (also No. 41), D. Amos, E. Wright, Rev. Geo. Pegler, O. L. (Leeds), and Ernest A. Pryer.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Rev. B. C. CONSTABLE.—Apply to The Chess Amateur office, Stroud, Glos.

WALTER COVENTRY.—In No. 42, if White plays 1. K. R5, Black replies 1. . . . R. R3.

CHARLES WILLING (U.S.A.).—Your solutions are both correct.

E. W. E. (Finchley).—Thanks for your letter. No. 42 is not solved by 1. R. R8, since Black can then play 1. . . . R x P, ch.

The Change-mate Two-mover.—Following my remarks of last week, I may say that two specimens of my own composition have at least justified their existence. One was recently composed and sent to a London paper, only to be returned as inaccurate. It was, however, quite a misapprehension on the Editor's part. The other, which I quoted on June 21 last (our No. 11), caused the downfall of a consistently accurate solver in the Morning Post, who had solved upwards of 400 consecutive weekly positions—mostly in three moves—only to be defeated by this catchy position. My forthcoming book contains many interesting positions. Our No. 44 is one of them.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M.
Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

UNIVERSITY HALL,
Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.

February

22. Rev. JOHN HENRY WEATHERALL, M.A. of Bolton.

March

1. Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Minister Emeritus of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds.

8. Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.

15. Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only.

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church),
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. ROWLAND HILL.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for February 22:

Morning: The Word of God.

Evening: A Glorious Vision.

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

Lecture Hall adjoining 19, Tavistock Square, W.C.

On Sunday Evenings, January 11 to March 22, 1914, at 7 o'clock, a Course of Lectures on

The Three Objects of the Society

will be given.

Feb. 22. Theosophy and the Boundaries of Modern Science. E. L. GARDNER.

Mar. 1. The Human Aura. (With Lantern Illustrations.) G. H. WHYTE.

BARGAIN REMNANT BUNDLES of Irish Linen Huckaback Towelling, sufficient to make 6 full-sized Bedroom Towels. Price 4s. 6d. per bundle, postage 5d. extra. Catalogue Free.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

BARGAINS IN SERVIETTES, slightly soiled. 20 inches square, 7s. 6d. per dozen; 22 inches, 7s. 9d.; 24 inches, 8s. 6d. Postage 4d. extra. Write for Free Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCs.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh-street, Tavistock-square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

SUNNY South Coast Health Resort.—Ideal Winter Boarding House, Central, Garden, near Sea. Hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, electric light, and penny in slot gas fire in each bedroom. Three good reception rooms. Food Reform and ordinary diet.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by
Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

BOOKS

EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY,
TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE
And for all other Exams.

Second-Hand at Half Prices.

New at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogues post free and state wants. Books bought.

BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,

121/123, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to offer and pay highest genuine prices. Note quotations: Up to 2s. 9d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 6s. 6d. on silver, 15s. on gold, 35s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel, post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Unquestionably the oldest and most reliable firm. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C. and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 21, 1914.

* * * Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Back Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3740.
NEW SERIES, No. 844.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD

Principal :

REV. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER,
M.A., D.D., D.Litt.

SESSION 1914-1915.

Candidates for admission should send in their applications without delay to the Secretaries.

Bursary of £50 a year, Exhibition of £70 a year, Scholarship of £90 a year, offered to Undergraduate Students for the Ministry.

Bursaries, tenable at the College, offered to Students for the Ministry.

Dr. Daniel Jones Bursary offered to Ministers for further period of study.

Ariosh Scholarship of £120 per annum, open to Students for the Ministry who have graduated with distinction at any British or Irish University.

For further particulars apply to the PRINCIPAL, or to the Rev. HENRY GOW, 12, Glenloch-road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

A. H. WORTHINGTON, B.A., } Hon.
HENRY GOW, B.A., } Secs.

SUSTENTATION FUND

FOR THE

Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

NOTICE.

SECRETARIES of CONGREGATIONS desiring GRANTS from this Fund should write to me before March 31 for the necessary forms of application.

HAROLD F. PEARSON, Hon. Sec.,
22, College Hill, London, E.C.

British League of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Women.

THE COUNCIL MEETING will be held at Essex Hall, Essex-street, W.C., on Tuesday, March 10, at 3.15 p.m. Miss Grace Mitchell will relate some of her experiences in our Australian and New Zealand Branches and Churches. Friends interested in the League's work cordially invited. Tea 5.0 p.m.

PENDLETON UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

GRAND BAZAAR

to raise £300 in aid of Church Funds.

Opened each day at 3 p.m.

March 5th. GEORGE H. LEIGH, Esq., J.P.
President, British and Foreign
Unitarian Association.

6th. The MAYOR of SALFORD,
(Alderman Desquesnes).

7th. ARTHUR W. COWBURN, Esq.

Contributions in money or goods will be thankfully received by the Chairman, Mr. J. WIGLEY, 7, Halton Bank, Eccles Old-road, Pendleton, Manchester.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Society will be held at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, on Wednesday, March 4, at 8 p.m., and will be followed by a Conference on "School Methods," to be opened by Mr. Harold Titford.

All interested in Sunday School work are cordially invited to be present. No tickets are required.

Tea and Coffee will be served from 7.30 to 8 o'clock.

R. ASQUITH WOODING, Hon. Sec.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.

March

1. Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Minister Emeritus of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds.

8. Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.

15. Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only,

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church),
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for March 1:

Morning: The Fatherhood of God to all Mankind.

Evening: Mr. Balfour on Values in Beauty, Ethics, and Science.

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

Lecture Hall adjoining 19, Tavistock Square, W.C.

On Sunday Evenings, January 11 to March 22, 1914, at 7 o'clock, a Course of Lectures on

The Three Objects of the Society

will be given.

Mar. 1. The Human Aura. (With Lantern Illustrations.)
G. H. WHYTE.

Mar. 8. The Reality of the Unseen.
J. I. WEDGWOOD.

GOLDEN GRAINS

THOUGHTS OF MANY MINDS.

Compiled by LADY AGATHA RUSSELL,
with a Preface by FREDERIC HARRISON, Litt.D.

Royal 16mo. Cloth, 2s. net.

Published by JAMES NISBET & Co., Ltd., 22, Berner Street, London W.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M.

Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Invalid Children's Convalescent Hospital Home, Winifred House, Wray-erescent, Tollington Park, N., will be held at The Home on Tuesday afternoon, March 3, 1914, at 5 o'clock. Mrs. SYDNEY MARTINEAU has kindly consented to preside. The Home will be open to visitors at 4.30, and friends wishing to see the children's wards will find this a convenient opportunity. Tube to Holloway Road, thence by car to Hornsey Road or Grove Road, then 10 minutes' walk. Finsbury Park Station 15 minutes' walk. Motor Omnibus No. 14 (Putney to Hornsey Rise) passes end of Tollington Park.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

P. J. FOLEY, Esq., President.

Annual Income £3,340,000
Claims Paid exceed £15,000,000

Additional Representatives Wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing
G. SHRUBSALL, } Directors.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, March 1.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. Dr. MORITZ WESTON.
 Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER; Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.; 11, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.;
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. P. CHALK 7, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT; 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. Gow, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Mrs. GINEVER. Subject, 11, "The Humanity of Victor Hugo"; 7, "Faust's Easter Eve."
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Mr. E. R. FYSON.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D. Sacred Cantata at evening service, "The Cross of Christ."
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Mr. FRED COTTER.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER; and 7.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. R. W. SORENSEN; 6.30, Mr. J. PIPKIN.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. STANLEY RUSSELL, B.A.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Church-gate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing-street, 11.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN ROW, 10.45, and
 (STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle-terrace, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. CYRIL FLOWER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A.; 6.30, Rev. A. H. DOLPHIN.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREAE.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. F. PARMITER.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPTOWN.
 Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.
 Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.
 Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.
 Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

MARRIAGE.

CARTER—BECK.—On February 19, at the Friends' Meeting House, Bournemouth, Emerson Balstone Carter, M.A., eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Carter, of the Hermitage, Parkstone, Dorset, to Susette Gertrude Beck, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Beck, of "Red Lodge," Portchester-road, Bournemouth, and late of Southampton.

DEATHS.

HOOD.—On February 21, at Bournemouth, the Rev. Alfred Hood, in his 72nd year.
 MARSDEN.—On February 24, at 4, Swinton Grove, Manchester, Mary, the beloved wife of Henry Marsden, J.P., aged 72.
 STILLMAN.—On February 18, at Marsh Cottage, Newbury, Elizabeth Stillman, aged 63.
 TURNER.—On February 22, Maud Emma, fifth daughter of Frederick William and Melina Turner, of the Grange, Church-street, Stoke Newington, in her 47th year.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds of MSS. carefully and promptly copied.—Miss KENNEDY, 20, County Grove, Camberwell, S.E.

HOSPITAL SISTER seeks post as Amanuensis or Secretary to doctor, dentist, nursing home. Fluent German, some French.—W., 13, Hampstead Hill-gardens, N.W.

LADY (middle-aged) seeks engagement as Travelling Companion or Housekeeper where maid is kept. Good manager, musical, some knowledge of French, fond of children.—E. A., c/o Rev. DENDY AGATE, Dunham-road, Altrincham, who will answer inquiries.

SITUATION WANTED as House-keeper to one or two gentlemen, or Nurse-Attendant to invalid or infant. Experienced, references.—M. H., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

"LETTER RECEIVED, HORWICH."

PULPIT SUPPLY.

Rev. A. LANCASTER, 64, Stockbridge-road, Padiham.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	131	Sustentation Fund	138	MEMORIAL NOTICES :—
A PRAYER OF SOCRATES	132	Workers' Aid Society	138	The Rev. Alfred Hood	141
THE PROFESSIONAL MINISTRY	134	Furs for Warmth	138	Mr. Sydney Hollins, J.P.	141
THE RELIGIOUS ORGANISATION OF MODERN JEWRY	135	BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—		MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
CORRESPONDENCE :—		Ourselfs and Others in National Educa-		The Drink Traffic in Russia	141
Professor Bury on "Freedom of Thought"	136	tion	138	Tutorial Classes for Working People.	142
Theism and Christian Tradition	137	The Church and Social Ideals	139	Albanian Relief Fund	142
Our Colleges and the Sunday Schools	137	The Mediæval Mind	140	Nesting Boxes	142
Church Membership	138	Publications Received	140	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	142
		FOR THE CHILDREN :—		NOTES AND JOTTINGS	143
		The Sorrows of the Sea Lion	140	OUR CHESS COLUMN	144

 * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

It is refreshing to find the House of Lords setting itself against the secret influence of wealth. The motion which Lord Selborne introduced on Monday was academic in tone and the debate which followed on the connection between contributions to party funds and public honours elicited no new or startling facts. But good will have been done if Ministers of the Crown are encouraged in a finer scrupulosity in these matters, and public opinion is roused to the growing anomaly and the insidious danger of a close connection between great wealth and political power. In our present system it is taken for granted that one of the chief qualifications for being an hereditary legislator is the possession of money. There is also a suspicion in the public mind that a very rich man can find his way into the House of Lords, if he really desires to do so. It is no doubt true that there is far less corruption in political life than formerly ; but we should like to go a step further. Why should not the reason be specified for every title and honour conferred ? This would help to eliminate the influence of political wire-pulling and introduce an element of healthy public opinion into the dark world of private patronage.

* * *

THE Children's Bill, which passed its second reading in the House of Commons last week, is a comprehensive measure which seeks to regulate street-trading and to abolish the half-time system. These are matters of enormous importance for the welfare of the child-life of the country.

On their merits no one would defend one or the other, but the argument of economic necessity and deeply rooted habit will have to be overcome. The half-time system in the textile industries has unfortunately many apologists in the House of Commons. It is pleaded, for instance, that parents ought to be allowed to decide what is best for their children. But this is one of the matters where local feeling needs the corrective of a larger public opinion.

* * *

THE desire to turn children into wage-earners at the earliest possible moment has to be resisted because it is inconsistent with social welfare. By the same type of argument we could justify the employment of little children in mines, and foster a sense of parental grievance because education is compulsory. The half-time employment of children is one of the blots upon our industrial system which must be wiped out. If some northern constituencies have not imagination enough to see this, then the country as a whole will have to come to the rescue and extricate them from their bondage to an evil system. There are many things of minor importance which are best left to local decision, but this is not one of them.

* * *

THE Plumage Bill, as reintroduced by Mr. Hobhouse into the House of Commons, is the same as the Bill of last session except in one particular. The clause permitting plumage to be brought into the country as part of the owner's wearing apparel has been dropped. This is a distinct improvement. Many people objected strongly to this exception as undesirable in itself and likely to encourage evasions of the law. With this alteration we hope that the Bill will be allowed to pass by an almost unanimous vote. It appeals strongly to humanitarian sentiment of the healthiest possible kind, and the only argument against it comes either from thoughtless fashion or from the trader who finds himself threatened with a serious shrinkage of profits in a most undesirable line of business.

* * *

It is recognised that London is the chief market in the world for the plumage trade, and other European countries are hardly likely to adopt restrictive measures until we set the example. The indictment of Dr. W. T. Hornaday, Director of the New York Zoological Park, is very unpleasant reading, but it sets forth the evils which we have to fight with telling precision.

"London," he says, "is now the head of the giant octopus of the 'feather trade' that has reached out its deadly tentacles into the most remote wildernesses of the earth, and steadily is drawing in the 'skins' and 'plumes' and 'quills' of the most beautiful and most interesting unprotected birds of the world. . . . From the trackless jungles of New Guinea; round the world both ways to the snow-capped peaks of the Andes, no unprotected bird is safe. The Humming-birds of Brazil, the Egrets of the world at large, the rare Birds-of-Paradise, the Toucan, the Eagle, the Condor and the Emu, all are being exterminated to swell the annual profits of the millinery trade. The case is far more serious than the world at large knows, or even suspects. But for the profits the birds would be safe ; but no unprotected wild species can long escape the hounds of commerce."

* * *

REMARKABLE testimony comes from the United States not only of the success of the recent legislation on this question but also of the growing support which it receives from public opinion. At the annual meeting of the Zoological Society of New York held on January 13, 1914, at which upwards of a thousand members were present, it was resolved to cable to the Zoological Society of London the following message :—

“The Zoological Society of New York, having been largely instrumental in securing the passage of our national measures for the protection of the birds of the world, by preventing all importations for purposes of fashion or millinery, hereby extends its greetings to its fellow-members of the Zoological Society of London, and expresses the hope that the Society, which represents the other great metropolis of the world, will lend its unanimous support to the Hobhouse Bill, now before Parliament, which is designed to reinforce the protective measures passed by Congress. The effect of the American Bill has been instantaneous and widespread, and is now receiving unanimous support all over the United States. The very passage and enforcement of the Bill has created a sentiment for wild life protection in many quarters where it did not exist before. The millinery trade has adapted itself to the new conditions, and the law is acknowledged to be most beneficial in its results.”

At a meeting of the Zoological Society of London, held on February 4, 1914, a vote in sympathy with the Government Plumage Bill was passed.

* * *

We believe that the proposed restrictive legislation would have a precisely similar effect in our own country. There is an element of insincerity in pleading for the humane treatment of animals, so long as thousands of beautiful birds are slaughtered and rare species exterminated in order to satisfy the demands of fashion. Every other step is hindered by this rock of offence. Moreover, the public regulation of fashion in the interests of mercy and loving kindness will act like a moral tonic at a time when it is greatly needed. Expensive habits in food and clothes are tyrannous masters and soon blunt the finer moral sensibilities. The present lavishness in dress, in which good taste is so often sacrificed to display, encourages the temper which does not care to ask where things come from or how they are made. But these questions must be asked if we are not to be the selfish accomplices of cruelty and wrong. Those of our readers who desire more information about the Plumage Bill and ways in which they can help the cause should write to the Secretary, The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, 23, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.

* * *

THERE will be some natural disappointment that the proposal of the Bishop of Lincoln to omit the word “obey” and to assimilate the pledge made by the woman to that made by the man in the Marriage Service of the Church of England was withdrawn in the Upper House of Canterbury Convocation last week. Evidently the Bishop of Lincoln had come to the conclusion that he must wait for a better opportunity in order to secure a full and sympathetic discussion. Meanwhile the idea which seems to lurk in some minds, that the omission of the word “obey” might create serious practical difficulties and introduce an element of disorder into home life, ought to be examined by bishops and others in the light of practical experience. In this matter Nonconformists have full liberty, as the word is no part of the legal formula. Thousands of marriages must take place every year without its use, and we have never heard that they turn out disastrously, or that the omission affects the intrinsic sacredness of the marriage tie in any way whatever.

* * *

FRIENDS of peace will be grateful to the Bishops of Lincoln and Oxford for their support in Convocation of a proposal to enlarge the scope of a new petition, which it is suggested should be introduced in the Litany. The petition is as follows: “That it may please Thee to bless and keep the King's Forces by sea and land and to shield them in dangers and adversities.” The Bishop of Lincoln moved to substitute “All servants of the King” for “The King's Forces.” It is an admirable change, and if the spirit in which it is conceived could be made to prevail, it would help to give the Church a new outlook over the whole field of modern life by weakening the defences of its aristocratic traditions, which still keep it in close association with the governing classes, and make it more natural for it to pray for the army and navy than for miners and operatives and school teachers and social reformers, and all who by their industry and character uphold the pillars of the State.

* * *

It would be in our opinion a still greater improvement if the words “all servants of the King” were given greater definition—our prayers often tend to become too vague—and in this way all the challenging realities of our industrial life were brought into close association with the spirit of worship. The stately beauty of the Prayer Book lays its enchantment upon the mind and makes many educated people indifferent to its omissions. They hardly perceive its failure to provide suitable expression alike for popular devotion and for many of the needs of a society which is more concerned with industry and the common welfare than with the fate of kings or the issues of war. After discussion the Bishop of Lincoln withdrew his amendment on the understanding that the whole matter would be referred to a committee for further consideration.

A PRAYER OF SOCRATES.

BEFORE the time of Socrates the Greeks prayed to their gods very much as many people do in Christian churches to-day. They asked for gifts and favours; they cried for help against their enemies; they begged forgiveness, to be saved from the deserts of their own wrong doings. The form of their petitions was more crude in old times; they talked to their deities in blunt, business-like phrases, and set forth their claims for indulgence in very uncompromising terms. Compared with the chastened and devout language of modern or mediæval liturgies, the prayers of Homeric heroes before battle, or of a priest before or after sacrifice, would often sound coarse and irreverent. And the matter of the prayer, the things sought for, the petition itself, would be, generally, perhaps, of a more earthy and sensual type. But then, as now, the idea of gaining something by asking for it, of winning the favour and appeasing the wrath of superior beings, was largely the moving impulse in worship. Homer records the prayer of Chryses, priest of Apollo, in such words as these: “Harken to me, Lord of the silver bow! If ever I built a temple pleasing to thee, or ever offered to thee fat flesh of bulls and goats, then do thou accomplish now my desire.” And Nestor, when the Trojans were driving the Greeks before them, cries: “O Father Zeus, if ever one of us, in wheat-bearing Argos, did burn the fat thighs of bull or sheep, and prayed that he might return thither, and thou didst promise to assent thereto—of these things be thou mindful now, and avert the pitiless day, nor suffer the Trojans thus to overcome the Achæians.”

Some of those ancient prayers remind us of Luther demanding of the Lord that he spare the life of his great comrade in the fight with Rome. In the hour when Melancthon was thought to be dying, Luther went to the window, and leaning out into the night, pleaded for his recovery. And Melancthon recovered. Telling his friend of that wrestling with God in the dark hour, the sturdy reformer said: “I so rubbed His ears with his promises that He could not refuse my petition.”

Prior to that wonderful fifth century B.C. the crude religious conceptions of striking a profitable bargain with their gods by prayers and sacrifices seemed to linger among the Greeks, and inspired much of their worship. The old proverb, quoted by Hesiod, expressed the belief that “as a man may prevail over a king and win his favour by gifts, so may he prevail with a god.” More reverent and rational ideas find expression in the great tragic poets of Athens; but it is in the Socrates of Xenophon, and the great Disputant idealised in Plato's Dialogues that the finer religious spirit meets us. Though ethics, in the large and deep significance of that word, was the main purpose of Socrates, in his searching dialectics, the religious temper, the spirit of devoutness, must have ruled strongly within him. Xenophon tells us that he “used to pray only for that which is good, without going into particulars, believing that the gods best know what is good," and says that Socrates loved to commend the old Spartan prayer: "Give us, O King Zeus, that which is good, whether we pray for it or not, and avert the evil, even if we pray for it." If with scant means Socrates offered but small sacrifices, he believed that he was "in no wise inferior to those who made frequent and large sacrifices from an ample store." It were ill for the gods, he thought, could they take delight in large sacrifices rather than in small, "for then oftentimes would the offerings of bad men be more acceptable than those of good men." Nor for men themselves would life be worth living, if the offerings of a villain, because they were great, found more favour in heaven than those of a righteous man, which were small." His belief was that "the joy of the gods is greater in proportion to the holiness of the giver, not to the greatness of his gift."

In the Dialogues of Plato, where the moral aim is so persistent and prevailing the religious attitude of his great protagonist is revealed to us but indirectly, for the most part. We sometimes hear Socrates say, "Offer up a prayer for me before I proceed." He will say this when about to set forth on some fresh inquiry, or in making a further attempt to explain his thoughts to others. At other times he will ask them to wait while he offers the prayer himself. As a rule, no words are spoken; but the idea is suggested of composing the mind by turning it toward that which is above—the wish to be inspired or guided, in thought and utterance, by the spirit of wisdom and truth.

But on one memorable occasion Plato gives us the words of the prayer, as if from the lips of Socrates himself; and whether they were his or were from the pen of his great disciple, they do undoubtedly express the mind and spirit of that noble Athenian whose life was one long impassioned search after knowledge and beauty and the good. This prayer occurs at the close of the long dialogue between Socrates and Phædrus, in which the nature of love and the conflict of the higher and the lower qualities in the soul of man are discussed, through the long, slow hours of a summer day. The scene of the dialogue is not, as with most, in the city, but on the banks of the Ilissus, a small stream which, rising on the northern slopes of Mount Hymettus, flowed at a short distance to the east of Athens, and then, passing through the city, south of the Acropolis, was lost in the marshes of the Athenian plain, to the south-west. Socrates, who rarely leaves the city, has been allured by Phædrus this summer morning into the country, and they have spent the day in discussion on the banks of the stream, where a large plane tree made for them a shady place.

On coming thither in the morning, the beauty of the scene, the brightness of the summer day, the sounds and sights of the open air, with Nature in one of her happiest moods, had flung the magic of their enchantment on this man of the city. Socrates becomes like a child in his simple, light-hearted enjoyment of it all; he breaks forth into exuberant praise, in language that a modern Wordsworthian might envy;

"By Heré, a fair resting place, full of summer sounds and scents. Here is this lofty and spreading plane tree, and the agnus castus, high and clustering, in the fullest blossom and the greatest fragrance; and the stream which flows beneath the plane tree is deliciously cool to the feet. How delightful is the breeze—so very sweet; and there is a sound in the air, shrill and summerlike, which makes answer to the chorus of the cicadæ. But the greatest charm of all is the grass, like a pillow gently sloping to the head. My dear Phædrus, you have been an admirable guide."

And Phædrus answers: "What an incomprehensible being you are, Socrates; when you are in the country, as you say, you really are like some stranger who is led about by a guide. Do you ever cross the border? I rather think that you never venture outside the gates."

"Very true, my good friend, and I hope that you will excuse me when you hear the reason, which is, that I am a lover of knowledge, and the men who dwell in the city are my teachers, and not the trees or the country."

Then follows the reading of discourse which Phædrus has brought with him, and the great discussion, continued through the summer hours, unwearied and ever deepening in interest, till the conclusion is reached concerning the true nature of love, and the kind of men who may be called, "not wise, for that is a great name, which belongs to God alone, but lovers of wisdom or philosophers." Then Phædrus says, "And now as the heat of the day is abated, let us depart."

"Should we not," replies Socrates, "first offer up a prayer to the deities of the place?"

"By all means."

"Beloved Pan, and all ye other gods who haunt this place, give me beauty in the inward soul; may I reckon the wise alone to be wealthy, and may I have only so much of gold as a temperate man, and he only, can possess and rightly use. Anything more? The prayer, I think, is enough for me."

To mar the beauty and simplicity of that by any comment would surely be a kind of sacrilege. One may suggest only that, if we ever take upon ourselves to ask for gift or blessing from the Higher Powers, here is a noble example of the spirit and temper of such petition. For, clearly, the motive or intent of this prayer is to raise life to its highest on the spiritual side, and reduce it to its simplest in relation to material things. It desires the loftiest good for the true self—beauty in the inward soul. It yearns for the insight which discerns that wisdom alone is real wealth. It disdains all worldly possessions beyond those which can be justly owned and rightly employed by the temperate, self-controlled mind.

There will be those in every age, in Athens then as in London now, who think that in having many things, in owning and enjoying "great possessions," in having access to all varieties of pleasure—in amusement, dress, diet, travel, society, we live the fullest life and obtain the richest experience, and fulfil the end of existence here upon earth. There are others who believe that by simplicity in external things, by reducing life to its lowest terms on the physical side, they get power to raise it to its highest terms in things of the spirit. Socrates and Plato were of these last, as Jesus and St. Francis were; as Emerson and Thoreau in later times were; as an ever-increasing number in our own day are. I would cast in my lot with these; and if in certain moods I dared to ask gifts of the Unseen and Eternal Spirit of Life, I would desire to pray, if not in the words, yet after the manner of Socrates, that summer evening on the banks of the Ilissus stream.

Yet for us, to whom religion may have come to have a deeper significance, or, at least, a different significance, from that which it had for those ancient folk, prayer will oftenest mean something other and greater than a request or petition of any kind. As we realise the immensity of the world in which we live, the vastness of time, the majesty of law, the slowly evolving purpose of the mysterious order which through the ages rolls on its way, and as we feel that in and through it all a spirit of life, a mystic presence, a pervading and prevailing power, for ever works, for ever hides, and yet in part reveals, its secret mind—as we apprehend this, and then, in our highest moments of vision, know that something in ourselves, our intelligence, our will, our love, is kindred to that spirit, is at one with that heavenly mind—then, surely, all our begging petitions and pleadings of personal desire die away, and prayer becomes a silent, wordless communing with the eternal, a joy of heart that knows no limit, a peace of mind that passeth understanding. Sometimes it will take the form of submission, the finite will surrendered in courageous trust to the infinite will; sometimes it may be simply the temper of acceptance, the opening of the soul's deeper consciousness to the in-flowings of beauty, of love, of thought, the sources of which are beyond the sense, beyond the reach of reason and of pure intellect; and sometimes it will be the soul's ascending effort, the aspiration of our whole nature towards that which is above us, towards that which we would be, and feel that we have the latent capacity to become—the promise and the presage of complete fulfilment, through life's onward movement of adventure in the days and the ages that are to be.

We may or may not use the old word, and call such attitude or exercise of mind "prayer"—that is of small moment; but this, for the reverent mind, is that reality of devotion, this, the significance of that religious experience, which lifts the finite into union with the infinite, and links our passing moods and fitful endeavours to the eternal purposes of God. Without it life tends to become arid and cold, stricken with poverty at its inmost heart. It is good to have escaped from the childish superstitions, from the illusions of the poor religious mendicant, begging at the gates of heaven for favours and pardons and special gifts; it is well to have ceased to think of God as an almighty almsgiver, or as a weak, indulgent parent, to be won by the pleadings of a foolish or naughty child. Yet the great need remains—the sense of communion with something greater, diviner than ourselves, the outgoing of the heart towards the Heart of the Universe, the fellowship of thought and will with the eternal purpose of the spirit, the aspiration of the noblest self within towards the everlasting Beauty, Goodness, Truth or Love which is the soul's abiding refuge and home. And to yield to this need and realise something of the mystery of the Divine, within us and beyond—this, surely, is the true significance of prayer, this is to pray, never in mere petitions; rarely, perhaps, in spoken words, but always "in the spirit," and sometimes "with the understanding also."

W. J. J.

THE PROFESSIONAL MINISTRY.

BY EDWARD LEWIS.

WHILE the word "Kikuyu,"—almost as blessed a word as Mesopotamia—is ringing in our ears, and we are doubtless thinking not a little, both good and bad, about "holy orders," it may not be amiss if we spare a thought or two in reference to a kindred matter in our nonconformist communities.

I am not sure that the laity as a whole are satisfied with the ministry in our churches; I know a few ministers who are not at all satisfied with their position; though perhaps not just in the way in which a layman would think at first thought. I am writing from their point of view. It is my own.

A man who regards his ministry, not as a profession, but as a vocation, finds out before very long that the conditions under which he works are such that he cannot exercise it in the way he wants to do.

The root of the difficulty lies in the fact that he is called to serve an organisation. It is sometimes urged as a criticism against some churches that they are "simply preaching stations"; the thought behind this criticism is that churches should be many-branched organisations, busy with multifarious activities like a hive. Let it be granted for the moment that this is a good thing; what follows? An organisation requires two things, chiefly: an organiser, and money. The money matter is not the less important, and it is well to face the fact that in most of our churches the treasury is, if not the centre of interest, the centre of concern. Church organisation centres on the treasury. It is rather terrible to have to confess it, but it has come to this. I think that it was necessary that it should come to this. That is one reason why I am against organisation. A minister's happy tenure of office is very largely determined by the seat-rents and collections. A minister is "called"—I do not say that other things are not taken into consideration—in the hope that he will "fill the church." When the income begins to fall away, whispers begin to arise as to whether "he is quite the right man," or perhaps that "he has finished his work among us." In deacons' meetings finance occupies the major portion of the time. Anniversary services, and the like, are pious methods of getting a big collection; the "special preacher" is chosen almost entirely with that object in view. The subsidiary organisations of the church are a kind of net spread out to get as many persons as possible into connection with the church. Some churches go very near to touting for adherents; and that delicious bit of pungent criticism in the second chapter of the Epistle of James, about the "man with a gold ring" is not out of date.

In the majority of cases, the largest single item in the debit side of church accounts is the stipend of the minister. If one inquires why this is so, the answer seems to be that he has a right to it so long as he is worth it; that is to say, so long as he can earn it, and as much more as is necessary to keep the organisation going.

Who has not heard this question, "Will he come for what we can afford to pay?" and from this it is only a step to an illuminating question and answer made in my hearing not long ago: "Can we afford to give him so much?" "Oh, yes, he will soon make it up." When church funds are low, a minister feels very uncomfortable; he may be forgiven for feeling that he is not doing all that is expected of him, and that it is somehow "up to him" to improve matters, or take less, or go.

I venture to say that there is no man who feels his ministry to be a vocation, who is not fearfully bruised in his heart by these things.

Because a church is an organisation it is natural and inevitable that it should seek the service of a man who is an organiser. He may be a "man of God" as well, but the success of the thing requires that he must be an organiser; that is to say, that he must visit the homes of the people and make himself pleasant, attend all kinds of meetings, be able to speak on almost every subject under the sun, take several kinds of classes, initiate good works, run this and that, represent his congregation in denominational gatherings; he must be a preacher, a pastor, the secretary of a company, the managing director of a thriving business. In addition to this, he must keep up a "style" consistent with his position, and suffer all the social entanglements connected therewith, whether he likes it or no; and he must be a credit to his church in local public affairs. This, which I have set down, is perhaps the minimum which is expected of our professional ministry.

Some of us are in revolt; not against the amount of work we have to do, but against the kind of work we have to do. Some of us are in revolt against the size of our stipends; not that they are too small—we think it a strange thing that any "man of God" should think that he is not being paid enough—but because they are too big. Some of us are feeling that it is impossible to exercise the vocation of a man of God and be entangled in organisation at all.

I use the phrase "man of God" in the prophetic sense; I know that the manager of a business concern may be a man of God, for the divine gifts are divers, but I am thinking of the prophetic office as distinct from the pastoral or the secretarial. The church has pretty well made the prophetic ministry impossible; it has almost organised it out of existence. One need not go much further to find sufficient reason for its decadence.

The man of God must be a poor man; he ought to subsist on the personally besought charity of others, or get his bread by the work of his hands, or (and I admit that this is compromising with the status quo) receive a bare living from those to whom he preaches. He ought to live in the country where a man has still the chance of a natural, free, companionship with God. He ought to be aloof from the world; it is not necessary for him to be always mixing with people that he may know their private needs, his business is with the eternal needs of the soul, and to mediate that Eternal Word which, when it is implanted in the heart, is the Grace which is sufficient and adaptable to every kind of need. He ought to live a wild life, and come to the congregation gathered to meet him as John the Baptist came from the desert. He ought to be celibate; and if you think that this cuts him off from the deepest experiences of human life, it can only be said that Jesus (and many others) did not seem to labour under this disadvantage. He ought not to be "attached" to any one congregation; he might serve many congregations, a district of congregations; but he must be as free and as independent as the Spirit that moves him. I can imagine busy, careworn, weary, world-entangled people saying in respect of their weekly gathering for worship, "The Man of God will be with us," and they would say it with a strange throbbing expectation in the heart and a lighting up of the eyes which does not characterise your ordinary modern worshipper when he thinks of Sabbath morning prayer. And I can imagine the man of God coming to these expectant people, calm, aloof, austere, almost unknown, but with something about him which suggests the Bigger World, which is the Other World, the great life, the Universal Soul, the all-embracing Harmony, the Reality of God, the Rest which ever "flows around our restlessness."

Candidly, does the ordinary professional ministry suggest this as a rule, or anything like it?

It is impracticable, you say; the churches would go to pieces! Well, I cannot pretend that I am anxious about the immortality of the churches; but, as a matter of fact, you could still have your organisation. The money you now spend on the man who may be a man of God, but has no chance to express himself as such, you might use in order to pay a pastor, or secretary, or superintendent, or minister, or whatever you might call him (or them); the man who would visit the sick, and run the organisation, and be willing to be the victim of his pocket-book. But let the man of God go into the wilderness, and come to you with all the freshness, power, eternity of the wilderness upon him.

We are dying for a baptism of the Spirit, and the men from whose hands the waters of this Baptism might fall we keep on doorsteps and at committee-tables, and within the wheels of organisation. Who are these men? Where are they? Are there any? These are the questions of traitorous doubt and of atheism. Did divine inspiration run into a cul de sac two thousand years ago?

How can the Church discover them? Perhaps she cannot; maybe she has for so long been looking for a different kind of thing that she has lost the eye for this. Perhaps if one stood out with the authentic sign we should cast him forth and crucify him. Anyhow, you say, the thing is impracticable; we are in a groove and we can't get out of it. Then you had better take your chalk and write Ichabod.

This is a cry de Profundis; maybe a few will understand.

THE RELIGIOUS ORGANISATION OF MODERN JEWRY.

ORGANISATION for religious purposes forms the basic foundation of every Jewish community. However numerous its social and educational institutions may be, however vigorous its economic and political life, every community owes its origin to the desire of its earliest members to meet together for public worship. As soon as there are in a town ten adult males above the age of thirteen—the minimum necessary for congregational service—they assemble in the house of one of their number or in a hired room for common prayer on Sabbaths and festivals. If the spirit of piety in their midst is not strong enough to draw them together every Sabbath, they are at least impelled by their racial consciousness to celebrate the festivals with their historic memories and symbolic ceremonies; but should they be deaf even to the appeal of these hallowed associations they can rarely resist the solemn call of the New Year and the Day of Atonement, which summons the children of Israel in all lands to prayer and penitence. With the lapse of time the little community outgrows its modest meeting-place, and must build unto itself a synagogue, a task in which it is usually aided by co-religionists from neighbouring towns and the metropolis; and the conduct of the service, which was formerly read simply by a layman, is now entrusted to a professional cantor, the Chazan, who intones the prayers according to the traditional melodies with expert ability. The founders of the community are thus the builders of its first synagogue. A further increase of the congregation enables it to appoint a Rabbi in addition to the cantor, and the continued growth of the community, whether by natural accretion or immigration, results in the rise of other synagogues, some of which are founded by groups of fellow-townsmen from another country. Thus, in London, New York, and other great cities in the West, there are numerous houses of prayer called Chevroth, bearing the name of the native place of their founders, such as the "Lodz Chevrah" or "Cracow Congregation," a phenomenon attesting the local patriotism of the Jew.

The synagogue is the basic religious institution of the community, but it by no means suffices for the variety of its spiritual needs and religious requirements, and hence it must be supplemented by a series of other institutions. First comes the schoolroom, generally situated on the premises of the synagogue itself, in which the children are taught the Hebrew language and the tenets of Judaism. Secondly comes the slaughter-house, in which cattle and poultry that are permitted to be eaten are killed in accordance with Rabbinical law to provide kosher meat. Next comes the Mikvah or bath for ritual purification, which is far more prevalent in the East than in the West; and then a separate cemetery, consecrated to the reception of the dead. In the West, and among those assimilated to Western modes of life, the schoolroom is for the use of the children. But in the East, and among those settled in the West who still preserve the ways of the East, the schoolroom is a Beth Hamidrash, a house of study in which adult congregants foregather at night for the study of the Talmud under the guidance of the Rabbi, and in which even during the day pious greybeards meditate over the fathomless wonders of the Torah. In such communities the children receive religious instruction in a private school (Cheder) kept by a teacher in his own house, or in a publicly supported institution called a Talmud Torah ("Study of the Law"). The provision of kosher meat in a populous centre demands several abattoirs, equipped by a large staff of licensed slaughterers, and controlled by a board representing the various synagogues in the town, the Board of Shechita or "Slaughtering." The religious requirements of the community as regards food are not complete, however, until it also possesses a bakery for the production of bread and cakes, and a dairy for the production of milk and butter, according to Jewish ritual law. The cemetery is generally administered by the council of the synagogue or of a union of synagogues, but it is occasionally controlled by an independent burial society; whilst the final rites connected with the interment of the dead are usually discharged by the Chevrah Kadisha, a "Holy Brotherhood" whose members are animated by a high sense of religious duty.

The foregoing description of the growth of a congregation applies in essentials to all parts of the world. It reflects the usual course of development in all English-speaking countries, where the State does not interfere with the religious liberty of its Jewish subjects, who may establish congregations and build synagogues whenever they please, but it is the subject to certain qualifications on the Continent. It is true that the constitution of the London United Synagogue was approved by Act of Parliament, but this measure was desired by the founders of the United Synagogue themselves, and was not dictated by the Government. It is because of the complete liberty allowed by the civil authority, both national and municipal, that the ecclesiastical system of Jewry in English countries consists mainly of separate congregations, each of which is independent of and unconnected with the other. Apart from the United Synagogue and the Federation of Synagogues in London there is no other ecclesiastical union in British Jewry, but the Chief Rabbi of the United Synagogue is also elected by representatives of other congregations in England and the British Colonies, and is thus recognised as the spiritual head of the majority of the Jews in the British Empire. In the United States, however, every congregation is a law unto itself, though conferences both of the Orthodox and of the Reform Rabbis are held periodically to discuss religious questions and decide upon common action.

On the Continent the tutelage exercised by the Government over its Jewish community in the middle ages has been preserved for the most part to the present day, though in Western Europe it has assumed a constitutional form, free from any despotic or humiliating feature. In Germany and Austria every Jew must be a member of the congregation in his town and contribute the tax imposed upon him (an obligation that is enforced, if necessary, by the civil authority), and only those are exempted from this duty who take the extreme step of formally renouncing their Judaism by declaring themselves conversionslos. The formation of congregations and their approval by the local or central Government is compulsory in these countries, but there is no uniformity in either of them as regards the exact measure of control exercised by the civil authority. In Württemberg, Baden, Hesse, and Mecklenburg, the congregations are administered by a central board, directly responsible to the Government, which sanctions the election of Rabbis; but in Prussia there is no central board, and each community can create its own ecclesiastical organisation, though under the general supervision of the State. In Austria and Hungary there is likewise local autonomy, but in Moravia the committee of every congregation must be reported to the police, and the election of a Rabbi must be confirmed by the authorities. In France, since the Act of Separation, the ecclesiastical organisation of the Jews is free from Government control, but the system of consistories originated by Napoleon I., with a central council in Paris, is still maintained, a system that likewise prevails in Holland, Belgium, and Alsace-Lorraine. In Russia, as in Central Europe, every Jew must belong to some congregation, whilst new congregations can be formed only with the permission of the Government. Moreover, every congregation usually has two Rabbis, a spiritual head, elected by itself, and a second chief, the "Crown Rabbi," appointed by the Government to keep the registry of births, marriages, and deaths; but there is no Chief Rabbi for the entire Empire or for any province. In Turkey there is an elaborate system of communal organisation, governed by a national council, a temporal council, and a spiritual council; and the Chief Rabbi, whose election requires the sanction of the Government, is endowed by it with high powers of authority over the spiritual affairs of the whole of Ottoman Jewry.

It will thus be seen that there is no central religious authority in Israel, no single ecclesiastical dignitary who exercises a universal overlordship. Each country is independent of the other; for the most part each local congregation is independent of the others in the same country, and even each synagogue is independent of others in the same town. But what binds the great majority of congregations together and supplies an element of uniformity is the accepted authority of traditional law as embodied in the Talmud and codified in Joseph Caro's Shulchan Aruch ("Table Prepared"). It is in conformity with these codes that most of the Chief Rabbis, be their diocese an empire, a country, or merely a congregation, conduct their administration, though personal proclivities and local circumstances produce a certain variety of attitude to laws that are not of fundamental importance. The Chief Rabbi usually performs his ecclesiastical functions through the medium of a court, the Beth Din ("Court of Judgment"), in which he is assisted by two or more Rabbis, and he bears the title of Rosh Beth-Din ("Head of the Court of Judgment"). This Court, the modern counterpart of the ancient Sanhedrin, decides all questions pertaining to the religious domain. It issues marriage certificates and bills of divorce; it deals with cases of proselytism; it examines and licenses slaughterers, who must produce their knives for searching inspection, and it also licenses butchers; it takes systematic measures to ensure the ritual fitness of all food offered for Jewish consumption, not only meat, but also bread, milk, butter, and cheese; it supervises the baking of unleavened bread for Passover; and it solves numberless problems relating to ritual observances and ceremonies that arise in the daily life of the community. Its authority is seldom questioned, and it is noteworthy that in the few cases in which the authority of the Chief Rabbi in England has been disputed by provincial butchers, in regard to pronouncing on the kashrus or ritual fitness of meat offered for sale, it has been upheld by the civil court. The jurisdiction of the Beth Din usually comprises only questions of religious law, but civil disputes are also often voluntarily submitted to its decision, and cases in which both parties are Jews are also occasionally referred to it by civil judges.

The aspirant to the Rabbinate must undergo a long course of training in a theological seminary before he is qualified to receive the title of Rabbi. The instruction in the few seminaries (Yeshiboth) in Russia is modelled largely on the system observed throughout the middle ages and is almost wholly confined to Hebrew lore; and after the student has passed a searching examination in the Talmud and the ritual codes by his teacher or another Rabbi he is given the diploma of Hattarat Horaah ("permission to teach and decide"), which attests his ability to discharge Rabbinical functions. The diploma confers no sacred power and is not a priestly licence; it may be acquired by any layman who is sufficiently learned in Rabbinic lore, and its holder derives the authority to act as Rabbi from the congregation that appoints him. During the nineteenth century modern Rabbinical seminaries were established in Western Europe and America,* at which stress is laid upon the acquisition of an advanced secular education in addition to the knowledge necessary for the Rabbinical office, and hence the modern Rabbi generally possesses a university degree. He is further distinguished from his colleagues in Eastern countries and from most of the Rabbis ministering to foreign congregations in the West by a more practical conception of his office. The Rabbi of the Eastern type delivers sermons only occasionally, which are profound expositions of Talmudical texts; he answers all questions relating to religious customs and ritual practice; but he makes little or no attempt to take account of the influence of modern conditions upon Judaism. The Western Rabbi preaches sermons regularly in the vernacular, in which he deals with problems of the day and tries to reconcile Jewish tradition with modern thought; he supervises the religious education of the young; he visits his congregants; and he is regarded and accepted in the outer world as the representative of his community. The professional assimilation of the modern Rabbi to the Christian minister has in England gone to the extent of his adopting the ordinary clerical garb and the title of "Reverend."* But in the purely ecclesiastical sphere he enjoys less authority than his Eastern colleague; the latter is the undisputed leader of his community, the arbiter in all questions of religious observance, whereas the modern Rabbi is often the mere instrument of his congregation, whose will is sovereign in all proposed changes of the ritual or liturgy.

The centuries of dispersion and myriad-fold dismemberment of Jewry have naturally produced divergencies of synagogue ritual that are quite unconnected with differences of doctrine. There are two main systems which are grouped around the ritual of the Ashkenazim, or Jews of Germany (Heb., Ashkenaz), and around that of the Sephardim, or Jews of Spain (Heb., Sephard). The Ashkenazic liturgy, which is by far the most extensively used, has undergone minor variations in Russia and Poland as well as in England and America; whilst the Sephardic ritual, which differs in the sequence of certain prayers and the text of others and shows a preference for the compositions of writers of Spanish origin, is exclusively employed by the descendants of the exiled Jews of Spain and Portugal, who migrated mostly to Turkey and the other lands washed by the Mediterranean, as well as, in smaller groups, to England and Holland, and even to various parts of North and South America. The Sephardic ritual has also undergone certain variations, the principal being the Castilian, the Aragonian, the Catalanian, and the Provençal, whilst further variations are found among the Jews of Arabia and Morocco. The Sephardim, moreover, who probably do not number more than half a million in all, differ from the Ashkenazim in their pronunciation of Hebrew and attach less importance to an elaborately musical service. They have their own synagogues and their own independent Rabbis, but in all the essentials of faith and observance they acknowledge the same traditional authority as the majority of Jewry.

ISRAEL COHEN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

PROFESSOR BURY ON "FREEDOM OF THOUGHT."

SIR,—Most of the notices of Prof. Bury's book have been severe on what the writers regard as the anti-religious tone of the author. I have been somewhat surprised that THE INQUIRER should have taken the same course, both in its review of the book and in Mr. Mellone's articles. I am not concerned to defend the attitude or the tone of the author, although I confess they did not affect me as they did Mr. Mellone. He says: "He writes in a temper of extreme hostility to all forms of Christianity." Again: "This bitter partisan prejudice affects and distorts the author's view of almost every fact to which he refers in the history of the Christian Church." This, in my view, is the language of exaggeration. It seems to me that Mr. Mellone has overlooked the main point of the book. He says: "We are now facing the central question involved in the position taken by Mr. J. B. Bury in his book on the history of what he calls 'Freedom of Thought.' What is Authority?" Now I maintain that although Mr. Mellone elects to make "Authority" the subject of his articles, that is not "the central question" of the professor's book. The question of authority only occupies some six out of 251 pages of the book. The declared object of the work is to give the history of "the issue of a continuous struggle between authority and reason"; to indicate "the directions and interactions of the intellectual and social forces, which, since the fall of ancient civilisation, have hindered and helped the emancipation of reason." The main question, therefore, I take to be this: not, is or is not Prof. Bury's tone and spirit free from criticism, but, are the facts of his book true?

Now I should like to refer to that remarkable book by the American, Andrew D. White, on "The Warfare of Science with Theology." This book is written with no anti-religious bias; quite the contrary (herein differing from an earlier work on the same subject, Draper's "History of the Conflict between Religion and Science"), and the facts contained in it confirm substantially the statements in Prof. Bury's book. It is, indeed, a melancholy fact that, through all the ages, the Church, or Theology (I will not say religion) instead of promoting the cause of truth and progress as regards science has been its bitter enemy; that every advance in science should only have been made in the teeth of opposition from an institution one of whose main objects is the propagation of truth; in a word, that "secular" science should have taught the "sacred" church what are in reality the "laws of God," the "Revelation" of his mind and will. This fact, clearly stated, seems to me to constitute the intense interest and value of Prof. Bury's little book.—Yours, &c.,

* The most important seminaries, in the order of their foundation, are those of Breslau (1854), London (1856), Berlin (the moderately conservative Lehranstalt für die Wissenschaft des Judentums in 1872, and the strictly orthodox Rabbiner Seminar in 1873), Cincinnati (1874), Budapest (1877), New York (1886), and Vienna (1893).

* The late Chief Rabbi of England, Dr. Herman Adler, once conferred the title of "Reverend" upon a schoolmaster, an act which aroused considerable criticism as being utterly foreign to Jewish tradition.

P. E. VIZARD.

Hampstead, February 23, 1914.

THEISM AND CHRISTIAN TRADITION.

SIR,—There was an article on January 31 in your columns entitled, "Theism and Wesleyanism." The writer recounted his experiences on the previous Sunday, when he attended the celebration of the anniversary of the Brahma Samaj at Essex Hall; and then attended evening service at Kingsway Hall. One gathers that, although the writer is really a Theist, he finds more satisfaction at the Wesleyan service than at the Theistic; he finds numbers, enthusiasm, popular hymn tunes, simple yet effective preaching. I believe the writer of this article represents the position of a good many Theists. They look back to the churches from which they have separated, and tend to overlook the things which caused the separation, and to see only the virtues of the old church. And this is a very good thing. There is every reason in the world to respect and see the best in those from whom we profoundly differ. We can do it more fully when we are not expected to accept their creeds and interpretations.

It is not surprising, therefore, that Unitarians and Theists should be looking upon the orthodox Christian movements with more respect and sympathy than was once the case, now that they are freed from the old traditions, and have got past the acute stage of revolt. But there is a tendency, together with this growing sympathy, for Theists to lose faith in their own cause; to think that in severing themselves from the old orthodox tradition they have lost some vital energy, and to wish that they could, to some extent, undo the past. "What is the dynamic of Theism?" asks your correspondent, "especially if it deprives itself of the Christian tradition? It will not find it in criticism, or science, or abundant learning!" A few columns further on, in the same number, I read the following sentence in a report of a sermon by a leading Unitarian minister: "Unitarians must return to the evangelical note." The "Free Catholic" movement seems to be another, and a remarkable, manifestation of a fear to face the future without a substantial hold of some kind upon "Christian tradition." It seems to me that this fear is unworthy and unfounded, and arises from a mistaken view of the situation.

Unitarianism began its history as an effective movement by breaking away from the "Christian tradition," because the Christian tradition meant a series of incredible myths, legends, and semi-barbarous conceptions regarding God, man, and the world. It insisted upon an attempt to return to the spirit and teaching of Jesus, in opposition to the accumulated verbiage of the makers of creeds about Jesus. The movement became increasingly Theistic; that is, convinced that the supreme Object of worship can only be thought of as Spirit immanent in all things, yet transcendent over them; as distinct from Deism, on the one hand, which exclusively emphasised Transcendence; and Pantheism, on the other, which exclusively emphasised Immanence. In holding this view Unitarianism believed that it was inspired by the example and religion of Jesus himself. Problems have multiplied upon us since the early days of Unitarianism, and especially in regard to the New Testament. It is extremely difficult for us now to be sure of our ground in claiming the authority of Jesus; for our records have been shown to have been coloured by an already strong tradition, and to have accumulated further elements of contemporary mythology as the new Christian community came into contact with other religious influences. At the same time, the new field of Comparative Religions was being opened out, and the religious outlook was enormously widened. Upon a growing body of Unitarians and others the truth was borne in that Theism was not the creation or monopoly of any particular religious tradition, and did not depend upon the authority of any one teacher.

It seems inconceivable to those of us who have come to this point of view that we should be asked by Theists to return to the Christian tradition or the evangelical note. What is meant by "Christian tradition"? Surely not the long ago discredited system of doctrines of salvation. But if by a return to "Christian tradition" is meant full agreement that Jesus stands as one of the greatest religious influences in the world, we have no need to "return," for we have never left it. But we fail to understand how the details of his life and teaching, about which there is uncertainty, can possibly affect the reality or truth of religious Theism. It may be true that Unitarianism has tended to become intellectualistic, critical, cold. It may well be that in casting aside as unworthy caricatures of religion many things that pertained to "Christian tradition," it even became cynical. For that it has suffered; it has not expanded as it might have done. But what are we to do? Realising the dangerous tendencies which are retarding our progress, are we not merely to try to overcome them, but also to rush back into the arms of the tradition from which we have freed ourselves? Surely that is the counsel of despair. Coldness and cynicism are no more essential to Theism than vulgarity and coarseness are to Methodism. Good fellowship and warm-heartedness are no more the peculiar property of Wesleyanism than the uncivilised lands of the world are of Great Britain; though some there are who seem to think it is so in both cases.

"What is the dynamic of Theism?" The question is put as if there were a special dynamo for every religious movement, which generated just enough energy to keep each particular movement going. This is a false way of looking at life and religion thus to split it up into narrow, self-interested compartments. The dynamic of Theism is the dynamic of all true religion: the desire to enter into fellowship with the True and Good, to become like unto it; to recreate humanity more fully in the image of the Divine Beauty. If that sounds abstract and bloodless, it is simply by reason of lack of spiritual imagination and experience. If Theism does not set up any particular symbolism to make vivid its faith and aims, it is because it finds a rich and suggestive symbolism in all the universe: of God's Beauty in the sunset and the ocean; of His Goodness in the nobility and heroism of His best Sons; of His Truth in the majestic uniformities of law and purpose. We want no talk of "returning." There is a sense in which there is the same tradition behind all the Christian communities and Unitarian Theism. All are in greater or less degree endeavours after fulness of life, and truth, and good. Each has developed its own line of advance, branching out from the main tradition at various points. The watchword of every live movement is "Forward!" and "not a look behind us." There is an infinitely wide country to explore, and no one merely traditional effort can encompass the whole. There is an essentially inventive and creative task for us to do in the Universe of Truth.

If people want as a dynamic a great pushing force of tradition, they had better leave this little search party and go elsewhere; but we want those who feel the summons of the heroic, the adventurous, the impulse of discovery and creation, to join the little band which goes out into the unknown with but little baggage and impedimenta in the way of creed or tradition. We cannot promise to provide beforehand maps of our journeys, to arrange the situations of our encampments, to foresee the welcomes we may get at prosperous cities on our expedition, because the land we are in search of is not mapped out. It is to discover and colonise the unknown tracts of the spiritual universe that we go—to found, not to find, cities and a new kingdom.—Yours, &c.,

J. CYRIL FLOWER.

Sale, Manchester, February 12, 1914.

OUR COLLEGES AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SIR,—After many years as teacher as well as minister, I feel the importance of the Sunday school to be second to none in the varieties of our ministry of religion. I hasten, therefore, to welcome your remarks on this subject, and to express a hope with you that the College authorities will be able to discover a way of complying with the appeal of the Sunday School Association Committee for distinct training in Sunday school work. From the point of view of the students, who will certainly in most cases have to undertake it, skilled preparation in the arts of teaching would be invaluable. From that of the children and young people, whose need of a truly vital religion—as well as of enlightened ideas on the Bible and the world—becomes more than ever urgent in these days, the benefits of wise methods, instead of well-meant but bungling efforts, would be equally beyond price. The College staffs, already overwhelmed with demands for special training of one kind and another, may be disposed to cry out "Who is sufficient for these things?" Well, this is a world where we have to choose, and, whatever is left out, some will regret. But I am sure many will share your opinion that the Sunday school, at any rate, should not be neglected. Pending a radical revision of the curriculum, which I think is at present hardly practicable, if desirable, might it not be possible to arrange for regular series of studies, short but well-devised, under the guidance of some experienced teacher? The addition to the work of the students need not be severe, and it would be directly profitable.—Yours, &c.,

W. G. TARRANT.

Wandsworth, February 21, 1914.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

SIR,—I shall be grateful to any ministers and secretaries of churches who will acquaint me with their methods of increasing the membership of their congregations. Apart from general information, I want to know particularly:—(1) In what manner the conditions of membership are made known to visitors. (2) What printed matter, besides forms of application, is available for inquirers, and how it is obtainable. (3) What arrangement the church committee makes for the visitation of persons known to attend the services. While I desire this information for the purposes of my work here, where our services are attended by many besides our recognised members, I am hopeful that the result of my inquiry may be serviceable to others who realise the need of more definite methods of congregational development.—Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM C. HALL.

75, Semilong-road, Northampton,
February 23, 1914.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

SIR,—Will you permit me to draw attention to the advertisement which appears in another part of this issue of your paper, to the effect that the secretaries of all congregations who wish to apply this year for a grant from the Sustentation Fund should write to me before March 31 next to obtain the necessary form? As I stated in a letter which recently appeared in your columns, the managers of the Sustentation Fund hope this year to be in a position to begin making grants under the minimum scale scheme, and I would remind secretaries of congregations intending to apply for a grant under this scheme (which applies only to England and Wales) that the scales are on the following basis:—

(1) For England (which includes the whole country, North as well as South):—
(a) Agricultural districts, £120; (b) towns and populous places, £150; (c) cities and large towns, £175.

(2) For Wales:—(a) Agricultural districts, £110; (b) towns and populous places, £140.

It should be noted that the managers of the Fund will only be able to make grants under the scheme where the three undermentioned conditions are fulfilled, viz:—

(1) The minister must be an accredited minister (not a "lay-worker") whose name appears in the Essex Hall Year Book.

(2) His work must be deemed efficient, and his field of work deemed adequate.

(3) The local contribution (apart from endowments) must be considered satisfactory.—Yours, &c.,

HAROLD F. PEARSON.

Hon. Secretary, Sustentation Fund.

22, College-hill, E.C., Feb. 24, 1914.

WORKERS' AID SOCIETY.

SIR,—Some of your readers may like to hear of the work done last year by the above Society. About 140 garments were supplied by the 31 members, those most suitable being sent to Winifred House. The remainder were divided amongst the Missions at Rhyl-street, Dingley-place, Blackfriars, Bethnal Green and Deptford—obviously only a very inadequate help—and the warm expressions of thanks to our society from the recipients show how great is the need of much bigger parcels, especially for the Missions. May I hope that more of our friends will make this society their medium of help? I am glad to announce that several new members have joined this year as a result of the circular distributed at Christmas by our members. I shall be pleased to send a copy of it to any one interested.—Yours, &c.

MABEL BARMBY.

Mount Pleasant, Sidmouth.

FURS FOR WARMTH.

SIR,—Visitors to the highly interesting cinematograph representation, now being given in London, of scenes from Captain Scott's memorable expedition, can see and hear for themselves that furs are not a necessary article of clothing even in ice-bound regions. Mr. Ponting, the very skilful camera artist, who accompanied the expedition and graphically tells the story, informs us that two or three suits of woollen underwear, and over these blouses and trousers of a thin windproof material were much lighter than furs and just as warm. He says: "So far as Antarctic exploration is concerned furs are a thing of the past."

Have we not almost reached the acme of absurdity and of cruelty when, literally, millions of fur-bearing animals are done to death with all the torment of steel traps and other instruments of torture, because fashionable dames in our temperate zones think they cannot keep themselves warm without a pile of skins hanging round the necks and shoulders, while the explorers in a temperature 50 degrees below zero find they can do better without them altogether?—Yours, &c.,

ERNEST BELL.

"Animals' Friend" Office, York House,

Portugal-street, London,

February 18, 1914.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

OURSELVES AND OTHERS IN NATIONAL EDUCATION.

Studies in Foreign Education, with special reference to English Problems. By Cloudeley Brereton. London: G. G. Harrop & Co. 5s. net.

MR. CLOUDELEY BRERETON deserves well of the educational, and indeed of the general public, in bringing together the various contributions he has made, in the last twelve years or more, to educational thought. Mr. Brereton is one of the comparatively few educationists amongst us who have taught in foreign as well as in English schools, and who has continued, through all his professional and inspectorial work, to think internationally on educational problems. The study of comparative education has not received the attention it deserves. We all recall the valiant efforts made to establish the study in England, when Dr. Michael Sadler was appointed as Director of Educational Inquiries at the Board of Education. One of Mr. Brereton's essays included in this volume was published first in one of the "Special Reports on Educational Subjects," and is, therefore, already well known. It is entitled "A Comparison between French and English Schools." It goes right to the root of our national differences, and inter alia shows how France could teach us much to ameliorate our present examination tendencies in schools. Like Mr. P. J. Hartog, too, Mr. Brereton is impressed by the superiority of France in its methods of teaching the vernacular. The superiority of the English Public Schools is maintained in their formative effect on character, whilst it is made clear that the intellectual atmosphere is more prominent in the French schools. This essay has received the high praise of M. Bergson. "It contains," he says, "a complete comparative psychology of the two systems of education, which is of the highest interest. It is the first time, to my knowledge, that a work of this kind has been undertaken, or at least been pushed to such a degree of thoroughness."

The subjects of further essays are:—Thirty Years of University Education in France; French Rural Education; Physical Education in France; Infants' Schools of France; the Paris International Guild; A Look Round German Schools; The New Way of Teaching Classics in Germany. There are also two perhaps more important essays concerning our relation to French, German, and American education.

One of the chapters will have special interest to readers of THE INQUIRER, viz., "The True Inwardness of Moral Instruction in France." Mr. Brereton regards the English training of children as relying mainly on the formation of right habits, whilst the French method is specially marked by the appeal to reason. As Mr. Brereton acutely puts it, the English parent tells the little child to "be good" or "not to be naughty." The French mother, on the other hand, says to the troublesome child: "Sois sage," or "Sois raisonnable." And, again, a note in the essay quotes from a French writer the phrase used by a French mother to a child who is "doing wrong": "Ce que tu fais n'est pas beau (beautiful)," and if this does not prove effective follows it up with the personal appeal: "Tu fais de la peine à ta mère." Mr. Brereton remarks: "Compare this with our normal English discipline—'Won't you be good?' possibly followed by an appeal to physical force!" Historically considered, Mr. Brereton describes nearly all French literature since the 17th century as "saturated with the belief in reason," and cites with much relevancy the followers of Descartes, the Encyclopædists, Voltaire, and Robespierre's "Feast of Reason." And later: "Whether the struggle has been for political power or social justice, both parties have made the logical appeal. . . The atmosphere, therefore, inside and outside the schools, in which the French child grows up, is essentially a logical one." The instances given of the much wider use of "reason" are most suggestive. Thus the French say "avoir raison" (to be right), and "avoir raison de ses vices" (to get the better of his vices), and so on. The rationalising of conduct is, therefore, as natural to the French pupil as the appeal to reason in general, historical, and literary questions. The conclusion arrived at by Mr. Brereton is that the English Public School will-training and habit-forming is essentially right for England, whilst the teaching of virtue on a reasoned basis suits the French school atmosphere more readily, yet for England more definite moral instruction, or even "amplified and modernised religious teaching" might be well developed, and in France more systematised will-training. Mr. Brereton sees very clearly that there is a national as well as an individual psychology; and that imitation, even of the excellencies of another nation, without regard to the special historical antecedents, and the present environmental conditions, is not only futile but even dangerous; yet the art of learning to understand the aptness of educational methods to educational needs in other countries stirs the judgment to educational wisdom with regard to our own educational problems, by developing a readiness to demand wider knowledge and experience of available facts, and also by the training in constructive imagination which comes from the analysis and synthesis of the elements of complex national systems of education in the various foreign countries. Mr. Brereton's wide experience, and his alert, discriminative judgment, bring very suggestive educational material from France, Germany, and the United States of America to our attention; and though it is often selected for the purpose of illustrating points of view and opinions to which the writer himself specially inclines, Mr. Brereton is not unduly assertive or aggressive. The subjects with which he deals are of the first importance. They are not of the technical nature which restricts the value to the professional student. They thoroughly deserve to be considered by the general reader, by the parent, particularly, who wishes to understand the significance of present-day educational ideals. There are but few guides in England so competent to speak of international school methods and aims, for Mr. Brereton is speaking from personal knowledge and experience. Lastly, in a notice of this book it may be permitted to say that the fact that it has been written by an Inspector of Schools (under the London County Council) is in itself a sign of the great progress of education in this country, for it shows that the old days are gone when inspectors were supposed to be just adverse critics of teachers, spies upon suspects, and are themselves desirous of qualifying as educational leaders, inspirers and advisers; willing to win their position in the united profession of teachers by their intrinsic merits of sparing no pains to gain wide pedagogical experience, to investigate and collect facts, and to bring thought to bear on comparative methods and aims—in short, to become capable and effective educationists, to whom teachers can look up as guides. It is this enthusiastic and persistent spirit which animates Mr. Brereton, and makes his volume have much more importance professionally to teachers, than might otherwise seem to attach to a collection of essays spread over a number of years, in some of which even already the progress of events requires modification or supplement.

FOSTER WATSON.

THE CHURCH AND SOCIAL IDEALS.

Social Ideals of a Free Church. Edited by Elmer S. Forbes. Boston: American Unitarian Association. $1 net.

SOME years ago the American Unitarian Association, in order to keep pace with the growing demand for informed thought and action in regard to social questions, appointed Mr. Elmer S. Forbes as secretary of a Department of Social and Public Service. The present volume which Mr. Forbes has edited, contains a number of the papers and addresses delivered at a conference held in Boston under the auspices of the Department. The authors of some of them are well-known on this side the Atlantic, Dr. F. G. Peabody, Dr. Samuel Crothers, Dr. C. F. Dole. Others are active in the public work of the American churches and in the towns to which they belong. In an eloquent paper on "The Expansion of Religion," Dr. Peabody reminds us that "the central facts of the religious life remain the same, but the circle, the environment, the atmosphere in which religion is to fulfil itself, expands with the new world, and the problem of redemption becomes no longer that of saving the individual out of a lost world, like a rat running from a sinking ship, but the more heroic task of setting the individual to save the world and to bring it with all its cargo of hopes and fears safe at last to port." Mrs. Anna Gavlin Spencer, of the New York School of Philanthropy, though firm in her conviction that the Church exists primarily, as it always has existed, to make an appeal to the individual life, is equally convinced that within the last generation the whole centre of gravity of religion as well as of charity has changed and will inevitably change still more. We quote one passage from her paper on "The Social Function of the Church." "We have another clear duty in churches, and that is to accept the idea of the social expansion of religion; to accept it not merely as a beautiful theory, not merely as binding us all together in sympathy in union meetings and institutes, but as something to be translated into terms of personal pledge. I believe membership in any Christian Church or Jewish Synagogue in this day and age should mean that every human being who joins should pledge himself to some sort of definite service." What the social idea translated from the abstract to the concrete may be under the American conditions is expounded in able and interesting papers by Mr. Forbes, Mrs. A. M. Chesley, and Mr. E. S. Wiers, who deal with the practical activities of actual social service committees attached to particular churches. Dr. Crothers, however, gets nearest to the heart of the matter when he declares that scientific methods of investigation of social conditions have revealed the fact that most of the evils of society, the cruelty, the waste, the haste are simply unnecessary. Science, he says, "declares that a large number of the most distressing diseases have their known remedies, and if people would apply their minds and their wills as intelligently and continuously as they apply themselves to the pursuit of individual wealth, the diseases would cease to exist. It is science, the science of the physician, the science of the social worker, the science that has to do with all the affairs of life, that is saying this, with its stimulus to all social activities.

"The danger in it comes from this fact, that the intellectual progress of mankind has outstripped the moral progress of mankind; and it also comes from this, that under the conditions of modern life, with its instant diffusion of the results of science, the mass of men have moved faster than what we call the privileged class of society; that they have caught on, as we say, more quickly to the fact that there is a possible remedy."

The last sentence might be applied with equal justice to the English churches. They, too, have not kept pace with the advance of knowledge on social questions. They have only recently discovered, largely by pressure from outside, that there is a social problem. Many of the members composing them are quite unaware that there is such a thing as social science, and are thrown into wild alarms by the mere mention of the word social. There are about ten social service unions in connection with the different sections of the Christian Church in England, and every one of them, with the exception, perhaps, of that belonging to the Society of Friends, though composed of active, enthusiastic, and well-informed persons, who are striving hard to bring the churches up to the level of the best knowledge of their time, is in a minority in its own religious communion, and has difficulty not so much in getting a hearing as in producing any real effect against a dead-weight of unyielding obscurantism. Might not the English liberal churches imitate the example of their American colleagues, and found a committee of social and public service, which would act as scouts and pioneers, or a kind of intelligence department for them? It might, however, not be irrelevant to ask whether the churches of the liberal faith have lost the pioneering instinct.

THE MEDIÆVAL MIND. By Henry Osborn Taylor, Litt.D. Second Edition. London: Macmillan & Co. 2 vols. 21s. net.

We paid a warm tribute to the value of Dr. Taylor's book when it appeared in 1911. There is no other account of mediæval culture, at once so comprehensive and so carefully studied, available for the English reader. It is a good sign that there is already a demand for a second edition of a work of such solid qualities. In the new edition the revision has gone beyond the usual correction of obvious errors. Attention has been paid to criticism with the result that, as the author tells us, "the book has been carefully reconsidered throughout, and some statements have been changed or amplified." One of the chief omissions has also been supplied by the addition of a new chapter dealing with the Crusades and the Towns and Guilds. Only four pages, however, are given to the Crusades, a treatment far too cursory for a movement with such manifold reactions over the whole field of mediæval life, and we may add distinctly out of scale in comparison with the space allotted to other subjects.

It will be welcome news to many readers that in future the Times Literary Supplement, which has previously been supplied only to purchasers of the Times, will also be sold separately for a penny. The Supplement has established a reputation as a critical journal distinguished for the excellence and impartiality of its reviews, and its annotated list of new books is the most complete weekly catalogue published. The Educational Supplement, dealing with educational books, is issued monthly also at the price of one penny.

DR. PAGET-TOYNBEE'S well-known "Dante Dictionary" has now for some years been out of print. "A Concise Dante Dictionary," by Dr. Toynbee, announced by the Oxford University Press, is designed to serve as a convenient handbook and a companion to the Oxford Dante. Its handy form has been made possible by the omission of quotations and controversial discussions, and by verbal and typographical condensation; but all essentials are preserved, and every article which required revision has been revised.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS:—The Fourfold Gospel: Edwin A. Abbott. 12s. 6d. net. Lectures on Dryden: A. W. Verrall. 7s. 6d. net. The Poem of Job: E. G. King. 5s. net.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK:—Vital Problems of Religion: The Rev. J. R. Cohn. 5s. net.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE & Co.:—Saint Augustine: Louis Bertrand. 7s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co.:—The Practice of Christianity: The author of Pro Christo et Ecclesia. 4s. 6d. net. Quo Tendimus? The Issue of Kikuyu: Hensley Henson. 6d. net. The Missionary Conference in East Africa: The Archbishop of Canterbury. 6d. net.

MESSRS. ALEXANDER MORING, LTD.:—Folk Songs of the Tuscan Hills: Grace Warrack. 10s. 6d. net.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

THE SORROWS OF THE SEA LION.

THE seals at the Wonder Zoo set me thinking, and the longer I thought the more uncomfortable I felt. I saw them first of all swimming about in their tank—such a small place, and yet they evidently enjoyed plunging into the water, and dashing through it, as much as they could be expected to enjoy anything in a dark prison-house where there is no fresh air to breathe or blue sky to look at, only the faces of inquisitive people who stand and stare, and are much disappointed if the great shiny creatures show nothing more than their heads. Then I saw them in the circus, sitting on funny little pedestals which must have been very uncomfortable, crowned with coloured dunces' caps, and making hideous noises with drums, cymbals, and trumpets which had been fastened to their flapping fins. It was really painful to watch them, for I could not believe that they were happy, or that they had been induced to act in such an unnatural way by kindness alone. No one seemed to care, however, whether they liked it or not, and so we sat looking on in rather a heartless way while these wonderful sea-lions performed silly antics which told us nothing about their habits, or the way they speak to each other, or how they spend their days when they are at home. The seal, you know, is a most intelligent and lovable animal, who leads a very busy life in the icy regions to which it belongs, and surely its cleverness was meant to be put to better use than to amuse a lot of people on a wet afternoon in a London show-place.

Well, there they sat—or shall I say floundered?—with their big moist eyes fixed on the trainer, who threw them fish from time to time to keep them up to their work. The air grew hot, the music blared, and the people laughed as the seals played dexterously at ball, or tossed their caps into the air and caught them again on their noses, stretching their velvety necks this way and that. And not far off some one was sitting in a long coat made of the exquisite fur which they wear over their inner waterproof jackets of liquid fat or oil, and which is taken from them with so much cruelty that you could hardly bear to hear about it.

A week or two later I went to see some wonderful cinematograph pictures taken by one of the brave men who went out with Captain Scott to the North Pole, and there seals were shown to us in very different circumstances. Instead of being in a circus, with a glass roof overhead, and a band playing so noisily in the gallery that it half-drowned the roar of the caged tigers and lions which were not far off, you could imagine yourself in the Arctic regions—a fairyland of gleaming icebergs and emerald sea and flashing foam, where life goes on as unconcernedly as if man did not exist at all; and there you could see the seals doing perfectly natural things in their native atmosphere, frolicking about in the water with their innocent-looking babies, and floundering over the rocks and frozen snow (they certainly are clumsy on land, though their movements in the water are swift and graceful) in a temperature something like 50 deg. below zero. Now this was much nicer than the Wonder Zoo, and I no longer felt uncomfortable and half ashamed of myself, although there were sad things to witness, even in those pictures, which made you shudder a little, as, for instance, when we saw a big mother-seal trying to protect her little one from a whole school of killer-whales who were swimming towards it, leaping in and out of the water in her anxious efforts—which were not in vain, we were glad to learn—to coax the poor baby up on to the slippery ice. No, things are not made easy for the seal, any more than for us; but when trials and dangers come along in the ordinary course of life we know that this is God's way of training us to be hardy and courageous and unselfish, and that we must be willing to risk our lives if need be to save others from danger, as well as ready to perform any duty, however unpleasant, that we were intended to do.

Sometimes it is impossible for the seals to draw up their huge bodies through a narrow opening in the ice when they want to get out of the water and find a resting-place for the night, and they have to use their teeth like a saw or a shovel, and literally scrape out a curve big enough to admit them. It is a long and tedious process, but they do not shirk it. You see, this sort of thing is part of the day's work, and even if they are goaded to it by the need of food or a bed, they are no worse off in this respect than other living things, including their elder brother, man. And I think they get just as much delight out of the result of their labours as we do when we have learnt to sail a boat, or design a house, or climb up a steep mountain side, or master a problem in Euclid. They have, at least, their freedom, and that is a priceless gift, of which we have no right to deprive any animal that has not become domesticated and companionable to man, like the horse or dog, unless we cannot add to the information about its habits required by scientists without condemning it to captivity. People are beginning to find out that it is far more fascinating, and also far kinder to our four-footed or winged brothers and sisters, to try and get to know something about the lives they lead, and the language they speak, by studying them in their natural haunts, instead of shutting them up in pits, like the bears at the Zoo, or cages in which they have nothing to do all day but go to sleep, or march restlessly to and fro thinking of the next mealtime. As for those people who snare intelligent animals, and train them to do silly tricks which are of no use to anybody, and which the poor creatures can only be made to perform through the fear of punishment, they are responsible for deliberately increasing, for selfish motives, the hardships which God has ordained that every living thing should endure for quite a different purpose. They are, besides, robbing their victims of the dignity and beauty which belongs to the humblest thing that has life when it is doing that which it was created to do according to the laws laid down for its kind. The mother-seal trying to save her baby from the killer-whale suffers, possibly, for a short time more than her unhappy sister tossing balls in front of a London crowd; but she is adding a great deal to the amount of love in the world by her heroic endeavours to save the young life which has been given to her to protect, and that is surely better than simply causing a little amusement for thoughtless people, who have no objection to seeing a beautiful wild animal performing absurd tricks that would make even a toy poodle look ridiculous.

L. G. A.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

THE REV. ALFRED HOOD.

MANY friends will hear with sorrow of the death of the Rev. Alfred Hood, though with wonder rather that he should have lived so long than that the end should now have come in his seventy-second year. He used to enjoy telling how, when his health broke down at Devonport 35 years ago, from lung trouble, the doctors gave him only a few months to live, and he defied them all, until 14 years ago he was obliged finally to retire from active service. Crippled by rheumatic gout, he bore the burden of his suffering and physical disability with a wonderful courage and cheerfulness, sustained to the last by the devoted care of his wife. With a spirit undaunted and unembittered, he was always keen in his ardour for social reform, devoted to the higher interests of life, and happy in warm human sympathies. He had gone abroad to escape the winter and a distressing cough, but was obliged to return for a serious operation, the removal of a tumour from his ear. The operation was successful, but after three weeks of alternating hope and fear, he passed away quietly in his sleep on Saturday morning, February 21.

A native of London, Alfred Hood was born on September 3, 1842. In early life he was in business, but with the cherished hope of being able to devote himself to missionary work abroad. He did, in fact, succeed in entering the Regent's Park Baptist College with that end in view, but then, with a number of other students, of whom Professor James Sully was one, owing to unsettlement of doctrinal convictions, was obliged to come out. Happily for him, at this crisis he was brought into touch with the Rev. J. J. Tayler, on whose advice he went first for a year to Oxford, as one of the first group of unattached students, in 1868, and next year became a theological student of Manchester New College in London. His marriage followed immediately on the conclusion of his college course, and then the four happy years of his first ministry at Boston, and three at Devonport, before his first serious breakdown in health. Winters abroad and complete rest so far restored his strength that he was able to undertake a summer's charge of the services at Pendyffryn in the last year that they were held, and then, in 1882, to settle at Bournemouth and become the first minister of the congregation there before the building of the church. From 1886 to 1899 Mr. Hood was at Brighton, and spent there the happiest and most fruitful years of his active ministry. To that period belong his three little books, "The Prophet of Nazareth," "The Lord's Prayer for Young People," and "The Oracles of Christ"; and it was then also that his keen interest in social reform, and particularly in the co-operative movement, gained for him the warm friendship of J. G. Holyoake. To his memory Mr. Hood dedicated his last little book, in 1910, "The A B C of Social Reform," a series of papers reprinted from the Co-operative News.

Bournemouth was the home of his latter years, though a good many winters were spent abroad, and there he preached for the last time, in the West Hill-road Church, in September, 1910. The funeral service at the Bournemouth Cemetery on Tuesday afternoon was conducted by the Rev. V. D. Davis. Among the friends present were the Revs. C. C. Coe, C. Hargrove, H. S. Solly, and W. B. Matthews, and representatives of the Brighton congregation.

MR. SYDNEY HOLLINS, J.P.

By the sudden death of Mr. Sydney Hollins, on February 19, at the comparatively early age of 62, the Unitarian Church at Stockport loses its Senior Warden and a faithful supporter, the town of Stockport a leading citizen loved and respected by all, and the city of Manchester a man well known on 'Change, in philanthropic work, and in the cricket world. Mr. Sydney Hollins, who came of an old Unitarian stock, was born at Bolton (where he resided for some years with his cousin, Sir Frank Hollins). He was the son of Mr. Henry Hollins, and the family originally belonged to Nottingham. His uncle, Mr. Henry Marsland, sat as Liberal M.P. for Stockport for twelve years, part of the time as colleague of Richard Cobden. In 1907 he inherited the Woodbank estates at Stockport from his cousin, Mr. Herbert Marsland. The institutions with which he was connected would make a long list. He joined the board of the Stockport Infirmary in 1886, and had been chairman since the year 1904. He was also a Governor of the Sir Ralph Pendlebury Charity, a Governor of the Ephraim Hallam Trust, a member of the Committee of the N.S.P.C.C., a member of the Committee of the Industrial Schools, and chairman of the Executive Committee of the Manchester and Salford Hospital for Skin Diseases. Mr. Hollins was a strong believer in healthy exercises and sports. He was captain of the Stockport cricket team for some years; and he also captained the Cheshire County team, and had latterly been an active member of the Lancashire County Club. He was largely instrumental in forming the Stockport Lads' Club. He attended its meetings regularly, was joint hon. secretary, and took a personal interest in its members. In connection with his own church and schools he was an ever-ready helper. Only a few months ago he materially assisted in the establishment of men's, lads', and young women's clubs. Into all his work, in every walk of life, he threw his whole heart and soul. There was no escaping the contagion of his generous and manly spirit. He leaves a widow and a family of four sons and two daughters.

On the morning of the funeral the family and friends assembled in the Hall at Woodbank, where a brief service was conducted by the Rev. Herbert E. Perry. The interment took place in the graveyard of Dean-row Chapel. There was a very large attendance. In addition to the chief mourners there were present Bishop Welldon, Dean of Manchester, Sir Ed. Donner, Sir Frank Hollins, Col. Johnson, V.D., J.P., Col. C. E. Wilkinson, Col. Alan Sykes, M.P., D.L., the Revs. E. L. H. Thomas, B. C. Constable, and E. A. Voysey, and many deputations representing public institutions.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

THE DRINK TRAFFIC IN RUSSIA.

DURING the discussion by the Council of Empire of the Bill amending the regulation for the sale of spirits in Russia, Count Witte said that the only means of salvation for the Russian people lay in limiting the revenue from the spirits monopoly. If he were a member of the Government and had the right of access to the Emperor, he would beg his Majesty, without waiting for the decision of the Council of Empire or the Duma, to issue a ukase in the interest of the health of the Russian people, limiting the revenue of the spirits monopoly, for instance, to 900,000,000 roubles (£90,000,000) and devoting the surplus to the organisation of companies which made it their duty to fight the vice of drunkenness. The Tsar has since strongly emphasised the necessity for the diminution of the revenue from the spirits monopoly, and for the promotion of the temperance legislation, in a rescript, but a motion standing in the name of Count Witte to limit the income of the State Treasury from the spirits monopoly to a fixed sum was rejected by 102 votes against 21. A motion submitted by Count Gurkos to offer inducements for a decrease in the sale of spirits from the State spirit shops was rejected by 111 votes against 13.

In Russia, of course, the whole of the retail spirit traffic is in the hands of the Government, and at the time when the State vodka shops were opened, and 100,000 private establishments closed, the then Finance Minister said (this was in 1895), "If there should be a deficit in the State revenue because the consumption of alcohol has fallen, the Treasury will gain all that it loses in other ways, while at the same time the morals of the people and their material welfare will be greatly improved." There have been other Finance Ministers since then, actuated by very different principles, and it is only necessary to glance at the startling figures given in Mr. Guy Hayler's recently published "Prohibition Advance in all Lands" (The International Prohibition Confederation) to realise how enormously drunkenness has increased since the introduction of the monopoly. In 1913 the returns were estimated at £85,019,125, as compared with £29,750,000 in 1897. It is hoped, however, that as the people become more used to representative government, effective legislation against the liquor traffic will be adopted.

In the interesting series of articles, "Returning to Russia," from the pen of Mr. Stephen Graham, which have been appearing in The Times, this drink problem is seriously dealt with, and some startling accounts are given of the terrible state of things which exists in some of the industrial villages, where drunkenness results in countless deeds of violence that never find their way into the newspapers. "This is really a novel phenomenon," but "in the remoter agricultural villages," he adds significantly, "you will seldom come across anything of the kind." There are, however, Mr. Graham tells us, real natural forces fighting against drunkenness, and winning, of which "the lighting up of personal ambition, the cinematograph, the Evangelical movement" are not the least important. Industrialism, which is opposed to the spirit of Russia, is gradually conquering the country, and in order to counteract its dangerous influences the people must be given some desire for individual betterment, together with art, literature, music—especially the latter, for "the Russians are surely the most musical people in the world," and perhaps nothing would so effectively combat drunkenness and hooliganism "as the establishment of musical societies and bands in every village in the country."

TUTORIAL CLASSES FOR WORKING PEOPLE.

THE University Tutorial Class movement, which has for its aim the higher education of working people, has grown very rapidly during the last six or seven years; but further funds are necessary in order to establish it as a permanent part of the educational system of the country, as the committee of the University of London Tutorial Classes point out in their report (1909-1913). The tutorial class has to no inconsiderable extent grown out of the educational work of the adult schools, the mechanics' institutes, and the co-operative movement, and is inspired by the same spirit of comradeship in learning and university tradition in teaching which was expressed by Frederick Denison Maurice and his colleagues in the foundation of the Working Men's College, now in Crowndale-road. A class is composed of some thirty students, who undertake, on joining it, to pursue a three years' course of study, to attend regularly during their membership, and to produce a certain amount of written work for the tutor. Each meeting is of some two hours' duration, the first part being usually devoted to the lecture, while the second is given up to discussion, and an analysis of the subjects which the classes have chosen up to the present time shows, as might have been expected, a marked preference for economic study. During the present session every university and university college in England is responsible for one or more classes, and there are no less than 145 classes at work, with over 3,000 students.

ALBANIAN RELIEF FUND.

THE following sums have been received on behalf of the Albanian peasants, in addition to the amount acknowledged in our last issue:—

Previously acknowledged	£260	6	5
Mrs. Russell	5	5	0
Mrs. Thornely	2	2	0
E. Wordsley	1	1	0
E. C. B. 5s., "Per Cloc" 5s.	10	0	0
	£269	4	5

NESTING BOXES.

AN Exhibition of Nesting Boxes for Birds, arranged by the Selborne Society, will be opened in its offices, at 42, Bloomsbury-square (entrance in Vernon-place), on Monday, March 2. Among the more noteworthy exhibits will be an "observatory" nesting box, which is a most ingenious invention, and a new log box, which is so constructed as practically to escape the notice of the passers-by. The attention of bird lovers and nature study teachers is particularly called to the Exhibition, to which admission may be gained on the presentation of a visiting card.

THE twenty-third meeting of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds will be held at the Westminster Palace Hotel, on Thursday, March 5, at 3 p.m. The chair will be taken by Lord Newton, and the Duchess of Portland, President of the Society, will present medals and prizes in the Public School Competition.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Birmingham.—At the annual meeting of the Old Meeting Church, the following resolution was passed, with only one dissident:—"That in the interests of morality and for the protection of girls, this church urges the Government to further amend the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1912, by raising the age of consent to 18 years."

Brighton.—The members of the Free Christian Church have received the news of the death of the Rev. Alfred Hood, their former minister, with deep regret. A memorial service will be held at the church on Sunday morning, March 1, conducted by the Rev. Priestley Prime.

Bristol.—Mr. Thomas Gaylard, for many years connected with the Lewins Mead Domestic Mission, has accepted the unanimous invitation of the committee to become their missionary in succession to the Rev. T. Graham. He begins his work in April.

Chatham.—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the present church building was celebrated on Sunday, February 22, when the services were conducted by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A., who preached the opening sermon a quarter of a century ago. There were large congregations, the church being nearly filled in the evening. The morning sermon was an answer to the question, "What mean these stones?" The subject in the evening was "The faith we live by." The preacher compared the "confession" of men so widely apart as Mons. Benson, Mr. Tagore, Mr. Bernard Shaw, and Mr. Philip Snowden, and saw a common element in all of them—the faith that "Somehow, good shall be the final goal of ill." This faith was essentially religious. He did not believe with Mr. Shaw that the life-force was blind, yet even Mr. Shaw believed that that force made for human advancement, and it was that faith that enabled him to live a life of lofty idealism and devotion to the cause of the outcast and downtrodden. It has been decided to raise a fund of £100, to be called "The Silver Anniversary Fund," to be devoted to the necessary work of cleaning and decorating the church and repairing the organ. This it is hoped to do without resorting to a bazaar or sale of work, and friends are invited to send contributions to the Secretary or Treasurer (see advertisement). Members of the congregation have already subscribed nearly £40. On Wednesday evening a Social was held in the church parlour, which was well filled. The Rev. and Mrs. Frederic Allen, in whose ministry the church was built, came from Newton Abbot in order to be present, and had a very cordial welcome. Short addresses were given by Mr. Allen and the present minister, the Rev. J. Morgan Whiteman. In the course of the evening Mrs. Wood presented Mrs. Unwin, an old member of the choir, with a silver flower vase as a token of appreciation of her long and devoted service to the church.

Deptford.—On Monday, February 23, the usual weekly concert was given at the General Baptist Unitarian Church, Deptford, by the kindness of Mrs. Sands and a party of friends. The proceeds of these concerts are devoted to the Restoration Fund. Every department of work at Deptford shows signs of rapid growth. The Sunday school and Band of Hope are greatly needing helpers, and the services of a Scoutmaster are required by a band of Boy Scouts who have already had some training. Information may be had from the Sister, 60, Brookmill-road, or Mrs. Carlier, 20, Wickham-road, Brockley, S.E.

Johannesburg.—The Rev. Richard Hall, M.A., arrived at Johannesburg from Auckland, New Zealand, on January 14, the day on which the Rev. G. C. Sharpe left. They passed each other in the train on the way, and consequently did not meet. Mr. Hall preached his first sermon in Johannesburg on Sunday, January 18. A site for the new Unitarian Church has been secured, and the work of building is proceeding. The certificate of membership designed by Mr. Ronald P. Jones, published at Essex Hall, is being used. The Rev. G. C. Sharpe, on his arrival in London, had an interview with the Secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association in respect to Unitarian Missionary work in Canada.

London Lay Preachers' Union.—The usual monthly meeting of the Union was held at Essex Hall on Monday, February 23. Interesting points of interpretation were raised at the Reading Circle's further consideration of 2 Corinthians. The devotional service was conducted by Mr. F. R. Nott, LL.B., of Highgate, and this was followed by short statements of personal belief by members under the headings:—God, Jesus, The Bible, Salvation, Immortality. The proceedings closed with a short address by the Rev. J. A. Pearson.

London: Stratford.—A large gathering was held in the Unitarian school room on Saturday, February 21, to celebrate the completion by Mr. W. J. Noel of 25 years' service as voluntary organist. He had also acted as secretary of the church for 12 years, and as treasurer of the Sunday school for 30 years. A presentation was made to Mr. and Mrs.

Noel in the course of the evening by Mr. E. J. Russell, D.Sc., as a token of the friendship and gratitude of the congregation. Mr. and Mrs. Noel, in returning thanks, spoke of the pleasure which they had always found in the work of the church. Mr. F. Cottier, Mr. A. E. Page, and Mr. R. Shute also spoke.

London: Woolwich.—A series of discourses on some of the world's great religious teachers is being given at Carmel Chapel by the Rev. Delta Evans on alternate Sunday evenings. At a recent congregational "social," Mr. Evans spoke very hopefully of the future of Carmel Chapel, mentioning as specially encouraging the recent growth of the Sunday school and the marked increase in the attendances at the evening services. On Sunday afternoon February 15, Miss Brooke Herford met a number of the ladies of the congregation in the school room, and gave an address on the work of the British League of Unitarian Women.

Mansfield.—A united Communion service was held on Sunday evening, February 15, in the New United Methodist Chapel. All the Nonconformist ministers of the district were invited to take part. The service was conducted by the Rev. W. J. McAdam (Congregationalist), prayer was offered by the Rev. W. H. Bickell (Baptist), and the address given by the Rev. C. M. Wright (Unitarian). In the course of his address Mr. Wright made timely application of the problems and lessons arising out of the Kikuyu controversy, and pleaded urgently for "unity of spirit and the bond of peace."

Newbury: The late Miss Elizabeth Stillman. We regret to announce the death of Miss E. Stillman on February 18. Her loss will be felt by ministers visiting Newbury at various times who have enjoyed her hospitality, no less than by the members of the Waterside Chapel, to whom she has been a personal friend. Four generations of her family have been closely identified with the old Chapel, and Miss Stillman has been connected with it all her life as scholar, teacher, and for some years as superintendent of the Sunday school. She was also Secretary of the Sewing Circle, and of the Newbury Branch of the League of Unitarian Women, and was associated with every effort for carrying on the work of the church. Much sympathy is felt for her brother and sister in their loss.

Ringwood.—At the annual congregational meeting on February 15, a unanimous invitation was given to Mr. Neone Raad, B.A., to continue in charge of the congregation. Mr. Raad has been supplying at St. Thomas's Chapel since October.

Sheffield.—The annual meeting of the congregation of Upper Chapel was held in Channing Hall on Thursday, the 19th inst., the attendance being larger than usual, and the whole tone of the proceedings very cheerful and encouraging. After tea the chair was occupied by Alderman A. J. Hobson, J.P. The report and accounts, which were very satisfactory, were adopted. On the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. G. H. Hunt, the sum of £300 was voted as a donation toward the building fund of the Uppertorpe new church, which is about to be erected at the corner of Northumberland and Crookesmoor roads. Mrs. J. H. Fisher and Messrs. E. Lismer and W. A. Faulkner were elected to fill vacancies on the committee. A cordial vote of thanks to the minister (the Rev. C. J. Street), and the assistant minister (the Rev. J. W. Cock), was passed on the motion of Mr. W. Laycock, seconded by Mr. W. R. Barclay. Attention was called to a paragraph in the annual report which read: "The past year has been one of quiet but steady progress for our congregation. It has witnessed the completion by Mr. Street of ten years' helpful ministry among us, and we feel sure that all connected with Upper Chapel will join in congratulating him on the success of his labours and in wishing him health and strength to continue his valuable work here and among the district churches." Appreciative reference was also made to the work of Mr. Cock, who, after over seven years' strenuous service, had felt himself obliged to resign his post to take a prolonged rest. Mr. Street announced that the daughter church at Attercliffe now desired to have the whole time of a minister, and pledged itself to make a special effort during the next year to justify such an experiment. The trustees and committee of Upper Chapel had promised to watch events with a friendly eye. Meanwhile an assistant minister would be appointed on the old conditions for that period.

Stand.—At a meeting of the Stand congregation held on Sunday last, the following resolution was passed unanimously:—"That this meeting of the Stand congregation has received with great regret the resignation of Mr. Herford as minister, which, after his personal explanation, they reluctantly accept. They desire to place on record their high appreciation of his work for the chapel and school, and the numerous institutions connected with them, during the long period of nearly 29 years. They acknowledge with gratitude the untiring interest in the welfare of the congregation and scholars shown by Mr. and Mrs. Herford, and also the help of members of their family. They further congratulate Mr. Herford on the appointment which he has accepted, and wish him and his family every success and happiness."

Stockton-on-Tees.—The annual meeting of the Unitarian Church was held on February 11. The reports showed an increase of about one-half on the previous year's membership, and a corresponding improvement in the subscription list. Mr. W. J. Watson, who has acted as an official of the church for thirty years, resigned his position as Treasurer, and Miss M. S. Walton was unanimously appointed to the position. A series of week evening lectures on "Commonsense Religion," followed by discussion, is being delivered by the Rev. A. Scruton.

Sydney, New South Wales.—We have received news from the Rev. J. H. Smith, ex-minister of the Sydney Unitarian Church, of the death of Mr. Henry Turner on January 3, at the age of 84. Mr. Turner was a native of Middlesex, and emigrated to Australia in 1853. On reaching Sydney he found employment in the Bank of New South Wales. He speedily rose to a position of great trust, and remained there until 1903, when he retired. The funeral took place at the Waverley Cemetery in the presence of a large number of colleagues and friends, the service being conducted by the Rev. J. H. Smith, an old and intimate friend. Mr. Turner was a man universally respected and beloved for his integrity, gentleness of disposition, kindness and generosity. He took a prominent part in the movement for the erection of a permanent building for the Unitarian Church in 1879. It was he who conducted negotiations with the British and Foreign Unitarian Association whenever the Sydney Church applied for help in the matter of the settlement of a minister, and he was a constant subscriber to the funds of the Association.

Wakefield.—On Wednesday, February 18, a presentation of a purse of money and other gifts was made on behalf of the congregation of Westgate Chapel, Wakefield, to the Rev. W. T. Davies, who has removed to Newport.

Women's League.—A Council meeting of the British Women's League will be held at Essex Hall on Tuesday, March 10, when Miss Grace Mitchell will give an account of her recent visit to the churches in Australasia. The Committee is very grateful to her for having given so much time and thought to the fellowship work during her holiday tour.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

MRS. ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

The death of Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson has awakened many memories of "R. L. S.," who owed so much to her devotion and sympathy. Their marriage seems to have been a success in every way, and though Stevenson once declared that he would not marry a woman writer, two stories from her pen were included in the second series of "Arabian Nights." She loved the Samoan Islands as much as her husband, and shared his preference for a simple and natural life. She has been described as a woman of striking personality, with dark eyes which steadily regarded those who came within their orbit, and a face upon which the lines of suffering and deep thought were written. But the most fitting description is given of her in the beautiful verses by Stevenson himself:—

Dusky, dusky, vivid, true;
With eyes of gold and bramble-dew,
Steel-true and blade-straight,
The Great Artificer
Made my mate.

Honour, anger, valour, fire;
A love that life could never tire,
Death quench, or evils stir,
The Mighty Master
Gave to her.

Teacher, tender comrade, wife;
A fellow-farer, true through life,
Heart whole, and soul free,
The August Father
Gave to me.

THE TRAFFIC IN OLD HORSES.

Mr. Filson Young, recently writing in the Pall Mall Gazette on the subject of the traffic in old horses to the Continent, says: "The very simple legislation prohibiting export of live horses under the value of £10 would abolish it; such a bill has been prepared by Captain Murray for introduction in the present session of Parliament, but without a strong backing of public opinion, in and out of Parliament, it has no chance of being passed. The facts are indisputable; surely they need only to be realised by the public for these ghastly barbarities to be put an end to at once and for ever." Mr. Percy Carew Essex and Dr. Charles Reinhardt write from Antwerp, where they have gone to make inquiries on the subject, that they have found great improvement in the class of horses exported and the means of transit, but they are convinced that nothing short of the absolute prohibition of the export of old, decrepit, or infirm horses alive can satisfy the public conscience, as the methods of handling and killing such animals are revolting in the extreme.

CHILDREN'S COURTS IN FRANCE.

The new Children's Courts will be in operation throughout France, says The Times, on March 4. In Paris the Court will have its own definite and distinctive existence, being provided with a special President, Judges, and a Public Prosecutor, chosen from amongst magistrates who have specialised in children's cases. In the provinces the special tribunal will be recruited from the ordinary judges who are momentarily free for such duty, and will afterwards return to other work.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

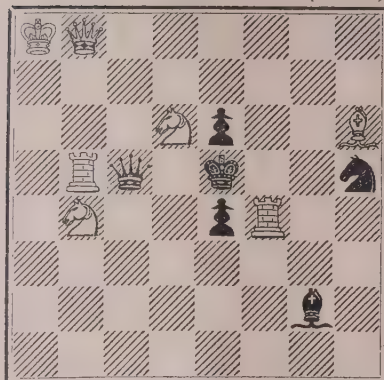

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED
By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

FEB. 28, 1914.

PROBLEM No. 46.
By A. G. STUBBS.

BLACK.

(6 men.)

WHITE.

(7 men.)

White to play and mate in two moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 44.

1. B. Kt 7. (key-move).

Correct solutions from W. E. Arkell, Rev. I. Wrigley, D. Amos, Dr. Higginson, H. T. (Belfast), F. S. M. (Mayfield), Walter Coventry, A. J. Hamblin, and the Rev. B. C. Constable.

The list is unusually short owing to several incorrect attempts. Will readers kindly study the position afresh; the above is the only correct move.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. T. M. (Sunderland).—Correct, but very late in reaching me.

R. B. D. (Edinburgh).—In No. 43, if 1...K. R4, then 2. Kt. K5. The problem is solved as stated, by 1. B. B4.

REV. B. C. CONSTABLE.—Thanks for kind promise. The book will fully explain the "Changed-mate." Meanwhile note that in No. 44, before the key, the mate in answer to 1...P. B4 is 2. R. K3. The change is apparent when the key is made. What is your exact address?

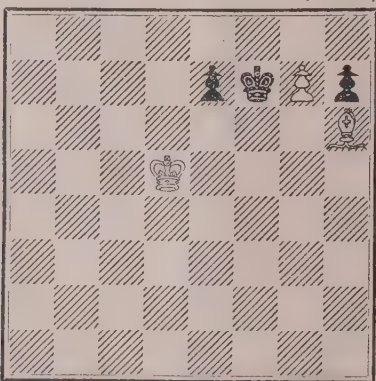

REV. I. WRIGLEY.—I am obliged for your kind promise.

Our No. 46 won first prize in a recent tourney held in the Hampstead and Highgate Express. The other winners were Messrs. J. D. Williams (Australia), A. W. Daniel, F. A. L. Kuskop (New Zealand), W. B. Rice (U.S.A.), and others—competitors from all parts!

A Curious Game-ending.—Perhaps my readers are unfamiliar with the annexed quaint ending, said to have occurred in actual play. The win is short and decisive.

BLACK.

(3 men.)

WHITE.

(3 men.)

White to play and win.

The Chess Editor recently played in a friendly match, and, finding himself in a hopeless position was just opening his mouth to say that he resigned, when his opponent made a move which lost a piece, and the game! Such are the fortunes of war! It was a victory, however, of which he was not proud.

Now ready for March. Price One Penny.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

A Magazine for Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Teachers.

CONTENTS.

Editorial.

Lessons for the Month:

THE TEACHING OF JESUS:

His Teaching on How to Live.

His Teaching on Prayer.

His Gospel of Hope.

The Commandment to Grow.

Christianity a Service, not a Creed.

Junior Department—T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Senior Department—C. M. Wright, M.A.

Primary Department—Ruth New.

Our Story Pages.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex St., Strand, London, W.C.

Chatham Unitarian Church.

"Silver" Anniversary Fund.

An effort is being made to raise £100 for cleaning and repairs, and the following amounts have been given or promised up to date:—

Mr. W. Harnden ...	£10 0 0
Mr. A. Hudson ...	5 0 0
Miss Tribe ...	5 0 0
Mrs. Humphrey Wood ...	5 0 0
Mr. A. J. Faulding ...	2 2 0
Mr. W. Attwood ...	1 1 0
Rev. & Mrs. J. Morgan Whiteman	1 1 0
Smaller sums ...	10 4 6
	£39 8 6

Further contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, Mrs. Wood, 10, Borstal-road, Rochester.

A. HUDSON, Hon. Sec.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by
Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

CHURCH, SCHOOL & HOME

Editor—Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

Monthly, 3d. by post from Mr. Lewis Lloyd, 67, Church-road, Moseley, Birmingham. Can also be obtained from H. Rawson & Co., Manchester, the Liverpool Booksellers Co., Liverpool, or from Essex Hall.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

"THE UNITARIAN MONTHLY."

Magazine for Unitarian Propaganda. Adopted by churches with or without local page. Issued for last Sunday in each previous month. One copy post free, 1½d.—1s. 6d. a year; 9d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100; extra charge local page.—Address to EDITOR, 36 Burlington-road, South Shore, Blackpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCs.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh-street, Tavistock-square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

SUNNY South Coast Health Resort.—Ideal Winter Boarding House, Central, Garden, near Sea. Hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, electric light, and penny in slot gas fire in each bedroom. Three good reception rooms. Food Reform and ordinary diet.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

LEIGH-ON-SEA.—To Let, furnished Bedroom and Sitting-room, in pleasant situation. Private family, 10s. weekly.—Address, "X.," c/o Church Lending Library, Rectory Grove, Leigh-on-Sea, Essex.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

BREAKFAST CLOTHS of Genuine

Irish Cream Damask, with pretty Shamrock centre; 40 inches square, only 1s. Postage 3d. extra. Extraordinary Bargain. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

FREE! 200 PATTERNS genuine Irish

Linen Fabric—"FLAXELLA"—new silky finish, beautiful for skirts and blouses. Delightful new shades, washable, durable, drapes exceptionally well.—Write to-day, HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to offer and pay highest genuine prices. Note quotations: Up to 2s. 9d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 6s. 6d. on silver, 15s. on gold, 35s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel, post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Unquestionably the oldest and most reliable firm. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 28, 1914.

* Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3741.
NEW SERIES, No. 845.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD

Principal :

REV. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER,
M.A., D.D., D.Litt.

SESSION 1914-1915.

Candidates for admission should send in their applications without delay to the Secretaries.

Bursary of £50 a year, Exhibition of £70 a year, Scholarship of £90 a year, offered to Undergraduate Students for the Ministry.

Bursaries, tenable at the College, offered to Students for the Ministry.

Dr. Daniel Jones Bursary offered to Ministers for further period of study.

Arlosh Scholarship of £120 per annum, open to Students for the Ministry who have graduated with distinction at any British or Irish University.

For further particulars apply to the PRINCIPAL, or to the Rev. HENRY GOW, 12, Glenloch-road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

A. H. WORTHINGTON, B.A., } Hon.
HENRY GOW, B.A., } Secs.

THE KING'S WEIGH HOUSE PULPIT

No. 1.—The Holding of the Eyes.
No. 2.—Rewards.
No. 3.—Love and Imperfections.
By EDWARD LEWIS.
One Penny Each. By Post, 1½d. Each.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE: 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

SUSTENTATION FUND

FOR THE

Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

NOTICE.

SECRETARIES of CONGREGATIONS desiring GRANTS from this Fund should write to me before March 31 for the necessary forms of application.

HAROLD F. PEARSON, Hon. Sec.,
22, College Hill, London, E.C.

British League of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Women.

THE COUNCIL MEETING will be held at Essex Hall, Essex-street, W.C., on Tuesday, March 10, at 3.15 p.m. Miss Grace Mitchell will relate some of her experiences in our Australian and New Zealand Branches and Churches. Friends interested in the League's work cordially invited. Tea 5.0 p.m.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartment, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

Provincial Assembly of Presbyterian and Unitarian Ministers and Congregations of Lancashire and Cheshire.

THE PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY LECTURE FOR 1914

will be delivered in the Small Concert Room, St. George's Hall,

LIVERPOOL,

on THURSDAY, MARCH 19,

by

SIR OLIVER LODGE, F.R.S.

Subject: "The Unseen Universe."

Chair to be taken at 7.45 p.m. by RICHARD D. HOLT, Esq., M.P.

ADMISSION FREE.

H. E. DOWSON, B.A., } Hon.
N. ANDERTON, B.A., } Secs.

MANSFORD STREET CHURCH AND MISSION.

THE

25th Annual Meeting of the Subscribers and other friends of the Society will take place at

Mansford Street,

on TUESDAY, MARCH 17,

when the Chair will be taken by

The Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND,
M.A., LL.D., of Oxford.

Among other Speakers will be the four Missionary Ministers of the Society since its establishment in the present buildings:—

REV. H. GOW,
REV. W. G. CADMAN,
REV. J. ELLIS,
REV. G. COOPER.

— ALSO —

The Rev. F. K. FREESTON,
Mr. A. SAVAGE COOPER,
President, L.D.U.S.
and others.

All friends of the Church and Mission are particularly urged to be present at this meeting, which marks the completion of a quarter of a century's work at Mansford Street.

The Sunday School Anniversary.

Services will be held on March 15th, and will be conducted by the Rev. H. Gow, at 3.15 and 7 o'clock.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

Next Entrance Examination, April 3.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

FRENCH LADY, distinguished Singing Professor, wishes for situation au pair from beginning of August for two or three months in respectable English family, rather in or near London.—For information apply to, Mrs. GAYTE, 43, rue de Boulainvilliers, Paris, 16.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M. Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

PEARL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

P. J. FOLEY, Esq., President.

Annual Income £3,340,000
Claims Paid exceed £15,000,000

Additional Representatives Wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing
G. SHRUBSALL, } Directors.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only.

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church),
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for March 8:

Morning: Doctrine of the Primeval Curse.
Evening: Mr. Balfour's Idea of God.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, March 8.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. Dr. MORITZ WESTON.
 Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON; 7, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. F. COTTIER; 7, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham, place, 11.15, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11, Rev. F. HANKINSON; 7, Rev. BAART DE LA FAÏLLE, of Dutch Church, Austin Friars.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. C. ARTHUR GINEVER.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Miss M. FRANCES.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER; and 7.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. P. CHALK; 6.30, Mr. F. COTTIER.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Church-gate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing-street, 11.30, Rev. E. W. LUMMIS, M.A.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN Row, 10.45, and
 (STAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle-terrace, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, 11, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN; 6.30, Rev. H. E. PERRY.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. CYRIL FLOWER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. ODGERS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINGLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

DEATHS.

MITCHELL.—On March 5, at 3, Savile-place, Clifton, Bristol, Elizabeth, widow of James Cann Mitchell, aged 79. No flowers, by special request.

PRESTON.—On March 3, at 7, Eldon-road, Hampstead, Stanton William Preston, in his 93rd year. Service on Saturday at the Unitarian Chapel, Rosslyn Hill, at 11.30. No flowers, by request.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds of MSS. carefully and promptly copied.—Miss KENNEDY, 20, County Grove, Camberwell, S.E.

HOSPITAL SISTER seeks post as Amanuensis or Secretary to doctor, dentist, nursing home. Fluent German, some French.—W., 13, Hampstead Hill gardens, N.W.

LADY (middle-aged) seeks engagement as Travelling Companion or Housekeeper where maid is kept. Good manager, musical, some knowledge of French, fond of children.—E. A., c/o Rev. DENDY AGATE, Dunham-road, Altrincham, who will answer inquiries.

YOUNG DUTCH GIRL wants situation as Mother's Help. Well educated, thoroughly trained in household duties, used to children. Salary £20 to £22. To be treated as one of the family. References given and required.—Apply, Miss ARTHUR, 1a, Belsize Parade, N.W.

PULPIT SUPPLY.

Rev. R. H. MAISTER, 96, Accomb-street, Greenheys, Manchester.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	147	BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—		MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
VERSES : The Golden Stag	149	The Rural Problem	154	Dr. Orchard at Enfield	156
THE MODERNIST CLERGY AND THE CREED.	149	Our Task in India	154	Thomas Hawksley Memorial Lecture	157
THE CALL OF THE WILD	150	Theological Symbolics	155	Winifred House	157
FRIEDRICH WILHELM FOERSTER	150	Publications Received	155	The Late Edwin Ginn	157
SPRING	152	FOR THE CHILDREN :—		The Social Movement	158
A MUSICAL INSTRUMENT	152	Spring Suits	155	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	158
CORRESPONDENCE :—		MEMORIAL NOTICE :—		NOTES AND JOTTINGS	159
Theism and Christian Tradition	153	Mr. S. W. Preston	156	OUR CHESS COLUMN	160
Sustentation Fund Appeal	153

* * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

At the beginning of a new session of Parliament, when the newspapers are again filled with the reports of endless debates and fierce passions are aroused about things which are not all unselfish and of good report, it is well to listen to the Vox clamantis in deserto of Mr. Galsworthy's letter to The Times on "The Heartlessness of Parliament." He watches the great lumbering machine of government, and he asks with the consuming wrath of those who suffer deeply in the miseries of others, why so little is done.

"I am moved to speak out," he writes, "what I and, I am sure, many others are feeling. We are a so-called civilised country; we have a so-called Christian religion; we profess humanity. We have a Parliament of chosen persons, to each of whom we pay £400 a year, so that we have at last some right to say: 'Please do our business, and that quickly.' And yet we sit and suffer such barbarities and mean cruelties to go on amongst us as must dry the heart of God. I cite a few only of the abhorrent things done daily, daily left undone; done and left undone, without shadow of doubt, against the conscience and general will of the community."

And then he proceeds to enumerate many of the festering wounds of our civilisation, sweating of women, blind-alley employments, housing of the poor which disregards the first decencies of life, cruelty to horses, the caging of wild song birds, the horrors of the plumage trade and the like.

THESE things, he says, "are admitted to be anathema; in favour of their abolition there would be found at any moment a round majority of unfettered Parliamentary and general opinion. One and all they are removable, and many of them by small expenditure of Parliamentary time, public money, and expert care. . . . And I say it is rotten that, for mere want of Parliamentary interest and time, we cannot have manifest and stinking sores such as these treated and banished once for all from the nation's body. I say it is rotten that due time and machinery cannot be found to deal with these and other barbarities to man and beast, concerning which, in the main, no real controversy exists. Rotten that their removal should be left to the mercy of the ballot, to private members' Bills, liable to be obstructed; or to the hampered and inadequate efforts of societies unsupported by legislation."

"ROME, I know, is not built in a day," Mr. Galsworthy continues. "Parliament works hard, it has worked harder during these last years than ever perhaps before—all honour to it for that. It is an august Assembly of which I wish to speak with all respect. But it works without sense of proportion, or sense of humour. Over and over again it turns things already talked into their graves; over and over again listens to the same partisan bickerings, to arguments which everybody knows by heart, to rolling periods which advance nothing but those who utter them. And all the time the fires of live misery that could, most of them, so easily be put out, are raging and the reek thereof is going up. . . . I am not one of those who believe we can do without party, but I do see and I do say that party measures absorb far too much of the time that our common humanity demands for the redress of crying shames. And if, Sir, laymen see this with grief and anger, how much more poignant must be the feeling of members of Parliament themselves, to whom alone remedy has been entrusted."

THESE stinging words are not a programme of reform; they are something far more searching—a cry of the human spirit, which sees beneath the conventions of our political life right into the heart of things. The first step towards reform is to convict us of our complacent sins, and few men at the present time equal Mr. Galsworthy in the clear-cutting insight, the pity and moral sympathy needed for this task. But it is well that something practical should happen when a great wind blows through the dusty chambers of our hearts, and therefore we welcome the shrewd comment and suggestion of Sir Edward Russell, though they take us from the heights of Sinai to the precincts of the House of Commons.

"The House of Commons," he writes, "has always in modern days been remarkable for its power of constituting discreet and impartial Committees which are practically never suspected of considering party interests. Some of these are appointed for special purposes. Others are annually reappointed and invariably preserve the confidence of Parliament and the country. Might not such a Committee be appointed to consider whether it would not be possible to invent Parliamentary methods which on the one hand would allow agreed reforms to be carried through with a speed corresponding to public conviction in their favour, and on the other hand would effectually guard against the proceedings upon such measures being used with deliberate irrelevancy for party purposes in reference to other subjects?"

The matter really seems to resolve itself into this: Cannot the Mother of Parliaments extricate herself from slavery to her own rules and the tricks of the obstructionist and the bore, and assert her liberty to deal with great matters of human need, out of which no party capital can be made, with the speed and the good sense which the public interest demands?

* * *

STUDENTS of the Old Testament all over the world will desire to pay a tribute of respectful gratitude to the memory of Canon Driver. Perhaps more than any other man he helped to commend the modern critical view of the Old Testament to the English mind. At the time of its publication his "Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament" was recognised at once as the type of book which in the range and exactness of its learning we were accustomed to receive from Germany. But it caught on as the work of no foreign scholar could have done, and though at first it created much alarm it has gone through edition after edition and is now accepted as a sensible and moderate book in quarters where its conclusions would have aroused open charges of heresy only a short time ago. It was in some respects a fortunate thing that this great presentation of the critical position came from such a source. No one ever had reason to suspect Canon Driver of being other than an orthodox and loyal Churchman, and his official position at Christ Church disarmed prejudice and gave wings to his words.

* * *

At the same time his triumph was really remarkable, and when every allowance has been made for his fine personal gifts it must be regarded as a notable tribute to the quiet power of real knowledge. For Canon Driver never either wrote or did anything which can be described as popular. He was a linguist of laborious exactness, a scholar of highly trained power in his own special field. His teaching could only reach the public through the medium of other minds, who had the gift for selecting its essential features and translating them into common speech. And yet his influence has gone far and wide and has impressed itself deeply not only upon theological thought, but also, we venture to say, upon the average intelligence of English religion. It was the triumph, like many another patient victory of science, of the man who knows.

* * *

WE are glad to see the vigorous protest of Professor Emery Barnes in a letter to The Times against the present policy of shuffling and opportunism in high ecclesiastical quarters on the subject of the Athanasian

Creed. The Upper House of Canterbury Convocation has just decided that compulsory recitation of the Creed must be continued, only it is advisable to reduce it to once a year. It is also proposed that a revised translation shall be adopted, in which the so-called damnatory clause appears as follows: "Which faith except a man have kept whole and undefiled without doubt he will perish eternally." It requires a long training in the subtleties of ecclesiastical diplomacy to grasp the state of mind which can believe that these concessions will really ease the situation for tender consciences and encourage sincerity. Professor Barnes declares roundly that this episcopal decision is an evasion. "I protest," he writes, "against the opportunism which does not dare to face the fact that the damnatory clauses of Quicunque vult contain a direct untruth. We demand from our Bishops permission to speak truth in the Church as elsewhere."

* * *

THE question is, do the Bishops believe it themselves? Are these terrible threatenings part of the faith in God and the tender mercies of Christ, which they exist to promote in the world? They cannot ride off on the plea that they are faithful to the general intention of the Creed, when they slur over the plain meaning of the damnatory clause. A certain blunt vigour and directness are of its essence, and there is good reason to believe that its menacing words were inserted intentionally in order to dragoon men into orthodox obedience. If the Bishops really believed this now, if they were deeply convinced that the sons and daughters in their own homes who wander from the strict path of orthodoxy will without doubt "perish eternally," they would become almost like fanatical dervishes of the desert in their terrible zeal to save men from doom. As it is, their whole attitude towards human life shows little trace of this particular type of tragic earnestness. They are far more concerned to explain away the words they use and to soften their harshness than to press them home upon the souls of men. That is the true measure of the insincerity of the position. They have not the courage either to revive the old fanatical belief or to confess that they have no use for it in the modern world.

* * *

In an address, last Monday evening, on "The Character of the Bible inferred from its Versions," the Rev. T. H. Darlow, the Literary Superintendent of the Bible Society, showed how the missionary becomes an unconscious critic. Whatever theory he may hold of inspiration the pressure of practical needs makes him a quick judge of different spiritual values in the Bible. He carries into his work of translation the same instinct for the best things which has been characteristic of simple Christian piety in all ages.

"People sometimes ask," Mr. Darlow said, "are all parts of the Bible of equal value? Which books are the most important? Well, let us consider the experience of missionary translators, who may be trusted to understand what parts of Scriptures are most necessary and useful for their converts. Almost without exception missionaries begin their translation-work by making a version of a single Gospel—generally selecting St. Mark's Gospel, as the shortest and simplest. Then they go on to translate the other Gospels; probably they next take in hand either the Acts of the Apostles, as illustrating the growth of an infant Christian community, or the Psalter, as the hymn-book of the Universal Church. The vernacular New Testament appears to suffice for the ordinary needs of a native Christian community, until converts are sufficiently advanced to be trained for ordination. Then a version of the Old Testament becomes urgent."

* * *

THE Berlin correspondent of the Westminster Gazette has given some interesting particulars of the growth and changing aims of German Universities. The number of them, it appears, is smaller than it was a century ago; but there has been a great increase in the number of students, due partly to the growth of higher education among women, and to the popularity of the German University among foreigners. In 1880 there were 30,000 students; last year there were over 60,000. Of these 5,300 were foreign students, and 3,500 were women. In regard to method there is the same conflict as in England between the settled traditions of culture and the growing demands of the new scientific movements. There are strong advocates of the plan of specialisation. Thus it is suggested that the larger Universities, like Berlin, Leipzig, and Munich, should retain their comprehensiveness, while the smaller Universities should specialise and deliberately abstain from any attempt to cover the whole field of education. Thus Göttingen is being developed along the lines of mathematics and natural science, while plans have been adopted for making Frankfurt into a special centre for the study of social science. It is proposed that in the case of Universities, founded and planned on a new model, no provision should be made for the full number of faculties; and it is noteworthy that everywhere the theological faculty is to be left out.

* * *

WE may add a further comment to what we said last week on the proposed omission of the word "obey" in the marriage service of the Church of England. The Bishop of Oxford has written to disclaim the scholarly researches into liturgical uses which have been attributed to him, but he calls attention to an important article by Mr. F. C. Eeles in the Contemporary Review for November, 1913, on "The Contract Forms of the Marriage Service." "That article," Dr. Gore writes, "does contain the result of very elaborate and careful researches, and I do not think that anyone who studies the facts as disclosed by him could doubt his conclusion, which is thus expressed:—

'Although many who love the Prayer-book as it stands, and particularly delight in the more ancient and picturesque parts of it, would of course regret any alteration in the wording of the vows in the Marriage Service, it must be admitted that, if a change to equally-worded vows were to be made, such a change would be in the direction of what appears to be the older, and is certainly the more universal, practice of Christendom. No such alteration of wording would affect fundamental doctrine as to the nature of Christian marriage. This is sufficiently obvious from the great diversity which already exists both in the contract forms and also in the variety of emphasis observable in statements of doctrine.' "

THE GOLDEN STAG.

(FROM RABINDRANATH TAGORE'S "THE GARDENER," No. 69.)

I HUNT for the golden stag, I hunt—
Nay, smile at me if you will;
I run, and I run, but ever in front
Runs the stag, from hill to hill;
He flies and I follow—through nameless lands,
The wilderness pastures through,
By rocks of the sea, and wide sea-sands,
The vision I still pursue.

Go back to your homes, my friends, go back,
Go home with your market bag,
Be safe—if you can—on the beaten track,
But for me, I hunt the stag;
'Twas a homeless wind that wakened me,
I know not when or where,
And homeless the spell-bound soul must be
That follows the vision fair.

Not mine is a care, my friends, not mine
Who run for a golden quest,
Alone I may run for the prize divine—
But the world may keep the rest!
It flies and I follow, through lands unknown,
I follow by ways untold,
Alone, and seeing the prize alone,
Led on by the hoofs of gold.

W. G. TARRANT.

THE MODERNIST CLERGY AND THE CREED.

—§§—

THE present storm of controversy in the Church of England is producing a plentiful crop of pamphlets. None of them is more interesting and illuminating than the Open Letter which Dr. J. F. BETHUNE-BAKER, Lady Margaret's Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, has addressed to the BISHOP OF OXFORD. He calls it "The Miracle of Christianity" and describes it as "a plea for 'the Critical School' in regard to the use of the creeds." It is not in any sense an obscure or shuffling document, but a clear statement of the reasons which convince him that he is right in retaining his position in the Church in spite of his failure to accept certain alleged facts as historically true. It is thus a sincere apologia for liberal Churchmanship, and will help many people to understand a position which they cannot accept. The liberal Churchman is no doubt in a position of peculiar difficulty. He cannot isolate his points of disagreement and look at them exclusively. They stand in relation to a much vaster whole of religious life, to which he is bound by strong ties of ancestral affection, and which still claims his enthusiastic devotion. At the moments when religion means most to him this note of dissent sinks away into insignificance compared with all that he joyfully accepts. Some men in this position feel that they can no longer hold clerical office, and they seek some lay occupation. Others, deeply conscious that they are not heretics at heart and that there is no other religious community to which they can turn for fellowship, try to defend themselves, as Dr. BETHUNE-BAKER has done, from the judgment of public opinion or threatened episcopal censure.

After pointing out how differently the meaning of various articles of the Creed have been conceived in different ages, and the mistake of identifying the Gospel with the particular presentation of it in any particular age, Dr. BETHUNE-BAKER proceeds to develop the central part of his argument. It follows the familiar lines of a distinction between matters which are capable of spiritual verification and those which depend entirely upon historical evidence. Experience, he tells us,

"is no kind of proof of the exactitude of the narrative of any particular miracle recorded in the Gospels, or of their historical accuracy in detail. The fact, as we all know, is that by a process which cannot be traced our Gospels came in the course of the second century to be generally (and afterwards universally) accepted by Christians as an exact historical account of the Life of our Lord and the origin of the Church, and when once they had been so accepted they carried with them an authority which overwhelmed all criticism. As to the actual facts, the sanction of the Church of all the ages is simply the sanction of the Church of the second century. The Church has never been in a position to revise the version of the facts accepted then. It was not then in a position to check them as a modern writer of history would; and students to-day, who are adequately equipped with knowledge of the modes of thought and belief and the literary methods which were current in the first century of our era, are better able to estimate the historical worth of particular narratives in our Gospels than was the Church of the first or any succeeding century."

From this point of view he proceeds to argue that the doctrines of the Incarnation and the Resurrection are strongly attested by the experience of the Church. "But no such attestation can be claimed fairly for the traditional beliefs in the Miraculous Birth and the restoration to life of the Body of the Lord." He pleads, moreover,

"that, as many Christians in the past have believed the miraculous conception and birth without holding the doctrine of the Incarnation as the Church has defined it, so in the present the doctrine of the Incarnation may be held by faith and reason without belief in the miraculous birth or conception, and that no stigma should be set on a clergyman who believes in the Incarnation yet is not able to affirm the mode of the Birth."

Thus the Apostles' Creed to him is not a mere statement of historical facts. It guards and enshrines great affirmations of doctrine, and when he recites it he pleads that he is using the only means at present available of expressing fundamental religious convictions which are common alike to those who accept and those who reject certain biographical details. "When I use these words my intention is precisely the intention with which the Church has always used them." Though reserving his right to reject miraculous incidents on the ground of insufficient testimony, he accepts without the slightest mental reservation what he calls "the Miracle of Christianity—the Miracle of the Christian Life."

It is not our intention to enter upon any full discussion of this position. We prefer in the present article to be informative rather than critical. But we cannot refrain from a few words of comment. We are in complete agreement with Dr. BETHUNE-BAKER in the distinction which he draws between Christian experience and historical statement. Our inner consciousness can tell us a great deal about redemption and the power of the new life in CHRIST, but it has nothing to say about the accuracy or the reverse of the early Christian records. We believe that as the validity of this distinction is more widely accepted it will help to remove many confusions, and introduce a new and more spiritual emphasis into Christian thought. But, on the other hand, we are not satisfied that it is possible to apply it with any real helpfulness, as Dr. BETHUNE-BAKER attempts to do, to the interpretation of a document so plain and objective as the Apostles' Creed. He admits that in regard to the Incarnation the Creed is expressed "in terms of biographical statement as to how It was effected rather than of religious conviction as to what It is." That is the real crux of the difficulty, and we fail to see that his sincere and earnest grappling with the problem has done anything to get rid of it. The truth is that for men of the modern spirit something more drastic is required. It must be recognised that the Creed itself is a human document. We wish that the Modernist clergy would tell us quite frankly, that in spite of its place in the liturgy there is nothing sacrosanct about it. It can maintain its position only so long as its biographical details are generally accepted in ecclesiastical circles as literal fact. If the Modernist position once became general it is hard to believe that it would still be placed on a pedestal as one of the perfect expressions of religion which must never be touched. It is habit rather than clear thought which causes so many men to hover round it, trying to see all the new facets of religion in the ancient words, instead of making the bold claim that it needs to be revised.

Meanwhile we welcome this Open Letter as an important contribution to the tangled problem of credal obligations, and we look forward with much interest to the reply of the BISHOP OF OXFORD, to whose critical liberty in some directions the writer alludes more than once with gentle irony. The controversy does not interest us any the less because our own position is one of detachment, and we believe that there is a more excellent way; for it is men for whom we have a deep respect who are engaged in it, and at the heart of it there is a real wrestling of spirit.

THE CALL OF THE WILD.

By A. M. D. G.

A BRAVE knight has flung down his gauntlet. The Rev. J. Cyril Flower's letter on "Theism and Christianity," in your issue of the 28th ult. rings like a challenge. It is a call for pioneers in a stern crusade of exploration in unknown tracts of the spiritual universe, far beyond the utmost lines of communication into the lonely bush or the silences of the Arctic Seas. It is the call of the wild once more.

But we hear to-day another call—not alone the call of the wild, of the wilderness and the solitary place—but the cry of the massed herds in cities whom civilisation wastes like a corroding poison; a call not to some unsullied mountain-tarn, remote from the ways of men, but to the borders of a great inland sea that receives the ordures of the world. Let Mr. Cyril Flower and his little search-party fare forth into the unknown regions—they will find bones bleaching by their furthest route—and dare dangers many, and perils many, and, if God will, let him return and report unto us stay-at-homes the things that he has seen. The tale will relieve the drabness and the common-placeness of our inland monotonies, and let him tell us no "travellers' tales!"

But we have done with venturings. We have never managed to catch up with the furthest saint! And we have at length made the amazing discovery that home is better. And not only better, but that it opens up to us reaches and vistas altogether unsuspected by us when we so confidently set forth on our travels. We were nurtured in a Christian home. Our good mother was the fine flower of Christian piety. "Popular hymn tunes" were her consolation and delight. Christ was her strength and her tower. But we grew up. We thought our fathers fools. And, not without sadness, though buoyed up by the consciousness of our own wisdom no less than of their ignorance, and to the well-nigh breaking of our mother's heart, we loosed ourselves wholly from all moorings of tradition and fared forth upon the unknown seas. "The new is better," we shouted, and off we pushed! We saw stars our fathers never knew, but, somehow, they never shone quite like the old stars our mother gazed upon, and we shared the wistful regret of exiles for a lost Eden and its "glorious errors." We "considered it again," and we returned sadder and wiser men. We learned the secret of our mother's piety. We discovered some who had stayed at home, yet had fared much further than we. We determined that we would not wander more, that we would remain among the civilised, that we would try to restore the olden piety and proclaim that "the old is better."

But we return with a difference. We know the way of the desert and of the lonely tracts. We have trodden them. We were ahungred for our own souls. We have now a passion for other men's. They cannot fare where we have fared, and the water from the flinty rock and the manna from heaven which somehow were providentially provided for us are not for them. They are nourished as other men, and prefer "popular hymn-tunes," not exilic songs. If we would win them, we must provide them with food convenient for them. We are more concerned for their needs than for our own. The "evangelical note" accords with the tune of their hearts. We would strike it, it we may, with the olden rapture and with modern enlightenment too. Christ seems to meet all the needs of their souls, as He has come to meet all ours. Do what we will, we have never been able to reach Him! Do what we will, we can never do more than utterly surrender ourselves as He bade. Our Theism is not less grounded and rooted than it was before, but it has a more winning countenance. It has discovered a way of manifesting itself to the very lowliest souls of men. And it is not a mere question of "Return" to Christ. But rather is it a question of Forward to Christ, forward on the still untravelled route of the unspeakable riches of His grace! We have before us ever St. Paul's great vision, "till we come to the unity of the faith, to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

FRIEDRICH WILHELM FOERSTER.

I.—THE MAN.

THE late William James once said that in studying personal experience we came into contact with reality in its richest and most complete form. If this statement be true, the greatest possible value must attach to any genuine record of such experience. I need not, therefore, apologise for placing before readers of THE INQUIRER an outline of the life and work of a man whose moral and religious development has been highly remarkable, and whose writings are just beginning to be read and appreciated in this country.

Friedrich Wilhelm Foerster is a son of the well-known astronomer and ethicist, Wilhelm Foerster, of Berlin University, and was born at Berlin in 1869. As a boy he attended a classical school, passing thence to the universities of Berlin and Freiburg, where he took up the study of philosophy and political economy, and wrote a valuable thesis upon the Kantian Ethic. He received no religious instruction, and took no interest in Christianity. After graduating, Foerster at once threw himself into the German Ethical Movement, of which his father had been the first president, and for three years he edited the paper Ethische Kultur. The nature of his studies had naturally drawn his attention towards the connection between moral development and social conditions, with the result that the ardent young reformer became keenly interested in all attempts to better the economic situation of the masses, and in particular, Socialism. Urged by a painful consciousness of social injustice, he wrote, while editor of this paper, a bitter and moving article dealing with the Kaiser's attitude towards the social democratic movement. This not only led to his imprisonment for some months in a fortress, but made it impossible for him to continue his work in Germany. Accordingly, Foerster went into exile in Zürich, where he instituted classes in moral instruction for boys and girls, and acquired an insight into practical psychology which deeply coloured all his subsequent work. During these early years in Switzerland (1896-1904), Foerster made several lengthy journeys for the purpose of studying social conditions and educational work, visiting England, America, and other countries. In 1899 he was appointed to a lectureship in Philosophy and Ethics at the University of Zürich, a post which he held until 1912.

But let us pass from the outward event of Foerster's life to the inward; for it is with the latter that we are more especially concerned. The milieu of his boyhood and youth was purely secular, and the young thinker and idealist began life with a complete absence of religious conviction. Like so many of his contemporaries he had learned to look upon religion as an obsolete and more or less mythical factor in life, which divided men from one another or distracted their energies from necessary moral and material tasks. It was in consequence of such thoughts as these that Foerster joined the Ethical Movement; for the latter expressly aimed at the cultivation of a morality independent of religious opinion.

But as the result of coming to grips with the actualities of life—in his study of social questions, in his dealings with youthful criminals, in his practical work amongst the poor, and more especially in his prolonged endeavour to mould the character of boys and girls with those means alone, which a non-religious view of life would permit him to employ—this young German philosopher and reformer gradually became more and more convinced that real flesh-and-blood human nature, with all its strange perversity and its inherent egoism, could not be genuinely redeemed either by material improvements or by any system of ethics. An intense realisation of man's need opened his eyes to the meaning of Christianity. Later he wrote: "My experience of real life and of the concrete problems of actual living men and women was the cause of my inner transformation. Now I began to see Christianity with quite other eyes. In the past, it had seemed to me extinct and remote from reality—but now I realised that it was I who had been dead and remote from reality."

At the time of his settlement in Zürich, Foerster was barely known outside a certain circle of educators and ethical reformers. But in 1904 he published "Jugendlehre" (now in the 40th German edition, with translations in a dozen languages), a work which speedily achieved immense popularity and exerted an influence all over the Continent. "Jugendlehre" deals primarily with the ethical instruction of the young, but it throws extraordinarily illuminating side-lights on psychology and ethics in general; its method is to work not downwards from abstract principles to the concrete affairs of life, but upwards, from the real problems of daily life to the principles by which they can be solved. This book revealed Foerster as the possessor of a very unusual combination of qualities; it is rich in psychological insight, human sympathy, ethical earnestness, religious sensibility, and lastly (rarest of rarities in the works of idealists) cool common sense; the style throughout is the essence of clarity and simplicity. Within a few months of the publication of his first book Foerster was recognised all over Europe as a new force in ethics, education, and religious thought. To the subject of Foerster's philosophical and religious position I shall return in a later article; but I may say, in passing, that in this book a principle is enunciated that is central to all his subsequent work, namely, the principle that all true culture and civilisation, and all moral and religious life must be based "upon the complete subordination of every individual desire and need to spiritual life-forces; upon the dominion of man over his own nature." And it is in Christianity that he finds those forces which are alone able to compel the necessary self-surrender. "I believe," he writes, "that not only religion, but the Church, too, is an eternal necessity of mankind," and again, "Psychology cries for religion out of the depths of its own necessity."

After three more years of quiet educational work, the author of "Jugendlehre" published a second contribution to pedagogical psychology, "Schule und Charakter,"* a rather large book, the central aim of which is the re-organisation of educational work in the interests of the ethico-religious development of the children. This work is a mass of invaluable psychological insight, combined with practical hints. Considerable space is devoted to exposures of the evils of intellectualism, on the one hand, and of sport mania, on the other. Foerster holds that the ethical and religious indifference of to-day is very largely due to a system of education which develops the intellect and (at any rate, in England) the muscles, while almost entirely neglecting the spiritual and moral side of the child's nature; in his opinion there is no greater danger to character than a premature or one-sided development of the intellect, such as is almost universal in the educated classes throughout Western Europe.

I can well remember the enthusiasm with which I read "Schule und Charakter" when I was a student at Jena, and the animated discussions to which it gave rise in Professor Rein's Seminar, of which I was then a member. It was a great delight to me, two years later, in 1909, to have the privilege of meeting Dr. Foerster at Zürich, and of subsequently visiting him several times at his pretty little house on the very top of the Zürichberg, overlooking the great lake and the ranges of the Glärnisch and Tödi. Accustomed as I was to the conventional German Don, the first impression of the Zürich philosopher came as a sharp surprise. I saw a very young-looking slim man of medium height, straight as an arrow, carrying himself with an alert and slightly military air, dressed in English style, with a brown pointed beard, bronzed, "outdoor" complexion, a high, dome-like forehead, and large, steady, tranquil, deeply thoughtful eyes of the most intense blue. The face was such as to arrest instant attention: it was authoritative, intellectual, practical, and yet poetic and visionary, and calm with a curious, almost mystic, tranquillity.

As a lecturer Foerster is even more effective than as a writer, and by virtue of the same qualities which render his books so inspiring. He holds his audience with a quiet, logical, and as it were inevitable development of his theme. He never forces a point, and never employs rhetorical tricks. The remarkable impressiveness of his lectures is due to the almost hypnotic influence of the man's absolute conviction, combined with perfect intellectual clarity and the most sober use of language.

During the spring of 1909 Dr. Foerster talked with me freely of the influences which had moulded his thought. Chief amongst these is his observation of the inherent weakness of modern subjectivism and spiritual individualism, and of the necessity of a return to the authority of definite religious and ethical truth (a return that will be brought about, he believes, by a concentration upon character, and especially upon self-discipline). He advised me to read the Catholic saints, "the greatest psychologists who have ever lived," to whose methods of life the modern world, corroded by luxury and boundless self-indulgence, must look for its moral and physical salvation. More than once, too, Foerster drew my attention to the works of the modern psychotherapists (e.g., Dubois and Payot), to whom he is much indebted, saying that every religious thinker should study these writers for the light they throw upon the workings of the soul. What the modern world wants, he asserted, is not any new set of theoretical opinions, or any sort of merely intellectual guidance, but a cure for diseased souls, a new method of daily life, of spiritual purification and will-training; and it is the duty of the Church to perform this work, for which an irrefragable, super-individual, authoritative Truth is indispensable.

A third work, "Sexualethik und Sexualpädagogik," was published soon after "Schule und Charakter"; and now, for the first time, the religious element takes up an absolutely central place, for, approaching the matter from a psychological standpoint, Foerster comes to the conclusion that the sex problem cannot be solved outside a positive Christian view of life. Embodying, as it does, a vigorous attack upon the "modern" view of such burning questions as the education of the young in sex, motherhood, and marriage, Malthusianism, and the "advanced" feminist movement, "Sexualethik" aroused the fiercest controversy and met with violent opposition. Since the sex question cannot be dealt with, in Foerster's opinion, apart from a philosophy of life as a whole, this book takes in a very wide range of thought, and serves, to some extent, as an introduction to the author's moral and religious position. An English translation was published in 1912 (under the title "Marriage and the Sex Problem"; published by Wells Gardner, Darton), and is already in the third edition.

So positive and uncompromising was the religious note struck in this work, and so merciless was its exposure of the weaknesses underlying the modern ethic, that its publication did much to make its author unpopular, to the point even of hatred, with the so-called free-thinking party, which is all powerful at Zürich. And this unpopularity was so augmented by the appearance, in 1910, of "Autorität und Freiheit," in which Foerster expressed his firm belief in the absolute necessity of definite religious authority as the complement of individual freedom of thought (the latter alone being destructive of all social stability, and ultimately of the whole of human culture), that his position as a Lecturer at the ultra-liberal and largely materialistic University of Zürich rapidly became impossible. After an "affair" which caused heated discussion all over Switzerland and Germany, and called forth many bitter criticisms of the "liberal" University that drove forth a teacher on account of the honest development of his religious convictions, Foerster was invited to occupy the Chair of Education at Vienna, and he still holds this position. Quite recently, however, the University of Munich has asked him to accept the Professorship of Education there, and it is possible that in 1914 he will take up this work.

* The 11th edition, 1912, is now being translated into English by Miss Felkin, for publication by Messrs. Sonnenschein in the spring of 1914.

MEYRICK BOOTH.

SPRING.

I SENT a message to my friend yesterday, "Will you come and be mad with me to-morrow on the top of Springdale Down?" And this morning we have been carrying out my programme. Everything conspired to make it a success. The sun shone; the south-west wind was laden with the subtle scents of growing things—Spring was in the air. We drank it in greedily. We deliberately laid ourselves out to imbibe the strongest of all intoxicants, and soon it began to work. It got into our blood, it stirred our pulses; it filled us with all kinds of mad impulses to go we knew not where, and to do we knew not what. We could not express what we felt. We just sat on a stile, and looked into the heart of a little wood half way up the down, where the birds were busy, and the primroses sprouting, and the tops of the trees reddening and roughening with buds—and said nothing. But I remembered that Amiel had put it into words more beautifully than anyone I know, though it is the theme of every poet and essayist. "Longing for travel, and thirst for joy, hunger for work, for emotion, for life, dreams of happiness and of love"—thus he describes his emotions. "A passionate wish to live, to feel, to express, stirred the depths of my heart . . . It was as though something explosive had caught fire, and one's soul were scattered to the four winds. In such a mood one would fain devour the whole world, experience everything, see everything. . . . It is the Spring which brings about these sudden and improbable resurrections, the Spring which, sending a thrill and tumult of life through all that lives, is the parent of impetuous desires, of overpowering inclinations, of unforeseen and inextinguishable outbursts of passion. It breaks through the rigid bark of the trees, and rends the mask on the face of asceticism. It makes the monk tremble in the shadow of his convent, the maiden behind the curtains of her room, the child sitting on his school bench, the old man bowed under his rheumatism."

It "rends the mask on the face of asceticism." It is Ash Wednesday, and in the little church below, with the spire pointing through the trees, good folk are gathered to hear "the general sentences of God's cursing against impenitent sinners." But out here there seems only one possible message, which hovers over us as a benediction from the heart of the Infinite Lover:—"And God saw every thing that He had made, and behold it was very good." In the new creation, which every spring proclaims, "God renews His ancient rapture." The fragrance of the ferny moss that we have gathered (how it holds the spring in its delicate scent!), the red breast of the alert and cheerful robin who perches near, intent on the happy business of home-making, the shining celandine, so fresh and clean; even the worm, wriggling delightedly in the moist earth—how "good" they all are! Can it be true that, amongst all this beauty, "only man is vile"? Whilst birds and beasts are blessed without stint, man alone, made in the image of God, is cursed?

No one with the madness of Spring in his veins could believe it for an instant. For to him is revealed the supreme gift which lifts poor struggling humanity for ever above the perfection of the animal kingdom, and puts the finishing touch to Creation's scheme. What flower or bird or beast can stand apart from it all, and from itself, and contemplate its beauty as we are doing now? No; only we and God do that!

It has them, not they it; and so I choose For man, Thy last premeditated work . . . That a third thing should stand apart from both,

A quality arise within his soul,
Which, introactive, made to supervise
And feel the force it has, may view itself,
And so be happy.

Tragedy may lie in the fact that

A man can use but a man's joy,
While he sees God's.

It did for the Greek thinker. But he knew not of a kingdom to which the intellect provides no key; a kingdom open only to those who become as little children, which is

Unlimited in capability

For joy as this is in desire for joy.

So we come down into the workaday world again. We cross the churchyard, with its mouldering tombstones, and know that we too shall some day lie there; the evidences of sickness and sorrow and sin meet our gaze once more. But they have lost their sting. The Spring is in our hearts; life is stronger than death, the blessing has swallowed up the curse. Let us go and tell men so! Let us go and infect them with our divine intoxication! Let us make them mad as we are with the glory and the goodness of God!

V. E. CRAFER.

A MUSICAL INSTRUMENT.

I ONCE heard a story which ran something like this:—

There was one who had given into his hand by the Master of Music the most wonderful instrument ever fashioned. There was nothing like it in creation. No one knew the secrets of its framework, and no one was aware of the full compass of the music sleeping within it. It was formed of an unknown substance of amazing radiance, elusive and opalescent and infinitely precious.

This shining instrument had many strings, and they were the greatest wonder of all. A diffused and floating light always hovered about them, and that light seemed partly native to them and partly a reflection from some unknown and unimaginable Radiance. Touch the strings ever so lightly, and faint suggestions of melody, echoes and dreams and prophecies of an unearthly music, trembled towards materialisation and died away; so that to eye and ear alike the instrument was full of an enchanting and haunting mystery.

But the man to whom this wondrous thing had been entrusted did not understand it. He did not see that it was the greatest of miracles, and he never imagined the wealth of music locked in its strings. Of these he only touched two or three. Sometimes he played on them a few poor little tunes; sometimes he jarred them roughly into discords, under which the glancing fire in the strings quivered and vanished.

Gradually the unused strings became covered with dust and rust. It is true that the wind when it wandered over them awoke a dim glamour of sound from among the rust; but as time went on the instrument ceased to vibrate even to the wind. A faint heart of fire might still be discerned in the centre of each string, but the glow and glory were gone.

Then one day the Master came from a far land beyond the mountains, and saw the man in whose charge he had placed that precious thing. He took it, touching sadly the rusty strings.

"Alas! friend," he said, "what have you made of this fair instrument I entrusted to you?"

The man was abashed. Then he said: "I did not know how to play it, and could not use the strings. Now it is all rusted and ruined, and fit only to be thrown away."

"No," said the Master, "rusted, not ruined, and one does not throw away the greatest thing in the world even if it is marred and spoilt. You may still, if you will, clear these strings."

"Can I?" cried the man eagerly. "Then indeed, I will rub them and polish them until the rust is gone. And then I will learn to play on them."

"There is only one way to clear them," the Master replied, "and that is by trying to play on them. It is the silence and disuse that have rusted them. Begin now, gently and continuously, to play on them, and by and by the music will awake."

Then the Master laid his hand on the man's hand, and looked deeply into his eyes and went away. And the man set himself diligently to play on the rusty strings. He often lost heart, for they were stiff at first and unresponsive. His tears dropped on them at times, and every time a tear dropped there was a sudden glow in the fire in the centre.

By and by the instrument began to give forth soft sighs and sounds, as if the soul of the music was stirring. Day by day it grew stronger and clearer, and once more the light shimmered among the strings.

Years passed away. The man played often now with a rapt face and skilled fingers. Sometimes the sweep of his music was so great and broad that it seemed to overflow into some universal harmony so compelling that many lingered to listen, and even tepid souls and dull faces carried away a touch of loveliness and were half disquieted and half made glad.

At last the Master returned. He took the instrument, sweeping his hand over the iridescent strings wonderful in their living fire. Then he gave it back and smiled.

"Play to me now," he said.

The man shrank and hesitated.

"Nay, Master," he cried. "I pray not yet. I cannot play to you yet. I have in my soul a vast dream, but alas! my music is so small and poor when I am fain to play my dream. I will go on playing; and one day, it may be, I will come to you with gladness, and say, At last, O my Master, my music is no longer mean; it is no longer trivial; it is meet to be played to you." Again the Master smiled. He took the instrument and played. As he played the listener's soul soared into the unknown and touched every chord of being, and penetrated to the heart of all that is. Life and Death, and Sorrow and Love unfolded their mystery, resolving into subtle undertones; and above them was a splendour of triumphant joy, wherein he was face to face at last with the Eternal Desire. . . .

And yet—glorious as was the strain, was it not strangely familiar? Could it be that which he himself had tried to play, but that carried up to heights of unimagined beauty? Could it be his human song, his humble human song, made divine? The music paused on one long-drawn quivering chord.

"Nay, my son," said the Master, "weep not. Did you not hear your music—your song—the song of your fault, your blindness, your awaking, your longing, your vision, your dream? That was your own strain, which unawares you have learned to play. You shall play it even as I have played it; but not now. Come!"

Then the man arose and lifted his shining instrument, and placed his hand in the Master's hand, and they went together towards the far horizons. None knew whither they went, and soon they were lost to sight. But now and then those who listened intently heard faint sounds and echoes as of divinest music played by a master hand, very far away.

F. R.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THEISM AND CHRISTIAN TRADITION.

SIR,—I feel so much in sympathy with Mr. Cyril Flower's letter, especially in his definition of Theism, that anything I write will be more in elaboration of the subject than in the spirit of criticism. The article I wrote was mainly descriptive, and the comments rather suggestive than worked out. Perhaps the phrase "Christian tradition" was not very happy. "Christian thought and experience" might be a better one. Not a word was said about Unitarianism, but the title Theist, being very dear to me, I am rather concerned about a recent phase of it which does not desire to be associated with any form of Christianity. This seems to me historically unjust, logically absurd, spiritually suicidal. We are told that the object of Theism is fellowship with the True, the Beautiful, the Good. Well, I think I hear the voice of one whose historicity is not doubted, saying, "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; think on these things."

What is a dynamic? Every theology is a form of thought. Life must enter into that form to become religion. The reaction between the form and the life, or the fusing of the elements becomes the dynamic. If the form is defective so that any elements in the life do not react, but remain dormant, then the form is imperfect. Now the question is whether Theism, with its broader outlook, while satisfying some neglected needs of our nature, has not lost some of the delicate machinery which in other faiths have proved to have powerful effects on the human soul? That was the question raised. And as a Church is supposed to satisfy the whole of the spiritual needs of man, to have a message for the wise and unwise, the ignorant as well as the learned, to supply milk for babes as well as meat for men, it is worth considering.

But Mr. Flower thinks that it is the sole function of Theists to be pioneers into the unknown, and all who seek the satisfactions of cultivated territory should not join them. I hardly think the Unitarians with an organised and endowed professional ministry will accept this view. See also Mr. Lewis's article on the subject. Personally, I identify myself with the explorers, but we happen to have reached a point where two routes present themselves, and the question arises, which shall we take? When a small party of explorers set out in a little ship to discover the magnetic pole they worked away north till they reached a part beyond the haunts of men, then the needle gave indications that if they were to succeed in their search they must turn south again towards light and warmth and human society. May we not accept this as a parable, and perceive that the life in God is not to be found on some lone height of vision, but with our fellows? "The Kingdom of God is among you!"

Nor must we think that any form of Unitarian Theism is intellectually secure. It has many critics to-day. Eucken says, "Most of all the main idea of an all-embracing unity fails of proof . . . it is an hypothesis which the calm clearness of modern thought has sharply contradicted, and one whose roots lay less in modern ground than in the world of traditional religious ideas." Then there is the late Prof. James' theory of Pluralism. Also the modern idea of an evolving God, God at the end, as Bernard Shaw puts it, so that there is no Eternal Father to commune with. Lastly, there is the Positivist position, of which, perhaps, L. T. Hobhouse is the most able exponent. According to his latest work, the purpose of the universe seems to be the growth of mind, and there may be a higher than a human spirit, but he is far from being absolute or omnipotent. The mechanical forces of nature which work evil are independent of such control.

If then we believe in an Eternal Father, as all of us do, I suppose, it is as much an act of faith as belief in the spiritual kingdom which Jesus promised to all who love him. And how is faith justified? By the Pragmatic method. Does it work? asks Mr. Armstrong in his book, "God and the Soul." That is sheer Pragmatism. Does it work? I asked of Wesleyanism, and ventured to explain why.

There are many to-day, your correspondent apparently among them, who think that because modern criticism has dimmed the figure of the historic Jesus that Christianity is jeopardised. I always think of the blind man's reply in the Fourth Gospel. "Whether this man be a sinner I know not, judge ye. All I know is that whereas I was blind now I see." Eucken and Bergson are uttering new notes in philosophy; the twentieth century is likely to see readjustments in religion. The intellectual basis of the churches will probably weaken, for truth is not of the thought alone, and the bond of a worshipping community be spiritual sympathy, our mental differences being as salt to the feast. This opens out a delightful prospect; the powers of the spirit are yet in their infancy. We shall fall in with the law of Evolution, but the dynamic will be still Christian "faith working through love."—Yours, &c.,

YOUR CONTRIBUTOR.

THE SUSTENTATION FUND APPEAL.

SIR,—Readers of THE INQUIRER must be aware of the very special effort that is being made to raise the sum of £50,000 for the Sustentation Fund. It is estimated, if this is provided, the managers of the fund will be enabled not only to secure for all accredited ministers (on certain conditions) a fixed minimum stipend, but also to relieve the British and Foreign Association of the support it has hitherto given to established congregations, and thus set free its funds for distinctive missionary work at home and abroad. Through the great generosity of many friends, and allowing for interest accrued, we are now within £2,700 of the required amount. This, however, includes £500 promised conditionally on the total being secured by Whitsuntide.

Very earnestly would I appeal to the many friends who have not yet contributed, and also to those who may be able, as many already have done, to make a further contribution. It is most important that we should be enabled to take advantage of this most generous offer, and to close the appeal by the time named. Donors may pay their donations, at their convenience, any time before the end of 1916, but for the reason given above promises are urgently needed now.—Yours, &c.,

F. W. MONKS,
Treasurer.

Warrington, March 3, 1914.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

THE RURAL PROBLEM.

Problems of Village Life. By E. N. Bennett, M.A. London: Williams & Norgate. 1s. net.

"We have not yet as a nation learnt the true value of our fertile fields and the men who cultivate them," states Mr. E. N. Bennett in the preface of a deeply interesting volume which has been added to the Home University Library. Mr. Bennett writes as one who not only knows the things he writes about, but has thought over the problems of English life and felt their urgency. "Nowhere in Europe is so large a proportion of the population permanently divorced from the land; nowhere else is farming carried on by such loose and careless methods." The author proceeds to show how this has been brought about, what evils result from it, and how, in a measure, the present state of things may be remedied—even those who may not agree with his remedial methods will find much food for thought in the facts of village life he places before them. "The hopelessness and landlessness" of present-day village life, the author traces to the "Feudal System, the Enclosure Acts, and the many Acts of regulation and repression which a small fraction of the nation have succeeded in putting on the Statute Book of the realm." Further on he writes, "The central fact in the mind of any land reformer must inevitably be that the monopolisation of our English land was brought about entirely by a long series of legal enactments: the central purpose, that wrongs inflicted by law can be, and must be, remedied by law."

Speaking of the peasant risings of the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries, Mr. Bennett points out that the main causes of failure were the absence of able leaders and no effective combination between the disturbed areas. He also reminds us that "never once in the whole course of English history did the monarch come forward to espouse the just rights of the poor villagers." The clergy with a few exceptions, generally supported the manorial lords rather than the people. In 1377 we find "the men of the Holy Church" uniting with the manorial lords in a protest against the growing power of "the villains." In 1830 we find—but let the writer himself speak—"The rioters described by The Times (December 6, 1830) as 'industrious, kind-hearted, but broken-hearted beings, exasperated into madness by insufficient food and clothing,' were treated with a harshness which eighty-three years afterwards is scarcely conceivable. No life had been taken during the 'Swing Riots,' nevertheless nine men and boys were hanged, at least 450 men and boys were transported, and 400 suffered imprisonment in the local gaols. . . . The Cathedral clergy at Winchester refused to sign the great petition for a merciful mitigation of these inhuman penalties."

Speaking of rural England to-day, Mr. Bennett points out that "the highest types of farming cannot well exist side by side with extensive game preservation." He also points out that the influence of the landlord, both for good and evil, is vastly increased by the preponderance of his class upon the local bench and on the County Council. The County Council cannot be regarded as a democratic body, while it is practically impossible for a labourer or any but the largest farmers to belong to it, yet to this very body was entrusted the administration of the Small Holdings Act. Is it surprising that in five years since the Act came into force only 12,192 of the 23,122 "approved applicants" have been actually placed on the land? And, though the Act "provides facilities and encouragement" to County Councils willing to undertake the formation of "Land" and "Credit" banks—such banks as have succeeded in Ireland and the Continent—"yet not a single County Council in England appears to have made any effort to establish such a means of providing the necessary capital for the poor men whose applications have been ruthlessly rejected."

Though English farming may be somewhat handicapped by the fact that landlords, clergy, farmers, and labourers have all to derive their support from the soil, still Mr. Bennett thinks the main factor is "the absence of serious purpose in the pursuit of agriculture. . . . With a less fertile soil, a similar wage bill, lower prices for produce, a worse climate and Free Trade in food stuffs, agriculture in Denmark is infinitely more prosperous than it is in England. . . . The cultivated land of England and Wales is worked by twenty-eight males per square mile (Census, 1901). If we used our land like that of Belgium with her seventy-two workers per square mile, we should increase our rural population by nearly two millions."

The writer touches on many causes contributing to the "Rural exodus," but chief among them he puts the poverty of the agricultural labourer; during forty years his wages have remained practically stationary, while the cost of living has greatly increased during the last twenty years. At the present moment 60 per cent. of our agricultural labourers in England are receiving less than 18s. a week all included. Overcrowding is by no means unknown in the depopulated country districts, and with malnutrition aids in lowering the standard of rural health. The dulness of the country, the lack of village dances and village music are traced to Puritan influences. May not this lack of self-expression and appreciation of country interests be in part due to compulsory education based on urban rather than rural ideals—also to the direct influence of urban-trained teachers to whom looking in shop windows is more thrilling than a country walk? Our elementary education has atrophied rather than aided self-expression; while in towns, where people have not even to invent their amusements, but have them ready made in the music-hall or picture palace, self-expression and originality are at a discount. In Ireland this "dulness of the country" is being faced by that "apostle of rural self-help," Sir Horace Plunkett and the "United Irishwomen." The Irish Co-operative movement set itself to "establish on an improved economic basis a higher and more satisfying home life in rural Ireland." While the practice and business of farming has been revolutionised by the Irish Agricultural Organisation, the reconstruction of the social life of the country can only be brought about by the co-operation of women, labourers, and farmers' wives as well as women of leisure, and for this purpose "the United Irishwomen" banded themselves together.

The author has many wise things to say of village politics, village education, and village religion. "The Clergy are ready enough to give alms, but they do not challenge the vicious system of inadequate wages eked out by charity. . . . it is not personal charity which the neglected labourer primarily requires, but social justice." For Mr. Bennett the solution of many village problems lies in land nationalisation by gradual purchase, a minimum wage, and the compulsory provision of cottages. As we lay down this vigorous book, the wonder grows how a really great people can have neglected this rural problem for so long.

G. A.

OUR TASK IN INDIA. By Bernard Lucas. London: Macmillan & Co. 2s. 6d. net.

MR. LUCAS has written a deeply religious book—in the circumstances it may also be called a courageous book—on missionary problems in India. It has become clear to him through long experience that the Indian mind is hostile not so much to the spirit of Christianity as to the forms of doctrine and ritual in which it is presented. What has been taken to India is not so much the passion of the Gospel in all its primitive power, as a special type of religion in the form in which it has been conceived by Western minds and defined in Western categories of thought. The consequence is that it is looked upon entirely as an alien product, the badge of the foreigner, the religion of the governing classes. Mr. Lucas is convinced that little progress can be made until these false associations are surmounted and forgotten, and the Indian mind is given liberty to face questions of thought and observance in ways which are natural to itself. Believing as he does that Christianity is a missionary religion, with a message of glad tidings for the uttermost parts of the earth, he cannot solve the problem simply by withdrawing from the field, and plead, as some people are inclined to do, that in India we have no religious duty at all. He is thus led to make a distinction, which dominates the whole of his discussion of the subject, between what he calls proselytism and evangelism. Put very briefly, the former word signifies the acceptance of our own theological views and the advancement of our own ecclesiastical denomination as an inseparable part of missionary effort and the standard by which its success is to be judged. Evangelism, on the other hand, lays chief stress upon the quickening of life, and in comparison with that supreme end it regards ecclesiastical moulds as quite secondary. "The evangelist," Mr. Lucas writes, "may have a very definite creed of his own, but he never seeks to impose it upon another at the expense of whatever truth there may be in that other's own creed. His chief concern is not the accessions to his own theological or ecclesiastical order which he may gain, but the reception of the spiritual life and thought and feeling which he enjoys, and of which others may be in need. "It is, of course, much easier to hold these two things apart, like logical opposites, in a book than in real life; but Mr. Lucas has emphasised a danger which is as grave in the churches at home as in the foreign field; and his whole treatment of the theme is illumined by the beautiful style and the fine sincerity of feeling with which we are familiar in his other writings. Incidentally the book contains a good deal of acute criticism of the sources of failure and disappointment in the Indian mission field. The burden of its message is this: the Western missionary must concentrate upon the task of imparting an experience which the Hindu mind will then interpret for itself. His ministry must be primarily religious and only secondarily intellectual. This, Mr. Lucas is careful to point out, is not the negation of theology. It is only the recognition of its subordinate place in the work of propagating religion.

THEOLOGICAL SYMBOLICS. By Charles A. Briggs, D.D., D.Litt. T. & T. Clark. 10s. 6d.

THIS volume, by the late Dr. C. A. Briggs, is a most useful addition to the International Theological Library, of which he was joint editor. Whatever value may be attached to creeds and confessions nowadays, the story of the effort which they represent to express the Christian faith in a form of words is full of interest and impressiveness. Dr. Briggs has passed under review the symbolics of Christendom from the "Apostle's Creed" to the most important theological pronouncement of modern times, tracing their origin, indicating the truths they were meant to embody, or the heresies they were meant to withstand, and showing where, in his opinion, they erred by going to one extreme or the other. He has done all this with great learning and admirable precision and clearness of language; and also, as a rule, with a fine independence of judgment and catholicity of spirit. In comparing Romanist and Protestant doctrine he has shown remarkable impartiality, and, Protestant as he was, he has decided again and again in favour of the Romanist point of view. His book, therefore, apart from its special purpose, should have some effect as an irenic, helping one half of Christendom to understand and appreciate the other. This is all to the good, but, unfortunately, his fairness as regards the Church of Rome is balanced by what seems to us a good deal of unfairness towards some Protestant communions. Thus he lays it down that "If any religious body rejects the Christian sacraments, or an ordained ministry in Apostolic succession, it may be Christian in other respects, but it is not part of the organism of Christianity." It is evident that Dr. Briggs' conception of the "organism of Christianity" was somewhat High Church and exclusive; and it is an interesting question as to how far even the bodies whose participation in this organism he contemplated would agree as to the number and character of the sacraments, the kind of ordination, and the meaning of Apostolic succession. With regard to Unitarianism he expresses himself very decidedly. "It is," he says, "outside of historic Christianity, because it denies the essential doctrines as to the divinity of Christ and the Holy Trinity." But every student of dogma knows that many doctrines once deemed essential are considered so no longer; and may not this yet be the case with the doctrines as to the deity of Christ and the Trinity? The truth is there are no essential doctrines of historic Christianity; what is essential is its spirit. This does not mean that doctrines are of no importance—far otherwise—but it does mean that they are not to be made a test of Christian fellowship. Strangely enough, it is the divisions of Christendom that its symbolics emphasise; its unity is best revealed in its prayers and hymns, and other devotional utterances.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD:—Essays in Faith and Immortality: George Tyrrell. 5s. net.

MESSRS. MAX GOSCHEN, LTD.:—Judaism and Saint Paul: C. G. Montefiore. 2s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON:—Christianity and the Commonplace: The Rev. L. G. Broughton, D.D. Handicapped: David Lyall. 5s.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS:—Nazareth and the Beginnings of Christianity: Champlin Burrage, B.Litt. 3s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE:—The Early Development of Mohammedanism: D. S. Margoliouth, D.Litt. 6s. net. The Spiritual Message of Dante: Rt. Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter. 5s. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Contemporary Review, Nineteenth Century, The Vineyard, Cornhill Magazine, Expository Times, The Poetry Review.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

SPRING SUITS.

WHEN the first really warm spring weather comes, when the crocuses have faded, and the hyacinths are peeping red, pink, and white through the green wrappings that have so long protected them, when we begin to find our winter coats heavy and woollen gloves an incumbrance, there will be a great many changes to notice in the animal world, changes of fur and feathers for one thing. You know how, when the sun shines hot at noon on a still day in March, the humane driver lets his horse take it rather gently, even on the levels, because he still has his winter coat on. Other domestic animals have thicker coats in the cold season, and in some cases the colouring slightly varies.

If we want to see marked seasonal changes we must go to wild life. The most striking example in the matter of fur is to be found in the stoat, a creature about half the size of a rabbit, and its dreaded foe. In winter the stoat wears a white coat in which he can steal unnoticed over the snow, after mice, rats, rabbits, and birds. So far as I know, the stoat is the only animal which, with its change of coat, takes a new name. When white it is often called the ermine. Just one portion of its body remains dark—a couple or so of inches at the extremity of the tail remains a beautiful glossy black. You have often seen these tails sewn at intervals on the pure white fur known as ermine, which was formerly the insignia of royalty, and still forms part of the official dress of judges and magistrates.

This white fur is longer, thicker, and finer than the fawn or cinnamon brown fur which is already beginning to take its place on the upper parts of the stoat's body; the under parts remain white all the year round.

It is a fierce little creature, not at all easy to tame in captivity, but handsome and brave. Last March I saw one which was in a state of change, its upper parts being a mixed white and brown. It was coming past me through a small wood holding a dead pied wagtail in its mouth. It soon disappeared into a hole under the thick projecting roots of a large tree. I followed and stood looking down into the hole, which was not unlike a rabbit's burrow, only a great deal smaller. Soon I saw a whitish head and a pair of bright eyes appear near the entrance. I moved a little nearer, when the stoat instantly began to jerk its body forward with a sort of lunging movement, and uttered an unearthly cry, something between a shrill scream and a short harsh bark. Its eyes blazed, and it looked so like springing at me that I drew back. Each time I went forward it was ready for me, until finally I left it in peace.

Among common British sea birds it is the seagull which makes the most marked change in its dress. It is so marked a change that some people think the gull which they throw scraps to in winter is not the same kind as the one they see sitting on the dancing waves in summer. This is the black-headed gull, by far the commonest of those which visit us inland. Its other name, or rather one of its half-score names, is brown-headed gull, and this name fits it best; for the head and neck are brown, not black, in summer, and white in winter. No other gull wears a chocolate brown head.

You may say to yourself: "That is very simple. Now I shall always know a brown-headed gull." No, you won't. It is not nearly so simple as that. Unless you are a good observer, and fond of difficult tasks, you had better leave the study of gulls to those who enjoy taking trouble, for it is only when the brown-headed gulls are quite grown up, perhaps at the age of four or five years, that both he and she wear the distinct all-brown hood. While they are immature, their heads only take on a slight mottling of greyish brown or pale brown, so pale at times that you hardly see it unless you are near. To puzzle you further, these are not the only gulls which have mottled brownish head markings. Several other gulls show them, notably the herring gull when immature.

The mature brown-headed gull changes its shoes and stockings as well as its hood in spring, for the winter colour of the feet and legs is vermilion; in summer they are more purplish red. The immature birds do not have red feet at any time.

Many other sea birds change the colour of certain parts in spring. The white throat of the guillemot turns brown; the razorbill puts a beautiful greenish sheen on his back when the breeding season comes, and exchanges his white throat and cheeks for velvety brown ones. When the curlews go inland to breed they wear darker plumage than in winter.

The cormorant has a curious way of adorning himself for the breeding season. He lengthens the feathers on his head to form a crest, and low down on his thighs—if a bird may be said to have thighs—he puts white patches that look absurdly like side pockets. The shag, or green cormorant, also smartens himself up with a crest in spring, but omits the side pockets. His crest is very jaunty, and either sticks up straight and high, or is curved forward. This feature together with its smaller size helps us to distinguish it from the common cormorant, which does not erect its crest in this way.

The bird which makes the most wholesale change of plumage when breeding time comes is the mallard, or male wild duck. But he waits until May before he makes the change. Then it is as if he said to himself, "I'll put on a dress so like my wife's that our own ducklings will hardly know us apart. I'll get rid of the lovely green velvet head and neck feathers which I have worn all winter, also those chestnut ones on my breast, and I'll take off the white collar which so sets off my green neck. Other of my white feathers shall go, but I can keep the handsome patch of greenish blue on my side which I am told is called a speculum, for my wife wears one always. For the rest, I will replace my gay plumage with a suit of mottled browns and buffs like hers, and when we are as much alike as a pair of water hens we will have a pleasant time among the reed beds with the children."

If you do not know a mallard in his beautiful winter dress, and are not near any water which he frequents, nor any museum in which you can see him stuffed, you must look at the poulterers' shops, where at this time of year these birds are usually to be seen hanging in pairs, so you can see at a glance how sober her plumage is when compared with his.

One other bird I will mention, the gay chaffinch. Already the cock-bird is beginning to show the bright slate-blue feathers of spring on his dainty head. All winter they have been of a dull, rufous tinge. When you disturb him in his favourite occupation of helping the sparrows to pick grains from the horse droppings on the road, he will erect that blue crest. It is his way of frowning to show displeasure.

EMILY NEWLING.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

MR. S. W. PRESTON.

WE regret to announce the death of Mr. S. W. Preston, which took place on Wednesday at Hampstead at the age of 92. Mr. Stanton William Preston was born in London in 1821, and was the third son of Henry John Preston and his wife Sarah Chamberlain. Mr. Stanton Preston, with his brothers, was among the first boys educated at University College School. As a young man he entered his father's business, which was that of a wholesale druggist. Owing to ill-health he was compelled to retire from active work, and with his wife and children spent some time abroad and then passed some years in a quiet country life at Evesham and Taunton. Having recovered his health, and feeling the necessity of again using his powers of work, he undertook the responsible post of Clerk to the Carpenters' Company, with which Guild his family had many intimate associations. This position he occupied until 1901, when he was presented on his retirement with a handsome service of plate. Mr. Preston was throughout his life a consistent Unitarian and devoted much time and energy to the cause in which he took so profound an interest. He was for many years a member of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and served on its executive committee from 1881 to 1912, when he retired owing to old age. Mr. Preston and the late Mr. David Martineau were the principal founders of the Mansford-street Church and Mission, which was the continuation of the old mission at Spicer-street. To this work he was specially devoted, giving to it not only much personal service but also assisting it financially. Originally a Liberal in politics, he became a Unionist when the split on Home Rule took place, and even to the last showed the greatest interest in political matters. Mr. Preston married in 1845 Ellen Harben, one of whose sisters had married Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, father of the present Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain. The former being brother to Mr. Stanton Preston's mother, there was a double relationship with the Chamberlain family. Mr. Preston had three daughters, two of whom still survive. In spite of his great age, he retained his faculties undimmed to the end, and was able to enjoy the years left to him after giving up active work, which were cheered by the companionship of his devoted unmarried daughter.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

DR. ORCHARD AT ENFIELD.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

PERHAPS some of our readers may like to know something of this young minister, whose services are so much in requisition throughout the country, and who has recently declined the invitation to become Dr. Hunter's successor at Glasgow. For a while the suspicion of heresy hung about him, but his religious earnestness was so convincing that he gained the full confidence of his own Presbytery.

A long tram-ride took us to Enfield, a new and growing suburb. The church is new and spacious, without pews. There are about 450 chairs in the body, all numbered, and a gallery at the end containing about 100 more. A fine organ occupies the place usually assigned to the altar, but the manual is at one side opposite the pulpit, with the reading desk in the centre. The organist, clad in robes, was already at his post fifteen minutes before the service began, playing slow sweet music. The whole of the musical service was conducted in that slow time so dear to the Scottish religious mind. The hymns included "When wilt thou save the people" and Symond's "These things shall be," indicating the nature of the discourse, and Dr. Dearmer's Social Litany. "Jesus born in poverty, Jesus born to bring peace among men, Jesus, workman of Nazareth. Have mercy upon us, &c.," was also recited. Dr. Orchard is rather under the middle height, and his well-knit figure looked quite diminutive at the desk. Fair in face, square browed, firm mouth and chin, his voice clear, a little bit hard, but with tender notes that come out as the soul is aroused. But all these details are soon forgotten as the service advances, especially when the sermon begins, and the preacher gets hold of the crowded congregation. There is no text, but the subject is announced—The Christian Consciousness and the Social Question. It is pointed out that the subject is justified, as religion only arises as man becomes a social being. The Prophets were all social reformers, while Jesus was practically revolutionary in his teaching. Then the present social conditions were briefly sketched. The differences between primitive and modern life were contrasted. Then perhaps all were poor, but the little they had the people were sure of. Now there was great affluence among the few, while at the other end there were millions leading degraded lives, and there was no security for a continuity of employment. The proposed remedies were glanced at one by one, and all declared to be unworkable, simply doctrinaire. There is competition for material good to-day, said the preacher, and we are all atheists, for we have lost faith, and the mechanical theories of the universe now prevalent yield no God. What was his solution? What he had to say might sound childish, but it was the best he had to offer. Their religion must become real, the methods of Jesus must be adopted; they must pray the all Father to heal their differences, and then unitedly they must seek to establish the Kingdom of Love.

The church is unendowed, and the management takes the public into its confidence by publishing a card stating the weekly expenditure and the amount derived from pew rents and offertory.

What then of the minister's theological position? We suggest it with all diffidence. Dr. Orchard is fully abreast of modern thought. He is familiar with and can expound all the philosophies. But he will tell you that you can put questions to every one of them that cannot be answered, and the same with theologies. There remains, then, the great central fact of Jesus, and the influence of his teaching. If we accept that our souls find rest, and therein lies its justification. The large demand for Dr. Orchard's services is the public response.

THOMAS HAWKSLEY MEMORIAL LECTURE.

WE are indebted to the High Pavement Chapel Chronicle, Nottingham, for the following account of the first of the "Thomas Hawksley Memorial Lectures," which was delivered in the large lecture theatre of the University College on Wednesday, February 11, by Mr. Edward Ellington, Past-President of the Institute of Mechanical Engineers. "Mr. Ellington prefaced his address with a brief outline of the life and work of the late Mr. Thomas Hawksley, in memory of whom the new lecture fund has been established by his son, Mr. Charles Hawksley, of London. As Nottingham was his birthplace, and as he was for more than 60 years a member of the High Pavement congregation, a few notes on the life of Thomas Hawksley will be of interest to our readers. He was the son of a manufacturer in Nottingham, and was born at Arnold on July 12, 1807. Educated at the old Grammar School, under Dr. Wood, he was articled in 1822 to an architect and surveyor in Nottingham, but continued to pursue his favourite studies with a view to qualifying, later, for work of an engineering character, and in a very few years had advanced to the front ranks of the engineering profession. The supply of water to Nottingham at this time being of a very meagre and intermittent character, Parliamentary powers were secured for the construction of the Trent Water Works, and it was to Mr. Hawksley (then 25 years of age) that the work was entrusted. So promptly did he act, and with such marked skill and ability, that within one year the works were completed. He remained with the company as engineer until the Corporation took over the management of the water supply in 1879. He was further appointed engineer to the Nottingham Gas Works, designing and constructing the works at Basford (1855), and continued as engineer to the company until 1874, when the undertaking was transferred to the Corporation. This city is indebted to him, also, for his promotion of the 'Nottingham Inclosure Act,' by which the rights of the householders in the matter of the 900 acres of land known as Mapperley Plains and Nottingham Forest were established. He should be gratefully remembered, too, for his erection, in 1832, of a cholera hospital for Nottingham. In 1852 Mr. Hawksley removed to London, and he worked thereafter from that centre until his death on September 15, 1893. It is impossible in this short note to give any adequate idea of the extent of his activities. He constructed over 150 water-works in Great Britain, and in many of the chief cities in other parts of the world; he built many gas works at home and abroad; he directed and carried out sewage works and main-drainage schemes for many towns. He held the post of President, both in the Institute of Civil Engineers and in the Institute of Mechanical Engineers and received during his life many other high honours. Strong in body and mind, he accomplished an immense amount of work. He was liberal and kindly in his dealings, loyal in his friendships, of marked uprightness and integrity, and, as an employer, generous to a degree. Of his numerous family, his son, Charles Hawksley, who was taken into partnership with him in 1866, and who still carries on the work of the firm, is better known to us at the High Pavement as Past-President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and a large-hearted friend whose generosity has advanced many a good cause among the churches of our faith."

WINIFRED HOUSE.

INVALID CHILDREN'S HOME.

THE twenty-third annual meeting was held at the Home on Tuesday, March 3. Mrs. Sydney Martineau was in the chair, and there was a good attendance.

The annual report, read by Mr. Ion Pritchard, the hon. secretary, states there are 42 patients under the care of the Home, 25 of whom have been received during the year. The patients, generally, apart from their complaints, have enjoyed good health, but there have been times of anxiety and strain caused first by special cases of illness. Dr. Clifford Pritchard has commenced a second course of nursing lectures to the nurses. During the summer and autumn the children have been able to spend the greater part of the day out of doors, taking all their meals in the garden. At times friends at a distance express a wish that the Home should be removed into the country away from the town surroundings. In some respects this might be a good thing, but it would be difficult to find a healthier looking group of little ones if we are to judge from the faces of the children when at play or in class in the open air. The balance sheet shows that the invested funds of the Home amount to £1,898 10s. 6d. There is an increase due to a legacy of £500 left by the late Mr. Frederick Nettlefold, one of the best friends the Home has had. Without this generous gift, which has been added to the invested funds, the year's expenditure would have exceeded the receipts by £89 19s. 11d.

Mrs. Martineau, in moving the adoption of the report, spoke with much earnestness on the value of the Home to children-leaving hospital, and requiring more care and attention than could be obtained in poor homes, closing her remarks by referring to the loving spirit of Aunt Amy—the late Miss Marian Pritchard—which seemed to pervade the Home and inspire the work of all connected with it.

Dr. Langton Hower emphasised the point of the lengthened stay of so many children, sometimes extending to two or three years, a stay which in tubercular and spinal cases was absolutely necessary if permanent amelioration is to be obtained.

Mrs. Wooding moved a resolution of acknowledgment and thanks to the medical and nursing staff, congratulating the Home on Mr. Mower White, surgeon of the Great Northern Hospital, having consented to act as consultant.

Dr. Lionel Tayler, in seconding, dwelt on the benefit the children derived from the Home and its discipline in respect to both health and conduct, the influence of which would be felt in their own homes on their return.

The appointment of the Committee and officers was moved by Mr. Young, and seconded by Miss Spiller.

Miss Phillips acknowledged the vote of thanks. The meeting closed with an expression of thanks to Mrs. Sydney Martineau.

THE LATE EDWIN GINN.

By the death of Edwin Ginn, who established the World Peace Foundation four years ago, Boston, and indeed America, has lost one of its most public-spirited men. His large fortune was accumulated as a publisher chiefly of educational books, and in his early days he had many difficulties to face which, without a spirit of tireless energy and enterprise, could not have been overcome. He was, says Mr. Edwin Mead, himself one of the ablest leaders of the Peace Movement in the United States, writing in Unity, "profoundly affected by Dr. Hale and his devotion to international justice." He was at the Mohonk Arbitration Conference, that inspiring nursery of so much of potency to the peace cause in America, as early as 1897. He was there again in 1899, and again in 1901, and in this latter year made his first speech there." From that time he definitely set his face against war, and supported the Peace Movement on a generous scale, finally ending up by establishing a bureau devoted to the furtherance of peace which he endowed with $50,000 a year, and which has already done much to advance the cause. Mr. Norman Angell has recently become identified with the Foundation, and will spend a part of each year in the United States. In his will Mr. Ginn left a million dollars to help on the good work, and has not forgotten to emphasise the fundamentals of the Peace Movement which, he says, must begin in the nursery. In addition to all this, Mr. Ginn built a model tenement house of 305 rooms for poor people, and in many other ways made his generosity felt. He loved the old traditions of Boston, and was the President of the Boston Common Society. He attended Dr. Crother's church at Cambridge, where he will be greatly missed.

On Thursday, 26th ult., the Rev. H. S. McClelland, of Finchley, delivered an address in connection with the Liberal Christian League, on "The Religious Revolution," at a room in Islington Chapel kindly lent for the occasion. There was a full attendance, and many questions were asked. Beginning on March 9 there will be a five days' mission at the League House, Leytonstone, conducted by the Rev. G. T. Sadler, of Wimbledon, who has kindly volunteered his services. The subjects to be treated are "God," "Jesus," "Righteousness," "Poverty," "Immortality." The spring meetings of the League are to be held in Liverpool in the third week in May, and arrangements are in promising progress.

THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT.

THE USE AND ABUSE OF THE CINEMATOGRAPH.

Speaking at a dinner of the Cinematograph Exhibitions' Association on Tuesday last, Mr. Ellis Griffith, M.P., Under-Secretary for the Home Office, stated that "whereas seven years ago 900 people were employed in the industry, there were now 120,000. There were at present about 5,000 picture theatres in the country, and the number of people who paid for admission every week was about 7,000,000." In some districts the effect upon young people who attend the theatres has undoubtedly been bad. Where definite investigation has been made, as at Manchester, into the number of school children who attended, it was found that many went "to the pictures" every night of the week, others two or three times, others only once. And although it seems quite clear that in the case of many young people of school age the cinema has been a demoralising influence, there is no inherent reason why this marvellous invention should so often have been devoted to merely trivial, if not pernicious, uses.

* * *

It is well to remember that it has, even as it is, not been entirely given over to light and frivolous purposes. Those who attended the Health Exhibition at Darmstadt two years ago, or the Old-and-New Cologne Exhibition last summer will remember that there were cinematographic demonstrations intended to teach lessons in sanitation and hygiene. Surgical and medical instruction are now frequently given with the aid of cinematograph films, which it is proved can be used not only for purposes of scientific demonstration, but as an aid to investigation. The most interesting example which the present writer happens to have heard of is that of a Danish professor who has been trying to record the Aurora Borealis in motion upon a celluloid film. The cinema has also been used as an advertising medium, an aid to marksmanship, a means of detecting crime, a method of teaching lip-reading to the deaf, and of giving instruction in motor-bus driving, dancing, and football. It has been used as a help to the study of certain complicated industrial processes, and a means of exposing fraudulent spiritualistic performances.

* * *

FINALLY, what will be good news to those who want to rescue the cinematograph from the hands of the light-minded or the mere dividend hunter is that an international committee has been formed in London to study the educational uses to which the cinema may be put, and to mobilise the people who are trying to develop the mind of youth to insist on having at least their fair share of the use of the cinematograph for purposes of real instruction. Word has also recently come to hand of a new invention which may perhaps change the whole position. A machine called the "Oko" has been invented, which not only takes the photographs but afterwards throws them on the screen. The whole outfit of this new cinema in miniature, including appliances for developing and printing the films, does not weigh more than seven pounds, and does not occupy more space than an ordinary snap-shot camera. Those of us who object to the pictures provided at the public theatres can now easily make better ones ourselves, and exhibit them to our own and our neighbour's children, while the enthusiastic teacher can procure illustrations taken from life to set off instruction in geography, or nature-study, and many other subjects.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Billingshurst.—On Tuesday evening, February 24, a lecture on "Portugal and Spain" was delivered at the Unitarian Church by the Rev. Samuel Burrows, of Hastings, the chair being taken by Mr. Hood, of Horsham.

Birmingham.—The 798th and annual meeting of the Monthly Meeting of Protestant Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire and Neighbouring Counties was held at the Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, on Tuesday, February 24, the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas presiding. There were present fifteen ministers and seven ministers' wives. The Rev. I. Wrigley, secretary and treasurer, read the report and balance-sheet. There had been six meetings during the year with an average attendance of ten members, besides visitors. At five of these meetings essays or addresses had been given, whilst at Evesham the usual service had been held. They had lost two of their members (Messrs. Tranter and Clarke) by death and two by removal. On the other hand, there had been a gain of three new members. The roll of members, consisting of eighteen names in all, was read. Mr. Wrigley was re-elected Secretary and Treasurer (for the tenth year) and the Rev. E. Glyn Evans was appointed auditor. Mr. H. G. Wood, M.A., of Woodbrooke Settlement, Birmingham, then read a paper on "The Historicity of Jesus and its importance for Faith." Tea was kindly provided by the friends of the Old Meeting Church, in the course of which the Rev. Joseph Wood voiced the thanks of the meeting to Mr. Wood for his very able paper.

Bury: Chesham.—The Rev. J. M. Bass, M.A., after a ministry of nearly sixteen years at Chesham, has resigned, having accepted a unanimous invitation to become minister of Westgate Chapel, Wakefield.

Halifax.—The Rev. J. Mason Bass, M.A., of Chesham, Bury, has accepted the unanimous invitation of the Westgate Chapel congregation.

Leeds.—A special meeting of the Mill Hill Church congregation was held in the Priestley Hall on Tuesday, February 10, Alderman Lupton presiding, when a recommendation from the Chapel Committee that an invitation be sent to the National Conference of Unitarian, Liberal Christian, Free Christian, Presbyterian, and other non-subscribing or kindred congregations, to hold its Triennial Meeting in Leeds in 1915, was considered. In moving a resolution that the recommendation be confirmed, the Chairman explained the constitution and objects of the National Conference, and said the Chapel Committee unanimously thought it very desirable that, twenty-six years having elapsed since a meeting of it was held in Leeds, one should be held again. If the resolution was carried, the Chapel Committee proposed the appointment of a Special Committee to carry it out. Mr. C. H. Boyle seconded the resolution, Mr. Grosvenor Talbot and the Rev. R. Nicol Cross supported, and it was carried unanimously.

London B.O.B.—On Sunday last the London Battalion paraded under Major Bartram for service at the New Gravel Pit Church, Hackney. A record muster of 155 was on parade, the new companies from Limehouse and Hackney showing up well, the other companies present being from Stamford-street, Rhyl-street, Mansford-street, Essex Church, and Dingley-place. The Chaplain of the Hackney Company, the Rev. Bertram Lister, conducted the service, in which the boys heartily joined.

London: Newington Green.—The congregation and Sunday school have suffered a great loss in the death of Miss Maud Turner, daughter of Mr. F. W. Turner. A correspondent sends the following tribute to her memory: "For years a devoted assistant of her father's in the Newington Green Chapel Sunday school, where she has not rarely herself taken whole services and preached excellent sermons, she was beloved of many hundreds of London's school children. She trained many choirs of girls, and triumphantly carried off the 'banners' in open competition with other school choirs. A good musician, a good linguist, and also a good mathematician—a most unusual combination—she was also an excellent organiser of crowds and functions, as well as a housekeeper of more than usual ability. Her home for little girls in Sussex, with her friend, Miss Ethel Robinson, where she did the housekeeping, and was a loving and wise 'mother' to the little girls under her charge, was a pattern of all a home for little children should be, as those who know it can testify. Her influence for good, and the memory of her happy cheerfulness, will be always a benefit in many young lives."

London Sunday-school Society.—The annual meeting of the London Sunday-school Society was held at Essex Hall on Wednesday evening, the 4th inst., with the President, the Rev. Chas. Roper, B.A., in the chair. The President, in moving the adoption of the report, reviewed the various works and activities of the Society. His first words were in praise of the Secretary for the way in which he had carried out his duties. He also touched on ways in which the Society could be a means of forwarding the education of the Sunday-school teachers, and congratulated the Rev.

J. A. Pearson upon the way in which "Monthly Notes" had been produced and received. Mr. Ion Pritchard, in seconding the adoption of the report, said that on reading the report through he was convinced that the Society justified its existence. He also emphasised the need of country holidays, and said much in praise of the efficiency of Miss Angles, matron of the Southend Home. Mr. Harold Titford gave a concise and interesting paper on "Sunday-school Methods," which was followed by discussion, in which Mr. A. G. Tarrant, Mr. Carlier, the Rev. J. W. Pigott, Miss A. Withall, the Rev. F. Summers, the Rev. J. A. Pearson, Sister Seymour, and Mr. Howard Young took part. Mr. W. S. Tayler was elected President for the ensuing year, with Mr. Asquith Wooding as Hon. Secretary and Miss A. Withall as Treasurer.

Monton.—A presentation was made on February 24 to Mr. Herbert S. Rowley, in commemoration of his 25 years' faithful and efficient service as organist and choirmaster of Monton Unitarian Church. The presentation, which consisted of a gold watch and chain, and a purse of money, was made by Mr. George H. Leigh, on behalf of past and present members of the congregation.

Newport (I.W.).—On Monday, March 2, a social gathering was held in connection with the Unitarian Church, when an address was delivered by the Rev. T. P. Spedding. In opening the proceedings the minister, the Rev. J. Ruddle, read to the audience expressions of regret that they could not attend from Sir Edgar Chatfield-Clarke and Mr. Leslie Chatfield-Clarke.

Nottingham.—On Sunday, February 15, a special service was held at the High Pavement Chapel for old scholars, teachers, and others interested, the attendance numbering 300. It had been resolved to get together as many old scholars as could be found in Nottingham, and the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, the minister, in addressing them, spoke of the need of the church for the strength of strong men and women assured of the truth and power of the faith for which it stands, and claimed that none could serve the High Pavement Chapel in its work and worship better than those who had been taught in its schools, and had formed there sincere and lasting friendships. On the following Friday a social gathering for the old scholars was held in the schoolrooms, when 200 people were present, and a cordial welcome was given to the Rev. J. Harwood, and the Rev. W. E. Addis, former ministers of the chapel. After tea a meeting was held in the lower schoolroom, Mr. J. K. Wright being in the chair. A resolution was moved by Mr. Warren, advocating the formation of a High Pavement Old Scholars' and Teachers' Association. This was seconded by Mr. Burgess and carried, and a committee was appointed to draft a proposed constitution. Mr. Harwood and Mr. Addis then addressed the meeting, and in the course of the evening songs were rendered by Miss Proctor, Mr. Hunt, and Mr. Griffiths, all old scholars.

Walthamstow.—On Tuesday, February 24, the annual meeting in connection with the Unitarian Church was held, when encouraging reports were read and speeches delivered by Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Drummond, Mr. W. J. Noel, Sister Seymour, and the minister-in-charge, Mr. R. W. Sorensen. On Thursday, February 26, Mr. Ion Pritchard presented prizes and delivered an address to the Sunday scholars.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A MEMORIAL TO CANON BARNETT.

The proposed memorial to Canon Barnett, in addition to "Barnett House" at Oxford, is to take the form of a Barnett Memorial Fellowship, to be attached to Toynbee Hall. It is recommended that the Fellowship shall be held by a graduate of a University, who, while having a living connection with an industrial neighbourhood, will be able to bring a trained and sympathetic mind to bear upon his task. It is considered that the stipend should be £200 a year, with £50 a year for travelling and other expenses. A resolution approving of the proposal and welcoming the opportunity it afforded of strengthening the bond which Canon Barnett created between the Universities, the Settlements, and industrial neighbourhoods was passed at a meeting held at Toynbee Hall last week.

A NEW HARVARD PROFESSOR.

The Rev. Professor Kirsopp Lake, of Leyden, has been offered and has accepted the Professorship of Early Christianity at Harvard University. Mr. Lake was educated at St. Paul's School and Lincoln College, Oxford. He has investigated Greek MSS. at Mount Athos and other libraries, and is well-known as the author of several works of textual criticism. In 1904 he was appointed to the Chair of Early Christian Literature and New Testament exegesis at Leyden.

THE TRAFFIC IN OLD HORSES.

In furtherance of their tireless campaign on behalf of the worn-out horses which are taken over to the Continent in thousands every year to be brutally slaughtered, the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has been privately showing a film exposing the horrors of this hateful traffic. The pictures, as described by those who were invited to see them, are terrible, and reveal a state of things which it must be the earnest wish of every animal lover to put a stop to at the earliest possible moment. It was hoped that the Act of 1910 would end the barbarities which had aroused indignation in so many quarters, but this was not the case, and yet, as Mr. W. E. Norris recently wrote, "I do not believe there is a single decent Englishman who would not say that this traffic is a national disgrace which ought to be stopped." Colonel Hall-Walker's preventive Bill, which provides that it shall be illegal to export alive from this country any horse of a value of £10 or less, is to come up for second reading on April 3, and if he gets it through, we shall no longer have it on our conscience as a nation that we give up the faithful animals whom as English people we are supposed to value so highly to unnecessary torture and a cruel death.

THE CALCUTTA SCHOOL OF FINE ARTS.

The Paris correspondent of The Times sends a charming account of the examples of modern Indian art now on view at the Grand Palais, which makes us hope that these interesting pictures will be seen in London before they are taken back to India. They form part of the annual exhibition of the Société des Peintres Orientalistes Français, founded by Mr. E. B. Havell, which invited the Calcutta School of Fine Arts to fill a room, and thereby added immensely to the attraction of their own Salon. The principal of the Calcutta School, and the leader of the movement in favour of a return to the earlier Indian tradition, is Abanindra Nath Tagore. He is ably seconded by Gogonendra Nath Tagore, who appears to be endowed with much of the power of suggestion and sympathetic intuition which characterise his elder brother's work. They are nephews of Rabindranath Tagore, and one of the most inspired paintings now being shown in Paris symbolises the revival by their uncle of the flame of poetic tradition in India. "At the portal of an unlighted temple an aged Brahmin priest turns to greet the dawn, one rosy beam of which just touches the lintel of the doorway." This picture was presented to the poet in commemoration of his receiving the Nobel Prize for Literature.

SOUTH AFRICAN HISTORY.

The establishment of a Research Fellowship in South African History at Oxford opens up possibilities which appeal to the imagination. South Africa has made remarkable progress within a very short time, and the problems that lie before her are of such absorbing interest that any light which can be thrown upon the ideas and habits, both of the people of to-day and of an earlier generation, will be invaluable to the student. A great part of the history of South Africa exists merely in traditional form, and has been handed down orally by pioneers who knew well enough how to "rough it," but were unable to write, much less put down on paper a connected account of the circumstances of their lives. It is among their descendants, farmers for the most part, with the same incapacity for recording events, that the trained historian will have to go; and with sympathy, tact, and devotion to the interests of truth, he ought to acquire a vast amount of knowledge for the benefit of all engaged in the work of civilisation.

THACKERAY IN AMERICA.

Thackeray was almost as candid in recording his impressions of America as Charles Dickens, judging from some extracts from Major Lambert's collection of letters which have been published previous to their sale, though he does not seem to have dealt quite so maliciously with the people of the United States. "Now I have seen three great cities," he says in 1853, "Boston, New York, Philadelphia, I think I like them all mighty well. They seem to me not so civilised as our London, but more so than Manchester and Liverpool. At Boston is very good literate company indeed. It is like Edinburgh for that—a vast amount of Toryism and donnishness everywhere. That of New York the simplest and least pretentious, for it suffices that a man should keep a fine house, give parties, and have a daughter to get all the world to him. . . I believe I am popular, except at Boston among the newspaper men, who fired into me, but a great favourite with the monde there and elsewhere. Here in Philadelphia it is all praise and kindness. . . The prettiest girl in Philadelphia, poor soul, has read 'Vanity Fair' 12 times. I paid her a great big compliment yesterday about her good looks, and she turned round delighted to her friend and said, 'Ai must tallut,' that is something like the pronunciation."

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALY CONTRIBUTED

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

MARCH 7, 1914.

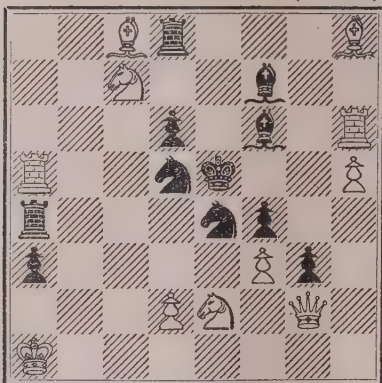

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 47.

A curiosity: being my first attempt at a two-mover in 1889.

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS (aged 15 years).

BLACK. (11 men.)

WHITE. (11 men.)

White to play and mate in two moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 45.

1. Q. R4 (key-move).

Correct solutions have been received from W. E. Arkell, E. Wright, Rev. B. C. Constable, A. J. Hamblin, A. Mielziner, A. S. Rodgers, E. C. (Highbury) also of No. 44, F. S. M. (Mayfield), Dr. Higginson, Geo. Ingledew (also Nos. 44 and 36).

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

E. W. E. (Finchley).—Thanks for promise. In No. 45, how do you mate after 1...K. K4? CHAS. WILLING (U.S.A.).—No. 43 correct.

W. T. M. (Sunderland).—No. 44 correct, but as to No. 45, where do you mate after 1...P. Q4?

W. E. ARKELL.—Post-cards preferred.

O. LUFTON.—The ranks are lettered from left to right (A to H), and the files are numbered upwards (1 to 8). Hence "d3" means White's Q3. Black's QB7 would be noted as "c2," and so on. This is far preferable to the clumsy English system, where every square has two names—a fruitful source of error.

"The Year-Book of Chess" (1913), (London, Frank Hollings, 7, Great Turnstile, Holborn, W.C.) is just out, price 3s. net, cloth. It is a comprehensive statement of chess all over the world during that year, and includes a Problem Section, which gives 40 of the leading prize-winners; tables, averages of masters, statistics, addresses, club directory, and epitome of progress all go to make up a useful book of reference. It is, indeed, the "Whitaker" of chess, and a most authoritative compendium of results of tournaments and matches. Owing to the Printers' strike at Leeds (where the book was prepared) it is late in its appearance. The Year-Book was founded by Mr. E. A. Michell in 1907, and has appeared annually ever since. The 1913 volume was produced by Mr. Hollings, who has acquired the entire rights.

National Conference.

APPEAL FOR £50,000
— FOR —
SUSTENTATION FUND.

FOURTEENTH LIST.

	£	s.	d.
Sir Thomas B. Bowring, London (2nd don.)	100	0	0
Mr. Wm. Long, Warrington	100	0	0
Anonymous (2nd don.)	50	0	0
Mr. Wm. J. Courtauld, Halstead	25	0	0
The Mayor of Leicester	10	10	0
Mr. Lewis Beard, Blackburn	10	0	0
Mrs. Deakin, Birmingham	10	0	0
Mr. W. H. Scott, Norwich	10	0	0
Miss Thornely, Altrincham (2nd don.)	5	10	0
Mrs. Ashton, Dukinfield	5	5	0
Mr. Fred. Denby Ashton, Dukinfield	5	5	0
Mr. Wm. Greenwood, Dukinfield	5	5	0
Mrs. Walter Mallett, Bath	5	5	0
Mr. H. K. Beale, Birmingham	5	0	0
Mr. Edwin Hill, Cheltenham	5	0	0
Miss Rowlands, Liscard	5	0	0
The Misses Watson, Evesham	5	0	0
Mr. Wm. Cartwright, Dukinfield	3	3	0
Mr. E. B. Broadrick, Dukinfield	3	3	0
Mr. Jas. Harrop, Dukinfield	2	2	0
Dr. Rayner, London	2	2	0
Dr. Robertson, Dukinfield	2	2	0
Smaller sums and Collections to be announced later	33	1	9
Total Donations promised (of which £500 is conditional on the £50,000 being secured by next Whituntide)	£45,903	19	6

Donors of Ten Guineas become Life Members of the Sustentation Fund.

Cheques should be crossed, made payable and forwarded to the Treasurer, Mr. F. W. MONKS, Stonecroft, Warrington.

All other communications should be addressed to the Hon. Sec., the Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A., 60, Howitt-road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.

March

- 8. Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.
- 15. Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.
- 22. Mr. W. HARRIS CROOK, of Manchester College, Oxford.
- 29. Morning, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON. Evening, Mr. EDWARD CAPLETON.

April

- 5. Rev. WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

BOOKS

EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY, TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE And for all other Exams.

Second-Hand at Half Prices.

New at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogues post free and state wants. Books bought. BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,

121/123, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCs.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh-street, Tavistock-square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

SUNNY South Coast Health Resort.—Ideal Winter Boarding House, Central, Garden, near Sea. Hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, electric light, and penny in slot gas fire in each bedroom. Three good reception rooms. Food Reform and ordinary diet.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

LEIGH-ON-SEA.—To Let, furnished Bedroom and Sitting-room, in pleasant situation. Private family. 10s. weekly. Address, "X," c/o Church Lending Library, Rectory Grove, Leigh-on-Sea, Essex.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C. (Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss OECIL GRADWELL. HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

HANDKERCHIEFS FROM IRELAND. Ladies' fine all-linen hemstitched Handkerchiefs. Size 12½ by 13 inches. 3/- per dozen; narrow hem. Postage 3d. Send for Free Catalogue. Catch the next post.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

IRISH PILLOW LINEN in bundles of remnants, sufficient to make six full-size Pillow Cases, only 6s. 6d. Postage 5d. extra. Genuine offer. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to offer and pay highest genuine prices. Note quotations: Up to 2s. 9d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 6s. 6d. on silver, 15s. on gold, 35s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel, post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Unquestionably the oldest and most reliable firm. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, March 7, 1914.

* Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3742.
NEW SERIES, No. 846.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

Judaism & St. Paul

By C. G. MONTEFIORE,
Author of "Outlines of Liberal Judaism."
Cr. 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

This volume consists of two essays :
on "The Genesis of the Religion of St. Paul" and on "The Relation of St. Paul to Liberal Judaism."

"The second of these essays is a discussion of what St. Paul has to say to those who, like the Author, range themselves under the banner of Liberal Judaism. The first is of more general interest and is indeed a close and illuminating piece of Pauline criticism."—The Times.

MAX GOSCHEN, LTD.,
20, Great Russell Street, W.C

Provincial Assembly of Presbyterian and Unitarian Ministers and Congregations of Lancashire and Cheshire.

THE PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY LECTURE FOR 1914

will be delivered in the

Small Concert Room, St. George's Hall,
LIVERPOOL,

on THURSDAY, MARCH 19,
by

SIR OLIVER LODGE, F.R.S.

Subject : "The Unseen Universe."

Chair to be taken at 7.45 p.m. by RICHARD D.
HOLT, Esq., M.P.

ADMISSION FREE.

H. E. DOWSON, B.A., } Hon.
N. ANDERTON, B.A., } Secs.

MANSFORD STREET CHURCH AND MISSION.

THE 25th Annual Meeting of the Subscribers and other friends of the Society will take place at

Mansford Street,

on TUESDAY, MARCH 17,

when the Chair will be taken by

The Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND,
M.A., LL.D., of Oxford.

Among other Speakers will be the four Missionary Ministers of the Society since its establishment in the present buildings :—

REV. H. GOW,
REV. W. G. CADMAN,
REV. J. ELLIS,
REV. G. COOPER.

— ALSO —

The Rev. F. K. FREESTON,
Mr. A. SAVAGE COOPER,
President, L.D.U.S.
and others.

Tea and Coffee, 7.30. Meeting, 8.15.

All friends of the Church and Mission are particularly urged to be present at this meeting, which marks the completion of a quarter of a century's work at Mansford Street.

The Sunday School Anniversary.

Services will be held on March 15th, and will be conducted by the Rev. H. Gow, at 3.15 and 7 o'clock.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a
Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20
Guineas per Term.

Headmaster : H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

Next Entrance Examination, April 3.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress : Miss
LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated
Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey,
Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to
the HEAD MISTRESS.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M.

Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—
Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road,
Maida-vale, W.

LIVERPOOL DISTRICT MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

SIMULTANEOUS COLLECTIONS

in support of the work of the Association will be held on Sunday, March 15, 1914, at all the places of worship in the district.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

will be held on Saturday Afternoon, March 14, at Hope Street Church Hall, at 4 p.m.

Reports of the work done during the year will be presented.

Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A., President.
KENNETH COOK, Treasurer.
Rev. H. D. ROBERTS, District Minister.
B. P. BURROUGHS, Secretary.

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

Lecture Hall adjoining 19, Tavistock Square, W.C.

On Sunday Evenings, January 11 to March
22, 1914, at 7 o'clock, a Course of Lectures on

The Three Objects of the Society

will be given.

Mar. 15. Theosophy and Religious Conversion.
L. HADEN GUEST.

Mar. 22. The Christ Drama according to the Gospel of St. John. D. N. DUNLOP.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS FOR THE NONCONFORMIST MINISTRY.

DR. WILLIAMS'S TRUSTEES offer for open competition, Undergraduate Scholarships, tenable in the University of Glasgow only; and Divinity Scholarships for Graduates, tenable in any approved School of Theology or University. The Scholarships are open to students of all Denominations preparing for the Nonconformist Ministry.
For particulars apply to the SECRETARY, Dr.
Williams's Library, Gordon-square, London,
W.C., before April 30 for Undergraduate Scholarships, and before May 30 for Graduate Scholarships.

SUSTENTATION FUND

FOR THE

Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

NOTICE.

SECRETARIES OF CONGREGA-TIONS desiring GRANTS from this Fund should write to me before March 31 for the necessary forms of application.

HAROLD F. PEARSON, Hon. Sec.,
22, College Hill, London, E.C.

A SERIES of WEEKLY MEETINGS for Prayer and Conference on the Women's Movement will be held at 92, St.

George's Square, S.W., every Wednesday, from March 25, at 8 o'clock. Full particulars and tickets from Miss LUCY GARDNER. Early application desirable as room is limited.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only,

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church),
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for March 15:

Morning: Is an Atonement necessary?

Evening: The Melting Pot (Mr. Zangwill's Play.)

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, March 15.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. R. W. SORENSEN; 7, Mr. P. CHALK.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. E. STANLEY RUSSELL.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15, Rev. H. Gow, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. H. E. B. SPEIGHT, M.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11, Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND, of Oxford; 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 3.15 and 7, Sunday School Anniversary, Rev. H. Gow, B.A.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Mr. W. H. SANDS.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER; and 7.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. A. J. HEALE; 6.30, Mr. R. W. SORENSEN.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSE, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30, Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GEORGE COVERDALE SHARPE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Church-gate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. REED, of Mossley.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing-street, 11.30, Rev. E. W. LUMMIS, M.A.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

(DEAN ROW, 10.45, and

STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GNEVER.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle-terrace, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.

GEE CROSS, 11, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN; 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Church of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. HAWKES.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. CYRIL FLOWER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. LEE.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11, Rev. RICHARD LEE; 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREA, M.A.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

DEATHS.

HADDON.—On March 7, at 20, St. Albans-road, Leicester, Anne Evans Haddon, eldest daughter of the late William Haddon, in her 78th year.

JEREMY.—On February 15, at a nursing home, London, Alfred Hutton Jeremy, elder son of the late Rev. D. D. Jeremy, aged 47. Interred at Bournemouth.

LOVE-GREEN.—On March 8, at Parkstone, Samuel Love-Green, late of Sevenoaks and Sanderstead, aged 76.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds of MSS. carefully and promptly copied.—Miss KENNEDY, 20, County Grove, Camberwell, S.E.

HOSPITAL SISTER seeks post as Amanuensis or Secretary to doctor, dentist, nursing home. Fluent German, some French.—W., 13, Hampstead Hill gardens, N.W.

LADY (middle-aged) seeks engagement as Travelling Companion or Housekeeper where maid is kept. Good manager, musical, some knowledge of French, fond of children.—E. A., c/o Rev. DENDY AGATE, Dunham-road, Altrincham, who will answer inquiries.

YOUNG LADY as Mother's Help. Salary £18—£20; baby two months, boy three years. Servant kept.—13, Lancaster-road, Brighton.

AU PAIR, at Easter.—Lady (28) seeks Holiday Engagement, any cap. Cert. French, German (Lit. and Com.), acquired abroad; Shorthand. Good walker, reader, pianist.—W., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

FULLY TRAINED NURSE would give services in return for three or four weeks' travel in the Summer.—Nurse MAGUIRE, High-street, Soham, Cambs.

PULPIT SUPPLY.

Rev. R. H. MAISTER, 96, Accomb-street, Greenheys, Manchester.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken. Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	163	BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
CHURCH MEMBERSHIP	165	A Study of French Civilization.	Liverpool and District
A NATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONGRESS	166	St. Basil	The Midland Christian Union
FRIEDRICH WICHELM FOERSTER.—II.	166	Some Account of Gothic Architecture in Spain	Royal Society for the Protection of Birds
		Publications Received	Flogging and the White Slave Traffic
			The Arrest of the Rev. J. S. Bowskill
CORRESPONDENCE :—		FOR THE CHILDREN :—	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES
Theism and Christian Tradition	168	Westward Ho !	NOTES AND JOTTINGS
Methods of Increasing Church Membership	168		OUR CHESS COLUMN

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

A DOCUMENT, emanating from a group of strong opponents of Women's Suffrage, has been issued to Nonconformist ministers, setting forth reasons why this particular question should not be introduced into religious assemblies. Apart from the general grounds of objection, with which most people are familiar, this protest rests on the contention that it is undesirable that religious bodies, which owe their unity "to concentration upon non-contentious objects, should be disturbed and distracted by political discussions." This raises once again the familiar problem of the relation between religion and politics, and of the extent to which the organised Christian conscience should interfere actively in questions upon which men of good judgment and high principle are sharply divided.

* * *

No one, we imagine, would really plead that religion has no concern with the practical interests of life, or that the adjective "political" makes anything taboo for the religious mind. The only question that can arise is in regard to the methods we employ in order to bring the personal or collective judgment of religion to bear upon the problems of the hour. Here, we think, there may be room for some revision of method. To avoid burning topics, because we are not all agreed, would be an act of cowardice unworthy of any church which desires to rise above moral mediocrity. But it does not follow that it is a good thing to borrow the weapons of political advocacy and to introduce keen party debates with a view to a majority vote into religious assemblies. Most of us have a very stupid confidence in the value of passing resolutions, regardless on the one hand of our own competence to pronounce upon intricate questions of legislation, and on the other of the feeling of soreness and dissatisfaction which is left with the defeated minority. Is it not possible for religious men to deliberate on difficult questions of public duty without passing resolutions at all, in simple reliance upon divine guidance, with every thought of victory for our own side entirely banished from our minds ?

* * *

HERE we have much to learn from the Society of Friends. No one will accuse them of indifference to social evils or of unpractical spiritual aloofness when great causes call for advocates and martyrs. But we believe that we are right in saying that they always deliberate without voting, and such a thing as victory for the majority is unknown among them ; and yet by the mysterious leadings of the Spirit they do arrive at a remarkable unanimity in judgment and policy. There is here a valuable suggestion of the right solution of this thorny question. There is no matter which affects the welfare of human beings, or is a cause of perplexity and division in the public conscience, which can be excluded from religious judgment. We cannot dismiss it from our minds, as something concerned with a lower order of being, when we join in worship or enter our religious assemblies. Everything that is political belongs to God, for it concerns the lives of his children. But in worship or the religious assembly we must leave behind us the heated atmosphere of the political world, its partisanship, its rhetorical arts, its passionate desire for victory. We ought not even to wish to pass resolutions or to win votes for our own side. The opportunity is one for quiet deliberation, for seeking for clear judgment, for trying to understand one another, for calm discussion in which advocacy has given place to something higher. If we have got beyond the point of desiring to use religion for our own purposes, and really believe that enlightenment and heavenly wisdom come to us through waiting upon God,—in a word, if our object is not to get our own way, but to listen to the heavenly voice, we shall be able to speak together in our religious assemblies about all the burning questions which distract men, without heat or bitterness and with a growing sense of harmony of soul and unity of purpose.

* * *

WE are aware that to many people what we have said will appear wildly unpractical, the mere dream of a religious sentimentalist. May we ask for a little patient reflection on the subject. Perhaps there is more in it than appears at first sight. It seems such a terrible waste of opportunity simply to carry over the familiar methods of political debate into our religious discussions, when what we need so sorely is a higher point of view, a calmer atmosphere, a sense of the living control of the Holy Spirit. On the other hand, nothing could be more disastrous than to yield to the plea that everything which can rightly be called political must be ruled out when men assemble in the name of religion. We cannot divide life in this way into exclusive compartments, without renouncing the help of religion just where human passions are strongest and the sense of God is faintest. A unity achieved through "concentration upon non-contentious objects" can only be the unity of complacent indifference. Christian men have advanced a very little way in self-discipline and loyalty to their own ideals if they cannot discuss questions of larger public interest in the light of religion, without acrimony of temper or personal vexation or dogmatic adhesion to foregone conclusions.

* * *

THE letter in the Times by Dr. Emery Barnes on the compulsory use of the Athanasian Creed has called forth several letters in reply. Shortest and plainest of all is one by the Dean of Chester, in which he defends the present use by Bishops and clergy because it is part of their solemn obligation and they really believe the damnatory clause with all their hearts. Well, if that is true there is nothing more to be said, and we must devote all our efforts to the exorcism of this spirit of fierce mediævalism. The difficulty, however, remains that there is a very widespread belief that the clergy do not believe it in the plain meaning of the words. A religion which carried such a fearful sentence of doom in its heart would make little of well-appointed services and social amenities in comparison with this separation between the orthodox and the heretic, which goes down to the roots of life, and makes the heretic, no matter how good and honourable and kind, after these few years of earthly existence are over an outcast from God for ever.

* * *

MEANWHILE the Rev. T. L. Papillon has put the issue very clearly in a letter supporting Professor Barnes' outspoken criticism. "'Opportunism,' and 'paltering with truth,'" he writes, "are strong terms for a divinity professor to apply to Bishops, but he has made out a good case for them. Individually, few of the Bishops would enforce the existing rubric, even if they could; but collectively, like ecclesiastical authorities in all ages and everywhere, they are liable to fear inconvenient truth and to ignore it as long as they can. A new translation of the Quicunque Vult was surely waste of time. The Prayer Book version conveys accurately enough the meaning of the original, which in its 'damnatory' or 'minatory' clauses breathes the spirit of an age when toleration was unknown and theologians honestly believed that those who differed from them were 'heretics' doomed to perish everlastingly. Whoever wrote the so-called 'Athanasian Creed' said exactly what he meant, and meant exactly what he said. But if, as Professor Barnes maintains, it was untrue, why should we be obliged to go on saying it against our conscience and our better knowledge?" Mr. Papillon concludes his vigorous letter with the statement that the question is gradually solving itself. "In 20 years' time," he says, "the rubric enforcing the recitation of the Quicunque Vult will probably have become a dead letter, beyond the power of any or all of the Bishops to revive in our churches."

* * *

As we said recently, there is no more urgent measure of protection needed by the child-life of our country than the complete abolition of the half-time system in the textile industries. A correspondent of the Manchester Guardian points out that at present the system is steadily gaining ground. Taking the statistics for 1910 as a basis there had been an increase of 11.4 per cent. in this type of employment at the close of 1913. Another alarming fact revealed by statistical inquiry is that the half-timers are recruited largely from children who, owing to physical defects, are considered less eligible for other occupation. "The very scholars whose physical defects should ensure them the maximum period of school life are often sent prematurely into the factories through the fear of being stranded should they continue at school for the normal period."

* * *

"THE cotton masters and operatives of Lancashire," this writer continues, "have so long upheld the banner of Free Trade that there is something incongruous in the fact that the Lancashire cotton trade stands alone in its dependence upon Government protection and support of its labour supply. And inasmuch as the Government, through the Board of Education, allows every two school attendances made by half-time pupils to count as three, for grant-earning purposes, it is evident that the country pays annually a substantial subsidy towards the work of destroying the physical and mental health of Lancashire children. It is true that the Government also subsidises the work of school medical inspection, and doubtless in due course school medical officers will lay open to public view the terrible ravages made upon the health of our children by the half-time system. But in the meantime, what of the children?"

* * *

THE following resolution was passed by the Committee of the Sunday School Association last week:—"That lotteries, games of chance, and similar methods of raising money are undesirable in connection with Church and Sunday school work, as they increase the numerous existing temptations to gambling among young people, and appear to sanction it so long as it is carried on for charitable purposes; that it should be remembered that such methods are generally illegal; and in the opinion of this Committee they should not be countenanced or encouraged." We commend this resolution very earnestly to all who are responsible for organising Church Bazaars and Sales of Work. A simple illustration of the far-reaching nature of this evil, which some churches without thought do much to encourage, will help to drive the warning home. A paragraph appeared in the press this week pointing out the need of more adequate provision being made for the wants of the hundreds of women and girls employed in dress-making and millinery in a certain district of London during the dinner-hour. Many of these girls, it is stated, will put the few coppers which they can afford for food into a raffle for a coat and skirt. One girl wins the coveted garments, and the rest go hungry. No doubt it is all very foolish and wrong, but do the churches realise the wide reach of their bad example, when they encourage their own young people in exactly the same practices for the good of religion?

* * *

THE annual meeting of the Council of the Evangelical Free Churches has been held at Norwich this week. The new President is the Rev. F. L. Wiseman, a former President of the Wesleyan Conference, who has won a wide reputation for the excellence and success of his evangelistic work at the Central Hall in Birmingham. We confess that the future usefulness of this great meeting, apart from the contagion of its corporate fellowship, appears to us to be rather hanging in the balance. It began on purely spiritual lines; but it has steadily advanced its claims as though it had a right to speak on most subjects for the whole of English Nonconformity, and it has also dabbled with vast schemes of organization. On Tuesday, for instance, the Rev. J. H. Shakespeare advocated "one English Free Church," with a division of the country into Free Church dioceses, with general superintendents on the Lutheran model. We doubt whether even the churches which are most conscious of their agreement upon a general scheme of belief are prepared to sink their historical individuality in this way; and if it led to the fashioning of some new statement of modern orthodoxy as a bond of union it would probably start a heresy hunt against some of the broadest and most far-seeing minds in the ministry. That is the real danger, the danger of a new uniformity imposed by men who are good organisers but timid theologians. Can this be of any real service to the crisis of religion in the modern world?

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

—*—

MOST churches at the present time seem to be sorely troubled about their membership. We are all a little tired of discussing the reasons for the decline in church attendance. We are no less familiar with the various recommendations of people who claim to possess expert knowledge on the subject: more attention to business detail, brighter services, better music, a genial atmosphere of hand-shaking and sociability, as though the whole matter were one of stage-craft. We do not despise these minor arts of success, which are inseparable from the management of most human institutions; but when people talk so insistently about them, we begin to wonder whether they are so important after all, and certain words of a familiar pattern will keep repeating themselves in our brain—What shall it profit a church, if it shall gain the whole world and lose its own soul? And—lose—its—own—soul! Is that, then, what is chiefly the matter with us? Is that the source of our dissatisfaction, of our envie, of our weary search for some better art of success? Is it, after all, not the stage-craft which is at fault, but the spiritual drama itself which is lacking in power?

When we discuss church membership and ask one another anxious questions about it, we ought to have some clear idea of the reasons why we attach so much importance to it, what it is that we really mean. To many people, no doubt, it is simply the natural instinct to test success by numbers. The small company of people begins to feel chilly in isolation. It longs to escape into the warmth and excitement of the crowd-consciousness. If only more members could be induced to come in, then every other good thing would follow in due course. To this mood most methods of attraction seem legitimate. If only people will come there is no need to inquire curiously into their motives, and no conditions need be asked or implied. On these terms membership amounts to little more than willingness to accept what the church provides, so long as it is pleasing and attractive.

To another set of people membership finds its best symbol in the payment of a subscription. The church goes cap in hand to the world, and says, Give us money and you shall belong to us, and if you give handsomely you shall sit in the chief seats and poorer men shall pay you fitting reverence. Is this a wicked caricature? Let anyone who thinks so watch the present scramble for money in the churches. Is it untrue that many arts are used to conciliate the support of the wealthy and that the chief honours usually fall to the man of substantial means? Does the disappearance of the poor man from his accustomed place cause as much searching of heart as the withdrawal of the rich man's subscription? It is not pretended that spiritual value follows in the track of money; or that our rooted habits in these matters find any sanction whatever in the Christian gospel. We know quite well that most of the best people in the churches are very poor, if for no other reason because they are the vast majority of mankind. We are simply accepting a treasurer's standard in this matter of church membership, and acting with financial prudence.

We fear that the modern minister must be held responsible for another phase of this question. The congregation which assembles on Sunday is composed of his "hearers." So long as he attracts them by the boldness or originality of his speech, or by some elusive personal quality, they will come to listen. When he is absent, or fails to meet the demand for striking utterance, they stay away. The minister is thus caught in the toils of a long and often degrading effort to retain his popularity. He can never forget himself; he becomes acutely sensitive to the number of people who come to hear him every Sunday; and, yielding more and more to the difficulties of his position, he takes refuge in strange subjects for his sermons and the other tawdry arts of the popular rhetorician, which leave no room in his heart for the disciplined simplicity and self-forgetfulness of the disciple of CHRIST. And the congregation is conscious of no obligation except that of listening when it pleases. In their view it is the business of the minister, like the successful actor, to draw a crowded house, and the last thing they expect of him is that he should make them conscious of the urgency of their own need, or throw a revealing searchlight into the secrets of their lives and lead them in humble penitence to the throne of God.

We have stated these things boldly and bluntly, perhaps some will think with unnecessary candour, because we want to exhibit them in their ugliness and unworthiness and to get them out of the way. Church membership is not concerned with the payment of money or with listening to any particular preacher, who happens to attract us, but with something much deeper. It means incorporation in a religious society, and the acceptance with real spiritual intention of its privileges and obligations, its worship of God, its cultivation of the Christian character, its unceasing service of human need, its growth through repentance and prayer and faithful discipline of spirit in divine knowledge and love. Not that any man is sufficient for these things or would ever claim that he had advanced far in them; but there is the feeling that they are the true homeland of the spirit, and that through them alone we touch the deepest meanings of our life. There is also the feeling that we can never attain to them by our own effort or simply by lonely waiting upon God. We must do it together, through the medium of an experience larger than our own, in kindling sympathy with the souls of other men. This is the instinct which draws men into church membership, and no church can be quickened into generous vitality in any other way. Here all our mechanism is entirely in vain. Given twelve people who are led into the intimate fellowship of worship, and they will fuse at once into a living church with an unlimited capacity of growth. And all the subordinate things, to which we attach such false emphasis, will come in their due order. Men will hang in happy crowds upon the words of the preacher who has learned in deep communion with God, to search out their hearts and speak to them the words of life. And money will flow in for all the purposes of the common enterprise, simply because the heart which has been renewed by the love of CHRIST cannot help being generous, and regards all its possessions as a divine trust.

We know what many of our readers are anxious to say, if they have had the patience to read so far. "All this would be very well in a sermon, but we expect a little more common sense in a leading article. It is so impractical, so far away from the realities of life, in a word so Utopian." Yes, it is Utopian, but it strikes us that it is also sublime common sense in a world where God reigns and Jesus conquered on the cross. It is, no doubt, a counsel of perfection; but then the whole of Christianity from its first syllable to its crowning triumph is a counsel of perfection, and if in the widest stretch of imagination we could ever think of it as lower than that, it would not be worth possessing at all. We could never commit ourselves for life and for death and for eternity to a Divine Love, a Way of Life, which we might out-grow to-morrow. In the worship of our spirits, in the deepest affections of our souls, there is nothing provisional or contingent. They are for ever.

A NATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONGRESS.

BY EDWARD LEWIS.

It is interesting to notice how, when oppositions are somewhat acute, there is always somebody to propose another organisation which shall embrace them. This is a conspicuous human folly. It is also interesting to observe how anxious good people are that everybody should come together on friendly terms; before very long we are bound to have a Society for the Promoting of a Better Understanding between Rabbits and Ferrets, or between the Early Bird and the Worm. It is our modern vice; we are all for cosying down together.

There is a proposal mooted for the forming of a National Christian Congress. It seems to have been announced at the close of a good dinner. Its mouthpiece was my dear friend, R. J. Campbell. To many it will doubtless be an alluring idea. I confess that it leaves me cold; and when I see that it receives the support of bishops, clergymen, ministers, and pious laymen, I begin to be fearfully suspicious.

The proposal, so far as I understand it, is that such a Congress should assemble at least once a year for such purposes as congresses usually meet for; and that it should give practical effect to itself in the way of occasional intercommunion and interchange of pulpits. It is called a National Christian Congress; I presume therefore that it would include the Salvation Army, the Unitarian Church, and the Roman Catholic Church, with all the others. Mr. Campbell thinks that it would "impress the public mind." I do not think that it would; Kikuyu has impressed the public mind to some degree; the New Theology controversy impressed the public mind; and there was once a small company of spiritual enthusiasts who held a prayer-meeting, the sound whereof caused all the city to come together to see what it was about; the characteristic thing here is that the public mind is impressed by precisely that which was never intended to impress it. The anxiety to make an impression seems to me to be foreign to a spiritual religion; maybe for this reason it is the ambition of the modern Church.

Mr. Campbell also thinks that the "mere fact that the denominations met together, prayed together, heard each other's preachers, came into contact with each other's leading personalities, would enable them to see each other's point of view and cherish feelings of mutual friendliness and respect." It must be said that our experience of congresses scarcely justifies so pious an optimism. Has the Church Congress done this, say, for the Bishops of Zanzibar and Uganda? Or what is Mr. Campbell's own experience of the Free Church Council? Are not most of us sick of these congresses with their perpetual sameness of speakers and resolutions, which goes some way to supporting the Nietzschean theory of the Everlasting Return? Do we want another, and on a still more comprehensive scale, which only means that it would be more platitudinous and ineffective than ever?

There is something natural, necessary, biting, even human, about a Free Church Council ruling out Unitarians, or, through the mouth of Mr. Joseph Hocking, damning the Roman Catholics; but what could characterise a national Christian Congress save a veneer of politeness, superficial compliments, emasculated talk, and resolutions with all the grip and sting generalised out of them?

I see that this proposal is commended, more or less warmly, by the Bishop of Birmingham, Father Benson, and the Rev. F. B. Meyer. That is enough! The thing is either chimerical or meaningless. I do not back this horse. It is a doubtful starter. Who wants to see these men congressed together? The vision of the Lion lying down with the Lamb is the vision of a sick age. The robust man asks for enemies; he can love his enemies, as enemies; but he does not want them transformed into friends. He wants their scorn, not their patting on the back. He wants to be braced, not to be embraced. Give me an arena, an open space, where I can sound the trumpet of challenge, and bring at least three parts of the Church out against me with swords drawn; this has infinitely more promise in it than that I should go, with several hundred others, to a congress, all of us disguised in broadcloth as harmless and pleasant gentlemen, nodding and smiling and yea-yea-ing over cups of tea. Leave this for the millennium, with the prayer that we may not be there to see it.

Mr. Campbell talks about interchange of pulpits under episcopal licence. But do you think that I want to preach in St. Paul's, or that I want Canon Somebody, or Father Somebody, to preach in the King's Weigh House, under licence? I would infinitely rather talk with a woman by the well-side, or preach to the squirrels in a wood; and, though this might subserve but little the interests of Christian organisation, it would probably do more to promote the Kingdom of God in the world than anything save the burning of the said licences, and the shattering of an organisation in which they found a permanent function. Fancy a man of God under official licence! Are we content that our churches should be closed preserves, like trout-streams? This is the kind of thing that has to be ended, not further established.

The fact of the matter is that the development of the organisation of the Christian religion has got us into a holy mess. The development of organisation is always at the expense of the purity, simplicity, spirituality of the Life. We are all good Christians, individually, in mind and spirit; but, as organised, we are not Christians, cannot be, and it is no use pretending that we can. We want less organisation, not more. If we spent the time which we utilise in maintaining organisation in making ourselves more potent centres of spiritual ferment, the Kingdom of Heaven would be nearer than it is. Opposition is the condition under which ferment thrives. What is the fate of eclectic religions?

They say, "What a help and stimulus it would be to get together like this!" For a certain type of man that may be true; but the strong man wants to feel isolated, contra mundum, with a chance to prove his own soul, and to realise that private openness of himself with God which makes the prophet, seer, redeemer. All our modern tendencies of religious organisation, based largely on self-compassion and self-protection, make the conditions which such a man requires more difficult to achieve. Our pious and kindly sentiment threatens to kill our strength. We have almost organised the possibility of prophetship, seership, saintship, out of the Church.

FRIEDRICH WILHELM FOERSTER.

II.—THE PHILOSOPHER.

FOERSTER's ethical and religious position derives its interest and value from the fact that it is the outcome of a long and profound study of concrete moral and psychological problems; it is no mere product of the "arm-chair" thinker's detached intellect. In one of his most recent works ("Lebensführung"), he writes (p. 17): "The more we leave abstract criticism and speculation and again place our feet upon the firm ground of experience and self-knowledge, the more we shall return, without doubt, to the recognition of an absolute morality. The moral law is crystallised experience of life; it has resulted from the ripest knowledge of the consequences of conduct. All action that detaches itself from this law, at the same time loses touch with reality; and on the rock of reality it will be tragically shattered."

In opposition to the general tendency of traditional religion, the Zürich psychologist bases his ethics, in the first place, upon social and psychological considerations (the influence of Comte has been of some importance in this connection). But he soon parts company with the humanists, for he has no illusions as to the ability of unaided human nature to rise to the level of the ideal social morality, and believes that the "power of passion and the inertia of egoism" will not be overcome in practice save through the recognition of a real spiritual world, which not only assigns eternal ideals, but is itself the source of a power rendering their realisation practicable. Foerster is in complete agreement, too, with Eucken in the latter's oft-repeated warning as to the inevitable disappearance of "that which first makes a man a whole man"— namely, reverence, if there be no acknowledgment of a superhuman and super-individual truth, to which every individual feels himself attached by invisible bonds.

Throughout the whole of Foerster's work we can trace the decisive influence of his educational experience. It is his constant concern for the deepening and perfection of character that has driven him further and further along the road towards a positive religious faith: "There are certainly a whole series of purely secular motives that may serve to stimulate the task of self-education; but in face of the gigantic power of the desire for comfort and pleasure, and of the ever-increasing inward and outward temptations to self-indulgence and effeminacy, they will utterly fail to be effective if they do not form a portion of a truly spiritual and inspiring view of life as a whole, a view which knows how to relate even the smallest act of self-overcoming to a higher reality, and can enable us to realise, with convincing force, that our present existence is a school of purification for a higher life" (from an article in Hochland, October, 1908). And again (in Jugendlehre): "No moral command is able to speak to man's inner being in a language so peculiarly that of the human soul as is the speech of Christianity. No moral command can unite obedience and liberation, self-denial and self-realisation, sacrifice and resurrection. But Christianity can do this."

If space permitted, I should like to give a full account of Foerster's theory of knowledge; for this has played a very important part in his philosophical development. At present, however, I can do no more than outline its nature in a few brief sentences. Knowledge cannot be acquired through the medium of the detached intellect; it is a possession of the whole man only. The isolated intellectualism of to-day is a psychic disease (a sort of disintegration) consequent upon the lack of a unifying principle to bind the different human faculties together and assign to each its true place in the judgment of truth. Disintegration of personality precludes a knowledge of truth, and the consolidation of personality must precede the work of knowledge. The world will not attain to a unifying truth until it has produced men and women who are capable of perceiving this truth. The pathway to truth is ethical rather than intellectual, it lies through the unification of personality, which in its turn demands perfect self-discipline and self-knowledge. I do not think I shall go far wrong in saying that Foerster's theory of knowledge coincides, at any rate in its main principles, with the doctrine of Thomas à Kempis, as expressed in these sayings: "The more a man is at one within himself, and becometh of a single heart, so much the more and higher things doth he understand without labour" "A humble knowledge of thyself is a surer way to God than a deep search after learning."

The reader will, perhaps, already have asked this question: What does Foerster understand by Christianity? A good deal of light will be thrown upon this point by a consideration of his attitude towards the two great traditional forms of the Christian religion, Roman Catholicism and Protestantism. It has already been made clear that Foerster's philosophy pivots about the problem of the development of character, of self-realisation in the deepest sense of the term. And this development, he perceives, depends upon the liberation of the spirit from the bondage of the senses, from the distraction and pressure of external influences seeking to enslave it. To him religion is the great agent of inward liberation. It alone overcomes blind necessity. It alone reconciles otherwise irreconcilable antitheses. The great saints he looks upon as masters of spiritual freedom, as our teachers in this art of life. From his standpoint, religion is not, in the first place, a system of intellectual beliefs, but a method of living. In the words of his friend and former colleague at Zürich, Robert Saitchick, "the centre of the religious conflict is not where opinions meet opinions, but where personalities and ways of life meet other personalities and other ways of life." Bearing in mind Foerster's view of spiritual freedom, we shall easily understand how it is that he was, in the first place, warmly attracted towards the Roman Catholic construction of Christianity, with its glorification of self-discipline and its peculiar emphasis upon the purification of the soul. During his educational work, moreover, the Zürich psychologist came to recognise, more and more, the indispensability of perfectly definite ethical norms with which to confront the subjectivism of the undisciplined individual; once having accepted the teaching of Christ as the highest, he soon came to the conclusion that it was in Catholicism that this teaching attained its most definite and logical development. From the very first, indeed, Foerster had no hesitation in charging contemporary Protestantism with being nebulous and indecisive, and consequently lacking in moral authority. In "Marriage and the Sex Problem" we find him dwelling upon the serious uncertainty of current Protestant opinion upon two of the greatest ethical questions of the day, namely, Divorce and Neo-Malthusianism, an uncertainty which he considers fatal to the authority and educational function of the Church. Foerster attaches the greatest possible weight to these two questions (as they are concerned with actual methods of life in the most central sphere of ethics and not with mere intellectual opinions about life). In both cases he binds himself in agreement with the firm and logical position of the Roman Catholic Church, while deploring the vacillation of Protestant teaching upon divorce and the utterly ineffective attitude of the Protestant Churches with regard to the problem of Malthusianism.

But those who had hastened to claim Foerster as a Roman Catholic soon found their hopes dashed. For, with him, nothing is more fundamental than the conviction that all development must come from within. The individual's recognition of the ethical norms must be voluntary and not the result of any sort of merely outward authority. And Foerster soon perceived that the development of the Roman Church into a vast system of external authority imposed upon its members, sometimes with the utmost harshness, was inimical to the growth of true inner feeling and personal responsibility. There must, says Foerster, be an absolute religious authority; but this authority must appeal to the inner man, freeing him from his own limitations and lifting him into the region of universal and super-individual truth; it must not become a machine for crushing the mind of the individual or checking scientific inquiry, in order to obtain an outward show of order and uniformity. We read, for example, in "Autorität und Freiheit" (p. 184): "Those who demand respect for objective truth in the sphere of religion, must possess a respect for objective truth in nature and in history. The dignity of the Christian feeling for truth is incomparable with any ambiguity with respect to objective truth."

We may put the matter in a nutshell by saying that, in Foerster's opinion, both Catholicism and Protestantism fail to give complete expression to Christianity. The former has perverted the essential principle of authority by allowing it to lapse into externalism, and has neglected the interests of individual freedom and scientific inquiry. The latter has failed to maintain the indispensable idea of religious authority, and has permitted its own peculiar truth of individual freedom of judgment to degenerate into a disintegrating individualism leading to complete religious and ethical uncertainty. It is Foerster's conviction that the collapse of the moral basis of society in the more free-thinking countries will soon become so glowingly apparent that humanity as a whole will be compelled again to direct its attention to the problem of religion and moral authority. Protestantism, on the one hand, cannot save itself from disintegration and moral ineffectiveness unless it can succeed in taking to itself certain aspects of reality which are to be found, at present, only in the Catholic Church. Catholicism, on the other hand, will be petrified if it continues to refuse to assimilate certain essential principles which to-day stand in the centre of Protestant civilisation.

In the German Who's Who, F. W. Foerster is described as a "positive Christian"; and it is his ambition to work towards a new and positive religious unity. "My position outside both the great Christian communions is due to the fact that I feel myself pledged to a more universal truth than is to-day expressed either in Catholicism or in Protestantism."

MEYRICK BOOTH.

THE sermon on "The Church of the Loyal" which was preached by the Rev. Dr. Jacks at the annual meeting of the Midland Christian Union last Tuesday will appear in our issue next week. Orders for extra copies should be sent to the publisher at once.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THEISM AND CHRISTIAN TRADITION.

SIR,—Theistic religion is debtor to the Rev. J. Cyril Flower for his full and fortifying letter in your issue of February 28. Even if it were true, as your "Correspondent" of the previous week had suggested, that the dynamic of Theism was not to be found in "criticism, or science, or abundant learning," it would not follow that we should look for it in evangelistic meetings, or that type of religious thought based on alleged facts and biography whose historic reality becomes increasingly doubtful, expressing itself in sensuous symbols which we believe do not correspond to spiritual realities, and creating nervous stimulations which tend to fanaticism, and are the very seed-beds of superstitions. But is your correspondent's allegation true? Given vital belief in God, and the "enthusiasm of humanity," are not criticism, science, and abundant learning the very means by which rational religion can get at the heart as well as the head of the common man?—which appears to be the end contemplated by your correspondent. For does not criticism, among other things, assure that divine inspiration is not limited to writers of Bibles, but moves the common man himself in his highest moods, and that the divine indwelling is not confined to one man who lived two thousand years ago, but extends to the natural being of the common man where he sits there in that pew? Is this not the very dynamic for an age of democracy? And does not science, with much else, inform us how the universe came and how it subsists, thus delivering the mind from superstitious cosmogonies and idolatrous mythologies; and is there no dynamic in the ability to present religion clothed in the symbols of this recreated and infinitely more beautiful universe? And does not learning, with other benefits, give true instead of legendary accounts of human origin and development, hopeful facts about human psychology and character, correct principles of sociology and economic law? If so, can it be maintained that there is no dynamic in the knowledge that man is not a fallen but an ascending creature, not totally depraved, but perfectible in proportion as he knows and obeys the laws of health and spiritual sanity; and that society is not hastening to the impending catastrophe of a day of judgment, but evolving by principles which we can understand, and political processes which we can expedite, to the consummation of a human Commonwealth? If mighty truths like these should seem to have no dynamic in them, it can be only because their natural spokesmen have not thought them fully out and learned how to express them in terms suitable to them, or lack the moral valour to declare them with apostolic conviction.

In your last issue (March 7), your contributor resumes the theme by deploring "a recent phase (of Theism) which does not desire to be associated with any form of Christianity"; and this seems to him "historically unjust, logically absurd, spiritually suicidal." It would be interesting to know what is the "recent phase." I know of none which answers. But is it, then, so terrible a thing not to be associated with any form of Christianity? Let us know the form, and we will say whether we desire to be associated with it. And wherein lies the historical injustice? Theism existed before Christianity, as well as contemporaneously with it; it is a historical religion. Wherein is the logical absurdity? When one disbelieves in the real objective existence of a supernatural, pre-existent, eternal Being corresponding with all His attributes to the "Christ," the belief in whom created Christianity, is it not logical to cease to use the title, and is not the logical absurdity perpetrated by those who continue to employ a name after they have ceased to believe in the person corresponding to it? And why should non-Christian Theism be spiritually suicidal? Are all Jews spiritually dead? All Mahomedans? All Bahaists? All members of the Brahma Samaj? These are strange sounds to come from the descendants of Emerson and Theodore Parker.—Yours, &c.,

WALTER WALSH,
Minister of the Theistic Church,
Swallow-street, Piccadilly, W.
72, Melbury-gardens, Wimbledon,
London, S.W., March 9, 1914.

SIR,—Will you allow me to correct a wrong impression which I fear I must have given by my use of analogy? I am not desirous either of leading, or being a member of, a search party which is going to explore the wilderness, or the Arctic regions, knowing that there is nothing to be found but bleached bones, impressive solitudes, and fine views. I agree with A. M. O. G., that the call of the crowded city is far more relevant and immediate for religion than the call of the wild in this sense. I am sorry I indulged in the luxury of imagery, since it has led to misunderstanding. My contention is that we ought to be advancing, and not returning. By advance I do not mean a going away from mankind and human interests—on the contrary, that is a return to the monkish idea. I seek to advance into the very heart of social truth. In mankind the great process of evolution has begun to become conscious and purposive. It is in grappling with mankind that we shall enter into the truth, and find a concrete experience of the Divine. For from desiring to wander alone by "unsullied mountain tarns," my whole aim as a minister is to proclaim the divine significance of human fellowship. There is the spiritual universe which awaits exploration. The Kingdom may be among us, but few be they that find it. Its discovery or creation is still the great adventure of religious strife. We cannot live on the vision of past seers and prophets alone; and we are unworthy followers of them if we settle down upon the part of the Kingdom they won for us without a thought of increasing it for the spiritual well-being of mankind.

I must thank your contributor for his sympathetic elaboration of the question. I certainly think that Christianity is jeopardised in this sense: that the time is rapidly coming, if not come, when its claim to finality will be recognised as a perfectly natural piece of spiritual arrogance. Some of its contribution to the construction of the Temple of true Religion is, I believe, invaluable and eternal. But its contributions have not all been good. There is one slight error in your contributor's letter which it will be well to correct. Prof. L. T. Hobhouse would be the first to disclaim representing the Positivist position. I have not fully read his latest book on "Development and Purpose," but I was a student of his for two years. Prof. Westermarck, his colleague, is a typical Positivist.—Yours, &c.,

J. CYRIL FLOWER.

*Sale, Manchester,
March 9, 1914.*

METHODS OF INCREASING CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

SIR,—We have gained ninety new members since last March. In reply to your correspondent, Mr. Hall, I will write of our methods; but first it is supremely necessary to have "good goods" to offer. We have an admirable church building, a skilful organist and well-trained voluntary choir, and an intelligent, spiritual head in our minister. We advertise, by posters displayed on chosen stations, the subjects of sermons or addresses and lectures. The posters contain a monthly list, and cost 1½d. a week each for posting and rent. We print leaflets setting forth the aim of the church, with particulars of services; these are given by members of the congregation to any who may be interested, and to all strangers who come to church, or visitors to lectures. There are two tables of literature in the vestibule of the church, one of pamphlets and books for sale, under the care of the church librarians, and one of literature for free distribution. Free copies of the rules, monthly calendar, advertisement leaflets, and any other literature likely to interest the stranger is offered him on entering or leaving the church. He is invited by printed notice to help himself from the free table of literature, and the Secretary urges all strangers to visit the table and take what interests them. She gets into conversation with them, welcomes them on future occasions, offers to send the monthly calendar by post on receipt of name and address, points out what the church offers to those who want to learn, and what the church needs from those who want to teach, making the appeal for membership as individual as possible, exerting all her personality to gain members. The Church Committee has no arrangement for the visitation of persons known to attend the services; the minister, of course, speaks to all who approach him in the vestibule after services, or privately if requested, or by writing. It is proposed to have, in the near future, a Propaganda Committee, not necessarily of members of the Church Committee. To sum up, in order to increase the membership of our churches, in my opinion, it is first necessary to have something very well worth offering, and then to exercise to the utmost one's personality in offering it.—Yours, &c.,

EDITH K. MIDDLETON,
Hon. Sec.

119, London-road, West Croydon,
March 8, 1914.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

A STUDY OF FRENCH CIVILIZATION.

French Civilization in the Nineteenth Century.
By Albert Léon Guérard. London: T. Fisher
Unwin. 12s. 6d. net.

We noticed M. Guérard's able book, "French Prophets of Yesterday," a short time ago. He has now given us as a sequel a study of French Civilization during the nineteenth century in its social and political aspects. It is no less interesting, and he has used a good deal of his wide literary knowledge, which was so conspicuous in the previous volume, for purposes of illustration. The substance of the book was delivered as lectures at Stamford University, California, and his position of detachment—that of a Frenchman resident in a foreign country with a remarkable command of the English language—once again gives him unusual advantages as an interpreter. The whole cast of his mind is towards moderation, and the juste milieu in historical verdicts. For this reason the reader must be prepared for sudden jars to some conventional prejudices. Nowhere is this more conspicuous than in his treatment of Louis Napoleon and the condition of France under the Second Empire. "Public opinion in France and abroad has not yet learned to judge the Empire fairly," he writes. "After eighteen years of insolent prosperity, it ended in disaster: Væ victis! But it would be a slander on human nature to maintain that a great nation was duped, bribed, or cowed into submission, for eighteen years, by an utterly worthless régime. The Second Empire had its moments of genuine usefulness and legitimate splendour." It was Taine, he reminds us, who said, "The Emperor understands France and his country better than any of his predecessors."

Among the most illuminating chapters in the book are the two at the close, which deal with Education and the Religious Question. The School in France is the battleground of contending forces, as it is with us. Catholicism and free thought each claim their right to the final word. Elementary education, is, however, a comparatively recent interest. Napoleon, with all his ambitious schemes for university reform, did nothing to foster it; and it was not till 1881-2 that it was made compulsory and free. The cost of it to the national exchequer has risen from 61½ million francs in 1870 to nearly 298 million francs in 1912. Another interesting fact pointed out by M. Guérard is the influence of the Dreyfus crisis in driving the mass of the elementary teachers into the arms of organised labour.

"Many of them," he says, "were converted to revolutionary ideas. Their encyclopædic and perforce superficial learning, their habit of laying down the law to immature minds, made them somewhat dogmatic in their attitude. They began to preach pacifism, internationalism, and socialism with the same zeal as, ten years before, they had preached the hoary doctrines of the first Revolution. Dissatisfaction with their economic conditions; revolt against the rule of professional politicians; aspirations towards internationalism and socialism; the teachers wanted to express all that, and they found syndicalism ready at hand. So they formed syndicates or unions and sought affiliation to the General Federation of Labour. The Radical bourgeoisie, as soon as they were through with their anti-clerical campaign, discovered this new danger and recoiled with almost the same terror as M. Thiers in 1848. The situation is serious. It could be relieved by taking politics out of public education and by increasing salaries on a generous scale. But the politicians will not willingly give up their patronage, and military expenditures are draining the resources of the State."

Turning to the religious situation, M. Guérard points out that the circumstances which led up to the recent Separation law began with the practical repudiation of the Concordat by the Vatican. The visit of President Loubet to the King of Italy was regarded as an unpardonable offence, and strained relations almost to breaking point. In these circumstances the French Government behaved with dignity, calmly pursuing its policy of separation, but absolutely refusing to persecute. Meanwhile the Vatican has persisted in its attitude of no compromise, and the Gallican Church, deprived of all its former liberties, has been forced against its will into obedience to Ultramontane ideals. The Catholic reaction, which has been loudly proclaimed in some English newspapers, does not in M. Guérard's opinion go very deep. His view of it is revealed in his pungent description of some of the literary prophets, like Bourget and Barrès, as "orthodox Catholics who are probably not Christians." At the same time he has an eye for the deeper ministries of the Church to real religious need: "Whilst it is for many a mere ecclesiastical police, a buttress of social inequality, it remains for untold thousands a school of charity and sacrifice, a gateway to the better life."

In despair of finding any synthesis which will reconcile all the conflicting elements of French thought, M. Guérard takes refuge in the tolerance of old fashioned liberalism. He understands liberalism to mean, "Strive to achieve something, rather than to hamper your neighbour." With a short passage on the present situation inspired by this mood of happy confidence we must close our account of his admirable book, which in the breadth of its survey and the penetration of its judgment is worthy to take its place beside Mr. Bodley's "France," and M. Poincaré's recent survey of French Government, as a really illuminating study of the French mind and the methods of its activity.

"France still believes in repressive policies, in enforced conformity. But there are welcome promises of change. The creation of local universities with a fair amount of autonomy was a step in the right direction, and has proved admirably successful. The Separation law, in spite of minor mistakes, was truly a liberal measure. Strange to say, there are in syndicalism, with all its coarse violence, precious elements of liberation: from the tyranny of capitalists, from the tyranny of bureaucrats, from the tyranny of politicians, from the tyranny of majorities. The collapse of the old spirit of system is setting free vast reserves of energy hitherto wasted in mutual check. Already we hear much less talk about reason, and much more about intuition, faith, and life."

ST. BASIL.

St. Basil the Great: A Study in Monasticism.
By W. K. Lowther Clarke. Cambridge, at the University Press. 7s. 6d. net.

This book may be commended very heartily to the growing number of people who are interested in the origins of a great historical movement like Christian monasticism. Our inherited prejudices are breaking down, and we are not now so anxious to condemn as to try to understand a form of life and spiritual discipline which has exercised its fascination over some of the finest minds of our race. The life of St. Basil gives us a picture in miniature of the Christian civilisation in Asia Minor in the fourth century. He belonged to a wealthy and influential family. After spending his boyhood on his father's estate in the country, he was sent to school at the important city of Cæsarea, in Capadocia. Later he had his Wanderjahre as a student at Athens and Alexandria. But the chief bent of his mind was towards religion, and his seriousness of temper—Mr. Clarke tells us that the "ragging" practised by the students at Athens upon freshmen was a trial to his sensitive nature—drew him strongly in the direction of severe self-discipline. The last years of his comparatively short life, spent as Archbishop of Cæsarea, were conspicuous for their large-hearted charities and the successful attempt to organise monasticism on a permanent basis. In this respect he was the forerunner and in many important ways the spiritual father of St. Benedict. The Benedictine Rule, which was accepted as the norm for all the subsequent movements of monasticism in the West, bears distinctly the marks of his genius. And yet there was a difference, which Mr. Clarke sums up in the following words: "The main differences between the two Rules are these: Basil is primarily a preacher, Benedict a legislator. Basil lays down general principles and leaves their application to the Superior, Benedict gives precise directions. Thus Benedict has definite regulations for the clothes of the monks, the hours of meals, the quality and amount of food, the number of fasts, and the titles of the various officers, all of which are left undefined in Basil.' It is no doubt for this reason that Mr. Clarke thinks that the ascetic writings of St. Basil, of which he gives a careful analysis, are likely to be more useful in the religion of the modern world than the more formal instructions of St. Benedict. He believes that the revived interest in asceticism is a healthy sign, on the ground that it is a good thing for us to have in our midst a number of men and women "pledged to a pre-occupation with the unseen world." But it does not follow that it is the best policy simply to copy traditional models. "While appreciating to the full," he says, "the benefits bestowed upon the Church by existing communities, one would rather see arising in the future societies of men and women not bound to the Western monastic tradition, but allowing themselves the fullest freedom both in adapting old rules, and experimenting in new directions. There is much in the Basilian literature that might provide hints for such a development. The spirit of the English race is akin in many ways to that of Greece rather than Rome, and a study of St. Basil, the father of Greek monasticism, may be not unprofitable for the English Church of to-day."

SOME ACCOUNT OF GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE IN SPAIN. By George Edmund Street, F.S.A. Edited by Georgiana Goddard King. London: J. M. Dent & Sons. 2 vols. 6s. net.

THE splendour of its Moorish remains has obscured for the popular mind the splendour of distinctively Christian architecture in Spain. Its Gothic churches have not been studied with the close attention bestowed upon those of France and England. No equally good treatment of the subject has appeared since the volume, enriched with admirable drawings, by the late George Edmund Street. Unfortunately this book, written nearly fifty years ago, has been long out of print and it commands a high price. Its republication in two handy volumes, which the traveller can take with him without adding much to the weight of his luggage, is thus very timely. The editor has added a number of notes, in which reference is made to books and researches since Street's day. These, however, are wisely kept apart from the original text. The illustrations and plans have been retained, though necessarily much reduced in size. Photography has added greatly to the richness and variety of the illustrations in books on architecture; but it has not been all gain, for there is a revealing personal quality and a special angle of vision in the work of the artists' pencil which the camera can never convey. As the editor puts it, "To make photographs that could replace the author's sketches the age is not competent, for until a camera shall be able to work around a corner, photography can only be a mechanical aid in the study and reproduction of architecture, and for the impression and the pleasure the burden will be still on the pencil." A few of the illustrations have a rather blurred and worn appearance, but others are admirably firm and clear.

THE POEM OF JOB. Translated in the Metre of the Original. By Edward G. King, D.D. Cambridge: at the University Press. 5s. net.

OF translators of the Book of Job and commentators on its text there is no end. It is one of the best tributes to its greatness and to the unique place which it occupies in the literature of the ancient world. The new translation by Dr. King will arouse more than usual interest, for he is well known as a profound student of Hebrew poetry and few scholars can rival him in capacity for the delicate task of finding the nearest English equivalent for the metre of the original. One or two familiar passages will give the reader some idea of the result. It will be noticed that accents are used in order to indicate metrical stress:—

Thére the wicked cease troubling;
And thére the wéary find rést.
All tránquil thére are the prisoners;
Nor héar they the tásk-master's voice.
Smáll and gréat are thére;
And the sláve is fréed from his máster.

Or this:—

Mán that is bórn of a wóman!
Short-lived and sáted with trouble!
As a flówer he cómes—then is withered;
He flíes like a shádw and stáys not.

Or this:—

I knów my Redéemer is Líving
And will stánd the lást upon éarth.
Though my bódi-ly-tént be destróyed,
Yet ápárt from my flésh I see Gód:
Whom I' shall behóld as mine,
And mine éyes shall sée (Him) no stránger.
Such hópe is súmmed up in my bósom.

These passages are enough to show the literary quality of Dr. King's translation. It is provided with a number of illuminating notes on matters of special difficulty. The short Introduction treats the author as one of the world's great poets who used legendary material for his own purposes. "As Goethe adopted the legend of Faust so our Poet adopted the legend of Job, whose name, like that of Noah, went back to mythical antiquity." The volume has been produced beautifully by the Cambridge University Press. With its fine paper and vellum back it retains none of the traditional sombreness which has been associated far too long with books on Biblical subjects.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS:— Shaftesbury's Second Characters: B. Rand. 7s. 6d. net. Nestorius: Friedrich Loofs, D.D. 3s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK:—The Philosophy of Religion: George Galloway, D.Phil., D.D. 12s.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & SONS:—The Wayfarer's Library, 1s. net per vol.:—The Letters from Dorothy Osborne to Sir William Temple. The Blue Lagoon: H. de Vere Staepoole. The Wheels of Chance: H. G. Wells.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co.:—Macaulay's History of England, Vol. II. 10s. 6d. net.

MR. JOHN MURRAY:—The Psalms in Human Life: R. E. Prothero. 2s. 6d. net.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

WESTWARD HO!

"WESTWARD HO!" The words awaken various memories according to the previous experience of the reader. To some they merely recall the pleasure of reading that exciting book to which Kingsley gave the title "Westward Ho!" To many others, both young and old, they call up memories of Devonshire and Cornwall, with their varied coastline, now curving inward to form bays where the sand gleams white or yellow or reddish, now jutting far into the sea as bold rocky headlands. Memories of far-stretching tor-crowned moorland, which can look gracious and smiling when the sun shines and soft breezes blow, but can frown darkly when soaked in fog, or held in the grip of a biting north-east wind. Memories of deep lanes, where the long narrow leaves of the hart's-tongue fern trail bright glossy green in summer and dull green in winter; where sweet violets lurk in shady nooks, and primroses are so abundant that if you fill a basket with the delicate blossoms you have but to move on a few yards to fill it once again, and yet leave thousands of pale stars to gladden the next wayfarer.

It brings memories of holiday hours spent in roaming under the red cliffs of the East Devon coast, seeking treasures of shell and pebble and seaweed; or watching sea-birds on the rude granite cliffs of the south-western coast; or of other hours spent in a boat moored in one of the quiet reaches of a river, where you lay reading a favourite book, conscious of no sound but the gentle lap-lap of the water, and the occasional faint splash made by a little bird, all blue and green and orange, which has been sitting motionless, but watchful, ever watchful, on a low bough just over the stream, and has now darted, bill first, into it to snatch a minnow in its broad, sturdy bill. That minnow is quickly killed and taken to the nest at the far end of a yard-long hole in the river bank, where a hungry hen kingfisher sits patiently on six glossy eggs of purest white.

There are memories, too, for many of us of hospitable homes in the town, and snugly farms in the country, where it was pleasant to come in from a long ramble to find good West Country fare on the table—cakes delicately flavoured and coloured with saffron, big rosy apples, junket, and above all, the far-famed clotted cream, which is one thing, and that not a bad one, taken out of a tin brought by post to London, and quite another eaten out of the glass dish into which it was ladled straight from the great pan in the dairy, where it has been cooling down after its long slow heating over the fire, and has just reached the right degree of velvety firmness.

With memories like these to beckon me on, it is no wonder that the long journey to Plymouth was pleasant. We were in a luxurious Great Western Railway express train, with well-cleaned windows, which let one fully enjoy the view. Our first sight of Plymouth and its Hoe—a wide open space, above and overlooking the Sound—was disappointing to the one who was seeing it for the first time. Much of what ought to have looked best was hidden by dull mist or only dimly visible. We could just detect a dim outline of the famous breakwater, which looks like half a mile of railway embankment beginning and ending in the sea. It was built over a century ago to break the force of the waves, so that vessels could ride in greater safety on its northern side. About 200 men worked daily for 34 years to make it.

There is a lighthouse at one end, and at the other a large round globe, or cage, made of thick iron bars, and mounted on a ladder-like pedestal, also of iron. There is just room, left in places, between the bars for a shipwrecked man or woman, not too stout, to squeeze themselves in, and once inside, if they keep a stout heart, and can hold on tightly, they may outlive the storm which sends great showers of spray, or even sheets of water, over them from time to time, and be finally rescued by the crew of a lifeboat. Once, a vessel trying in-vain to get round the end of the breakwater into the less dangerous part beyond was lifted by a huge wave clean over the great embankment, and left in safety on the inner side.

We did not need clear weather to see the monument on the Hoe which Devonshire placed there in honour of one of her most famous sons, Sir Francis Drake, admiral and explorer, a hero of the Spanish Armada struggle, and the first Englishman to sail round the world. The voyage took him two years and eight months, and when his ship, the Golden Hind, came sailing into Plymouth Harbour at the end of that long expedition we may be sure that a wildly excited crowd would be on the Hoe to welcome and to cheer him.

There was another and much less conspicuous memorial to visit. So unadorned is it that unless you were looking for it you might even pass it by unnoticed, yet it concerns a voyage more momentous in its far-reaching effects than that of the Golden Hind. It is just two slabs of stone, one under your feet bears the name Mayflower, the other, let into the wall just above, tells in carved letters how in 1620 a group of men and women, who had suffered persecution on account of their religious belief, determined to leave their native land, and seek a new home in the recently discovered continent of America. There they founded a little colony to which they gave the name of the last bit of English soil on which their feet had trodden, for they called it New Plymouth. The ship they sailed in was the Mayflower.

Our first day, marked by mist and calm, was followed by one of raging storm. The gale rose to such a pitch that night, February 21, that the anchors of a small German ship in the Sound would no longer hold her, and she was at the mercy of the wind, which drove her on the rocks of Drake's Island, just beyond the Hoe. Her signals of distress were seen, and brave Devonshire lifeboat men rescued her crew of seven, and took them to the Sailors' Home, where they were well cared for. When we went to look at their ship the tide was out, and she lay helpless on her split side, quite out of water.

One of our objects in coming to the West Country is to study birds which are seen here, but are either unknown or rare in the North. The very first time we went down to the rocks at Plymouth, and were leaning over a sea wall, we saw close below us a rock pipit, a bird slightly larger than its relations the tree and meadow pipits, and one we were particularly anxious to observe. There was no mistaking it, for we were near enough to note details, and saw clearly the smoke-grey patch on its outer tail feathers which replaces the white in the other pipits' tails.

We are now in Cornwall, on the west coast, where it is so mild all winter that we see aloes, palms, and tree ferns growing out in the open like our roses and laurels; and already (March 2) garden anemones are practically over, while jonquils and double daffodils are at their best. One sheltered horse-chestnut tree already bears scores of expanded leaves. We are staying in a house overlooking the inner harbour, where few birds but seagulls are to be seen, but this morning I saw two swans fly past. Now swans on a pond or sheet of water in a park are a common sight, but they look very different when seen as I saw these—flying in a straight, rapid course over a quarter of a mile of water. Swans fly with their necks stretched to their full extent, as straight as a yard measure, and about as long, when we include the bill. The full length of a swan is sixty inches.

EMILY NEWLING.

Falmouth.

(To be continued.)

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

Now is the time when the churches, societies, and associations, with the stir of spring in the air, and consequently feeling the approaching end of winter operations, are confronted with that yearly stock-taking called the "annual meeting." They are beginning to contemplate their achievements of the year—a salutary exercise enough in most cases, and not often conducive to vanity, if it were not that triumphs, tragedies, and comedies are necessarily fused in ensuing "reports" into that everyday estimate of things which makes unfulfilled aspirations and unattained ideals seem comfortingly remote. So that sometimes when we thought we were sitting in white sheets we actually find ourselves waving flags; a Butlerian compromise strongly in accord with common sense, and comfortable into the bargain.

Yet, here and there, a note of humility has made itself heard. The report of the Liverpool Postal Mission shows a strong sense of the magnitude of the work and a deprecating acknowledgment of the kind of qualities required for carrying it on; a spectacle not altogether unrefreshing in a day of cock-sureness and self-advertisement. The report of the Liverpool District Missionary Association declares that the committee are "very fully aware of their great and increased responsibility in spreading the convictions and saving hopes of liberal religion over this district. They undertake this responsibility with a deep sense of the reality of those convictions, and of their transforming utility." A deep note of spiritual conviction is heard from the Ancient Chapel—as might be expected from the quality of religious consciousness manifested there and the increasing nature of its appeal. Perhaps the most arresting example of this kind, viewed in the light of circumstances, is found in connection with Hamilton-road Mission. "Can any man," says Mr. Haigh, "by giving numbers say what the effect of his words may be? We have a glorious gospel which answers to all the needs of life. Of that I am more and more convinced, even when at the same time I openly confess that I have failed to present it as it could be presented and ought to be presented." Yet notwithstanding this admission of failure, the results of Mr. Haigh's presentation of his gospel fill the onlooker with astonishment and joy. If anything was ever alive, spiritually alive and throbbing with life, it is the Hamilton-road Mission. An evening service there should do a questioning or discouraged heart good. The inspiration of numbers, the splendidly hearty singing, the concentration of attention, the reality of the whole thing, exemplifies once more the value of the practical mystic in the very midst of the rough-and-tumble of life. And, as Mr. Haigh says, it is in the inspiration of this religious centre that they approach all their secular activities—their name is legion—to find that sacred and secular are never far apart. Liverpool is a happier place by reason of its Domestic Missions, and their never-ceasing "fight for the values of men"; so certainly thought the editor of THE INQUIRER, who took a part in the activities of Hamilton-road on a recent Sunday, and went back to London with the cheerful conviction that there, at any rate, religion is not out of touch with life nor life with religion.

The Liverpool Anti-Sweating League has had its annual meeting to celebrate a good and effective year's work in the effort to better the conditions of women's labour. Something there has been attempted and accomplished. The Rev. Charles Roper has settled in his charge at West Kirby, and the Rev. H. W. Hawkes, with the affectionate title of Minister Emeritus, has taken up his abode in the neighbourhood of that other promising child of his, the Free Church at Bootle.

There are two matters of importance worthy of note here, one particularly affecting us regarded as people with a gospel to preach, the other of yet wider import. We will give the latter problem priority.

Liverpool, as all the country knows, has been the scene of two most distressing and somewhat similar tragedies which have involved the death of two honourable women; each of them in different spheres a church worker. Undisciplined passion (taking the word in its widest connotations) has lain at the root of both disasters—for disasters to civilisation these dreadful episodes undoubtedly are.

Special social attention has been drawn to the last and most brutal murder-case by the significant words of the Bishop of Liverpool, who visited the young man under sentence of death in gaol, and confirmed him. "Society must share the blame," said the Bishop. What true words! But it is a truth not fully discerned except by those who are attacking with understanding the deepest social problems.

Look the facts in the face of this terrible case of the Bishop's penitent: out of hand in a public-house home; then in an industrial home; then thrown into work in the world. Writers in the press have attacked the Church for its supineness, or inability to cope with these things; the secretary of the Y.M.C.A. has shown how such and such good things would cost much less than many other less good things; the police court missionary says that "efforts had been made on behalf of this misguided youth, and for a period of three or four years were attended with success, but no good purpose would follow in publishing this." We do not minimise the possible effect of any philanthropic agencies, nor do we dwell on the fact to the advocates of compulsory military drill or conscription that this young man had actually been "under arms." The only solution in the conditions of our modern civilisation lies in the increased care of society at large for its adolescent. Prof. Gilbert Murray reminds us that "throughout the whole of antiquity the possibility of absurd and atrocious things lay much nearer, the protective forces of society were much weaker, the strain on personal character, the need for real 'wisdom and virtue' was much greater than it is at the present day." Make the comparison, not between antiquity and the present time, but between the middle class boy and the boy at the bottom, and the very same words apply. The boy at the secondary school has every modern advantage. He is under solicitous supervision, and is being actively "educated" up to the age of at least 16 or 17. Then he enters some regular work with a prospect, or he continues in the line of study for a profession. The case of the boy at the bottom, leaving school at a tender age, need not be described.

The sooner the school age is raised; the sooner a national minimum wage is enacted, so that poverty-stricken parents may have less inducement to send boys to blind-alley occupations in order to obtain that pathetic help of a few shillings to lighten, if only for a moment, the toil of living; the sooner compulsory continuation schooling is enforced; the sooner organised play is possible for the poor boy and girl as well as the "better-off" boy and girl; the sooner we may expect some "wisdom and virtue" to appear in the young men and women who have roamed the streets since they left school as their sole place of society, recreation and further education. The results of such "education" may be well seen in the unhappy boy whom society has first neglected, and then, helpless before the consequences, sent in his early youth out of the world.

An interesting page in Mr. Haigh's report treats of this very question, referring to the efforts of Mr. F. J. Marquis, of the University Settlement, and Mr. Sydney Jones, to find land for the outdoor exercise of youths and boys of the working class. "At the same time," writes Mr. Marquis, "such open space would provide the city with the great dream of town planners, a 'girdle of green' not too far removed from the centre of congestion." Playing fields for the many! Why not?

Arising out of important controversies in the Liverpool press concerning "Miracles," the Minister-at-large delivered a public lecture on the subject, and invited discussion. The only point to be noticed here is the attitude of the press in this matter towards liberal religion, that is, of avowedly heretical order. The Unionist Courier did send a reporter apparently in the hope of a lively difference of opinion between the Unitarian, Orthodoxy as represented by Pastor George Wise, and Secularism as represented by Dr. Niven. Disappointed of scenes, though three or four hundred people listened to an earnest discussion under the chairmanship of Mr. Sydney Jones, the report in The Courier turned on the blood-red spots on the planet Jupiter in the year 1910, propounded by a zealous Christadelphian. The Liberal Daily Post and Mercury, in the columns of which the principal controversy had appeared, sent no reporter, and maintained a masterly silence on the whole proceeding.

THE MIDLAND CHRISTIAN UNION. ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting of the Midland Christian Union was held on Monday, the 9th inst., at the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, when a large number of ministers and delegates, as well as subscribers and friends, were present. Amongst others attending were the Revs. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, I. Wrigley, J. A. Shaw, H. C. Hawkins, S. Gibbon, S. S. Brettell, H. Warnock, W. G. Topping, G. von Petzold, C. Thrift, W. E. Williams, E. Glyn Evans, J. E. Stronge, A. H. Shelley, F. A. Homer, W. C. Bowie, W. Jellie, and D. Delta Evans; Messrs. H. New, E. P. Beale, M. Mole, Felix Hamel, W. Vickery, Mansell, Hickman, Sidaway, Barnard, Hopkins, Colonel Talbot, Mrs. Cliff, Miss Lee, and Miss Gibson. The chair was taken by the president, Mr. W. Byng Kenrick. In moving the adoption of the report he pleaded for a greater missionary spirit among the lay members of the various churches. He pointed out that all churches were suffering largely from the prevalent apathy in matters pertaining to religion, but that the time was specially favourable for the promotion of such principles of spiritual freedom as their churches stood for. He paid a generous tribute to the devotion and energy of their ministers, and asked that the members of the churches should co-operate heartily with them. In the course of his speech he expressed the regret of all at the deaths of two such distinguished toilers amongst the more neglected classes of the community as the late Revs. W. J. B. Tranter and W. J. Clarke. In seconding the adoption of the report the Rev. J. E. Stronge, of Kidderminster, made a special appeal to the Union to do more directly propagandist work, and to advocate Unitarianism specifically. He thought that in the large industrial areas covered by the Union, with their teeming population, new churches ought to be established. Opportunities were awaiting them on every hand, and they should go forward in faith and seize them. Mr. W. Byng Kenrick was re-elected president on the proposition of the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, who spoke of the courage and consistency manifested by our cultured laity who remained faithful and loyal to our cause. Mr. Barnard, of Walsall, in seconding the motion, spoke of how Mr. Kenrick was a friend to all the aided churches, and was ever ready to help them by every means in his power. The vice-presidents were also re-elected, the Rev. A. H. Shelley, who retires from the joint secretaryship, being added to the number. Mr. E. Ellis Townley and Mr. P. J. Worsley, jun., were respectively reappointed secretary and treasurer, and the retiring committee was re-elected en bloc. A luncheon followed the business meeting, the ministers and their wives and the delegates being most hospitably entertained by the congregation of the Church of the Messiah at the Imperial Hotel. During the luncheon opportunity was taken to welcome the Rev. W. C. Bowie, as representing the British and Foreign Association; and also, on the proposition of the Rev. W. Jellie, to wish God-speed in his new work at Auckland to the Rev. W. E. Williams, of Evesham.

At the Conference in the afternoon the subject of the Colonial and Foreign missionary field was dealt with in speeches by the Revs. W. C. Bowie, W. Jellie, and G. von Petzold. Mr. Bowie gave a most graphic and interesting account of the churches visited by him in his recent Canadian tour, prefacing it by an historical résumé of the work done by the British and Foreign Association outside Great Britain and Ireland. Mr. Jellie, in the course of a brief address, pleaded hard for men and money to be sent to New Zealand in order that they might minister to their kith and kin, especially the scattered members of their own household of faith. An address distinguishing between the characteristics of the English and German nations, particularly in matters of religious organisation, was delivered by the Rev. Gertrude von Petzold. In the course of the afternoon Mr. Bowie expressed his regret, shared by all present, that the Rev. J. W. Austin was prevented by illness from being present, but there was the cheering news that he was making good progress. In the evening the annual sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Jacks, of Oxford. There was a large congregation.

At a meeting of the National Peace Council held last week the following resolution was passed:—"The National Peace Council, representing an alliance of forty-one organisations of varying kinds, places upon record its strong condemnation of the growing loss of control by Parliament over our Naval expenditure revealed in the debates on the Supplementary Estimates."

THE ROYAL SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF BIRDS.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds was held at the Westminster Palace Hotel, on Thursday, March 5. The chair was taken by Lord Newton, and in the course of the afternoon the Duchess of Portland, President of the Society, whose interest in the cause has found practical expression in many helpful ways, presented medals and prizes which had been won in the Public School Competition. In the course of his speech Lord Newton said that the arguments against the Plumage Bill were as inconclusive as anything he had ever heard, but it was always found that whenever an attempt was made to bring in a Bill of this kind, which came in contact with any trade or industry, there was no lack of reasons given why it ought not to pass. Sir Conan Doyle said later on that if it was objected that the Bill would put some people out of business, that was what they were out for—to prevent people carrying on an indefensible business. People said our slums showed how near to savagery we were, but he thought they got a better proof of our nearness to savagery when they sat in the upper tier of the opera and looked at the women's headgear in the stalls. He hoped that in the future, just as the white feather of cowardice is the worst slur a man can bear, so the white feather of cruelty will be the worst slur a woman can bear. Mr. Page Croft, M.P., who introduced the Plumage Bill last session, in moving a resolution pressing for the speedy passage of the Plumage Bill, said that it commanded the support of the majority of the House of Commons, and emphasised the great importance of the Mother country backing up the Dominions, which had already legislated for the protection of their own bird life, but could not make their laws effective while plumage was smuggled out of the country and sold openly in England. The Rev. H. R. Gamble, commenting on the extraordinary difficulty of getting Bills of this kind through Parliament, laid stress on the importance of creating public opinion among women. No doubt there were some who for their personal adornment would pluck a feather from an angel's wing, but as a rule they erred through ignorance.

Reference was made by all the speakers to the splendid example which had been set by America in prohibiting for good and all the importation of the plumage of wild birds throughout the United States save for scientific purposes. Letters of apology were received among others from Lord Cromer, Lord Curzon, Sir Edward Grey, Canon Rawnsley, Dr. Lyttelton, and Mr. Wilfrid Scawen Blunt. "In the whole history of mankind," Mr. Blunt wrote, "and Heaven knows it is an ugly record—there is nothing in my view of things to equal the criminality of the destruction which in our own day has befallen whole races of wild animals, especially of birds, at our civilised white hands—nothing so wanton, nothing so irreparable, nothing where the evil wrought has been less mixed with advantage, where the dignity and order and beauty of the world has been more unpardonably wronged. . . My view of what legislation should aim at is that the destruction of these birds, for the mere whim of slaughter or the gratification of vanity, ought to be made a criminal offence, punishable by every Government as a kind of piracy committed against the Commonwealth of the world."

FLOGGING AND THE WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC.

THE following memorial protesting against the introduction of flogging for male offenders under the Criminal Law Amendment Act has been forwarded to the Prime Minister through the Humanitarian League:—

In the Criminal Law Amendment (White Slave Traffic) Act, passed rather more than a year ago, there was nothing which attracted more attention at the time than the provision for flogging male offenders for certain crimes against women, while female offenders remained exempt. We note that attempts are now being made to induce the Government to extend still further this unequal law of the lash. While we hold that all personal violence should be most rigorously suppressed, we desire to convey to you our strong conviction, in the first place, that flogging is neither a proper nor an effective method of punishment; and secondly, that the sex-distinction which exempts women from a penalty to which men are subjected is less an honour than an insult, inasmuch as it is not privilege, but equal justice that women demand. We trust, therefore, that the Government, while maintaining the law which secures to women entire immunity from the lash, will seek rather to extend this immunity to men, than to impose still further upon one sex only a brutal and antiquated form of punishment which is degrading to men and women alike, and unworthy of the sanction of any civilised State.

Among the signatories are the following:—Dr. Elizabeth Garrett Anderson, Mrs. Hertha Ayrton, the Hon. Lady Barlow, Lady Byles, Countess Batthyany, Dr. Ethel Bentham, Miss Margaret G. Bondfield, Mrs. Bradlaugh Bonner, Mrs. Bramwell Booth, Mrs. Mona Caird, Mrs. Cecil Chapman, Mrs. Cobden-Sanderson, Mrs. C. Despard, Mrs. Sarah Dickenson, Mrs. Wolstenholme Elmy, Miss Isabella O. Ford, Miss Isabel Forsyth, Mrs. Havelock Ellis, Lady Gibb, Lady Gomme, Miss Eva Gore-Booth, Mrs. Billington Greig, Mrs. Elizabeth A. Haworth, Madame Ellen Key, Lady Emily Lutyens, Lady Constance Lytton, Miss Lillab McCarthy, Miss A. G. MacGowan, Miss Margaret McMillan, Mrs. Mary Marks, Miss May Morris, Dr. Flora Murray, Miss Edith Palliser, Miss Elizabeth Parker, Dr. Marion Phillips, Miss Sarah Reddish, Mrs. Pember Reeves, Miss Edna C. G. Rhodes, Miss Elizabeth Robins, Miss Esther S. Roper, Miss A. Maude Royden, Vera Countess Serkoff, Dr. Phoebe Sheavyn, Mrs. H. M. Swanwick, Miss Gertrude Toynbee, Mrs. Sidney Webb, Miss Margaret A. Wroe, and Mrs. I. Zangwill.

THE ARREST OF THE REV.

J. S. BOWSKILL.

At the monthly meeting of the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society held last week under the chairmanship of the Hon. J. C. Lyttelton, M.P., the following resolution was proposed by Sir T. Powell Buxton:—

That the Committee of the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society desires to place on record its high appreciation of the courageous attitude adopted by the Rev. J. S. Bowskill towards the oppressed natives of Portuguese West Africa, and calls upon His Majesty's Government to secure a searching and impartial inquiry into all the circumstances which led up to the arrest of Mr. Bowskill. That this resolution be forwarded to His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the Rev. J. S. Bowskill, and the Baptist Missionary Society, with an assurance to that Society of the whole-hearted support of the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society in the task of securing justice for Mr. Bowskill.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made for a series of Weekly Meetings for Prayer and Conference on the Women's Movement. They will be held at 92, St. George's-square, S.W., every Wednesday, at 8 o'clock, beginning on March 25. Full particulars and tickets may be had from Miss Lucy Gardiner.

UNDER the auspices of the National Conference Union for Social Service, a meeting will be held in Lindsey Hall, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, on Wednesday, March 25, at 8.30 p.m. The Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, M.A., will take the chair, and will speak on "The Churches and the Criminal Law Amendment Act." Lady Bunting (of the Criminal Law Amendment Committee) will speak on the present state of the law and the reforms needed with reference to the following resolution: "That in the interest of morality, and for the protection of girls, this meeting urges the Government further to amend the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1912, by raising the age of consent to 18 years." This Conference is called to discuss how to promote interest in the churches in this subject, and what action is possible and appropriate for them.

It has been arranged that the dinner which the Modern Languages Association had intended to give to Professor Rudolf Eucken, of Jena, on the occasion of his forthcoming visit to England to lecture before the Association, shall be amalgamated with the public dinner arranged by the Committee of Friends and Admirers of Professor Eucken, which is to take place at the Savoy Hotel on May 28 next; the Right Rev. Bishop Boyd Carpenter in the chair. Applications for tickets should be sent to Professor Eucken's publishers, Messrs. Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Astley.—On Saturday, March 7, a re-union of old scholars and members of the Unitarian Church was held for the purpose of making a presentation to the Rev. P. Holt on the completion of 25 years as minister at Astley. After tea a meeting was held, presided over by Mr. John Lee, who read letters expressing regret at inability to be present from the Revs. R. S. Redfern, W. F. Turland, and H. Fisher Short, and also a letter of warm sympathy and congratulation from the congregation at Chowbent. The presentation was made by Dr. Jessel, who dwelt upon the difficulties and the opportunities of the work at Astley, and pointed out that they had gained a measure of success in the men who had been trained there and taken up active service in other churches. The gift took the form of an oak roll-top desk and clock, and Mrs. Holt was presented with a flower stand and a silver and cut-glass dish. Mr. and Mrs. Holt both responded in suitable terms, and the Rev. G. A. Ferguson, in a cordial speech, expressed his pleasure at being present. A musical entertainment followed.

Bath.—On Thursday, March 5, the secretary of Trim-street Chapel (Miss Athawes) held an "At Home" at Beau Nash House to meet the new minister (the Rev. A. Cunliffe Fox) and Mrs. Fox. There was a large gathering, which included the Revs. J. McDowell (Bath), Rudolf Davis (Gloucester), and W. Holmshaw (Ilminster). Letters of apology were received from Mr. Frank A. Bullock (Trowbridge), the Rev. Gustav Beckh (Clifton), and the Rev. Ambrose N. Blatchford (Bristol). Mr. A. Taylor, chairman of the congregation, presided, and, after offering a welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Fox, remarked that although in point of numbers the congregation of Trim-street was not what it used to be, they had still a good number of friends who were deeply devoted to the cause of the work carried on there, whose faith and courage were unshaken, and who would not spare themselves in supporting the new minister in his labours. On behalf of the congregation words of welcome were offered by Messrs. A. Ricketts, C. Gooding, E. W. Austin, R. S. Bransby, J. Barter, F. Shellard, W. H. Hawling, and Miss Lemann, and the Rev. J. McDowell spoke in the name of the ministers of the province. Mr. Fox came, he said, with the experience he had gained as Secretary of the Manchester District Association, and he hoped that before long he would find his work in the larger field of provincial activity. The Rev. Rudolf Davis, as Secretary of the Western Union of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches, also joined in the welcome. The Rev. A. Cunliffe Fox, in reply, said he thought the omens were good. He had come to Bath full of hope. His ambition was to be not merely their pastor, but also their friend, and it was a great advantage to him to have their old minister to associate with and refer to. He hoped that he would be able to avail himself of Mr. McDowell's larger experience and ripeness for many years to come.

Bolton.—The annual meeting of the members of the Bank-street congregation was held on February 28, when the report of the General purposes committee and the accounts were adopted. The institutions of the church are in a flourishing condition; 56 new seat-holders were enrolled during the year, bringing up the number to 512. After the business meeting a soiree was held, speeches being delivered by Mr. William Noble and the Rev. J. H. Weatherall.

London: Acton.—On Tuesday, March 10, a lecture on Cornwall was delivered at the Unitarian Church by the Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope, of Lewisham, the Rev. A. C. Holden, presiding.

Middleton.—A social gathering to welcome Mr. Charles Smith, the new minister-in-charge, and Mrs. Smith, was held in the schoolroom of Old-road Unitarian Chapel on March 7. Letters of regret at being unable to attend were read by the secretary, Mr. John Dickinson, from Mr. George H. Leigh, J.P., president of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and from the Revs. E. W. Sealy and D. R. Davies. Mr. Foxton, president of the committee, was in the chair, and among those supporting him were Mr. Raynor Wood, representing the Manchester District Association; the Rev. T. P. Spedding, representing the British and Foreign Unitarian Association; the Rev. W. Wood (Congregational), representing the Middleton Free Church Council; Alderman Townend, and other ministers and laymen. On Sunday Mr. Smith preached at the evening service on "The Ball and the Cross." The prospects of the church are very encouraging. There is an enthusiastic band of workers attached to it, and a good Sunday school.

Midland Sunday School Association.—The annual meeting was held at Hurst-street, Birmingham, on March 7. In the report the committee make special mention of the new magazine, Church, School and Home, now published monthly, under the editorship of the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas. This incorporates the Sunday School Monthly, and has been regularly sent to about 40 places. Information was sought as to the number of schools having a preparation class, and also as to the extent to which scholars attended church worship. All the schools reporting, except two, answer the first question in the negative. On the second, while at many schools the scholars attend fairly regularly, there is no definite system of ensuring church attendance common to all the schools in the Association. Most of the schools have been visited during the year. The report concludes with an expression of deep regret at the deaths of the Revs. W. J. Clarke and W. J. B. Tranter, both of whom had been active supporters of the Association. After the business was concluded an address was given by Mr. T. M. Chalmers, secretary of the Sunday School Association, on "The Aim of Sunday School Teaching."

Oldbury.—The welcome meetings in connection with the settlement of the new minister, the Rev. H. C. Hawkins, took place on Monday, February 16. A large congregation assembled for the induction service at 5 p.m., the devotional part of which was conducted by a former minister of the church, the Rev. W. G. Topping (of Coseley) and the Rev. E. Glyn Evans (of Dudley). The charge to the minister was delivered by the Rev. A. H. Shelley (of Cradley), and the charge to the congregation by the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas (of Birmingham). At the meeting the chairman, Mr. A. Burgess, church secretary, welcomed Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins on behalf of the church and Sunday school, and addresses followed by the Revs. A. H. Shelley, representing the Midland Christian Union; J. Wrigley, representing the Ministers' Meeting; W. G. Topping, on behalf of the Midland Sunday School Association; and E. G. Evans, on behalf of the new Midland Guilds' Union.

Ringwood.—On Thursday evening, March 5, the members of St. Thomas's Chapel were invited by Mrs. Cojari Conway to a soiree, held in the school room, to welcome Mr. and Mrs. Raad. Mrs. Conway, in welcoming her guests, spoke most kindly and sympathetically of their new minister and his wife, and pleaded earnestly for loyalty in attendance at the services. By cultivating this habit they would most effectually help their minister, and at the same time would gain strength to carry out their daily work and bear their trials more bravely. Mr. Raad, in replying, said how happy he and his wife had been during their brief stay in Ringwood, which he attributed mainly to the extremely sympathetic attitude of the congregation. He said one constantly reads of the duty of the minister to the congregation, but very little of the duty of the congregation to the minister. Ian Maclaren devoted a little volume to this subject, and really a minister is dependent for his ultimate success in innumerable ways upon the members of the congregation. The speeches were followed by a short entertainment.

Southampton.—On Saturday, March 7, an "At Home" was given in the Hill Hall by the Rev. and Mrs. Andreae to meet the Rev. Charles Hargrove, who was visiting Southampton for the week-end on behalf of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. About 60 members and friends spent a pleasant evening and appreciated the opportunity of an informal meeting with Mr. Hargrove, who also preached on the following Sunday morning and evening.

Wakefield.—We regret that owing to an oversight the acceptance of an invitation to become minister of Westgate Chapel, Wakefield, by the Rev. J. M. Bass, was published last week in "News of the Churches" under Halifax.

Women's League.—A Council meeting of the British Women's League was held at Essex Hall on Tuesday, March 10, at 3.15, the president, Mrs. Blake Odgers, presiding. There was a good attendance of delegates, to whom the chairman gave a very cordial greeting, and Mrs. Sydney Martineau, hon. treasurer, and Miss H. Brooke Herford, joint hon. secretaries, gave encouraging accounts of the financial position and the general work of the League. Special mention was made by Miss Brooke Herford of the International Committee, which has already done a great deal towards drawing together liberal religious women on the Continent and in America, and to promote the aims of the Guild of Friendship. Miss Grace Mitchell then gave an address dealing with her recent experiences in Australia and New Zealand, where she has been visiting the overseas branches. She spoke in warm praise of the beauty of the country through which she travelled, the delightful welcome she received in every place she visited, and the good work which is being done in the widely separated districts where the Unitarian Churches are taking their share in the shaping of a new civilisation. One of the things which had most impressed her was the pathetic eagerness with which she was questioned as to the work that was being done, and the kind of people who were doing it at home. The welfare of these churches in the Overseas Dominions, she thought, ought to be made an integral part of the corporate activities of men and women of the liberal faith in the Motherland, for they had spiritual responsibilities in regard to them which they had been rather slow to realise in the past. There were very great opportunities awaiting them in these new countries, where life was in a much more fluid state, and thought could be influenced more easily than in an old country. She felt strongly that they belonged to a historic church, that they were linked on to a living movement with a mighty tradition, and a mighty trust, and that their work in the future must be inspired by the sense of spiritual fellowship in whatever part of the world they might be. After giving some further details of her tour, and the personal impressions gathered during visits to Melbourne, Sydney, and Adelaide in Australia; and to Wellington, Auckland, and Timaru in New Zealand, Miss Mitchell concluded by saying that she was not making an appeal at that meeting for money, but for knowledge and sympathy, and practical interest. There was one thing which any member of the League might begin to do at once—that was to correspond with some member of an overseas branch of the League. The letters need not be very long, but if once a month they sent a little account of what they were doing, and asked for a similar account from the other side, mutual interest would be kept alive and friendships established which would be of the greatest value. They wanted warmth no less than light if their aims were to be carried out. The following resolution, proposed by Mrs. Blake Odgers, "That this Council meeting sends hearty greetings and messages of goodwill to the sister branches overseas, and earnestly desires that the work done by Miss Mitchell for the League will bear fruit in closer co-operation, mutual sympathy and understanding," was passed with acclamation. A vote of thanks to the lecturer for her address, proposed by Mrs. Tarrant, was also carried with cordiality.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

BETTING AND GAMBLING IN SWITZERLAND.

Switzerland is making a serious effort to check the evils of betting and gambling. At a great meeting at Olten last week it was strongly urged that the Swiss law forbidding games of hazard should be strictly applied, and that the roulette tables should everywhere be abolished within five years. In Geneva an inquiry is being made into the presence of English book-makers, many of whom have sought refuge on the Continent as a result of the strictness of the law in this country, and it is said that the British Consul has obtained from the Geneva Government a promise to suppress all such agencies.

THE INCREASE IN DIVORCES.

According to the most recent statistics the number of petitions for dissolution of marriage in this country is steadily growing, the figures for 1912 (920 against 859) being the largest yet recorded. The decrees nisi also increased by 35. The figures for 1912, compared with 1903, show an increase of 12.38 per cent. as against 9.75, this increase being greater than the increase in population. An increase is to be noted for 1911 and 1912 in the number of marriages having less than one year's duration. The fact is always noticeable, adds the report, that a very large proportion of the marriages are childless. In the ten years 1903 to 1912 they formed no fewer than 39.52 per cent.

WOMEN AND THE INCREASED COST OF LIVING.

At the conference on the increased cost of living, organised by the National Women's Council of the British Socialist Party, and the Women's Industrial Council, held at Toynbee Hall last Saturday, it was stated by Mr. Will Thorne, M.P., who presided, that the purchasing power of £1 had fallen since 1895 to 16s. 3d. From a working-class point of view there was no more important question, he said, than that of the continuous rise in the price of food, because there had not been an equivalent increase in wages. This affected women most, because they were the buyers. Several resolutions were carried urging that organisations of women should be encouraged to oppose all increase of prices, that a legal standard of quality for all goods should be established in the interests of national health, and that a deputation should be arranged to wait upon the Home

Secretary and the President of the Local Government Board.

THE CHARGE FOR GRAZING DOCKED HORSES.

The fact that it is no unusual thing for the owners of grazing land to charge more for grazing long-tailed horses than for those which have been "docked" will probably be news to a good many people. The explanation given by the owner of a meadow near Dieppe is that "a docked horse is constantly irritated by the flies, and keeps on stopping his grazing to drive them off by swinging his head. A long-tailed horse keeps off the flies with his tail, and so can keep on grazing without interruption." This strengthens the argument in favour of legislation to prohibit the practice of docking, which is a cruel form of mutilation, and not only spoils the appearance of the horses, except in the eyes of people who seem to have lost the natural perception of beauty, but results in real torture to the animals, and, as we now know, interferes with the process of feeding in a peculiarly irritating way.

ILLITERACY IN AMERICA.

It comes as a shock to those who have been impressed with the universal spread of education in the United States to learn that there are no less than 2,273,603 illiterate males of twenty-one years of age and over within its borders. The figures are taken by the Manchester Guardian from a recent Congressional Committee report. Only 617,000 of these, however, are native whites, and as to the negroes, their total of illiterates, 819,000, is a decrease of 157,000 as compared with ten years ago, although the total negro population has increased in the meantime by 398,000. Curiously enough, the proportion of illiteracy among the native whites of foreign or mixed parentage (adult males alone being taken) is only 1.3 per cent. as against 4.2 per cent. among native whites of native parentage, and this goes to confirm what is continually being said about the keenness of immigrants' children to profit by their newly-found educational opportunities.

THE MODERNISING OF JERUSALEM.

The old order changes everywhere, giving place to new, and now not only is beautiful Athens to be given over to the ardent town-planner, but Jerusalem is to be brought up to date in a startling way by means of such "improvements" as tramways, reservoirs, telephones, and bicycles for its policemen. One of the tramway routes will start from the Jaffa Gate and run outside the city walls through the newer part of Jerusalem, another will encircle the city with its historic sites and poignant memories, and yet another will run as far as Bethlehem, six miles away, with the prospect of further extensions as time goes on. Even the old methods of agriculture are going out, and the hum of threshing machines operated by motors are heard on the plains of Sharon where once the corn was reaped by hand and threshed out by oxen, and motor boats are now to be run upon the Jordan and the Sea of Galilee, carrying both passengers and freight. It almost seems a desecration to write of these things, but Jerusalem is not the only city of deathless memories which has been spoilt in this way for those whose minds dwell reverently on the past, and its modernising only serves to remind us afresh that the benefits of our civilisation are not gained without some corresponding loss.

DISHONESTY IN MEN AND WOMEN.

It is encouraging to learn, after all we have heard about the increase of drinking with the evils resulting therefrom among women, that dishonesty is declining among them. The same cannot be said of men, however, for, according to an article by Mr. Thomas Holmes (secretary of the Howard Association) appended to his annual report, dishonesty is growing among young men year by year. It shows itself chiefly "not in acts requiring skill, address, or courage, but in petty acts, often repeated, demanding only lack of principle and low cunning—of all kinds of dishonesty the most fatal to the character of the delinquent." "For many years past," he adds, "an increasing number of young women have entered into commercial and industrial life, and have been exposed to the same conditions as those to which men are submitted. Yet in spite of this, and notwithstanding the fact that the female population outnumbers the male by 1½ millions, the number of women detained in prison is only one-sixth the number of men." The London figures are:—Four prisons for men, daily average 4,800; one prison for women, daily average 800.

WOMEN'S INDUSTRIAL COUNCIL.

The nineteenth annual report of the Women's Industrial Council gives a useful summary of the various activities by which it seeks to improve all industrial conditions in which women are concerned. The object of the Council is to collect and publish information, prepare Parliamentary Bills, official reports and statistics, to educate women and girls in social questions and legislation affecting their welfare as workers, to organise social and educational clubs, to train girls as children's nurses, and in other ways clear the path for successful organisation. The Women's Industrial News, its quarterly organ, gives reports on trades, into many of which the Council has made first-hand investigation, and some of the publications issued from time to time, such as "How to Clean a House," "How to Cook a Simple Meal," and other useful pamphlets, have run through several editions of five to ten thousand each. The total number of the domestic series sold during the year, in fact, was 24,691, of the wage series 2,662, of the reports on trades in back numbers of the news 1,638, of the labour law series 1,217, and of the children series 197. Ninety-two lectures and meetings have been arranged, and the lecture list is one of great variety and interest, subjects touching on every aspect of the worker's life being dealt with by such experts in social knowledge as Dr. Elizabeth Sloan Chessier, Mr. Herbert Burrows, Mr. Charles Russell, Mr. Aneurin Williams, Mrs. Handel Booth, Dr. Haden Guest, and Capt. Arthur St. John.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

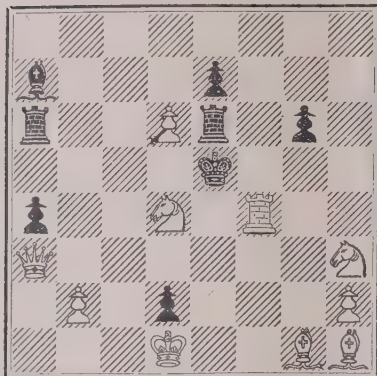

MARCH 14, 1914.

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 48.

By GODFREY HEATHCOTE.

BLACK. (8 men.)

WHITE. (10 men.)

White to play and mate in two moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 48.

1. Q. B7 (key-move).

Correct solutions from R. B. D. (Edinburgh), A. J. Hamblin, E. Wright, J. Johnson (also No. 45), John White, W. T. M. (Sunderland), A. S. Rodgers, W. E. Arkell, W. Williams (also No. 44), Rev. I. Wrigley, A. Mielziner, Rev. B. C. Constable, Dr. Higginson, D. Amos, F. S. M. (Mayfield), Walter Coventry (also No. 45), and Geo. Ingledew.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. JOHNSON and JOHN WHITE.—Thanks for promise of support.

GEO. INGLEDREW.—I will consult the proprietors in reference to the suggestion you make.

An amusing incident occurred when our No. 48 was published many years ago. Mr. Heathcote is one of our finest composers, and his problem was reprinted in the St. Petersburg Novoye Vremya, then edited by the Russian master Tchigorin. He (the Editor) called attention to a cook, and said he was amazed that it had escaped the notice of the solvers, and, worse still, of the judges in the tourney in which it was awarded high honours. What, however, is still more amazing is that the problem is not cooked. It is an example of the truth of the statement that the typical fine player, even though in the ranks of the Masters, is the poorest judge of problems. I do not attach much importance to occasional errors, but to the constant utterances of such players on the subject of problems which display lack of grasp, and a total misunderstanding of some of our problem composers' finest work. In this instance Mr. Heathcote is, in his line, every bit as celebrated a chessist as Tchigorin was in his.

Next week I shall reprint a miniature three-mover of my own which I recently saw (man for man identical) in a German magazine under another name. This is, of course, a coincidence, but a rather startling one. The fact that there are very few pieces makes it quite possible that the idea occurred to two composers independently. The later diagram appeared two years after mine.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15.

Evening, 7.

March

15. Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

22. Mr. W. HARRIS CROOK, of Manchester College, Oxford.

29. Morning, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
Evening, Mr. EDWARD CAPLETON.

April

5. Rev. WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

P. J. FOLEY, Esq., President.

Annual Income £3,340,000

Claims Paid exceed £15,000,000

Additional Representatives Wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing
G. SHRUBSALL, } Directors.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses. Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children in residence.—For particulars apply to HON. SEC., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont-street, Liverpool.

BOOKS

EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY,
TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE

And for all other Exams.

Second-Hand at Half Prices.

New at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogues post free and state wants. Books bought.

BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,

121/123, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by
Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

Immortal Life. THEODORE PARKER.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. HILL, 36, Heath St., Hampstead, London, N.W.

"THE UNITARIAN MONTHLY."

Magazine for Unitarian Propaganda. Adopted by churches with or without local page. Issued for last Sunday in each previous month. One copy sent free, 1½d.—1s. 6d. a year; 9d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100; extra charge local page.—Address to EDITOR, 36 Burlington-road, South Shore, Blackpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCs.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh-street, Tavistock-square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

SUNNY South Coast Health Resort.—Ideal Winter Boarding House, Central, Garden, near Sea. Hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, electric light, and penny in slot gas fire in each bedroom. Three good reception rooms. Food Reform and ordinary diet.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

LEIGH-ON-SEA.—To Let, furnished Bedroom and Sitting-room, in pleasant situation. Private family, 10s. weekly.—Address, "X," c/o Church Lending Library, Rectory Grove, Leigh-on-Sea, Essex.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL,
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

SMART BLOUSES.—Genuine Irish Linen Fabric—"FLAXZELLA"—with new silky finish, makes ideal blouses. Over 200 Patterns Free! Washable, durable; delightful shades; latest designs. Write to-day.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

WHITE ART LINEN REMNANTS, lengths from ½ yard, suitable for Drawn Thread Work, Tray-Cloths, &c., only 5s. per bundle; postage 4d. extra. Write now for Free Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to offer and pay highest genuine prices. Note quotations: Up to 2s. 9d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 6s. 6d. on silver, 15s. on gold, 35s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel, post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Unquestionably the oldest and most reliable firm. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street Ludgate Hill, London, E.C. and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, March 14, 1914.

* Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3743.
NEW SERIES, No. 847.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

RIDER'S SPRING LIST

JUST PUBLISHED.

Startling Communications from the Other World.

LETTERS OF A LIVING

DEAD MAN. Written down by ELSA BARKER, Author of "The Son of Mary Bethel," &c., &c. Cloth gilt.
Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

"I have no apology to make for the publication of these letters. . . . I give them to the world with no more fear than when I gave my hand to X. in the writing of them. If anyone asks the question, What do I myself think as to whether these letters are genuine communications from the invisible world? I should answer that I believe they are. . . . If they can give even to one other person the sense of exultant immortality which they have given to me, I shall feel well repaid for my labour."—FROM THE INTRODUCTION.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE PROBLEMS OF PSYCHICAL RESEARCH.

By
HERWARD CARRINGTON. Cloth gilt.
About 360 pages. With Frontispiece.
7s. 6d. net.

This book discusses the problems of psychical research from a novel standpoint. Mr. Carrington assumes that the main facts are established, and proceeds to discuss the interesting question: Granting their reality, how do these facts occur? Many new cases covering psychical and mental phenomena are published for the first time in this work. A highly interesting chapter is devoted to the origin of the human will.

THE MAN OF TO-MORROW

By FLOYD B. WILSON, Author of "Paths to Power," "Man Limitless,"
&c. New volume of the New Thought
Library. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

[Now Ready.

An anticipation of the probable development of human spiritual evolution in the near future.

THE BRAIN BOOK AND

HOW TO READ IT. A Detailed
Exposition of Phrenology. By H. C.
DONOVAN. Crown 8vo. Cloth gilt.

510 pp. New and cheaper edition.
5s. net. Now Ready.

The most elaborate and complete study of Phrenology that has yet appeared. Each of the Phrenological organs is treated in extenso, and its value and influence on the career in life is specially emphasised.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE SECRET DOCTRINE

IN ISRAEL. A Study of the Zohar and its Connections. By ARTHUR
EDWARD WAITE. Medium 8vo. xvi—
352 pp. Cloth gilt. With Four Plates.
Price 10s. 6d. net.

The work of which this book is a critical study is the Sepher-Ha-Zohar (literally "The Book of Splendour"), the fountain head of Kabbalism, and the great storehouse of Rabbinical tradition. Most interesting lights are thrown on the Kabbalistic conception of the Messiah, on the legend and history of the soul, its pre-existence and re-incarnation, on rewards and punishments in the life to come, and on the resurrection of the dead.

Its publication will, it is anticipated, mark an epoch in the history of Theological Literature.

GHOSTS IN SOLID FORM, AND WHAT THEY TELL US.

An Experimental Investigation of the Phenomena of Materialization. By GAMBIER BOLTON, Author of "Psychic
Powers," &c. Crown 8vo. 120 pp.
Paper Cover, with illustrated jacket.
1s. net. [Ready end of March.

LONDON: WILLIAM RIDER & SON, Ltd.,
8-11, Paternoster Row, E.C.

National Conference.

APPEAL FOR £50,000

— FOR —

SUSTENTATION FUND.

FIFTEENTH LIST.

	£	s.	d.
Anonymous (2nd don.) ..	400	0	0
Rev. Dr. Carpenter, Oxford (2nd don.) ..	125	0	0
Miss Warren, London (2nd don.) ..	50	0	0
Mrs. Ainsworth, Wray Castle ..	25	0	0
Mrs. Thornely, Epsom ..	20	0	0
Miss Troup, Folkestone (2nd don.) ..	20	0	0
Mrs. Kirke, Sheffield (3rd don.) ..	10	10	0
Mrs. Skimming, London ..	10	10	0
Mr. Andrew Thomson, Rotherham ..	10	10	0
Miss K. H. Greg, Styal (2nd don.) ..	5	10	0
Rev. Dr. & Mrs. S. A. Mellor, Warrington ..	5	5	0
Mr. & Mrs. J. A. Barnes, London ..	5	0	0
Mr. Gilbert Beard, Manchester ..	5	0	0
Mr. Stephen G. Lee, Oxford ..	5	0	0
Miss Mary Lyschinska, Berlin ..	5	0	0
Mrs. E. S. Anthony, London ..	3	0	0
Miss Margaret Beard, Liverpool ..	2	2	0
Mr. A. A. Tayler, London ..	2	2	0
Rev. J. W. Cock, Sheffield ..	2	0	0
Smaller sums and Collections to be announced later ..	10	6	0
STILL REQUIRED BY WHIT-SUNTIDE to secure Mr. Blake's conditional Promise of second £500, and to complete the £50,000	1850	0	0

Donors of Ten Guineas become Life Members of the Sustentation Fund.

Cheques or Promises should be sent to either the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. F. W. MONKS, Stonecroft, Warrington, or the Hon. Sec., the Rev. JAS. HARWOOD, B.A., 60, Howitt-road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.

March

22. Mr. W. HARRIS CROOK, of Manchester College, Oxford.

29. Morning, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
Evening, Mr. EDWARD CAPLETON.

April

5. Rev. WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

Secular Education League.

SEVENTH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING, Caxton Hall, Victoria Street, W.C., on Tuesday, March 24, at 8.15 p.m. Chair to be taken by SIR HENRY COTTON.

Speakers—Lady BYLES, Mr. G. W. FOOTE, Mr. ARTHUR HENDERSON, M.P., Mr. HALLEY STEWART, J.P., the Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D., and others. Admission Free.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

Next Entrance Examination, April 3.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, BISHOP'S STORTFORD.

Head Mistress: Miss ESTHER CASE, M.A. Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: Miss ESTHERBROOK HICKS B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M.

Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only,

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church),
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for March 22:

Morning: All Punishment is corrective.

Evening: The God of our Children.

ON FRIDAY, MARCH 27, MR. JOHN M. ROBERTSON, M.P., will deliver the Fifth Moncreux Conway Memorial Lecture at SOUTH PLACE INSTITUTE, South Place, Finsbury, E.C. The title of the Lecture will be "THE LIFE PILGRIMAGE OF MONCREUX CONWAY." The chair will be taken at Eight o'clock by Mr. EDWARD CLODD. Admission Free; Reserved Seats 1s., from E. J. Fairhall, at above address.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Paraff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, March 22.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. Dr. MORITZ WESTON.
 Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PRIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND; 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. A. J. HEALE; 7, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON; 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11, and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11, Mr. R. SORENSSEN; 7, Mr. A. J. HEALE.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Mr. J. W. PETERKEN.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. P. CHALK; 6.30, Mr. F. COTTIER.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Mr. W. HARRIS CROOK.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.; 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30, Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GEORGE COVERDALE SHARPE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING; 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Church-gate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing-street, 11.30, Rev. E. W. LUMMIS, M.A.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 {DEAN ROW, 10.45, and
 {STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GNEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle-terrace, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, 11, Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON; 6.30, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Church of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. A. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. CYRIL FLOWER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. EDWIN ODGERS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREAE, M.A.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

BIRTHS.

MARTINEAU.—On March 11, at Roughdown End, Boxmoor, the wife of Howard Martineau, of a son.

THEW.—On March 13, at Guy's Cliff, Blundell-sands, to Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Thew, a daughter.

DEATH.

WATERALL.—On March 19, at Waddon Lodge, Croydon, Nathaniel Waterall, aged 85 years.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED, a capable Woman to entirely look after very old Lady. Good needlewoman, abstainer; must be cheerful. Some housework, meals in kitchen, small house. TREEMAN, The Holt, Walton-on-Thames.

ELDERLY GENTLEMAN requires two rooms and board, all meals by himself, for 12 weeks from April 11 or a permanency, near some town (in Kent preferred) that has a free lending library. Terms, including laundry, 17s. per week.—Write, E. F., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

COMPANION-HELP required for two Ladies (mother and daughter). Servant kept; references exchanged.—Deva Cottage, Alum Chine-road, W. Bournemouth.

YOUNG LADY as Mother's Help. Salary £18—£20; baby two months, boy three years. Servant kept.—13, Lancaster-road, Brighton.

FULLY TRAINED NURSE would give services in return for three or four weeks' travel in the Summer.—Nurse MAGUIRE, High-street, Soham, Cambs.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Rev. A. LANCASTER, c/o Mr. W. A. Glubb, 55, West-street, Tavistock.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s. d.
PER QUARTER	1 8
PER HALF-YEAR	3 4
PER YEAR	6 6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.
 Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

PER PAGE	£ s. d.
HALF PAGE	3 0 0
PER COLUMN	2 0 0
INCH IN COLUMN	0 3 6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0 4 6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	179
BEYOND PROGRESS	181
THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN PULPIT:—
The Church of the Loyal	182
VERSES: Heavenly Places	183
THE TRAFFIC IN PLUMES	183
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Theism and Christian Tradition	184

BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—
Balder the Beautiful.	185
The Labourer and the Land	186
The Wayfarer's Library	186
Publications Received	186
FOR THE CHILDREN:—
Westward Ho!—II.	187

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Mansford Street Church and Mission	187
Liverpool District Missionary Association	188
British and Foreign Unitarian Assoc.	189
The Plumage Bill	189
Ministers' Pension and Insurance Fund	190
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	190
NOTES AND JOTTINGS	191
OUR CHESS COLUMN	192

* All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

No one can view the Navy Estimates, which were introduced into the House of Commons this week, with complacency. Even those who are firmly persuaded of their necessity must be deeply concerned at the enormous growth of this unprofitable expenditure. Nearly one million pounds a week for naval defence is a sum which even the richest nation upon earth cannot afford without starving its life in many other directions, in the education of its people, the health of its children, or the redemption of its poor from social misery. We have called attention several times to our growing spirit of fatalism, where the navy is concerned. We simply take it for granted that we are the victims of circumstances over which we have no control. But here as in every other department of political activity it is we ourselves who help to make the circumstances. The time cannot be far distant when, goaded by the burden of taxation, the mass of the people will begin to ask themselves whether the resources of Christian civilisation are quite exhausted. Have we really done all in our power to remove every element of menace from our own preparations for war and to convince the rest of the world that there is no element of inflated national pride in this colossal expenditure?

* * *

THERE was one cheerful passage in Mr. Churchill's able speech on the naval situation. We refer to the announcement that the Board of Admiralty have decided to recommend the Government to abolish prize-money. This seems to take us a step further away from the evil days when private interest or revenge played a large part in the soldier's life. "There is a strong feeling," he said, "among naval officers that the private enrichment of individuals by acts arising out of warfare is not compatible with the highest conception of the military or naval profession. It has been abolished in connection with the Army and, I believe it is in accordance with the best naval opinion that a similar step should be taken in regard to the Navy. The question of issuing some grant or bounty to the sailors during the course of a war in consideration of the change which has been made is one which should receive the attention of the Treasury."

* * *

THE House of Commons was seen at its best last week in the debate on the condition of the blind. For once party feeling was forgotten and the deeper sentiments of humanity were allowed free play. There was almost a touch of religion in the earnestness with which the subject was discussed, and more than one member found himself falling quite naturally into the language of the New Testament. It is estimated that there are at least 34,000 blind people in the United Kingdom, who are left to be guarded and helped by the sparse methods of private charity. Reform is greatly needed in two directions. Proper treatment in infancy would save hundreds of cases from the burden of permanent blindness. For those who are permanently blind there should be more adequate industrial training. At present the cost of educating a blind child in London is said to be £54 7s., and towards this the State contributes only £5 5s. Mr. John O'Connor added a human touch when he pleaded that books for the blind should be less exclusively "serious and devotional," and thinking no doubt of Raftery reminded the House that the harpers of Ireland were usually blind. At the close of the debate Mr. Herbert Lewis promised the appointment of an Inter-Departmental Committee to review the whole problem, not as a convenient method of postponement, but as "an indispensable preliminary to definite action." This statement, made on behalf of the Government, was loudly cheered.

* * *

THE report of a committee appointed by the Fabian Society on the working of National Insurance, which was issued last week, is a welcome relief from the controversial warfare which has been carried on against the Act. Its aim is not to hamper administration but to improve it. It acknowledges fully the greatness of the reform which has been accomplished and the benefits which have been already conferred. It then proceeds to give the result of an exhaustive investigation and to formulate a series of recommendations, which are worthy of careful consideration by all who are interested in the subject. The really remarkable thing is that a scheme which touches a vast number of human lives at so many points has not proved to be more faulty than it is. Many administrative difficulties and incidental hardships can only be faced in the light of experience. It is the part of civic patriotism to get these removed as quickly as possible, without unnecessary emphasis upon personal preference or dislike. Let it at least be remembered that without generous sacrifice there can be no social advance.

* * *

It is often asserted by ignorant people that there is nothing in the teaching of Liberal Christianity for the uneducated and the poor. It is conceded rather grudgingly that small groups of enlightened people will assemble for worship and find in the rarefied air the moral sustenance which they need, but the warm human sympathies of the Mission and the word of life spoken to crushed and sinful hearts are supposed to be entirely absent. Exactly the opposite is the case. At the present time the most energetic and successful work carried on by Unitarians is to be found in working-class congregations in the manufacturing districts, and in their Missions in the dark quarters of our great cities they are making their most original contribution on the practical side to the religious needs of men.

* * *

THESE Domestic Missions in London, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and elsewhere were the pioneers in intelligent and broad-minded work among the poor, long before Canon Barnett had dreamed of Toynbee Hall or the name Institutional Church was invented. They were born of the deep religious impulse which filled the hearts of a small group of great and holy men, who were at once dissatisfied amid their own comfortable surroundings and confident that the word of life has an equal appeal to all sorts and conditions of men. The keynote of the enterprise was human friendship enriched and ennobled by divine love. The first missionaries were to go in and out among the homes of the people, as a friend visits his friends, ministering to their needs and speaking to them earnestly of the love of God. The whole method of work in its origin was simple and apostolic, and based upon principles which all subsequent experience has confirmed. Gradually groups of people gathered round the missionary. They desired a common meeting place, and services on Sunday; and so, quite naturally, buildings arose and every provision was made for a people's church. But the early simplicity and directness remained, and few religious institutions in the country have suffered less from the distraction of doctrinal controversies or been more successful in applying the gospel of doing good to the service of human need.

* * *

ANYONE who will read the account of the annual meeting of the Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, which we publish to-day, will realise how deeply spiritual impulse enters into all its work. With its network of beneficent enterprises it touches human life at every point, never making much splash or noise in the world or turning aside from its happy tasks to cultivate the arts of the advertiser, but year by year doing what it can to bear the heavy burden, to give beauty for ashes and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. At the heart of it all there is the strong, dedicated life who can inspire generosity and make others follow where he is willing to lead.

* * *

BUT with changing conditions these Missions have had many difficulties to face.

It is becoming much harder than it was formerly for a committee of well-to-do people to manage a church for the poor. There is the suspicion of patronage even where no patronage is intended. There is also the healthy demand for some share in the management on the part of those who are closely associated with the Mission. This difficulty can be met to some degree by asking a certain number of people who live in the neighbourhood and worship habitually at the Mission church to serve on the committee. Their local knowledge and special point of view would be invaluable in many ways. This is done already with the happiest results at the Mansford Street Mission. It may also be suggested that the other members of the committee should place themselves in more intimate relations with the Mission than that of subscribers by joining in its worship several times a year. Such a habit would break down many barriers through a common realisation of spiritual equality. It would also help to remove some rather deeply rooted middle-class prejudices, which are among the most formidable difficulties of English Christianity at the present time.

* * *

In the Modern Churchman for March Professor Kirsopp Lake pays an interesting and well-balanced tribute to the work of Canon Driver. "The great result," he says, "which Dr. Driver achieved with so much learning, wisdom, tenacity, and incessant toil, would not have been possible except for the brilliancy and courage of two of his contemporaries, his equals in knowledge, his superiors in originality, namely Professor W. Robertson Smith and Professor Cheyne. The former died comparatively early, but the latter, still greatly daring even in his old age, is with us yet. These scholars it was who first defeated the armies of British traditionalists, and invaded the territory which it was Dr. Driver's part to subjugate and fortify with consummate skill. In this undertaking the attractive interpretative work of Dr. George Adam Smith, the deeply religious and mediating volumes of Dr. Kirkpatrick, and the faithful labours of a number of other scholars have contributed not a little assistance. Vast knowledge, a logical and weighty style, unswerving resolution, extreme caution, and above all profound sanity of judgment mark Dr. Driver's work. His title among the Germans—der vorsichtige Driver—was well-earned. We doubt whether in his long career he ever moved forward to occupy a position which has since been demonstrated to be untenable."

* * *

In the same number of the Modern Churchman there is the following editorial reference to Professor Lake himself:—"With a subdued manner and ill-concealed regret, we congratulate Professor Kirsopp Lake on his election to his second Professorship in exile. His removal from Leiden to Harvard means, we fear, that the Council of the Churchmen's Union must lose his genial presence at their meetings. However, we can only give him the farewell greeting which the youthful Origen sent to the heroic Leonidas, on the eve of his martyrdom: "Be sure not to change your mind on our account." We shall still receive Professor Lake's volumes from across the waters, and the stimulus of an American audience re-acting upon those stores of knowledge which years of research have accumulated, leads us to expect that there are many volumes yet to be received. It is true that the Prophet Jeremy avers that they who go into exile are more to be lamented than they who die, but we take no such gloomy view of Professor Lake's future; he is still a comparatively young man, and we may yet hope, if ecclesiastical influence does not prove too strong, to see him not many years hence filling one of the chairs in his own University of Oxford."

* * *

THE Rev. T. E. Page referred recently in similar terms to Professor Lake's appointment. "Few men," he wrote in a letter to the Times, "have devoted more time or better ability to the study of early Christianity, and there are few studies which to-day more need and deserve encouragement. It is a study which deals with the very groundwork of belief, and it is of the first necessity that we should come to the clearest possible knowledge and understanding of its subject matter. But those from whom much is to be learned are in England a very scanty band. The Church of England has controversialists and apologists more than enough, but of impartial inquirers a most sad deficiency. Yet for men like Professor Lake, whose reputation, except in his own country, is of the highest, she has apparently no place. For years he has been exiled in Leiden; now he must, it seems, seek a home across the Atlantic. . . . The conclusions at which Professor Lake arrives are not always those that established orthodoxy demands, and he is one of those unhappy divines who find that to pursue knowledge is sometimes the surest way to avoid promotion. Ecclesiastical authorities have never been much in love with inconvenient learning. Once they branded it as Gnosticism and heresy; then they took to thumbscrews and the stake; now they get rid of its embarrassing possessor by a convenient but ignoble ostracism. And yet the Bishops are ceaselessly lamenting what seems to them the strange fact that the Church is steadily losing its hold over educated and inquiring minds."

BEYOND PROGRESS.

LIBERAL Christianity, like other forms of religion, often falls under the strong obsession of words. At the present time technical terms and categories of thought borrowed from physical science are in full vogue. We have only to mention the magical word Evolution in order to qualify as quite modern, and anything which can be called progressive is deemed worthy of a cheer. It is hard to fight against this current, and the man who attempts to do so, or even ventures to whisper a doubt of the value for religion of some of the latest fashions in popular thinking, is liable to be dismissed as a weak victim of reaction. But here and there a strong voice is raised, pleading for a careful examination of the phrases which fall so glibly from men's lips, or bidding us fix our attention upon aspects of religious experience to which, clearly, they do not apply. People who take some pride in their openness of mind cannot refuse to listen, and judging from past history they must ever admit the possibility that the heretic among the evolutionists may happen to be right.

Last week we wrote quite deliberately some words which, if they are true, remove the deepest issues of the religious life from dependence upon the fever and fret of temporal progress, with its crumbling edifices of discredited thought and its long procession of obsolete theories about the meaning of life. "We could never commit ourselves," we said, "for life and for death and for eternity to a Divine Love, a Way of Life, which we might outgrow to-morrow. In the worship of our spirits, in the deepest affections of our souls, there is nothing provisional or contingent." In our present issue the Rev. W. WHITAKER, approaching the subject from a different point of view, makes a similar claim. "The notion," he writes, "of an interminable succession of religions and systems, on and on for ever, which was a nine-days' wonder of our grandfathers and their 'science,' has to be relegated to a museum of philosophical curiosities. . . . When it can be shown how love and forgiveness and humility, and CHRIST himself, are likely to be superseded, we shall be willing to accept the naturalistic conception of progress. But it will not bear examination."

Now we hope that it is clear that neither of these statements has been made at random. They represent deep conviction which has been submitted to some of the testing fires of experience. They correspond, moreover, with a view of religion which has been rich in the noblest fruits of the Spirit. For this reason we ask for deep and careful consideration of the position, even by those who may find much to cavil at in the form in which it is stated. In this connection disputes about words will be of little use. If "finality" is a hard and disagreeable word to some minds, suggestive only of arbitrary barriers to thought; if for others "absolute" seems to have more affinity with philosophical abstractions than with the pulsing heart of religion, let us agree if possible to use other terms. What matters is the deep conviction that the Christian soul in its moods of adoration and its acts of obedience is raised above what is merely ephemeral; that through all the stages of its own growth in the knowledge and the love of God its present judgment of values can never be reversed. Love cannot be dethroned, or goodness become less admirable, or the character and sacrifice of CHRIST seem unworthy of the deepest homage which the heart can give at the bidding of some law of progress. These things are God's revelation to us rather than our dim and transitory guesses about God.

Here we come upon the difficulty which is always cropping up in the discussion of this subject. It is for many people inseparable from the mental habits in which they have been trained. Christianity has been studied in the modern world chiefly from the intellectual point of view. Its systems of thought rise and pass away. Its theology in many of its aspects is only provisional. The answer which it gives to the world's enigma is accepted by one generation and rejected by the next. In a word, it partakes of the weakness and contingency which are inseparable from all historical movements. But does not this very fact, that some deep source of religious renewal survives through all these changing forms, suggest at least the presence of a spiritual secret which intellectual analysis and historical criticism can never penetrate? What if the claim be true that Christianity, so far from being one among the many vain attempts to read the riddle of existence, owes all its power to the divine fire which glows in its heart? That it is so countless men and women throughout the centuries would affirm. It is not a provisional resting place for the spirit, which with much effort they have discovered for themselves. It is the very love of God coming to claim them for its own, appointing for them the true way of life, and lifting them up through its purifying grace into fellowship with a divine order of being. Here there is a large space for the errors of human judgment and the blind gropings of human folly, and to all these the demands for improvement, for progress, may be fitly applied. Christianity on its way through the world has left many things behind; it has spurned our attempts to hold it in intellectual chains or to harness it to some unchanging social order; but it has never repented of its first love or ceased to point to the one and only way by which the heart and conscience of man can make their peace with God. It has always held fast to the things which are beyond progress, because they are divine.

In a graphic passage Mr. EDWYN BEVAN has described the state of spiritual destitution to which Stoicism came as a message of life and peace in the ancient world.

"Mankind," he says, "seemed to be driven hither and thither in a sea of contrary desires; one impulse overrode and frustrated another; the things which men took for good brought them no satisfaction when they were gained; human life was a chaos, in which blind Desire was the propelling force, and action was spasmodic, furious, vain—a misery of craving for ever disappointed and for ever renewed."

The break up of venerable traditions of thought and social order is producing a similar feeling of unsatisfied religious need in the modern world. We too know "a misery of craving for ever disappointed and for ever renewed." For the tragic intensity of such a mood a cheerful gospel of progress is of little avail. We need something beyond this fleeting temporal order, a heavenly standard of values which alone can give meaning to progress for far-seeing eyes. Whither are we tending? Where are the loyalties of the heart securely fixed? What is the way of life which we are prepared to tread in the face of danger and temptation, through all the mockery of changing fashions? Unless we can give a quiet and confident answer to these questions intellectual curiosity will profit us little, and all our talk about progress will be mere striving after wind.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN PULPIT.

THE CHURCH OF THE LOYAL.

By L. P. JACKS, D.D.

"Ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to innumerable hosts of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn who are enrolled in heaven, and to God the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect."—HEBREWS xii. 22.

WHAT is the work of the churches? What is their mission? What is their goal? What ought they to aim at?

The writer of my text answers those questions in his own way. The work of the churches is to bring mankind into the company of innumerable hosts of angels, to unite them in a general assembly of the firstborn, to bind them in one fellowship with the spirits of just men made perfect, and so to lead them into the presence of God. The goal of the churches is the heavenly Jerusalem.

A sublime answer, you will say, but vague and bewildering. Not one whit more vague than many of the answers which are being given to the same questions to-day. Not one whit more bewildering. On the score of clearness the new answers are no better than the old. On the score of sublimity the old has the advantage.

If you ask the thoughtful men to say precisely what the work of the churches is the answers will not agree. One will say it is this; another, it is that; a third, something else. One will tell you that the work of the churches has to do with Christian salvation; another with economic justice, a third with a general reform of morality. But when you place those answers side by side you may find that, in spite of their seeming variety, they have something in common. And this that they have in common brings them strangely into line with the answers given by the writer of the Hebrews. They too, like him, are all concerned with an innumerable company, though perhaps not of angels; they too, like him, have something to say about a general assembly, though not perhaps of the first-born; they too, like him, hold before us a fellowship of spirits, though not perhaps of just men made perfect; they too speak of a city, though perhaps they do not call it the heavenly Jerusalem. They use other words, but words which are not essentially different in meaning. They speak of Society, of Mankind, of the Community, of the Human Race. These words are the modern substitutes for Mount Zion, for that general assembly, for that innumerable company, for that fellowship of saints, for that great cloud of witnesses, for that heavenly city of which you may read in the Epistle to the Hebrews.

The modern answers, then, are not agreed if you ask what is the work of the churches. But if you ask, instead, for whom is that work to be done, who is to be the ultimate beneficiary of all these efforts, you will see that a great agreement has already begun. It is to be done for society, for mankind, for the community, for the human race. The churches are to operate upon men in their togetherness, not in their singularity. Souls must be saved together, not one by one. How souls are to be saved may be a question; what salvation is may be a problem, but at all events there is to be no more talk of each one for himself. I do not say that isolating doctrines of one kind or another are wholly extinct. They still survive, as bad things always do long after their doom has been sealed. But they are mere survivals; if not dead, they are dying; they no longer command respect. The great principle of the togetherness of all men in all their highest interests is accepted by the best thought, by the best morality of our time. It is a great agreement. The only churches which have the promise of the future are the churches which take their stand on that principle. All those which have it not will fail. At the same time, those which have it are not bound to prosper. They may still fail, through lack of the wisdom, the breadth of mind, the loyalty which so great a principle demands. Let us never forget that the highest principles are those that make the largest claim on our loyalty and on our wisdom. The higher our principles, the more liberal we must become in their interpretation, the more courageous in their application, the more self-denying in their service. Churches can be ruined by the loftiness of their principles as readily as by the meanness of them. That is a dark day in the history of any religious movement when its ideas grow too big for its loyalties, when its principles outrun its courage in applying them, when it becomes top-heavy with wisdom, when its teaching becomes so rich and abundant and many-sided that nobody can even remember, much less practise, one-half of what he is being taught. Great principles are dangerous things. They require great souls to handle them, great souls to receive them, great souls to remember them.

For this reason I confess to some misgiving when I stand in the presence of that deep truth of which I have spoken—the truth of the togetherness of men in all their highest interests—the truth which the thought of our time has so firmly accepted. It is such a big thing! Are we equal to it? Are we ready as individuals, as churches, for what it requires of us? Have we the courage to follow it up? Are we willing that it should lead us on, by dark and difficult ways, perhaps, into strange regions where we never expected to find ourselves? Are we going to be firm when the pinch comes? The truth of man's togetherness will not stand still. It will not suffer us to stand still either. It has not come into the world to be looked at and admired. It has come on business, and its business is with you and me; with this group of churches, and with every church throughout the world. We do not satisfy its requirements by talking about it; no matter how eloquently, no matter how learnedly. Are we not in danger of overlooking all that; content to find in this great revelation something we can preach about, or hear preached about by others? That won't do. Big words are being bandied about—words that ought to be accompanied by big thoughts and big resolutions. "Society," "mankind," "the community," "the human race"—these are the big words. But what do they mean? The mission of the churches is to work for the good of "the human race." You may hear that said time and time again; but only now and then, in highly exceptional instances, do you encounter a thinker sufficiently earnest to ask himself what he means when he talks of "the human race."

What is "the human race?" Or ask a plainer question—one more easily answered. Where is the human race? Where is mankind?

By far the greater portion of the human race lies buried in that vast cemetery we call the earth. There are more graves in the earth than there are houses on the earth. Only a small part of the human race is in the houses. The rest are in the graves. That is the answer.

There is not one of us in this church to-night but owes far more to the people in the graves than he owes to the people in the houses. Our debt to the living is great; our debt to the dead is far greater. Our civilisation, our knowledge, our morality, our religion, our manners, our very bodies—nine-tenths of it, nay, far more than that, is a heritage from the past. Strike out from all that makes you what you are everything you owe to the buried generation of your fellow-men, and what remains would be something lower than the lowest savage. The greatest of living philosophers has declared that our life is just the past, flowing on into the future. And what a past it is, if we only knew? Were a vision to be granted of the uncounted generations whose life is flowing on through you and me at this moment: were a general assembly to be called of our forgotten benefactors, our forgotten teachers, our forgotten helpers; were all those to whom we are debtors for our deepest thoughts and brightest hopes to appear before us here and now; were we to be suddenly confronted with that vast company, rank behind rank, who in every age down to the remotest have been teaching our hands to labour and our minds to think and our hearts to love, and through whom we have become what we are, then I say that the visible spaces of the earth would be too small to contain that multitude. In the presence of so great a vision we should learn something which our easy talk about "society" and "the human race" has never revealed to us: We should see that the togetherness of mankind is something vaster, deeper, and far more splendid than we had ever dreamed. We should see the filaments which bind us to our fellows spreading not only through space, but through time as well, embracing the ages as well as the nations, the dead as well as the living, the past as well as the present. The words we have used in defining the work of the churches—"the good of society," "the interests of mankind"—words so often pronounced and so seldom understood—would be spoken henceforth with a new meaning and felt with a new emotion. They would suggest a range of duties whose existence we had never suspected, and whose splendour we had never seen:

and the old duties hitherto recognised—our duties to the present and our duties to the future—would become doubly urgent when once we had seen them in the light of what we owe to the past. We shall never understand what “society” means, we shall never rise to the height of our calling as workers for “mankind” until we see the vision of which I have spoken, until we learn that this human race of which we are the members includes the great cloud of witnesses, until we feel ourselves bound in one communion with the invisible fellowship of the mighty dead. To think of “society” as though its only members were those who happen to be living on the earth at this moment; to think of the unnumbered multitudes of the dead as having utterly passed out of the human fellowship; to think of ourselves and our brothers as destined in a few years to pass out of it likewise; to see nothing in our membership but a mere temporary arrangement; to have no ties save those that bind us to the living—all this falls miserably short of the truth; and I do not hesitate to say that within conceptions so impoverished no Church will ever find a mission, no Gospel will every find an inspiration, no human heart will ever find a resting-place.

A great American thinker and prophet has been telling us of late that the essence of all religion is Loyalty. The only living church is a loyal church. By a loyal church I do not mean merely a church whose members are loyal to one another and to their minister. It is that; but it is infinitely more. A loyal church is the guardian and keeper of the fruits of victory won by the human spirit in its march through the ages. The work of a loyal church is to interpret the Past to the Future. Such a church takes hold of the Past, and makes out of it something for the Future to live upon. A loyal church need not be conservative. It may be as liberal, as progressive, as you please. It may be in league with every reforming movement. It may even be revolutionary. But it never deserts its past. It not only remembers the lessons which have come down to it from the past, but remembers also the spirits of every age and nation to whom it owes those lessons, and loves their memory and keeps them in its bosom. It remains in close communion with the general assembly of the world's ages. And just because its hold on the past is so deep and so loving its reach into the future becomes hopeful and daring. It feels the power of its heritage, and with that heritage on its hands is never at a loss what to do next. It is proud of its responsibilities as a trustee. Its obligations to the past inspire it with ardour and with wisdom.

But though proud of its duties, it is not conceited as to its virtues. It has no superior airs. It has no breath of contempt, not even for the earliest and crudest labourers in the vineyard of God. It rather acknowledges the immense debt under which it stands to these beginners; there are none, in fact, whom it holds so dear. Instead of despising their labours, or emphasising their mistakes, it thanks them lovingly for what they did, and remembers that in ages to come its own labours will seem just as primitive as theirs. It never boasts of its own enlightenment, knowing that if its own enlightenment were all it had it would be homeless, and naked, and hungry, and ashamed. Its loyalty is half gratitude and half endeavour. Its endeavours spring out of its gratitude, and the combination of the two fill it with light and surround it with an atmosphere of love. The loyal church has an immense range of fidelities, and rejoices in them all. Men come into its fold because they know they will not be deserted, neither in life nor in death. They will not be suffered to drop out of its bosom when they die; they will still remain its members; and the church's loyalty to them has its counterpart in their loyalty to the church. They embrace its burdens as well as its privileges. For the loyal church has a mighty burden. It carries the evil of the world in its arms. Light is not the only thing that has come down to it from the past. The burden of the world's sorrow, the sad weight of the human tragedy has come down as well. The loyal church takes that up along with the rest, and breathes its daily prayer that the great stream of Strength which sustained its fathers may enable it also to bear the Cross.

It follows from this the church of the loyal is never sectarian. Owing its debt to others, the last thing it could ever do would be to cut itself off from them by forming a sect. These others are leaves of the same tree, children of the same hearth with itself. The streams which feed its own life feed theirs also. All alike have their portion in the great heritage of the past; all mingle their roots in the same soil; and the great cloud of witnesses that surrounds any one of them is the same great cloud that surrounds every other. I know of no thought, of no faith, which so liberalises the human mind. Should the day ever come when men have realised that there are no sects in the Heavenly Jerusalem, from which we are all derived, there will be no more sects on the earth. There lies the true centre of unity. There, in the links which bind them to the past, men will one day find the links that bind them in the present. Enlarge your thought of human society until it covers and includes the buried generations of mankind; give the present its setting in the mighty past; bring all together, past and present, dead and living, as the undivided, unbroken family of God, and who among us will say any more, or think any more, that he belongs to a sect?

In these days the churches languish. They languish because of the poverty of their ideas. They think they have got hold of a very big idea—the idea of “Society.” But, as some of us handle it, “Society” is a very small idea, and utterly inadequate to its purpose. It needs enlarging. Current notions of the Kingdom of God are poverty-stricken. There is little in them that can stir the soul of the world. Armed with this idea the churches hope to capture the future, and in order to accomplish this some of them try to outdo one another in the production of something new. But the whole proceeding lacks in depth, in solemnity, in that power to move the heart, without which nothing can be done. Inevitably we recoil upon the day of small things.

If I may end with a plea to my brethren, it will be this: Expand your thought of the church till it gains the height, breadth, and depth of the Heavenly Jerusalem. Be content with no church which is anything less than the Communion of the Saints. Do not shrink from proclaiming the Immortality of the Soul. See yourself as something more than a member of this church, or this union, or this city, or even of this vast human population of whom in a few years not one will be left alive. Enlarge your thought of yourself until you come to Mount Zion, unto the city of the Living God, and to innumerable hosts of angels, to the general assembly, and church of the first-born who are enrolled in heaven, and to God the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect.

HEAVENLY PLACES.

“GRANT, Lord, that my sons may sit
Right and left beside Thy throne,
When Thou shalt inhabit it,
When the Kingdom is Thine own.”

“Know ye what ye ask?” He said.
“Can ye drink my cup indeed?”
Sons and mother answerèd—
“Yea, Lord, we can drink at need.”

“Know ye what it is to sit
Left and right beside my Throne?
Here dominion lordeth it,
There the lowliest serve alone.”

“Servant of mankind am I,
I would wash your soiled feet,
In my Father's house on high
That ye may be guests most meet.”

Sons and mother bowed the knee,
Followed Christ, forsaking all:
Only to humility
Do the heavenly places fall.

H. H. J.

THE TRAFFIC IN PLUMES.

I COME in the little things,
Saith the Lord:
Yea! on the gleaming wings
Of eager birds, the softly pattering feet
Of furred and gentle beasts, I come to meet Your hard and wayward heart. In brown bright eyes
That peep from out the brake, I stand confest.
On every nest
Where feathery patience is content to brood
And leave her pleasure for the high emprise
Of motherhood—
There doth my Godhead rest.

It was a woman who wrote those lovely lines, and some women will be glad to remember that when harsh things are said about their shameful connivance in the horrors of the plume trade. For the indictment which must be brought against us by the humanitarian—and not on account of the birds alone—is a heavy one, so heavy that our culpability would be wholly inexplicable if we could not plead some measure of ignorance rather than callousness, and if men and women alike were not so obsessed by the fallacious idea involved in what we are pleased to call the "conquest of nature." When you really think that man is the centre of the universe, and has lordship over every created thing, a lordship which he is gradually extending so that it will by and by include the forces of earth, and sea, and sky, and when, in addition to this, you are kept in darkness as to the methods of exploiting the sub-human kingdom in order to supply our real or artificial needs, it is very easy to persuade yourself that the killing of birds to provide trimmings for hats is a perfectly legitimate proceeding. What, indeed, are they for, if not to be eaten or used for the purposes of millinery? And why, in any case, should we study the feelings of creatures that belong to another order of being altogether, since we have been given dominion over fish, and fowl, "and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth" from the beginning of time? This view of life, however, common as it is, has never been allowed to go wholly unquestioned even in the days which we consider so barbaric in comparison with our own, and modern scientific research, with its startling revelation of the essential oneness of all life, and its rapid narrowing of the gulf which was formerly supposed to separate the dumb creation from man, is making it still more difficult to maintain.

We are, indeed, of one kith and kin with everything that lives and breathes. The same insurgent force that manifests itself in the joyous laugh of a child drives the gauzy fin of a myriad-coloured fish fathoms deep in the ocean. The same rapturous emotions which stir the heart of a lover give a more ecstatic note to the song of the wild bird as it "rings Eden through the budded quicks," and we are all dependent in precisely the same way upon the supreme Will which brought us into existence, and gives us each our appointed task in a world not of our designing. There is, of course, no possibility of "conquering" nature, except in the sense that we may be said to "conquer" ourselves, because we are actually part of her existence, woven of the same texture as the living organism which we so oddly conceive of as being something external to ourselves, and which we strive to get the better of in mysterious ways to our own advantage. We may, it is true, learn to ride the currents of the air, send inaudible messages through the ether of space, and plunge in weird vessels below the surface of the sea; but the thing we have gained an ascendancy over is simply our own pathetic ignorance. We have added another bit of experience to our store of knowledge in the long process of adaptation to environment which is perfecting us to play a greater part, perhaps, than we imagine in the scheme of things; but let us take care lest we lose our humility as we penetrate further into the secrets of God, and talk too boastfully of harnessing the vast forces of the universe, instead of co-operating, or bringing ourselves into harmony with them and the laws to which even the stars in heaven are obedient.

Now, if we could accustom ourselves a little more to the idea that all life is one, though it has a million forms; that the Creator is at as much pains, if we may so express it, to tint the young oak leaf as to trace the convolutions of the human brain; that there is no break in the continuity of existence from the incalculable centres of force that compose the atom to the vast suns swinging in space beyond the boundaries of our solar system—then, surely, we shall hesitate before destroying in mere wantonness living things of exquisite beauty, fashioned of the same material whereof our own minds and bodies are made. It is really like destroying a part of ourselves, which we are utterly incapable of restoring; indeed, if we could only read those wonderful hieroglyphics of wing markings and colour splashes in which, as Richard Jefferies has said, "the sun has written his commands and the wind inscribed deep thought," it would seem like raising impious hands against the temple of the living God Himself. There is, when one comes to think of it, a deplorable lack of true perception and feeling in the excitement aroused by the theft of the Monna Lisa as compared with the apathy of the public where the iniquities of the traffic in fur and feathers is concerned, though the latter results in untold suffering to millions of sensitive creatures, and, in many cases, the complete extermination of some of the rarest and most beautiful species. The Monna Lisa is a superb example of Leonardo's art to which the praises of great writers have lent a quite unique charm, but its permanent loss would offer no affront to the slowly awakening conscience of humanity, however it might appal the lover of art, nor add anything to the burden of blood-guiltiness under which we are painfully advancing towards higher ethical ideals. It is very different when you come to think out all that is implied in the continual doing to death of myriads of wild creatures for no useful purpose whatsoever—the destruction of lovely forms vibrating with joy, and fresh from the hand of the divine Artist whose breath pulses through the "handful of dust." He enchants moment by moment—the moral degradation, not only of those who are compelled to carry on the murderous traffic, but of all who support it in mere heartlessness and vanity. And yet we are not cruel by nature; we are only lacking in sympathy and imagination, and that perfect humility of spirit which has always made it impossible for the finer types of men and women to regard this wonderful universe as a mere storehouse of pretty things left open for us to plunder at will. We have not yet realised that God may come to meet the "hard and wayward heart" in the soft, quivering bodies bleeding beneath the plume-hunter's hand, in the plaintive cry of the motherless little ones starving to death on the nest, in the bright eyes glancing under feathery crests coloured like the dawn, in the swift wings with their shimmer of rose and gold and amethyst whose motion is the constant wonder of men who have given years to the study of bird-flight, in the lyric tumult of song which we coldly appraise as if it were the result of mere mechanical contrivance, and not the perfect expression of a deathless joy whose other name is love.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THEISM AND CHRISTIAN TRADITION.

SIR,—It is a pity to introduce into a discussion such a charge as that of spiritual arrogance against Christianity on account of its claim to finality. This claim may, or may not, be valid, and the question must be judged on its merits; but it in no way helps us to come to a decision when Mr. Flower prejudices the whole matter by the accusation of arrogance. To large numbers of people it seems to be the truth that Christianity must stand or fall with its claim to finality. To others, who are still under the influence of nineteenth century Naturalism, the idea of finality is so objectionable, that if the alternative were presented, they would relinquish Christianity rather than accept it as final. No one could properly accuse them of arrogance in thus submitting Christianity to the test of their own philosophy. But, in the same way, they ought to refrain from similar accusations. And it is right that they should be reminded that the idea of finality forms part of their own belief. For does not Mr. Flower tell us, in his last letter, that "some of Christianity's contribution to the Temple of true Religion is invaluable and eternal." How does he know this? "Eternal" is an even stronger word than "final"; for when we speak of the finality of the Christian Religion we imply that it is final for human and earthly conditions. But "eternal"! And this is only one instance of the confusions into which "Theism," with its half thought out implications, and its uneasy poise upon the double foundations of Naturalism and Moral Insight, is always falling. It is time that religious men shook off the dead weight of conceptions that were already stricken with death when Huxley delivered his Romanes Lecture on "Evolution and Ethics," in 1894, and scarcely needed the last quietus from him. The deepening spiritual insight that has found out how bare and shallow was the rationalism of the last century, has sprung largely from the new sense of the importance of "value-judgments" in the constitution of human thinking, and the new insistence on what Professor Ward calls the Realm of Ends. It is nothing less than a renaissance of the Spiritual Life, and with it has come a way of regarding Christianity of which the old Evolutionism never dreamed. The notion of an interminable succession of religions and systems, on and on for ever, which was a nine-days' wonder of our grandfathers and their "science," has to be relegated to a museum of philosophical curiosities. Of course, that way of speaking still lingers. (Dr. Walsh even knows "how the universe came, and how it subsists.") It is an illustration of the power of analogy over the imagination. Having had our attention gripped by the picture of an evolving universe, and especially of biological development, it was natural to put Christianity into the picture as a species, of which Religion, or even Theism, might be the genus. But it is mere picture-thinking after all. The question of Christianity and its finality has to be decided according to quite other standards—by ideas of moral value, which, instead of submitting to naturalistic and evolutionary conceptions, are the “master-light” by which evolution itself is seen to have any truth for human history. When it can be shown how love and forgiveness and humility, and Christ himself, are likely to be superseded, we shall be willing to accept the naturalistic conception of progress. But it will not bear examination. The notion, for example, of lumping together all kinds of remotely separated and variegated religions, ancient and modern, under the name of “Theism,” is as indefensible in science as it is useless for religion. The relevant fact is that there is to-day a religion called “Theism,” of a fairly well-defined pattern. This either is, or is not, an improvement upon all former faiths. The matter is arguable and quite a proper subject for discussion, and no one has any right to call Theists “arrogant” for preferring their faith. But before we have gone far in our examination we shall have found ourselves instinctively referring to standards that have nothing to do with naturalistic ideas of progress and development. Incidentally, we shall probably come to see that religions are not discovered by bold adventurers who set out on the heroic quest of “some new thing.” It was St. Paul and not the “men of Athens” who gave to his age a new life. It is my fervent hope that no one will be led, even by Mr. Flower’s eloquent challenge, to follow him in such a search. In quite other ways than this does the world make its fresh conquests over sin and darkness. Before you have a new religion you must have a new Christ.—Yours, &c.,

W. WHITAKER.

Withington, Manchester,
March 17, 1914.

SIR,—Dr. Walsh has made a spirited rejoinder to my two former communications, and his reply contains a challenge which seems to demand an answer. But his letter begins with a proviso which really unites our points of view, for he says: “Given vital belief in God and the enthusiasm of humanity, are not criticism, science, and abundant learning great aids to the furtherance of a rational religion?” I answer unreservedly that they are, but the dynamic must be found in the vital belief and the enthusiasm. Are these native born, or must they be quickened and nourished; if so, by what means? But has the face of the Father ever been more clearly revealed, or the love of neighbour more clearly enjoined, than in the teachings of Jesus? He did not separate himself from Hebrew faith, but released it from its national limitations, and gave it a deeper spiritual content. We need not, however, deny the value of other religious systems, though we must recognise that they have not penetrated the Western World; and if we give up Christianity are they likely to suffice us? Mohammedanism is based on the Bible, and the Koran gives us a miraculous Jesus. Bahaim is a modern attempt to respiritualise Mohammedanism, and its pathetic history is almost a repetition of the early Christian struggles. The “Brahmo Samaj” has given us Mozoomdar’s “Oriental Christ,” and Brahminism has its Krishna. Unless, therefore, Theism is altogether going to divorce itself from the past, where can it find its roots except in Christianity? Some Theists I know decline to see this. True, the divine dwells in every man, but only leaders can quicken the spirit, and the true prophet stands in the train of his predecessors as Jesus did with John.

Now there is a Liberal Judaism and a Liberal Christianity to-day, and I contend that these movements are rational and justifiable. As early Christianity broadened the Hebrew faith, so in turn it absorbed Greek thought, and submitted itself to the Roman genius of organisation. To-day, in like manner, it has to reconcile twentieth century knowledge, and adapt its form to the wider outlook. But there is a spiritual deposit which is indispensable, and though it may be hard to define, its loss soon makes itself felt. Theism—the belief in an immanent yet transcendent God—must, it seems to me, have this spiritual content if it is to become a power, otherwise it falls into Deism. Therefore I ventured to suggest that it was suicidal to separate itself from the rock from which it was hewn. But Dr. Walsh says he knows of no such intention. The spiritual value of Christianity is so well summed up in the words of Foerster that I venture to quote them from your columns:—“No moral command is able to speak to man’s inner being in a language so peculiarly that of the human soul as is the speech of Christianity. No moral command can unite obedience and liberation, self-denial and self-realisation, sacrifice and resurrection. But Christianity can do this.”—Yours, &c.,

“YOUR CONTRIBUTOR.”

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

BALDER THE BEAUTIFUL.

The Golden Bough. By J. G. Frazer, Litt.D. Part VII., Balder the Beautiful. 2 vols. London: Macmillan & Co. 20s. net.

DR. FRAZER has a genius for attractive titles. He can use all the arts of the literary wizard to lure his readers through the thickest mazes of primitive custom and belief. His encyclopædia of anthropology is also a work of imagination. All the other books on the same subject, even “Primitive Culture,” the greatest of them all, lack the magical appeal which lurks in the words “The Golden Bough.” And Dr. Frazer’s instinct has not failed him to the end of his long task. “Balder the Beautiful” completes the row of ten volumes on our shelves. Dr. Frazer’s keen eye for parallels suggested a comparison between the priest of Diana at Nemi and the Norse god Balder. In both cases the plucking of the mistletoe bough was a prelude to their death. But further investigation has not confirmed the first suspicion of some connecting link. “Though I am now less than ever disposed,” Dr. Frazer writes, “to lay weight on the analogy between the Italian priest and the Norse god, I have allowed it to stand because it furnishes me with a pretext for discussing not only the general question of the external soul in popular superstition, but also the fire festivals of Europe, since fire played a part both in the myth of Balder and in the ritual of the Arician grove.” This leads Dr. Frazer to the cautionary statement that wide diffusion of similar ideas and customs is no proof of mutual dependence, though ample allowance must be made for the undoubted fact of borrowing. He maintains that there is an “essential similarity in the working of the less developed human mind among all races, which corresponds to the essential similarity in their bodily frame revealed by comparative anatomy.”

The long account of Fire-Festivals, the Easter Fires, the Midsummer Fires, the Hallowe’en Fires, the Midwinter Fires, which survive among many highly civilised people, is rich in curious lore apart from the more technical discussion of their significance. On the latter point Dr. Frazer confesses that his own view has undergone considerable change. Formerly he was attracted by the theory that the object of these practices was to reinforce the sun’s heat at critical periods of the year by sympathetic magic; but the investigations of Dr. Westermarck have amassed a great deal of evidence for the view that their primary object was that of purification, being specially connected with the fear of witchcraft, and Dr. Frazer has been won over. “For my part,” he says, “I cannot but think that the arguments for the purificatory theory far outweigh the arguments for the solar theory.” At the same time he states the arguments for the solar theory with some fulness on the ground that the evidence is as yet not quite conclusive. The disappearance of these pagan superstitions he attributes to the urban character of modern civilisation.

“The danger created by a bottomless layer of ignorance and superstition under the crust of civilised society is lessened, not only by the natural torpidity and inertia of the bucolic mind, but also by the progressive decrease of the rural as compared with the urban population in modern states; for I believe it will be found that the artisans who congregate in towns are far less retentive of primitive modes of thought than their rustic brethren. In every age cities have been the centres and as it were the lighthouses from which ideas radiate into the surrounding darkness, kindled by the friction of mind with mind in the crowded haunts of men; and it is natural that at these beacons of intellectual light all should partake in some measure of the general illumination. No doubt the mental ferment and unrest of great cities have their dark as well as their bright side; but among the evils to be apprehended from them the chances of a pagan revival need hardly be reckoned.”

This passage, with all its suggestiveness, reveals the failure of Dr. Frazer's mind to fathom the real significance of religion in human development. He regards it merely as a stage through which men pass on their way from magic to science, and he believes that the hope of progress—moral and intellectual as well as material—in the future is bound up with the fortunes of science. For a scheme of life which allows such scant room for spiritual need and affection, the city with its growing dependence upon mechanism may appear the best laboratory of human progress; but we doubt whether amid the roar of its highly organised life men will ever be content to forget the ancient wisdom of the earth. We pay a high price even for freedom from superstition, if we never scan the face of the heavens or look for the early and the latter rain, and feel day by day our dependence upon the dread Power from which all things come forth and to which they all return.

THE LABOURER AND THE LAND.

The Rural Problem, By H. D. Harben. London: Constable & Co. 2s. 6d. net.

THE social problem which at the moment occupies most attention is the land question, especially as affecting the position of the rural labourer. One of the ablest attempts to deal with the various difficulties which the land reformer has to overcome, and, in so far as the suggestion of remedies is concerned, one of the most consistent, is that contained in Mr. H. D. Harben's volume, the result of the investigations of the Fabian Committee of Inquiry into Land Problems and Rural Development. The migration from the countryside has steadily increased from 1851 to 1911. In the former year 50.2 per cent. of the population of England and Wales lived in the towns, 49.8 per cent. in the country; according to the returns of the last census the proportion of town dwellers was 78.1 per cent., and of rural 21.9 per cent. And yet, owing to the enormous increase of population, the need of life and labour on the land is infinitely greater now than 50 years ago. The main cause of this rapid decline in the number of the rural population is the unsatisfactory position of the labourer, both as regards wages and hours of labour. In a word, the workers of the largest and by far the most important single industry of the country are grossly over-worked and underpaid, besides being scandalously housed. As these facts are no longer contested by any serious disputant, it remains to consider what remedies Mr. Harben and his collaborators have to offer. Here, again, it cannot too often be emphasised, there is a remarkable agreement among the most varied schools of land reformer. It is not merely the Fabians who desire to apply the principle of Trade Boards to the position of the agricultural labourer. Mr. Harben's method would involve "a National Board to deal with main principles which are the same all over the country, and Local Boards to apply those principles to the circumstances of the various localities. Both the National Board and the Local Boards should properly consist of directly elected representatives of both the employers and the employed." The effect of higher wages would, in the long run, be to improve the quality of work. Mr. Christopher Turner, who besides being a Conservative landlord is a most able and disinterested land reformer, and a very great authority on land questions, has expressly said that the better paid labour on his Lincolnshire estate is less expensive than the much worse paid work of the labourers of Oxfordshire and Dorset.

Mr. Harben makes the modest suggestion that 100,000 cottages are needed at once. (The authors of "A Unionist Agricultural Policy" say 150,000, and of the Liberal Land Inquiry 120,000.) There should be a state survey of cottage accommodation, the local authority to be given two years to make up the deficiency, failing which no grants in aid should be given from the Exchequer for any purpose. The system of small holdings must be extended, and powers must be granted to Land Commissioners to local authorities to acquire land compulsorily at valuation whenever wanted for any purpose, or whenever insufficiently developed. There should be experimental farms in small-holding areas, and free farm schools in agricultural districts. Both production and distribution must be organised on co-operative lines. As the average cost of sending a ton of agricultural produce 100 miles in England is nearly double that in Germany or Austria-Hungary, more than double that in Holland, and more than three times that in the United States, there is a strong case for the nationalisation of railways and for the introduction of a State Motor Service. Afforestation should be carried out as suggested by the unanimous recommendations of the Royal Commission of 1909. Finally, grants in aid of local services should be systematised and made conditional on a national minimum standard of efficiency. To how much of all these proposals, one might ask in conclusion, have Conservative and Liberal land reformers any objection to offer?

R. P. E.

THE WAYFARER'S LIBRARY.

IF the modern man does not read perhaps it is the publishers who are to blame. They provide such an abundance of fare that we are tempted to spend most of our scanty leisure in discussing our choice, quite unable to make up our minds. Sevenpenny novels have descended upon us like a flood, good, bad, and indifferent all clamouring to be read. Into this scene of profusion and confusion Messrs. Dent descend with the offer of a careful selection of the really good things in the wide field of light literature. True they do not offer it at the rather odd price which suggests sixpence for the book and a penny for postage. Their Wayfarer's Library is in shilling volumes, but then the reader has not to take his chance of a worthless purchase, and a dainty appearance is part of the bargain. The "Letters from Dorothy Osborne to Sir Wm. Temple" in Judge Parry's edition, the "Blue Lagoon" by H. de Vere Stacpoole, "Troy Town" by Sir A. Quiller-Couch, and many other good things which are promised for the coming months, will make a wide appeal. The book-lover, who is also a faddist on small means, will appreciate the silk bookmarkers, for it raises the volumes into distant cousinship to lordly tomes in resplendent bindings; but the coloured frontispiece is a little disenchanting to the bibliophile who likes things nice or not at all. Is it not too big a concession to the mind which has never outgrown its childish taste for "twopence coloured" instead of "a penny plain"? For ourselves we prefer the "penny plain," except when we put on daubs of colour ourselves from an old-fashioned paint box to please the eyes of the children of the new generation.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE will publish shortly an important work on "Clement of Alexandria," by the Rev. R. B. Tollington. It will deal with Clement's theology and moral teaching with considerable fulness, and from the point of view of "a study in Christian Liberalism" it will discuss the value of his interpretation of Christianity for the conditions of the present age.

ANOTHER important book announced by Messrs. Williams & Norgate is "Ritual and Belief, Studies in the History of Religion," by E. S. Hartland. Special attention will be devoted to the social origin and significance of religion, emphasis being given to the share of human emotion and imagination, as at least equally important with that of reason, in generating and developing religious beliefs and practices.

MRS. C. W. EARLE, author of "Pot Pourri from a Surrey Garden," and Miss Ethel Case have collaborated in writing a book entitled "Pot Pourri Mixed by Two," which Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. will publish shortly. The same firm has also in preparation "St. Margaret's, Westminster: the Church of the House of Commons," by the Rev. H. F. Westlake, M.A., custodian and Minor Canon of Westminster Abbey. The volume will be plentifully illustrated by reproductions from old prints and from photographs which have been specially taken.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS:—Greek Sculpture and Modern Art: Charles Waldstein. 7s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co.:—Preparation for Marriage: Walter Heape, M.A., F.R.S. 2s. 6d. net. What it Means to Marry: Dr. Mary Scharlieb. 2s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co.:—Notes of a Son and Brother: Henry James. 12s. net.

MESSRS. W. RIDER & SON, LTD.:—The Problems of Psychological Research: Hereward Carrington. 7s. 6d. net. Letters from a Living Dead Man: Elsa Barker. 3s. 6d. net.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN:—The Way to Industrial Peace: B. Seeborn Rowntree. 2s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. JAMES NESBITT & Co.:—The Folk of Furry Farm: K. F. Purdon, with an Introduction by George Birmingham. 6s.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

"WESTWARD HO!"

II.

SINCE we came to Falmouth we have been constantly reminded that Cornwall lies near the track of that wide current of warm water we call the Gulf Stream. For one thing we are now enjoying the mildest climate in England. We can sit out-of-doors in all but the worst weather, and when the sun shines March feels like May. When we go to a sheltered beach in the bay we are glad to make a pile of our coats while we hunt the sands and rock pools for sea-side treasures.

Wherever the rocks are left exposed by the tide we find dark, soft, round objects sticking at intervals to the stone. Most are a bright deep plum colour, others bottle green or brownish. The largest would cover a five-shilling piece—a three-penny bit would amply serve as a plate for the smallest. They look rather like doll's-house jellies turned out of a plain round mould and set to cool. We push one with our finger; it yields a little to pressure, but is not removed. We again press gently; this time it sticks tighter. It is no jelly, but a living creature. When we reach pools of salt water we find scores of them sticking to the rock and looking brighter because they are wet. Otherwise they are for the most part just like those out of the water. Here and there, however, where the water is deepest, we find some which suggest flowers; for out of the jelly-like central mass protrude rows of feelers which look much like the horns of the common snail. These feelers, called tentacles, are set in rings like the stamens of some flowers, so it will not surprise you to be told that these creatures are sea-anemonies. When they wave their long tentacles in a sun-lit pool they are lovely objects. This fleshy fringe is used to catch and hold their prey. If you had a sea-anemone in an aquarium, and were to drop an atom of raw fish or meat into the centre of this fringe, the creature would curl the feelers inward, open a round mouth in the middle of the fringe circle, and slowly push the morsel of food into whatever serves it as a stomach.

We find many pools full of fairy-like forests of seaweed growing on the rock, and waving gently like real trees whenever a breeze stirs the pool. Small fish glide among groves of green and yellow and pink weed, some of it almost hair-like in its delicacy. Crabs of smallest size and lively shrimps also enjoy life in these pools. One day when we sat down on the dry sand to rest, we took up a handful of it. As it dribbled through our fingers we noticed that at least half of what we took for coarse sand was small shells, once the homes of living creatures. We took up a pinch with the thumb and one finger and counted the number of shells in it. There were eight, all spiral in form and ending in a pin-like point. We repeated the experiment several times and never found fewer than five entire shells in a pinch. Just think how the sea teems with life!

Another reminder that Cornwall feels the influence of the warm Gulf Stream is the unfamiliar vegetation. Here the garden hedge is not often holly or hawthorn, but veronica or escalonia. Veronica is a shrub with thick glossy leaves and pale purple flowers; escalonia is another shrub with pink flowers. Both are now in bloom. Magnolias are trained on many houses, and in due time will hang out white blossoms, large and fleshy, like water lilies.

We have been in one old garden sloping southward almost to the sea, where we felt as if we had stepped into picture-book life; for we stood under a eucalyptus tree sixty feet high, while all around us grew sub-tropical plants and trees, bamboos, palms, tree ferns, and many other things which one does not expect to see in the open air in Great Britain. There were banana trees bearing fruit, but not the great clusters you see in shops; only little bunches of fruit two or three inches long, and not fit to eat. But I saw a fine citron tree trained on a wall which bore several good-sized citrons, one of which was yellow, the rest a lovely dark green. In another part a mimosa branched high above our heads, bearing large clusters of the dainty, feathery, canary-coloured flowers one usually sees in the crates in Covent Garden market which have come from abroad.

This particular garden has been for more than seventy years in the hands of one family, all of whom have loved to protect wild birds and to induce them to make it their home. We were taken through it by the head of the house, who went up to a tree on which a blue-tit sat with an expectant air. He crumbled some cake on his palm, held it out, saying "Come along Billy," and at once the tit alighted on his hand and sat pecking away most composedly. Everything is done to make this garden a secure home for birds. The very high walls, which shelter it from rough winds, protect them and their nests. Boxes for nesting in are nailed to tall trees. Water and food are constantly supplied all the year round. Other blue-tits came at our friend's call and fed fearlessly on his fingers. One had been taught a pretty trick, for when a crumb was tossed into the air it would catch it in its descent. We moved lower down the garden, and now it was the turn of the robins. "Tommy, come Tommy!" was their signal, and one after another alighted to pick crumbs from the friendly hand. Now came a surprise. Crumbs were placed on our outstretched hands, and at once robin after robin came to perch on our fingers. Other birds came closer to us than I have ever known a mixed group of wild birds come. Chaffinches, hedge sparrows, a thrush, all came close about our feet to get the crumbs scattered by the bolder robins. I noticed that the chaffinches did not erect their crests. This was a strong proof of their confidence in us. It is probable that most of these birds had not been many yards beyond this garden, and did not know anything about guns or stone-throwing, but thought all human beings gave birds food and water and loving protection. Another day, when none of the family accompanied us, the birds behaved in exactly the same way.

EMILY NEWLING.

(To be continued.)

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

MANSFORD STREET CHURCH AND MISSION.

THE TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

THE twenty-fifth annual meeting of subscribers and friends of the Mansford-street Mission, Bethnal Green, was held at the Mission on Tuesday evening, March 17. The chair was taken by Dr. Drummond, of Oxford, and among the speakers were the Rev. H. Gow, the Rev. W. G. Cadman, the Rev. J. Ellis, who have all been ministers of the church since its establishment in the present buildings, the Rev. G. Cooper, the present minister; the Rev. F. K. Freeston, and Mr. A. Savage Cooper.

The report of the committee, which was read by Mr. A. H. Punnett, referred with deep regret to the death of Mr. Stanton Preston, who was not only a constant and liberal supporter of all the Society's work, but might also be regarded as one of its founders, when the missions at Spicer-street and Cambridge Heath were amalgamated and the present movement was started at Mansford-street. For twenty-five years he acted as joint secretary, and to the end of his life his personal interest in all that concerned the Church and Mission never flagged. It was announced that Mr. Preston had left a bequest of £500 to the Mission. Special reference was also made to the new arrangements for convalescent and holiday accommodation. Owing to the generosity of Mr. Ronald P. Jones, a house had been rented at Birchington-on-Sea, and they had subsequently received an offer from Mr. Jones to build and furnish a holiday home. This generous offer had been very gratefully accepted. It is expected that the new house which has been specially designed for the purpose will be ready for occupation at Whitsuntide. It is estimated that £200 annually will be required for maintenance, and towards this £90 has been already promised. The committee also expressed their gratitude to Mrs. Arthur Punnett for the large amount of time and thought which she had given to the work of the home and the organising of local arrangements. The treasurer's statement of accounts was not so favourable as could be wished, the deficit at the end of the year being increased to £102. The report of the Church Committee, which was presented by Mr. W. J. Clark, gave full details of the work carried on by the Sunday school, the Boys' Own Brigade, the Mansford-street Guild, the Window Gardening Society, and other institutions. The Rev. Gordon Cooper, in his report for the year, dwelt with the most lively feelings of gratitude upon the foundation of Mansford House, at Birchington, the successful Welcome Service which was held on Easter Sunday, when nineteen young people were welcomed into the membership of the church, and the remarkable improvement which had taken place during the year in the Preston Mens' Club. Students from Manchester College had again visited the Mission for the week-ends in term time. "For twenty-five years," he said, in conclusion, "the Church and Mission has now been established at Mansford-street. It came from Spicer-street with the record of fifty years' earnest work behind it, and joined forces with the newer movement at Cambridge Heath. It began its fresh life at Mansford-street with high hopes and aspirations, and with the spirit of Mr. Corkran in the hearts of the workers. And whatever may have been the result of all these years of endeavour to preach to the people the simple message of Jesus Christ, and to fill them with pure and noble ideals of life—one thing I will venture to assert, that the spirit in which the work has been carried on has never changed. The spirit of friendship and goodwill, the earnest desire to be good and to do good, is, I believe, still present to-day. I find the atmosphere which this spirit creates most refreshing and invigorating, and I trust that whatever else may happen, that will never show any change or decay."

In moving the adoption of the reports the Chairman referred to the founding of the Mission, in which he took some share together with Mr. Stanton Preston and Mr. David Martineau. He paid a warm tribute to the memory of the late Mr. Stanton Preston, whose friendship and sympathy, and the splendid example he had set them of noble service and generous help, those who had come under his influence would always remember with feelings of deep gratitude. The report, he thought, was satisfactory, and ought to put fresh hope into the hearts of the workers. It was often said in these days that people do not want charity; they want justice; but he thought that implied a degraded idea of charity. Sometimes, of course, charity was regarded only as a method of compounding with ourselves for leading a selfish life, but true charity was something more than this, something nobler and higher even than the mere desire to give assistance to others, and our later interpretation of it as love showed its quality as a distinctively Christian virtue. It was, indeed, the surrender and dedication of the soul to Him whom we like to call by the name of Love, whose love has blessed our own lives, and sad indeed would it be for the world when charity in its highest sense passed away. The workers of a charitable institution should love those whom they were enabled to help, those with whom they co-operated, those even whom they did not naturally like, striving to lay aside all the little petty jealousies which often hindered the work of such societies, and just in proportion as this spirit entered into their lives and gave depth and beauty to their character would be their power to do good effectively. He believed this was the spirit of the ministry of Mansford-street, and those who, like the Apostle, had not gold or silver to give away, possessed something finer than pure gold if they had the inspiration of love, and poured forth what they had caught from high communion into the hearts of those whom they desired to help. They were all responsible one for another, and if they concentrated themselves in that sense to the service of others they would bring them into the peace and righteousness of God.

The Rev. W. G. Cadman seconded the adoption of the report. In reviewing the work of an institution like the Mansford-street Mission, he thought people did not always realise what our cities would be like if it were not for such centres of religious life and beneficence. These places had played a great part in altering the character of London, and it should encourage them to think that there were people in all parts of the Empire who had gone out to those distant lands from their Mission. More people were led to religion through the heart than the head, and wherever there was a genuine effort to do good and to be good, there the spirit of Jesus Christ was being manifested although his name was not necessarily acknowledged. In that spirit the work at Mansford-street had always been done, with the Church as the centre of all its activities.

The Rev. H. Gow paid a warm personal tribute to the late Mr. Stanton Preston, who had, he said, cared more for the Mission than for anything else outside his own family. It was not always realised how much faith and love were required to start such an enterprise, and their deep gratitude was due to the splendid workers of the past, and to those of the present time who were carrying on their high traditions, for the enthusiasm and unselfishness which they had brought to the task of helping and uplifting those around them. He felt all present would wish to join in expressing their sense of the inspiration and benefit they had received through the example of Mr. Preston, who had been such a true friend to the Mission and its ministers for twenty-five years, and their sympathy with Miss Preston in the loss she had sustained.

The Rev. John Ellis seconded this informal resolution, referring to Mr. Preston as a man full of sympathy, whose mind was extraordinarily receptive of new ideas, and quick to seize an opportunity of helping a good cause. The resolution was passed in silence, all standing.

The officers and committee for the ensuing year were elected on the motion of Mr. Savage Cooper, seconded by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie. The Rev. F. K. Freeston proposed a vote of thanks to the Rev. Gordon Cooper for the enthusiasm and energy with which he carried on the Mission, and to the helpers and workers who are associated with him. He could not praise Mr. Cooper in his presence, but he wished to lay stress on that word enthusiasm, which so justly described his work, for it was not an enthusiasm that was all splash and noise, but the persistent going forward of a locomotive drawing the load behind it. As for the workers, they, too, would not want to be thanked, for surely they felt it was a privilege to help in such a cause and under such a leader. Mr. Clark seconded the resolution, which was carried with acclamation.

The Rev. Gordon Cooper thanked the meeting for its cordial expression of approbation, and read some messages which he had received from various friends of the Mission—Miss Upton, Mr.

Henry Thompson, Miss Spurgeon, and Mr. Brown, now of Faversham. He would like to say that they were by no means satisfied to live on the traditions of the past, but were determined that those who came after them should have cause to speak as well of them as they spoke of those who had gone before. Referring to the realisation of their dream in the building of Mansford House, he begged to offer to Mr. Ronald Jones their hearty thanks for his generous and splendid gift. Mrs. Classon Drummond, in seconding, reminded the meeting that the home at Birchington was not only a symbol of Mr. Jones's generosity and skill, but it was also full of symbols of other people's love and service, notably Mrs. Punnett's, who had done so much to ensure its wise ordering and comfort and economy.

Mr. Ronald P. Jones responded in a few words, attributing the inspiration for anything he had been able to do to the personal influence of Mr. Cooper. A vote of thanks to Dr. Drummond for acting as chairman was proposed by Mr. Alfred Thompson and seconded by Mr. Foster. The benediction, pronounced by Dr. Drummond, closed the proceedings.

LIVERPOOL DISTRICT MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION. ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting was held in the Hope-street Church Hall on Saturday afternoon, March 14. There was a good attendance, and the proceedings proved to be most interesting and stimulating. The Rev. J. Collins Odgers, from the chair, proposed the adoption of the report. Naturally, he said, their attention would be drawn towards the work of the new Minister-at-Large. They were most happy in securing the services of Mr. Roberts, who must be congratulated on the great success of the recent Hope Hall meeting. It was an achievement to gather 450 earnest listeners. He confessed he went to the meeting with trepidation, but the kindness, sympathy and tact displayed by the lecturer had convinced him that, conducted in such a manner, nothing but good could arise from the public treatment of even the most controversial questions. The Religious Freeman was an able production. Speaking on the reports of the Missionary-Ministers, he was struck with the fruitful work of Mr. Short at Bootle, and was much impressed by the good work generally done in their difficult outposts. They much regretted the resignations of the Rev. R. Nicol Cross from Southport, the Rev. J. Bellamy Higham from St. Helens, the Rev. S. H. Street from Garston, and the resignation from West Kirby and retirement from active continuous service of their old and valued friend, the Rev. H. W. Hawkes. He hoped Mr. Hawkes would for long be heard from their various pulpits. They heartily welcomed the incoming of the Rev. Dr. Rattray to Ullet-road Church, the Rev. J. H. Saunders to the Domestic Mission, Mill-street; the Rev. Charles Roper to West Kirby, and the Rev. William Jellie to Southport, and wished Dr. Mellor every success at Hope-street Church.

Dr. Mellor, in seconding, hoped the financial deficit would be made up without trenching upon the Evans' Fund, spoke of the difficulties of such isolated posts as Crewe, and, regarding the new enterprises, considered that if the Association only furthered the publication of the Religious Freeman the good work of the Association would be justified. Mr. C. Sydney Jones, proposing a vote of thanks to the missionaries, said he thought such a meeting as that in Hope Hall would have been impossible twenty years ago. His sympathy went out to the workers in the more isolated places. The subscription list must not be allowed to go down, and he agreed with Dr. Mellor that the new fund should be a stimulus to their own giving. Columbus, he reminded them, discovered America in very small ships, and if he had commanded a Mauretania he could not have discovered any greater continent. Mr. A. S. Thew, seconding, declared his high appreciation of the work of the missionaries. The Rev. G. Pegler, in reply, spoke of the nature of the work at Crewe. He thought an eight-hours' day would tend to the interests of religious worship. The Rev. Walter Short thanked the Liverpool friends, and especially Mrs. and Miss Holt, for their generosity, financial and personal, towards the Bootle bazaar, and gave interesting details of the efforts of the Bootle congregation in the important matters of civic welfare, instancing child study, secondary scholarship for girls, and care committees. The Rev. J. B. Higham asserted his pride in having been associated with the St. Helens congregation. They were people who came for ideas and ideals, and put principle before interest. The Rev. H. W. Hawkes testified to the wonderful kindness of friends towards himself in his retirement. At West Kirby there were some of the salt of the earth. He was convinced of the absolute religiousness of liberal religion. The Rev. S. H. Street gave an account of the peculiar local circumstances that, especially in the great number of families emigrating, had militated against prosperity in the Garston congregation. He warmly thanked the Liverpool people for the exceedingly cordial treatment of Mrs. Street and himself during their time in the district. The Rev. H. D. Roberts briefly stated that 40,000 copies of the Religious Freeman had been distributed. They must first foster the sweet centres of established worship and then endeavour to create an atmosphere in which dogmatics, illiberalities, and intolerances should disappear. After the Rev. Charles Roper had acknowledged the heartiness with which he had been received, the election of twelve members of the Council appointed by the subscribers was proposed by the Rev. T. Lloyd Jones and seconded by the Rev. J. L. Haigh, and a vote of thanks to the chairman for presiding, and to the chairman (Mr. R. H. Armstrong) and committee of Hope-street Church for their hospitality and the use of the church hall was proposed by the Rev. Charles Craddock and seconded by Mr. W. H. Thomas.

A spirit of buoyancy and cheerfulness characterised the meeting; and it was felt, in the words of one of the speakers, that there was "never a moment when religion was more necessary and more intense," and that in a right spirit of humility and pride great things called to be done.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

A COLONIAL APPOINTMENT.

THE Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe, who recently resigned the pulpit of the Unitarian Church, Johannesburg, South Africa, is on a brief visit to England prior to his departure for Vancouver, B.C., where he is shortly to assume the ministry left vacant through the illness of the Rev. Matthew R. Scott. The church at Johannesburg was established during the missionary journey of the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, who travelled in South Africa on behalf of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association some three years ago. During Mr. Sharpe's residence in Johannesburg considerable progress has been made with the fund which is being collected for a new church building, towards which the British and Foreign Unitarian Association has contributed £100. Mr. G. W. Brown and the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, as members of the Executive, are collecting a further sum of £400 (of which £200 has been received) to complete the purchase of the site.

Occasion was taken of Mr. Sharpe's presence in London last week to invite him to meet the Executive Committee of the Association. The president, Mr. George H. Leigh, was in the chair; and there were also present the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, vice-chairman of the Committee, and founder of the Johannesburg Church; the Rev. Charles Hargrove, chairman of the Foreign and Colonial Committee, who has also made missionary journeys as the representative of the Association, and a full attendance of the members of the Executive. The President extended a very cordial welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Sharpe, and spoke in appreciation of the work accomplished in Johannesburg. The Rev. Charles Hargrove took for the text of a characteristic little address: "The arduous work of the man who succeeds when the novelty of the founding of a church has passed away." He referred to a significant letter received from the Johannesburg Church as to the success of Mr. Sharpe, and declared that the Association could send him on his way to Vancouver confident of his power to do the work awaiting him. The Rev. W. G. Tarrant referred to some of the difficulties connected with church work in Johannesburg, where religion had been designated "a back number." So much, therefore, the greater need to make it "a present number." He hoped that the Rev. R. J. Hall, who had followed Mr. Sharpe in Africa, after his ministry in Auckland, would be able to build successfully on the foundation already laid. He referred in cordial terms to the visit of Mrs. Sharpe's father (Mr. Brown, of Johannesburg), and to the absence of Mr. G. W. Brown, one of the most active members of the Colonial and Foreign Committee, who was away in Cannes.

Mr. Sharpe, in acknowledging the welcome, referred to the occasion, two and a half years ago, when, in a spirit of chastened optimism, he met the Committee prior to his departure for South Africa. He heard much on his arrival of the difficulties to be encountered, and had hardly looked forward to the extraordinary steadfastness, stability, and trustworthiness of the small group of people among whom his lot was cast. Mr. Tarrant fortunately had made a profound impression on them, and many of them were prepared for great sacrifices. He did not think a finer, stouter, or more dependable body of Unitarians could be found than those of the Johannesburg congregation. They had gone through fire and had come out purified. He stood that afternoon pretty much as he did two and a half years ago, excepting that he was harder and tougher. He was at least perfectly sure that what was now set him to be done he could do with a courage and determination equal to that of most men. He thought he had got to know something about Colonial requirements; and the justification for his further adventure was that it would be a pity to waste the expensive education, bestowed upon him in that distant field, on work that did not require that particular quality. He had no lack of faith in England, or English Unitarianism; but he had tremendous faith in our faith, and he felt that it had a world-wide adaptability, and was especially required by those who live under the trying and disintegrating conditions of new countries.

THE PLUMAGE BILL.

We have received the following Manifesto for publication:—

"We, the undersigned, welcome the Importation of Plumage Prohibition Bill now before Parliament, and we believe that it is the duty of Parliament to pass it, and that public opinion will applaud their so doing. The present Bill is the result of careful and prolonged investigations. The export of the plumage of wild birds has been prohibited from India, and from the majority of the Crown Colonies. The United States of America and the Commonwealth of Australia have sifted the question, and passed laws prohibiting both export and import. A strong feeling in favour of legislation on these lines is growing in Germany, France, Austria, Holland, Sweden, Denmark, and Belgium. Attempts to regulate the traffic would be futile on account of the insurmountable difficulties with respect to laws and their enforcement in the countries from which a large proportion of the birds come; therefore, the most effectual way to preserve wild birds is by the enactment of laws prohibiting importation in support of the regulations which forbid export. In 1908, when a Select Committee of the House of Lords took evidence on the importation of plumage, the official returns showed that under £100,000 represented the value of 'fancy feathers' annually imported into England, 80 per cent. of which are immediately re-exported to be worked up abroad. Although the financial interests involved are not large, the destruction of useful and precious bird life is stupendous, as is well known. It is our belief that the passing of the Bill will be immensely beneficial, and will inflict no hardships either on merchants or on workers in factories and warehouses. Finally, we approve of the provision made by this Bill for the confiscation (as in the U.S.A.) of forbidden plumage forming part of the wearing apparel or in the possession of any person landing in England. In our opinion it will be only right and fair that women who persist in wearing plumage not permitted by the Bill, should be compelled to surrender it."

The Manifesto has been signed by the Duchess of Portland, the Countess of Aberdeen, Miss Clementina Black, Mrs. Bramwell Booth, Rosalind Countess of Carlisle, Mrs. Creighton, Mrs. Garrett Fawcett, Mrs. Bedford Fenwick, Mrs. John Galsworthy, the Right Hon. Lady Lilford, the Hon. Lily Montagu, the Countess of Portsmouth, the Lady Laura Ridding, Her Highness the Ranee of Sarawak, Mrs. Philip Snowden, the Lady Henry Somerset, the Duchess of Somerset, Miss Ellen Terry, the Lady Rosetta Weigall.

MINISTERS' PENSION AND INSURANCE FUND.

THE half-yearly meeting of the board of managers was held on Friday 13th inst. at Essex Hall, London, the Rev. Dr. Carpenter presiding. Mr. Ronald P. Jones was elected a manager in place of Mr. C. Sydney Jones, resigned. The resignation of Mr. John Lawson was also received, and an invitation extended to another gentleman to take the vacant place. The annual report and statement of accounts were presented by the Secretary (the Rev. C. J. Street) and the Treasurer (Mr. H. Chatfield Clarke), approved, and ordered to be printed and circulated. The report shows that 114 beneficiaries were on the books at the end of the year, of whom 11 are already in receipt of pension or annuity. Ten beneficiary members had died during the twelve years in which the Fund had been in existence, and in seven of these cases £1,894 7s. 3d. had been paid to the representatives. In the other cases the insurance had been for pension only. The accounts showed a small deficit on the year's working, due to the diminishing income from subscriptions, which gives some concern to the board. A donation of £100 had been received from Mr. Cedric R. Boulton, and legacies of £100 each notified from the representatives of the late Miss Gaskell and Mr. Henry Rutt. Three new applications under the ordinary tables were granted and two applications for assistance towards special insurance.

On Friday, March 27, at 8 o'clock, Mr. John M. Robertson, M.P., is to deliver the fifth Conway Memorial Lecture at South Place Chapel, Finsbury, his subject being "The Life Pilgrimage of Moncure Conway." Mr. Edward Clodd will preside, and admission will be free.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Belfast.—The annual meeting of the Belfast Domestic Mission was held in the Central Hall, Rosemary-street, on March 9, Mr. Bowman Malcolm presiding. The reports of the Committee, and of the various institutions connected with the Mission, which were read by Miss Charlotte Bruce, secretary, stated that the work had been carried on in a most satisfactory way under the care of the Rev. F. Woolley and Mrs. Woolley, who had given their time unceasingly to advancing the interests of the Mission. The financial position was also satisfactory, and they had kept out of debt. The society has recently received a donation of £50 from the sum left by Lady Harland for distribution among the charities in the city. Mr. Hugh Erskine read the report of the Benevolent Society, and the Rev. F. Woolley, missionary, in a report dealing with the general work, alluded in warm terms to the spirit of devotion to the highest ideals, and the enterprise and self-sacrifice which inspired the congregation and encouraged them in their activities, in spite of the losses by death and emigration and an overwhelming amount of sickness. The old unreasoning prejudice was disappearing, and they had broken new ground, but they were not able to utilise it to the fullest extent for lack of labourers. The adoption of the reports was moved from the chair, the Rev. M. Turner seconding, and the Rev. Dr. Rattray, from Liverpool, supporting the motion, which was carried unanimously. Dr. Rattray gave an interesting account of the domestic missions in Liverpool. Thanks were given to Mr. and Mrs. Woolley, the voluntary workers, especially Dr. Malcolm Brice Smyth, and to the chairman for presiding at the meeting.

Bury St. Edmunds.—We understand that Mr. George Ward will conclude his ministry at the Churchgate-street Church at the end of May, instead of Christmas, as was previously arranged.

Cullompton.—A very satisfactory balance sheet of the New Chapel Building Fund has just been issued, which shows a balance in hand of over £23. The successor to the old chapel, which collapsed on March 24, 1912, and an adjoining schoolroom were opened last June, and it is gratifying to know that the cost of erecting these buildings has been cleared by the efforts of the congregation, who gave time and labour as well as money for the purpose, and the generous donors who assisted them. The need of an organ is, however, greatly felt, and an appeal is now being made for funds to provide a new instrument. The original organ was wrecked with the old building, and since then a small American organ, kindly lent by a member of the church, has been used. This, however, is quite inadequate for the services. It is estimated that a suitable organ can be built at a cost of about £150, towards which the balance in hand referred to will be given, together with the proceeds of an amateur dramatic performance in the largest hall of the town for which the young people of the congregation are now preparing. Subscriptions will be gratefully received by the minister, the Rev. Jeffery Worthington, Chudleigh Cottage, Cullompton, or by Mr. Mark W. Woolcott, treasurer, No. 1, Pen-y-dre, Cullompton.

Evesham.—There was a large attendance at the Oat-street Schoolroom on Friday, March 13, when a presentation was made to the Rev. W. E. Williams and Mrs. Williams on the occasion of their approaching departure for New Zealand. Mr. Williams has been Minister at the Oat-street Chapel for the past four years, and during that time both he and Mrs. Williams have endeared themselves to the members of the congregation and to a large circle of friends outside. On Friday night Mr. and Mrs. Williams were presented with a purse of money and an illuminated address by Mr. Geoffrey New on behalf of the congregation. In making the presentation Mr. New said they felt they had had a good man, a good preacher, and one who took a deep interest in the welfare of the congregation. They would be sorry to lose him, and would look back upon his ministry with thankfulness. They could only wish that in his future work in the Antipodes he would have many years in the cause of religion, and would be appreciated, and have friends and every happiness in the new home to which he and his wife were going. Mr. A. H. Martin, as one of the oldest members of the congregation, also paid a warm tribute to Mr. Williams' work. Mr. Williams said he did not want to sound a note of sadness. He had been with them only a matter of four years—not a very long time; but in that time he felt he had won the affection of the people he had tried to serve. The work of a minister was the most difficult work to learn, and he felt in those four years he had been learning, and what he had learnt would be of profit to him in the difficult task before him. He would be in a church standing for the same ideals though it would be in another land. It was made clear to him that the need was great, and the cause wanted a minister, and it was pointed out that he was one of the men who was just suited for it, and after deliberation with his wife they had made up their minds to go. He thanked them all from the bottom of his heart. There were large congregations at the Oat-street Chapel at both morning and evening service on Sunday, when Mr. Williams preached his farewell sermons.

Frenchay.—Evening services are conducted at the Unitarian Chapel at Frenchay, near Bristol, by a group of lay helpers, whose efforts are much appreciated by those who still support the cause of liberal religion in that neighbourhood. An appeal is now being made, however, for a new harmonium, as it is no longer possible to use the old one, and it is hoped that friends in Bristol or elsewhere will come to the assistance of the members of the congregation, who are anxious that the services should still be maintained in a suitable manner. Contributions will be gratefully received either by Mr. W. Norgrove, treasurer, 22, Alma-road, Clifton, Bristol, or Mr. W. C. Watkins, secretary, 5, Luccombe-hill, Redland, Bristol. The first chapel at Frenchay was built in 1691, the present one dates from 1720, and during the ministry of the Rev. Samuel Thomas, Dr. Joseph Priestley occupied the pulpit when staying in the neighbourhood. It is interesting to recall that Michael Maurice, the father of Frederick Denison Maurice, was minister from 1815–1824.

Leeds: Hunslet.—School anniversary services were held on Sunday, 15th inst., conducted by the Rev. H. Fisher Short, of Park-lane, Wigan. Mr. Short also conducted a Guild service in the chapel on Monday evening. As Secretary of the Conference Guilds Association, and interested in a guild recently established at Hunslet, he gave a very inspiring address. The local minister, the Rev. F. Coleman, also took part. The Guild was established in November last, and already numbers 42 members.

London: Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel.—The annual old scholars' reunion was held at the chapel on Saturday, March 14, when, in spite of unfavourable weather, there was a very fair attendance. A welcome was given to those present by the minister, the Rev. W. J. Piggott, and the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, formerly minister of the chapel, addressed the gathering. The Revs. John C. Ballantyne and W. Jellie, also former ministers, who were unable to be present, sent greetings. A programme of music and recitations was provided by Mrs. Orr, Miss E. Bredall and Miss M. Francis.

Manchester, Longsight.—The annual meeting of the church was held on Saturday last, under the presidency of the chairman, Mr. W. H. Jones. The report showed that with the proceeds of the late bazaar the mortgage on the church property had been paid off, the church and school cleaned and decorated, and the new organ (to cost £500) put in hand. It referred to the loss the church had sustained in the death of Mr. John Heys and Mrs. Monks. It also showed that the number of enrolled church members was 130, being 32 more than in 1909, and 26 more than last year. The usual votes of thanks were passed, and an address was given by the minister, the Rev. B. C. Constable, whose annual letter formed part of the report.

Mountain Ash, Glam.—The Brotherhood Church is making an effort to raise £500 to clear off the debt, and to complete their building scheme. To this end a sale of work was held on Wednesday last, and proved most successful. The proceedings were opened by Miss M. Williams, Caecod, Aberdare. Visitors were present from Merthyr, Aberdare, and Pontypridd. The results of the sale were £29.

Sheffield.—The Sheffield and District Unitarian and Free Christian Sunday School Union held its annual meeting in Channing Hall on March 12. The meeting was a very successful one, every school being well represented. The Secretary reported an excellent year's work in connection with the quarterly meetings. The returns from the various schools in the Union showed that the number of scholars was 1,105, and teachers 121. The Visitor, in presenting his report, spoke of the increasing efficiency of the teachers in the various schools. Mr. H. T. Broadbent, president of the Manchester District Association, emphasised the great need of the Sunday schools, and outlined the work his Association was doing to help the teacher and the school to attain greater perfection in method and equipment. The following were elected officers for the year:—President, Mr. W. Laycock; Visitor, Mr. S. E. Deeley; Secretary, Mr. H. Smith.

Stourbridge.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held on Thursday, March 12. Good reports were given of the various societies connected with the church, but the unsatisfactory state of the finances call for serious consideration. A resolution was passed proposing to admit young people between the ages of 18 and 21, on payment of 1s. per annum, as Associate members with all duties and privileges of membership except voting power.

West Bromwich: the late Mr. Alfred Caddick.—By the death, which took place at Las Palmas on Saturday, March 7, of Mr. Alfred Caddick, of Glenfield, Sutton Coldfield, Lodge-road Church, West Bromwich, has lost one of its oldest members and most generous friends. Mr. Caddick was a son of the late Mr. Elisha Caddick, solicitor, of West Bromwich, and followed his father's profession. He was articled to his brother Mr. Edward Caddick, now of Wellington-road, Edgbaston, and was admitted as a solicitor in 1863. He married a daughter of Dr. John Armstrong, of Gravesend. For practically half a century Mr. A. Caddick has been a conspicuous figure in the social and public life of the town. He was a member of the Board of Guardians from 1873 to 1879, and was chairman of the Board in 1878. He took a great interest in education, and was for many years a member of the School Board. He was also for many years a member of the old Board of Improvement Commissioners. At the incorporation of the Borough of West Bromwich, he was appointed Town Clerk, which position he held until 1911. He was also Clerk of the Peace for the Borough. He was concerned with the establishment of the West Bromwich Institute, and there were few institutions of note aiming at the educational and general well-being of the town in which he has not taken a more or less active interest. He was a great believer in all forms of healthy athletic exercises, and was an enthusiastic cricketer, Alpinist, and golfer. He was one of the founders of the Unitarian Church in West Bromwich, and took a deep interest in its welfare. At the Sale of Work on Wednesday last, Mr. J. J. Bowater, chairman of the Vestry Committee, alluded to the great loss the Church had sustained by Mr. Caddick's death, and a resolution of sympathy with his bereaved family was passed.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE INTERNATIONALISM OF LABOUR.

In an article on "The Limitations of Nationalism," in War and Peace, Mr. J. A. Hobson points out that there is an aspect of the movement towards internationalism, typified, so far, chiefly by the Hague Conference, which has not yet received enough attention—namely, the "growing inability of the single State to deal successfully with issues of labour policy." Improvements in the conditions of labour within a single national area, he points out, "are likely to be frustrated or impaired by the refusal of other countries, whose workers are supplying the same markets as ours, to adopt the same labour policy." This does not, of course, mean that we are not to insist upon better conditions in our own country, but it points to a time when no country will be self-sufficing, and when we shall be compelled by economic forces, if not by humanitarian motives, to link ourselves with other nationalities on terms of co-operation and goodwill, to secure industrial reform and the common welfare of the worker throughout the world.

TYPE FOR BLIND READERS.

The recent discussion in Parliament on the needs of the blind gives special interest to a letter in the Times from Mr. C. Arthur Pearson, hon. treasurer of the National Institute for the Blind, who deals with the question of the suitability of Braille as the best form of embossed type for blind readers. The founder of the Institute, Dr. T. R. Armitage, himself blind, introduced the system of Louis Braille—a blind Frenchman—into this country in 1868, and adapted it to the English language with the help of half a dozen blind friends. The system remained unaltered till 1907, when it was revised by 24 experts who formed the British Braille Committee. The Americans altered this system, and made what was practically another system, thus causing some complications for people who all speak the same language. This led to the formation of the Uniform Type Committee, which carried on extensive investigations for eight years. Their report was to the effect that the British Braille system was the best that human minds could devise, and it is hoped that this report will be adopted at an important meeting to be held in San Francisco in 1915.

ALCOHOL AND CONSUMPTION IN FRANCE.

The spread of drinking in France has provoked a long letter to the Paris press from M. Henri Schmidt, Deputy for the Vosges and President of the new militant temperance society known as "L'Alarme," which has distinguished itself by an active crusade against intemperance in different parts of the country. In the most sober districts of France, according to M. Schmidt, the least number of deaths from tuberculosis is 1.95 per 1,000. On the other hand, in Western France, where the consumption of alcohol is large, the proportion of deaths due to tuberculosis is 2.61 per 1,000; the maximum of deaths from tuberculosis—4.54 per 1,000—is attained by the area round Paris, where the influence of alcohol is joined to that of bad housing and exhausting conditions of life. Tuberculosis tends to increase in the country, particularly in the districts where the right of private distilling exists. M. Schmidt quotes Dr. Brunon as saying that alcohol is in some cases put into babies' bottles, especially in Normandy, where the largest number of mothers addicted to alcohol is found.

DR. ALBERT GOBAT.

The death is announced of Dr. Albert Gobat, the director of the International Peace Bureau in Berne. He was the son of a Protestant pastor, and from 1884 to 1890 he was a member of the Ständerat, or Swiss State Council. Dr. Gobat was the first secretary and one of the founders of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, and in 1902, in conjunction with Elie Ducommun, he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. He was the author of a well-known work entitled "Histoire de la Suisse, Racontée au Peuple."

MEMORIAL TO ELIZABETHAN PLAYERS.

The Shakespeare League has placed a mural tablet in the north aisle of Shoreditch Church, commemorating Richard Burbage, James Burbage, and other Elizabethan players who were buried in this church. Sir George Alexander, at the unveiling ceremony, reminded his hearers that James Burbage, by securing a Royal patent for his company, "The Earl of Leicester's servants," took the first important step in transferring the actor from the position of a rogue and vagabond in the eyes of society into a citizen like other citizens, entitled to the respect of his fellows as long as his conduct deserved it. The other thing he did was to build and keep going, in the face of every sort of discouragement, difficulty, sacrifice, and loss the first enclosed theatre in the country. The tablet is placed in its present position "to the Glory of God"—thus runs the first part of the inscription—"and in acknowledgment of the work done for English drama by the players, musicians, and other men of the theatre who are buried within the precincts of this Church, and in particular to the memory of those who are named below." The memorial also includes a seat in the church garden, which is now used as a public open space.

WORKING GIRLS' MID-DAY MEAL.

A scheme is on foot to provide dining rooms and rest rooms in different parts of London for the thousands of work girls who have no means of obtaining a good mid-day meal, and are thus exposed to many of the temptations of the streets, including gambling, to which a reference has been made in our columns. A drawing room meeting was held last week at the house of Mr. George Macmillan, who stated that efforts were being made in conjunction with the National Organisation of Girls' Clubs to meet this crying need. A start would be made in Knightsbridge, a typical area, where there were a great number of small dressmakers and milliners. The scheme would be self-supporting, and the sum needed to start it was only £1,000. It is understood that a good working proposal has already been received from one of London's well-known caterers.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

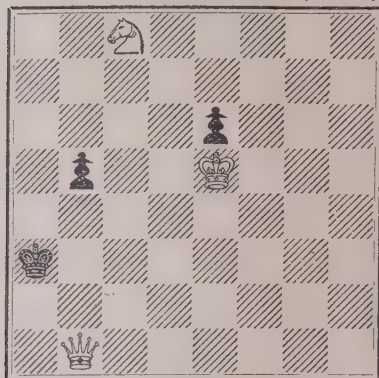

MARCH 21, 1914.

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 49.

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS.

BLACK. (3 men.)

WHITE. (3 men.)

White to play and mate in three moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 47.

1. Q takes P (key-move).

Correct solutions have been received from Rev. B. C. Constable, A. J. Hamblin, O. Lupton, F. S. M. (Mayfield), E. C. (Highbury), W. T. M. (Sunderland), W. Williams, D. Amos, E. Wright, Rev. I. Wrigley.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C. WILLING (U.S.A.).—Kindly send your exact address. Thanks for promise.

E. C. (Highbury).—I regret having omitted your name for No. 46.

REV. ARTHUR BAKER (Jersey).—Thanks for the interesting end-game.

A. J. HAMBLIN.—The problem is a poor one, but then I knew so little about problems. You may be interested to see the diagram given below, which is still more of a curiosity! Capture keys are not necessarily bad, however. Several of our solvers have failed.

Our No. 49 was published in a provincial paper in 1911, and the identical position appears in Deutsche Schachblätter, December 7 ult., under the name O. Dehler. This is, of course, an accident, but it is curious to find another worker representing the same idea in exactly the same form.

The following small diagram gives my very first attempt at composition. Knowing nothing of problems, I fondly imagined a three-mover to be easier to compose! It is a quaint position, but has been found difficult. It offends all the tenets of problem-matic construction. It is, however, the pioneer of over 900 problems which I have composed. I well remember buying a dozen copies of the London Evening Post

WHITE (3 men.)

White mates in three.

of April 13, 1889, in which it appeared under my initials. I have no recollection whatever how I came to construct it.

Chatham Unitarian Church.

"Silver" Anniversary Fund.

The Committee are reluctantly compelled to appeal outside the Congregation for assistance towards raising the £100 necessary for repairs to Church and Organ.

Previously acknowledged	£39 8 6
Dr. Courtney Kenny	4 4 0
One guinea:—Mrs. Miskin, Mr. T. C. Lamb, Mrs. Green, Mr. T. Seaton	4 4 0
Half-guinea:—Mr. F. Roberts, Mr. Shindle, Mr. C. Willis	1 11 6
Smaller sums	2 19 6

£52 7 6

Further contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, Mrs. Wood, 10, Borstal-road, Rochester.

A. HUDSON, Hon. Sec.

UNITARIAN CHURCH, MORGAN STREET, PONTYPRIDD.

ANNUAL SALE OF WORK, &c.

(under the auspices of the above branch of the British League of Unitarian Women), on Thursday, April 2, 1914, at 3 p.m. Proceeds in aid of Church Building Renovations.

Opener: Mrs. GOMER LL. THOMAS.

All contributions will be gratefully received and acknowledge by the Hon. Sec., Mrs. JOHN LEWIS, Tophill, Pontypridd.

EFFRA ROAD UNITARIAN CHURCH, BRIXTON.

A SALE OF WORK will be held in the Schoolroom on Saturday, March 28. Opened at 3 p.m., by Mrs. ALFRED WILSON. Friends cordially invited.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD STREET CHAPEL.

THE ANNUAL MEETING, to which Friends are cordially invited, will be held at Stamford Street Chapel, S.E., on Tuesday, March 31, 1914.

Dr. L. P. JACKS will preside, supported by the Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT (Minister), Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE, C. F. PEARSON, Esq., and others.

Tea and Coffee 7 p.m. Meeting 7.45 p.m.

A. A. TAYLER, Hon. Sec.

PEARL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

P. J. FOLEY, Esq., President.

Annual Income	£3,340,000
Claims Paid exceed	£15,000,000

Additional Representatives Wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing
G. SHRUBSALL, } Directors.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

"THE UNITARIAN MONTHLY."

Magazine for Unitarian Propaganda. Adopted by churches with or without local page. Issued for last Sunday in each previous month. One copy post free, 1½d.—1s. 6d. a year; 9d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100; extra charge local page.—Address to EDITOR: 36 Burlington-road, South Shore, Blackpool.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCS.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh-street, Tavistock-square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

SUNNY South Coast Health Resort.—

Ideal Winter Boarding House, Central, Garden, near Sea. Hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, electric light, and penny in slot gas fire in each bedroom. Three good reception rooms. Food Reform and ordinary diet.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

LEIGH-ON-SEA.—To Let, furnished

Bedroom and Sitting-room, in pleasant situation. Private family, 10s. weekly.—Address, "X." c/o Church Lending Library, Rectory Grove, Leigh-on-Sea, Essex.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.

(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT, Miss CECIL GRADWELL, HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

HUCKABACK TOWELLING of

Genuine Irish Linen in bundles of Remnants, sufficient to make 6 full-size Bedroom Towels. Price 4s. 6d., postage 5d. extra. Catalogue free. Write now.—HUTTON'S 5, Larne, Ireland.

SKIRTS and BLOUSES of "FLAX-ZELLA" Irish Linen Fabric, new silky finish, are perfect. Washable, durable. Delightful shades. Practically uncrushable. Drapes exceptionally well. 200 patterns free. Write.—HUTTON'S 5, Larne, Ireland.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to offer and pay highest genuine prices. Note quotations: Up to 2s. 9d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 6s. 6d. on silver, 15s. on gold, 35s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel, post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Unquestionably the oldest and most reliable firm. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN BRYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, March 21, 1914.

* Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3744.
NEW SERIES, No. 848.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

The Sunday School Association.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LESSONS FROM THE PAINTERS.

Lessons Founded on Celebrated Pictures.

By LUCKING TAYNER.

With 15 Illustrations. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

During thirty years of ministry, including pulpit, platform, and class work, I have found the use of works of Art most valuable. This little book is written in order to show how reproductions of pictures might be used to illustrate ideals and duties.

From Preface.

HEROES OF FAITH.

From Wicliff to Priestley.

By ALBERT THORNHILL, M.A.

With 14 Illustrations. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

In writing this little book the author has been impelled by the conviction that our young people have only to learn the story of the lives of the great Heroes of Faith to be moved with the desire to emulate their noble examples in the field of daily duty.

* * A Complete Catalogue of the Publications of the Association will be sent post free on application.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex St., Strand, London, W.C.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses. Fee, £35 for six months' course. Children in residence.—For particulars apply to HON. SEC., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont-street, Liverpool.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

THE 19TH MUSICAL FESTIVAL for Choirs connected with the London Schools will be held at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, on Saturday, April 4.

Competition, 3 p.m.; Concert, 6 p.m.

Tickets:—Adults 1s. and 1s. 6d., and Children 6d. Can be obtained at Essex Hall.

R. ASQUITH WOODING, Hon. Sec.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.
March
29. Morning, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
Evening, Mr. EDWARD CAPLETON.
April
5. Rev. WILLIAM HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

Chatham Unitarian Church.

"Silver" Anniversary Fund.

The Committee are reluctantly compelled to appeal outside the Congregation for assistance towards raising the £100 necessary for repairs to Church and Organ.

Previously acknowledged	... £39 8 6
Dr. Courtney Kenny	... 4 4 0
One guinea:—Mrs. Miskin, Mr.
T. C. Lamb, Mrs. Green, Mr.
T. Seaton	... 4 4 0
Half-guinea:—Mr. F. Roberts,
Mr. Shindle, Mr. C. Willis	... 1 11 6
Smaller sums	... 2 19 6
	£52 7 6

Further contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, Mrs. Wood, 10, Borstal-road, Rochester.

A. HUDSON, Hon. Sec.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

P. J. FOLEY, ESQ., President.

Annual Income £3,340,000
Claims Paid exceed £15,000,000

Additional Representatives Wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing
G. SHRUBSALL, } Directors.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD STREET CHAPEL.

THE ANNUAL MEETING, to which Friends are cordially invited, will be held at Stamford Street Chapel, S.E., on Tuesday, March 31, 1914. Dr. L. P. JACKS will preside, supported by the Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT (Minister), Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE, C. F. PEARSON, Esq., and others.
Tea and Coffee 7 p.m. Meeting 7.45 p.m.
A. A. TAYLER, Hon. Sec.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

Next Entrance Examination, April 3.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL,
BISHOP'S STORTFORD.
Head Mistress: Miss ESTHER CASE, M.A. Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).
Second Mistress: Miss ESTERBROOK HICKS B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.— PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.
Next Term begins May 5.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M. Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH, For the Worship of the One God only, SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church), PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for March 29:

Morning: Ever-lasting life of ever-increasing goodness.

Evening: Trinitarianism of an old Prophet.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Tariff and guide on application to Frederick Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, March 29.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. Dr. MORITZ WESTON.
 Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. P. CHALK ; 7, Mr. J. PIPKIN.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. E. STANLEY RUSSELL, B.A.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11, and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Miss M. FRANCIS.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. R. W. SORENSSEN ; 6.30, Mr. A. J. HEALE.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. J. A. PEARSON ; 7, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS (Free Christian), Church-gate-street, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE WARD.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.
 CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing-street, 11.30, Rev. E. W. LUMMIS, M.A.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. JENKIN EVANS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 (DEAN ROW, 10.45, and
 STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GNEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle-terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, 11, Rev. J. S. BURGESS ; 6.30, Rev. LEONARD SHORT.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. H. JOHNSON.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A. ; 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HERBERT W. KING.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. ODGERS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A. ; 6.30, Rev. J. W. COCK.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREAE, M.A.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpelier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

DEATH.

CROSS.—On March 21, suddenly, at her residence, 3, Hanover-place, Canterbury, Helen Sarah Cross, aged 85 years.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

COMPANION-HELP required for old Lady. Maid kept; salary £25.—Apply first, Mrs. NANSON, Endcliffe, Eccles.

LADY seeks re-engagement as Companion or Companion-Help to elderly or invalid Lady near London. Good needlewoman, domesticated; good references.—C. M. S., 43, Beckenham-road, Penge.

WANTED, situation as Plain Cook, in London preferred. Excellent references.—Apply, A. Cook, c/o Miss Hill, 154, Stepney Green, E.

COMPANION-HELP required for two Ladies (mother and daughter). Servant kept; references exchanged.—Deva Cottage, Alum Chine-road, W. Bournemouth.

YOUNG LADY as Mother's Help. Salary £18—£20; baby two months, boy three years. Servant kept.—13, Lancaster-road, Brighton.

FULLY TRAINED NURSE would give services in return for three or four weeks' travel in the Summer.—Nurse MAGUIRE, High-street, Soham, Cambs.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Rev. A. LANCASTER, c/o Mr. W. A. Glubb, 55, West-street, Tavistock.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENTS RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	195	BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—		MEMORIAL NOTICE :—
DIRECTNESS OF PURPOSE	197	The Romance of an Irish Village	201	The Rev. J. Worsley Austin	203
RELIGION AND THE BLASPHEMY LAWS	197	Jewish Mysticism	201	MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
GOD'S EXILE	198	The Minimum Wage and other Matters	201	Sir Oliver Lodge on the Unseen Universe	204
CO-EDUCATION	199	Clear Grit	202	Manchester District Association of Uni-
CORRESPONDENCE :—		Luther and the Reformation	202	tarian and Presbyterian Churches	204
Special Services in Holy Week.	200	Publications Received	202	Principal Selbie at Islington	205
The Guild of Prayer and Meditation	200	FOR THE CHILDREN :—		NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	206
Wage-Earning Children	200	Westward Ho!—III.	202	NOTES AND JOTTINGS	207
				OUR CHESS COLUMN	208

* * All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

It is hard for the still small voice of religion and loving-kindness to make itself heard amid the devastating political earthquakes and the raucous cries of the scare-monger, which have held the stage during the past week. We do not deny that the issues have been of the gravest possible kind, and that there have been moments when we seemed to be on the brink of conflicts, which would reach much further than any of us can see, and send not peace but a flaming sword through the whole of our social life. But we have not been helped to think deeply and collectedly about our duty by the habit of inflated rhetoric which has taken possession of the newspapers. The control of public opinion at a time of crisis has passed far too much into the hands of the journalist whose business it is to advertise his wares by administering electric shocks. Let us at least remember that he is only a man like ourselves, who for the moment can adorn our pavements with his gigantic headlines, or sum up the most intricate questions of public duty in a few biting words of praise or denunciation. Meanwhile the wise man will make a space for thought, and remind himself that underlying politics there must be a reasonable theory of life which can be applied with impartial justice to the whole range of our social relationships.

* * *

MAY we also ask—though we fear that it will be in vain—that when men speak in public or write to the newspapers about Ireland, they will do so with sympathy and restraint and with real knowledge. Many people who know Ireland north and south, east and west, and feel her history moving in their blood, do not recognise much of the language of present controversy as anything near the truth. The Catholic population and the Protestants of Ulster are not the inveterate foes of popular imagination, though there may be little love lost between some Catholics and some Protestants, owing to faults on both sides. Catholics in Ireland have never persecuted Protestants, and there is no sign that they wish to begin to do so now. The peasantry of the south and west are as much part of the wealth of the land as the artisans of the north. The backwardness of parts of the country is not due to priestcraft and laziness, but to causes, economic and social, with which the historian is familiar. We know that when all this has been said the difficulties due to differences of temperament and tradition are grave and far-reaching. But we shall be in a far better position to face these difficulties in a spirit of hopefulness and equity, when we have the patience to undertake some study of Irish social conditions in the light of history—it is a story which will purge our hearts of all bitterness by its noble patriotism and its terrible pain—and so come closer to the realities of the situation as a whole.

* * *

WE are glad to see that Mr. Pease, the President of the Board of Education, is quite firm about the need of abolishing the half-time system, and raising the school age. Speaking at Rotherham last week he referred in plain terms to the waste caused by the half-time system, and described it as “abhorrent.” It did not, he said, affect a very large number of the community, but there were parents whose children had to work half-time, and who could ill afford to lose the children’s wages. Therefore, in any legislation dealing with that particular aspect there would be no desire to prevent those children continuing in any occupation in which they were already engaged. But with regard to the future they were looking to prevent that system continuing. The half-time system was hindering progress. The teachers objected to it, and found it very prejudicial to the progress of education. If they looked abroad they would find the children continued at school much longer than in England. In this country children left school at 12½ or 13, and much of the learning was soon forgotten and ratepayers’ money wasted. In California they had compulsory education up to 15, at Vermont up to 16, and in Scotland children were compelled to attend classes to the age of 17.

* * *

LAST Wednesday the Times published some particulars of the extent of child-labour in some important industrial centres. The most alarming facts came from Nottingham. We print the report exactly as it appeared in the Times:—“The exploitation of child labour is so familiar in Nottingham that it scarcely excites attention. Recently, however, the education authorities have been roused to effective action by a return showing that nearly 1,200 school children were illegally employed in the city. A headmaster in one of the poorest quarters of the city complained that 30 per cent. of his children were employed out of school hours, that many of them were sweated, and that the lack of alertness in school was not to be wondered at. In some cases little girls were found working more than 30 hours a week, all their spare time, when they were not at school, being occupied in helping their parents to do lace work. Sixty young boys were found illegally employed in barbers' shops. Warnings were served on all the parents and employers, and these have had a salutary effect, few prosecutions proving necessary. As long as so much lace work is done at home, however, it will be almost impossible to stop the abuse."

* * *

THESE facts add force to the appeal of Miss Greg, who writes from Lee Hall, Prestbury, to plead for funds on behalf of the Committee on Wage-Earning Children. "This committee," she says, "has been at work for many years under the able guidance of Miss Adler, Miss Constance Smith, and Mr. A. J. Mundella, and has already accomplished much in the awakening of the public conscience to the evils it seeks to remedy. Reports of school medical officers during 1911 and 1912 show that children working outside school hours are shorter in height, lighter in weight, show a greater percentage of anæmia, fatigue, and severe heart strain than those not so employed. The wastage of intelligence is equally serious, for the overworked child is quite unable to profit by the education provided."

* * *

THE death of the Rev. J. Worsley Austin, of Birmingham, at the early age of 41 is the most serious loss which has happened to the Unitarian ministry for a long time. In a world where brilliant gifts often attract more attention than deeper and more essential qualities of heart and character he came slowly into his own, but it is just the man of disciplined spirit and ripe wisdom, strong in sureness of touch and firmness of conviction, whom the ministry needs most at the present time. In Mr. Austin THE INQUIRER mourns one of its loyal band of helpers. His work was not dashed off in a few hurried moments in the midst of other tasks. It had the marks of careful thinking upon it. He was a contributor who inspired complete confidence that all his writing would be distinguished by intellectual sanity and religious helpfulness. He consented recently to act as our Birmingham correspondent, and in this and other ways we had looked forward to an extension beyond the limits of his own church of his witness to the things which lay nearest to his heart.

* * *

WE cannot profess to be greatly impressed by the establishment of a Women's Church in Wallasey last week. It has the fatal look about it of artificial stimulus instead of being the creation of an imperious religious need, which can be satisfied in no other way. The Labour Church, in spite of all its fine ideals, had this inherent weakness and came to nothing. There was some element of antagonism in it which limited its ideals and thus destroyed its spiritual life at its source. Healthy-minded men and women do not want to worship alone, or to isolate themselves into classes according to rank or wealth or education or moral status. Segregated groups tend to nourish some form of particularism and to think of themselves instead of worshipping God. Christianity cannot be manipulated in this way for our own ends. It must be accepted on its own universal terms or not at all. There is, we firmly believe, a large and growing place for women in the service of religion. We hope that they will occupy it in all humility, with the fear and trembling which befit the servants of God. But they do themselves and every good cause an ill service when they advertise a church to be run by women in which men will be kept in their proper place. We hope that this opinion will not be set down as the prejudice of a mere man. It seems to us to be the plainest common-sense from the point of view of a religion which seeks to include the whole human race.

* * *

IN the course of his "Provincial Assembly" Lecture, delivered in Liverpool, on March 19, Sir Oliver Lodge put forward a new and interesting theory of genius, or rather of the way in which genius works, for the ultimate mystery remains as great as ever. Nearly all the important things, he said, were done automatically, and as one got used to conscious things the more unconscious they became. The more cultivated a man was, the more things would come to him automatically and without conscious effort. That was, he thought, what happened to genius. A man went into a brown study, his conscious mind was removed from the conscious things of life, a process of a high grade went on in his brain, he might be in contact with a higher order of things, he got inspiration, and the result was a drama, a poem, or a picture. A Beethoven symphony was produced by the scraping together of catgut and horsehair, and conveyed to the brain by the mechanism of the ear; but might there not be a more natural, more simple, and perhaps more effective method than this materialist nexus? He had reason to believe that such a method existed, and that we should not need the present dominant method when our minds were enfranchised from the material organism, which was so useful, and which yet limited and hampered us to some extent.

* * *

IN a later passage of the lecture there was a fine defence of the reality of an unseen world and the methods of spiritual perception. Were we dependent on our senses only, Sir Oliver Lodge pointed out, we should never know of the existence of God. We were not bodies only; we had minds and spirits; we appealed not only to the material universe, but also to a higher, a super-sensuous, unseen universe, with which we were more akin than to the other, with which we could get into closer touch, and of which we could feel ourselves to be a conscious part—a region of existence in which ultimately we should find ourselves more at home than in our present material surroundings. He thought that a super-sensuous universe, now withdrawn from our bodily ken, was open to our spiritual perceptions all the time, and we need not deal with it as a future state, or think of it as something going on in the future. It was here and now—here and now, if ever; because wherever we were in the universe, and at whatever period, it was only "now" that existed. The seen and unseen aspects of the universe were co-existent all the time, and were not dependent on such trivialities as birth and death.

* * *

THE most curious defence of the Athanasian Creed which we have ever seen is put forward by Sir Martin Conway in a letter to the Times. He compares it to a mediæval painting of the Last Judgment on the wall of some ancient parish church. "We regard the words of a statement or poem," he writes, "with a seriousness which for us does not attach to any other artistic form of statement. The Athanasian Hymn is as fine a work of ancient art as are any set of early Christian mosaics. As expressions of doctrine, both are equally worn out for ordinary persons. If we cherish the mosaics as of priceless value and would not have one of them touched, why not likewise cherish the hymn? The value of ancient ritual does not depend on literal acceptance of the obvious modern meaning of every word, but on antiquity and continuity of use. This is obvious in those parts that appeal to the eye, why not also in those that address the ear?" This is obviously the plea of an artist, but it strikes us as far more specious than sound. Art, in spite of its historical connection with dogma, does not teach and affirm with the same terms of intellectual precision as a creed; nor is there anything analogous between looking at a picture and repeating a doctrinal statement as part of a solemn act of worship. If the creed were simply inscribed on the church walls, as an interesting relic of the past, and the whole element of personal confession were eliminated, the case would, of course, be different. It will strike many people as a rather strange freak of fancy to select the Athanasian Creed for artistic admiration, with its crude repetition and faults of emphasis. A better case could be made out for the Nicene Creed, where the phrases have been finely chiselled by the Greek spirit.

DIRECTNESS OF PURPOSE.

BEWILDERMENT is one of the marks of modern city life, and bewilderment is a sworn foe alike to mental health and spiritual growth. We live amid the hoarse roar of party cries. We are distracted by the passionate claims of conflicting opinions. The headlines of the newspapers stir the fever in our blood. The world in its mad gallop jostles us and hustles at every turn. And the consequence is that we are bewildered, tossed hither and thither by the excitements of the hour, without quietness for thought, or the moral strength and collectedness to be simple, direct, and persevering in the pursuit of high aims. Character may be more versatile than it used to be, but has it the same staying power for difficult tasks? Knowledge may deck itself in gayer attire to suit our fitful moods, but can we boast that we have grown in the power of mental concentration, or that our atmosphere is helping us to see clearly into the heart of our problems?

Directness of purpose is one of the primary intellectual virtues. The man who studies without an aim soon loses himself in an unwholesome swamp of undigested books and feeble opinions. If his desire is to become mentally incapable he cannot do better than dabble vaguely in a multitude of topics and acquire facility in talking about them. There is a Latin saying to this effect, Humanæ sapientiæ magna pars est multa æquo animo nescire velle, which means that it is no small part of human wisdom to be quite cheerful in our ignorance about many things. The wise man knows that time is short, his mental capacity is limited, and that if he wishes to accomplish anything concentration is nature's first law. The same thing is true in an even deeper and richer sense in moral effort and religious faith. Many people of excellent character are entirely unimpressive, there is no contagion in their example, because they answer every call for help and service which comes to them and do nothing strongly and well. They lack the courage to refuse, or they are seduced by some instability of interest in themselves from any clear definition of purpose. But this fault reaches its culminating disaster in the restless moods of the spiritual life. How easy it is under present circumstances to mistake a perfunctory interest in religious opinions for the quiet, deep influence of religion itself. How ready we often are to discuss new theories, sometimes even to accept them, without any attempt to co-ordinate them with our central convictions or to submit them to the searching test of meditation and prayer. Does it ever occur to us that it is not inquisitiveness of temper or openness of mind which awakens interest in religion in other men and wins them over from their indifference, but the power which is born of directness of purpose?

But we do not wish to enlarge upon these sources of weakness, which are clear to us on every hand. Our present object is to suggest that at all hazards the Church must be saved from this dissipation of energy, for it is its supreme purpose through worship and spiritual discipline to fix the heart in deep and enduring affections and to guide the conscience in the tried loyalties of the Christian character. For this reason it must have the courage to seek for salvation in monotony. As soon as it is drawn away into the effort to be interesting through novelty, and popular by providing something for every taste, it is undone. The themes of the preacher are few and everlasting. He would do well to allow his sermons to be controlled by his prayers, where there is still a sound instinct for the eternal values of religion. The one thing needful is that the Church should provide a refuge for human souls from the excitements of the world through its own strong concentration upon the worship of God. It will help the world best and redeem it from wrong, not by granting free admission to every interest which competes for our attention, but by sending men forth from the sanctuary with enkindled souls, simpler in character, firmer in faith, more deeply rooted in the spirit and practice of Christian discipleship.

We know of one method by which this end may be accomplished, and once again the lengthening shadow of the Cross is bringing it freshly to our minds. Devout interior meditation upon the life of Christ—we do not mean, we need hardly say, the critical study of it, but the high effort of the disciple to raise himself into fellowship with the mind of the Master, the realisation so far as possible in terms of our own experience of his purposes of love for men—this will clear away many self-deceiving mists from the soul and make it a mirror of the Divine goodness and simplicity. "He set his face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem." Have we set our faces steadfastly towards any heavenly aim? If not, if we are still strangers to this initial directness of purpose, we need not cast about for the reason of our religious difficulties, or imagine that we have found and labelled them when we talk about criticism and intellectual unrest. The chief reason is moral. It is within ourselves, and what we need is not mental illumination but a simpler and more steadfast heart.

RELIGION AND THE BLASPHEMY LAWS.

A PUBLIC meeting in support of the Bill for the repeal of the blasphemy laws was held at Essex Hall on Friday of last week. Professor Gilbert Murray, who was the chief speaker, pointed out once again that the accepted ruling of Lord Coleridge that the fundamentals of Christianity might be attacked in public, provided the decencies of controversy were observed, was a humane compromise, but with all the weakness of a compromise. In making manners the test of crime it clearly weighted the law against the poor and ignorant, against everybody in fact who was not trained in the methods of scientific controversy. Who in the world, he asked, was to be the judge of the extraordinarily difficult question whether language was so intolerably offensive that a man should be sent to gaol for it? A resolution was passed calling upon the Government to introduce a Bill for the repeal of the laws under which prosecutions for the expression of opinions on matters of religion are now possible.

It is needless for us to add that we are entirely in favour of the objects of this meeting, for we have expressed several times our deeply-rooted dislike of the blasphemy laws, and our sense of the injury which they do to the cause of religion. We believe that a large number of religious people agree with us in this attitude, people of orthodox opinions, who have been well grounded in the principles of religious liberty, as well as heretics. For this reason we regret that the agitation should be left largely in the hands of the free-lances and the free-thinkers. There is nothing in the least hostile to Christianity in the movement for repeal, and it will be unfortunate if the impression is created in the public mind that what is demanded is greater liberty to attack the faith of other people in blunt and disagreeable language. Nothing could be further from the case; it is a great principle which is involved; but many movements have suffered severely through the false impression made upon the public mind by a one-sided advocacy. Cannot something be done to focuss the opinion of a number of people, who are quite above the suspicion of any wish to attack the Christianity which is deeply precious to themselves, and yet have a strong dislike of the protection of the law against the expression of convictions different from their own? Here it is not theoretical approval that is needed—so far as argument is concerned the victory is already won—but courage which requires to be screwed up to the sticking point.

GOD'S EXILE.

"EXILES of the Heart" is the name he pins upon his company. And the company is that to which Plato, Boehme, Blake belonged. The line seems never to have been extinct, and in this Iron age against which the Irish poet and painter, George Russell, girds, once more the ancient lineage reappears. One is glad to have his own selection from his past poetical works by the rare seer who wears the badge "A. E.," and Messrs. Macmillan have done us service by publishing in a six-shilling volume these "Collected Poems" containing what poetry of his the author would wish his friends to read. Here is revealed to us the soul of one ever haunted by half-memories of some high ancestral life in the home of his golden kinsmen in a Land of Perennial Youth, where the Fount of Shadowy Beauty ever flows, and the Well of All-Healing springs up in perpetual freshness. This is equivalent to saying that the Kingdom of the tangible and visible holds him but slightly, and can never claim him as subject.

By reason of this alienage, this world-strangeness in a place where the majority are so much at home, his point of view will appear to them quite out of perspective. They might pass him by as an unpractical dreamer, but he might retort: "Your day is dream to me, and in your darkness I awake to see a Thought that moves like light within the deep." For he boldly looks out upon the world with the same eyes as the Hindu mystics to whom the phenomenal web was a great veil of illusion. Like Blake he sees through the eyes, not with them. Like Thoreau he hears beyond the range of sound, he sees beyond the range of sight. He sees "a sunlight in the hidden core to dim the noonday glow." One would doubtless commend him, the Master of Mystics, the "Misunderstood of Galilee." For in every one A. E. sees the God-root. Evil is but shadow cast by light.

Something beyond yon coward gaze
Betrays the royal line;
Its lust and hate, but errant rays,
Are at their root divine.

The Calvinist would be horrified at such confusion of moral issues, but then his religious horizon has never throbbed with the mountain's whisper of a God that like a wind goes breathing a dream of Himself in all.

The mystic's moral touchstone is no less sure for its wider forgivingness.

We must pass like smoke or live within the spirit's fire;

For we can no more than smoke unto the flame return

If our thought has changed to dream, our will unto desire,

As smoke we vanish though the fire may burn.

This testimony is all the more valuable from one whose temperament must be peculiarly liable to miss the mark of Kipling's counsel:—

To dream and not make dream your master,

To think and not make thought your aim.

Everywhere he sees the mystic vision flow and live in men and woods and streams, until he can no longer know the dream of life from his own dreams. In the oneness of his own life with the life of all things living lies the mystic's peculiar personal discovery. We may accept the fact as an intellectual proposition, he realises it in heart and soul.

And often the myriad forms melt into the light they bear. They become transparent to it; the glory they let through reduces them to phantoms. Thus he becomes impatient with the symbol, for it hides more than it reveals. "Never visible to sense or thought the flower of beauty blooms, afar, withdrawn." And this marks the point in the road where he parts company with other artists; to his own undoing, critics of his pictures may be inclined to add.

Some for beauty follow long Flying traces; some there be
Seek thee only for a song;
I to lose myself in thee.

"Thee" here is the other, larger self, through whose half-opened lips the Infinite murmurs its ancient story, a bird whose roosting-place is in the dense infinitudes amid the singing silences. With his back ever to earth, his homing instinct strikes a pang through the heart: "The stars make him long, long, to return to their light again."

This is the high Ancestral Self who carries in the core of its being reminiscences of the primæval age when it was harboured in the Hostel of the Gods. But most men have forgotten, having drunk, as Plato would say, too deeply of the waters of Lethe. Therefore "no image of the proud and morning stars looks at us from their faces." Yet with the earthly consciousness in abeyance, some glimpse of the former glory is regained. It is this native Kingliness dignifies the peasant and makes him claim kinship in his distant hope with all the great and wise, and feel in the worlds of space a comradeship: "these myriad eyes that look on me are mine."

To the most commonplace thing the indwelling presence lends sanctity. "The rudest sod to me is thrilled with fire of hidden day, and haunted by all mystery." The poems speak of common clay as holy substance, and the air as enchanted wine poured from the Holy Grail. So, just as Francis Thompson found Jacob's Ladder reaching to Heaven from Charing Cross, A. E. in the streets of Dublin meets the fiery rushing chariots of the Lord. These mystics do not need to look afar off for God. Whatever cell immures them, its roof-tree forms an arch which has its apex hidden in the empyrean and 49 paradises beneath the rafters. Mystery pillows her chin upon their window-sill. The mystic is at home everywhere because he is at home nowhere. He knows the enchantment of the vast lonely fields of space; but it is their own hearth-fire the chilled feet are seeking. The hearth-fire blazes through all the world for him, it's a home without a circling wall. Everything has it, but nothing holds it. For "full of Zeus the cities and the harbours; full of Zeus are all the ways of men." And if it is Paradise to look on mortal things with an immortal's eyes, the mystic should have a bliss the slave of sense can never know.

As a result of the deeper mystical plummet of A. E. as compared with W. B. Yeats, one notes that whereas the latter is a happier lord of language, more of an artist, more of a poet, A. E. is saved from Yeats ineffable sadness, and in his optimism has the grace to apologise that nearness to the King in His beauty has not inspired him with greater joyousness. Perhaps the fount of mystery lies near to the well of tears, and

The gay romance of song

Unto the spirit-life doth not belong.

But A. E. has travelled farther into the heart of paganism than Yeats; he is, so to speak, an esoteric pagan. Anyway, he is not dismayed by the thwartings and partings that create the tragedy of love, nor by the follies and failures that create the tragedy of life. There is a breaking of the heart for the heart's own sake.

For thou hast but fallen to gather the last of the secrets of power;

The beauty that breathes in thy spirit shall shape of thy sorrow a flower.

Such a consummation is, of course, a long way ahead—

Ah, time long must the effort be,

And far the way that I must go

To bring my spirit unto thee,

Behind the glass, within the glow.

It does not, unfortunately, follow that all God-fraught things should be aware of their endowment, and seek the goal which is at once their higher self and the Self-Universal. But the distinctive mark of the mystic is that he is awake. He becomes aware of the hidden light of his own spirit. Less and less he identifies his life with bodily sensations. He begins to have glimpses of states of consciousness while "out of the body." He begins to remember vivid episodes in other lives in the long series of earthly existences. Thus A. E. meets in an Irish comrade one who was once a Babylonian bride.

Oh light our life in Babylon, but Babylon has taken wings,

While we are in the calm and proud procession of eternal things.

A. E. will be lightly held to be in error, but he would doubtless reply, like Shelley, that he preferred to be wrong with Plato, Pythagoras, and Gautama, than to be right with his critic.

Again, just as the modern world has lost the true significance of sleep, so has it lost the true significance of that twin-brother of sleep, as the Greek mysteries held death to be. Death is just sleep plus forgetfulness of the way back.

In reference to his own child's death, he wonders if the Heavenly Wizard will melt in his mood majestic and "laugh with thee as child to child." What terror can death hold for one who consciously crosses the bourne while still in the body? To thousands to-day there is no nepenthe for the torture slowly administered in the numberless chambers of pain, but the mystic has washed his soul of all discomfort in the Pool of Healing that comes from knowledge that is experience, and therefore knowledge that is power. The shrine to which he brings his offerings is to most people but a closed shrine, but through the locked shutters he has seen a luminous radiance, and heard the rustling of tremendous wings.

There is a peace that lies beneath the deepest pools of quietude. There is a silence diviner than music, a darkness diviner than light. To cull flowers upon those altitudes of silence is to hold a gift of spiritual ecstacy almost unendurable for its intensity. A. E. seems to live habitually on those heights. It is there, past the Gateways of the Day, that the human heart, all desires burning white for God's whiteness, may quench its thirst and longing. The feet of all the mystics know the path thereto. There the weary lives are gathered like starry dust into a golden urn; there the desire of Man and the delight of God grow one; there all dreams become true.

J. T. D.

CO-EDUCATION.

It is a regrettable fact that the subject of Co-education is greatly neglected in this country. Isolated schools in which this system prevails can, of course, be mentioned, but to the average man or woman they are names only, and the question of their success or failure is one which arouses little or no interest. Among the teaching fraternity, where any advance in educational methods must be duly considered, this question may possibly receive full discussion; it is, however, to the parents and guardians of the children who are to be educated that this paper is addressed. To educate, to draw out and strengthen the mental powers (the dictionary meaning of "educate") can in no way be intended to imply that the power of text-book learning is the only one that it will be necessary to strengthen. As every one knows, there are latent powers in every child, some of which will need much strengthening and coaxing forward; others, again, which might eventually wreck that child's life, must be subdued and guided. Education is the building of character, over and above the teaching of mere facts.

The character of a child is more easily influenced than many people seem to suppose, and some of the greatest and most lasting influences may be traced to an apparently trivial school companionship. Children are only entirely themselves when they are assured of no interruptions from the "grown-ups," and it is then that their intrinsic merits and demerits show up most clearly. A child will be able to tell you the leading characteristics of another child after an hour's play. Taking into consideration this intimacy of school life, surely the least observant must realise that, in the co-educational system, the two sexes must act as a check and at the same time as an encouragement to each other. A boy who is inclined to brag of his manliness, to scoff at all girls as "silly," to be cruel and bullying, finds that his feminine classmates are as worthy of respect as his own particular chums. He will, unconsciously, wish to show the best side of his character to them, and in so doing will, in all probability, strengthen his arrogance into true self-confidence. He will be more concerned with the doing of great things than in the boasting of his prowess. The conceited girl who revels in her fine looks and clothes is soon laughed out of such silliness, and those who are apt to be too serious-minded will certainly be teased into a more wholesome frame of mind.

In the free companionship between boys and girls which this system affords, it cannot be doubted that each sex learns something of the best characteristics of the other. Unconsciously, the girls develop something of the open-hearted camaraderie of their school-fellows, learning courage and generosity and that rare quality, directness; from those whom the schoolgirls of the old system regarded as a very objectionable species to be avoided if possible. While boys, on the other hand, learn to admire, and emulate the gentleness, purity, and what might be termed eager patience of the girls, the same girls for which the average schoolboy, under other conditions, has an unmitigated contempt.

Years ago an old divine of New England prayed that "God would make the young lads pure and the maidens brave." When asked if he did not intend the opposite meaning, he replied, "No. That comes by nature, but the other only by prayer and grace." Now some opponents of co-education have argued that such a system must tend to make the boys effeminate and the girls coarse and rough in manners. This can be most emphatically denied by those who have studied the pupils of any of our co-educational schools.

Those who have been educated under this system will agree that the natural attraction between the sexes acts as the greatest incentive to good behaviour and to the building up and strengthening of character. A boy who listens daily to the modest conversation of girls of his own age will shrink unconsciously from any of his fellows who indulge in coarse or unpleasant talk, and the girl who would be over timid and squeamish soon learns sufficient courage to allow her to enter the school games and sports while realising that the boys themselves are the first to disapprove of the hoyden.

It is urged that the different rate of mental development between the two sexes will prove one of the greatest difficulties to cope with in this system. But, surely, there is no tremendous problem here when one remembers that in every school there is some form of classification and grouping of the pupils. Thus it is possible for the quick child to forge ahead, while the slow ones are detained to learn the work of that particular form over and over again until it is conquered and thoroughly understood. If the girls prove a little quicker in learning at one age, the boys will certainly lead at another, and so, over a number of years, the balance will be maintained. The ambition of both boys and girls is also stimulated and encouraged under this system. As neither sex is willing to acknowledge the superiority of the other, the fight for school prizes and places is eagerly undertaken.

In co-educational schools, where debates are held among the pupils, it is most intensely interesting to study the difference in standpoint between the masculine and feminine mind. A lad may make a most excellent speech upon a given subject touching apparently upon every point worthy of mention, and following him a girl will give an equally interesting address in which the whole subject is taken from a different point of view. The facts which deeply impressed the male mind now give place to others which had been almost ignored in the previous speech. This will illustrate the manner in which pupils under this system are enabled to view a subject from more than one point of vantage, learning tolerance for the opinions of others, while acquiring for themselves that most admirable trait, broad mindedness.

The writer would venture to suggest that undue consideration is given to this question of sex differences in children. If girls and boys are not constantly reminded of this difference they will work and play together with the greatest benefit to both until the age of fourteen or fifteen. At this age it will probably be found necessary to specialise their training, and separate teaching will become, to a certain extent, unavoidable. It can scarcely be doubted that, when boys and girls are accustomed to each other's society in everyday life, the years of adolescence will prove considerably less trying than is usually the case at this time when young people are apt to take rather too sentimental a view of life in general and themselves in particular.

It has been suggested that this system of equality in education will tend to eradicate the spirit of chivalry and romance. In answer to this the writer can only say that, in her experience, she has found that, almost invariably, co-education has resulted in the genuine respect and admiration of one sex for another.

The advantage in after years to children thus educated must also be considered. When school life has become a thing of the past, their respect for and understanding of the opposite sex will remain to smooth and solve many of the daily problems of adult life. The utter lack of sympathy and understanding which exists between many young men and women is simply appalling. To a girl who has never had a friend of the opposite-sex every man is a possible husband. Unrealised by herself, she is always self-conscious in the presence of men. If she does not make a very evident effort to please, she is apt to be over-indifferent almost to the verge of rudeness. The girl who can be entirely herself in the companionship of men is somewhat rare in this country, and the fact that many otherwise clever and discerning men adopt a superficial and frivolous manner when talking to women cannot, unfortunately, be denied. It is not until love and marriage come to light the way that these men and women attempt any kind of serious discussion or exchange of thoughts. Thus they not only lose years of real and interesting companionship, but they build up the serenity of their future upon a foundation of misunderstanding which will require a considerable amount of affection to hold it secure.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

SPECIAL SERVICES IN HOLY WEEK.

SIR,—I venture to ask the hospitality of your columns in order to say that a series of Devotional Services will be held in the King's Weigh House Church (Duke-street, Grosvenor-square) on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday in Holy Week, commencing each evening at 8 o'clock.

It is not the prevalent habit in Nonconformist circles to observe this season, in public assembly, save perhaps for an hour on Good Friday morning; it is possible, therefore, that there may be many men and women of devout mind among us, who are feeling the pressure of the spiritual potentialities of this time of unrest, and who would be glad to gather with others of like expectation for a more continuous and concentrated practice of the Divine Presence than the usual arrangements of our churches provide for, at this time. The officers of the King's Weigh House Church, and myself, feel that it is at least possible that the present profound disturbance in the political, social, and religious life of this country may be in some special sense a call to those of a loving heart and a sensitive spirit, that we should wait on God in order that we may receive from Him, vicariously for the whole community, gifts of illumination and power adequate to the exceptional need of the time. The services will be conducted by me, and, although I shall efface myself in the general spirit of worship and consecration, something will be given me to say in confirmation of the Hope that is set on us.

Will you permit me to add that, for these services, the seats in our church are free; there will be no collection; and our Choir Master will be grateful to receive offers of voluntary assistance from any members of other choirs who may be free to attend any or all of the services. Such offers may be addressed to me, or to Mr. T. M. Baker at the King's Weigh House. For the convenience of the many, alas!

who do not know where the church is situated, may I say that it is within three minutes' walk of the Bond-street Station on the Central London Railway, and, if one may use a commercial enterprise for a religious end, within a stone's throw of Selfridge's.—I am, yours, &c.,

EDWARD LEWIS.

*King's Weigh House Church,
London, W., March 25, 1914.*

THE GUILD OF PRAYER AND MEDITATION.

SIR,—The present condition of the churches of our fellowship in the United Kingdom is a matter of grave concern and anxious inquiry. Many schemes are afoot for endeavouring to vitalise our churches, and much useful work is no doubt being done in the effort to improve matters. I would venture to suggest one more, a very simple and easy one, but, perhaps, nevertheless, effective, viz., "The Guild of Prayer and Meditation." There need be no organisation, no office-bearers, no enrolment, no meetings even. All who come in should do so voluntarily, and it is enough if only they bear the Guild in mind and carry out the objects for which it exists. Those objects are (1) daily concentration on the fundamentals of our religion; (2) united mental prayer for the good estate of the Church, and for the prosperity and spread of Liberal Christianity; (3) regular attendance at Divine Service, or, in case of unavoidable absence, the effort to be present in spirit by sending thoughts to the assembled congregation.

In pursuance of the first object, I have for many years advocated a devotional discipline. Begin the day by silently repeating the following: "The Lord our God, the Lord is One." "In Him we live and move and have our being." At noon: "One God and Father of all, who is in all, and through all, and over all." "I am in the Father and the Father is in me." "I and the Father are one." At the close of the day the Angelic Ascription of Praise: "Amen, Blessing and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen." In addition to this, at noon, a united wish for the prosperity of our churches.

We hear a great deal about the New Psychology and the Power of Thought in these days. Very often these new teachings which attract so much interest are simply the old familiar truths presented in a new fashion. However it be, the Guild which I now propose, and which all may join without any inconvenience of new outer obligations, will be making practical use of the power of united thought and prayer; and steady perseverance in the discipline must surely enrich the spiritual life of our churches, and help to remedy some of the evils of indifference and laxity which assail them.—Yours, &c.,

JOHN BARRON.

*Ballyhemlin Manse, Co. Down,
March 24, 1914.*

WAGE-EARNING CHILDREN.

SIR,—May I make an appeal on behalf of the Committee on Wage-Earning Children, which is greatly in need of funds to enable it to carry on its propaganda work?

This committee has been at work for many years under the able guidance of Miss Alder, Miss Constance Smith, and Mr. A. J. Mundella, and has already accomplished much in the awakening of the public conscience to the evils it seeks to remedy.

Reports of school medical officers during 1911 and 1912 show that children working outside school hours are shorter in height, lighter in weight, show a greater percentage of anaemia, fatigue, and severe heart strain than those not so employed. The wastage of intelligence is equally serious, for the overworked child is quite unable to profit by the education provided.

Half-time work is not so detrimental morally, saving that its drudgery gives many children a distaste for steady employment; but the mental and physical effects are deteriorating in the highest degree. The children lose far more than 50 per cent. of their education, for they come to school after the morning shift quite tired, half asleep, and unable to profit by the lessons put before them.

The first Bill introduced in this session of Parliament was Mr. Denman's Bill on School Attendance and Employment of Children. This Bill only deals with a portion of the evils I have mentioned, but it deals with these very effectively, and if passed into law would—

- (1) Abolish all exemption from school-attendance for children under 13, and restrict exemptions above that age.
- (2) Make it possible for local education authorities to raise the school-age in their districts up to 15.
- (3) Abolish the half-time system.
- (4) Prohibit street trading for girls under 18 and boys under 15, and regulate it for older boys; and
- (5) Transfer the control of the bye-laws on employment of children from the Home Office to the Board of Education, whereby the interests of the child would receive more expert and sympathetic consideration than under the present system.

May I appeal to your readers to help us by any means in their power to get this Bill through? If anyone would like to know more of our work before helping us, I should be glad to send him a report of the Committee and other literature published by us.—Yours, &c.,

SUSAN ELIZABETH GREG,

Hon. Treasurer, Committee on Wage-Earning Children.

Lee Hall, Prestbury, Cheshire, March 19.

THE Essex Hall lecture for this year will be given by the Dean of St. Paul's on Wednesday, June 3. On the same day Professor Eucken is announced to give a lecture in German at Essex Hall.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

THE ROMANCE OF AN IRISH VILLAGE.

The Folk of Furry Farm. By K. F. Purdon. London: Nisbet & Co., Ltd. 6s.

IN his introduction to this delightful book by a writer whose sketches of Irish life are already familiar to readers of THE INQUIRER, Mr. George A. Birmingham claims that Miss Purdon "belongs to the Irish Literary Movement." We do not dispute the statement, or grudge the Irish Literary Movement whatever added glory may accrue to it thereby. But Miss Purdon has that within her of which no "movement" ever yet had the monopoly, and although her characters are all drawn from the midland plains of Meath, and speak a racy, picturesque and coaxing dialect which could belong to no other peasantry in the world, she touches those universal themes which have their roots in love and pity, and are potent to thrill the heart in every age and country. This she does with such simplicity, such naïveté, such a true sense of the significance of homely lives and outwardly uninteresting people, such an absence of any desire to sit in judgment where common human failings are concerned, such a fund of genuine sympathy and sly humour, that it is only too easy to praise her. The book is obviously written by one who loves her fellow-men, and not least of all when they are down-at-heel, and of a disconcertingly vagabond disposition. Miss Purdon belongs, indeed, to the happy fellowship of those who follow Pan's pipes through a "shaggy world," and cannot stop to moralise too much over the backslidings of the stupid and foolish. "The Folk of Furry Farm" has its weaknesses, of course, but, like the genial writer of the Introduction, who has really done the reviewer's work for him, we much prefer to leave them to people who enjoy making a list of imperfections. It is enough to say that within these pages the reader whose heart is warm with human instincts, and not ossified with ancient prejudices, will meet with as entertaining a group of people as he could possibly wish to come across, although none of them are educated in the ordinary sense, and few have any knowledge of the world beyond the boundaries of their native village. There is Mickey Hefferman, to begin with, "middling old," and "fond of industering," the owner of Furry Farm, whose efforts to get himself a wife are so pitifully unsuccessful till he gives shelter to Marg Molally's lame donkey. There is Peter Caffrey (Peetcheen) a lazy beggar if ever there was one, who marries Julia, the scold, and goes quietly off with the price of a heifer when her "forchune" is all gone ("Peetcheen was just himself and not another"). There is Christina Flanagan, with her woman's heart breaking for Jim Cassidy, that has only eyes for her merry little sister, Nelly, and all that strange matter of the apparition in the meadow which made the sunshine uncanny. There is sweet Rosy Rafferty, so blithe when her boy-lover comes courting, so unutterably pathetic when she seeks her mother, and death at the same time, in the wards of the Union. There is Dark Moll Reilly, not so blind as folk think her, playing the fiddle at weddings, and carrying everywhere with her the gossip of the district, whom you must not blame too much for the astute way in which she looked after her own interests, since, as another Irish writer has said, "a man who does not think for himself does not think at all"—and presumably it's the same with a woman. All these and many other equally charming folk are described with the colloquial freedom of speech which Miss Purdon knows so well how to use, and which has a bewitching insouciance about it impossible to resist. Incidentally a picture is drawn of the village of Ardenoo, where "there was nothing scarcer than work,"—a poor enough little place from which all the likely lads departed for America as soon as they reached any age at all—not without significance for those who are studying the Irish question, since it is to the peasant, after all, that we must go if we would learn anything about the causes which make a country great, or bring about her downfall and decay. What are the particular causes which have drained Ireland of her life-blood we leave to those who are wiser than ourselves to discuss at this exciting period in her history, but we could wish nothing better than that some of the controversialists who are bandying her name about so vehemently might discover the secret of Miss Purdon's understanding of all sorts and conditions of men, and try the effect of a little human sympathy and belief in one's kind in place of the harsh temper which is so provocative of animosity.

L. G. A.

JEWISH MYSTICISM.

Jewish Mysticism. By J. Abelson, M.A., D.Litt. The Quest Series. London: G. Bell & Sons. 2s. 6d. net.

THAT a book can be written, and a very good book too, on Jewish mysticism, shows how erroneous is the opinion that Judaism lacks the mystic element. What place can there be for it in an arid legalism, such as Judaism is commonly supposed to be? What can the Jew, with his minute rules of conduct, his hair-splitting casuistry, know of the intimate personal communion with God which is the essence of mysticism? The answer of the better informed is that the Jew in all ages has known a great deal of that personal communion with God; and that, mainly because he has done so, his religion, legal though it be in its outward form, has never become a mere formalism, let alone an "organised hypocrisy." To those who are willing to inquire whether this is true, and who are not content to rest in ancient prejudice, Dr. Abelson's book will be most useful and suggestive. Any one who has read his study of "The Immanence of God, in Rabbinical Literature," reviewed in THE INQUIRER some time ago, will not need to be told of his qualifications to deal with Jewish Mysticism. For a Christian the task would be impossible. The difficulty of interpreting the legal element in Judaism, in terms of religion, is very great for one who has not been brought up under it; but it is not so great as the difficulty of interpreting the Kabbalah, of extracting the pure spiritual element from the mass of fantastic speculation wherein it is buried. The Kabbalah has got a bad name; and, no doubt, there is something to justify the view which is so expressed. But it should be remembered that the Kabbalah, like the Talmud, has been able to win and to hold the passionate allegiance of men who could never find satisfaction in what was merely trivial. If the Jews, being a "peculiar people," are nowhere more so than in the literary expression which they gave to their thoughts and beliefs, the worth of those beliefs is not to be measured by the strange appearance they make to the non-Jewish reader.

Dr. Abelson does not, because he could not in a small book, expound the whole system of metaphysics and ethics for which Kabbalah is the inclusive term. But he puts the reader in the way of knowing what it is all about, what its authors meant by it, and how it was developed from its germs in the Old Testament to the huge mass which is found in the Jewish literature of the Middle Ages. It was not a sudden incursion into Judaism of an alien element from without, though there were reasons why it did not become conspicuous in European Judaism till the ninth or tenth century. The mystic element had been present in Judaism all through the Talmudic period, as the Talmud itself shows, and was further developed in the succeeding period, amongst the Jews of Babylonia. It was from there that it was brought directly to Europe in the ninth century.

Jewish mysticism produced the Kabbalah, as its answer to the problems of metaphysics and ethics, its philosophy of religion. But, however far it might go in speculation, it never loosed its hold upon the fundamentals of the Unity of God and of direct personal communion of the individual with Him. The Synagogue admitted into the Liturgy a good deal of the phraseology of the Kabbalah as it did also of that of the Talmud; but neither on the one side nor on the other did it forget, or cease to emphasise the personal religion based on the real presence of God in the soul of the worshipper.

Dr. Abelson writes as one to whom all this is matter of course, not having had to learn it from without. He is by no means a blind fanatic for the Kabbalah, and freely recognises its defects. All the more he is able to do justice to the real purpose of it, and to the men who gave of their best for the sake of building it up. May he go on to give, to those who know so much less than he, further insight into the hidden things of Judaism.

R. T. H.

THE MINIMUM WAGE AND OTHER MATTERS.

The Way to Industrial Peace. By B. Seebom Rowntree. London: T. Fisher Unwin. 2s. 6d. net.

IN his "Way to Industrial Peace" Mr. Rowntree advocates higher wages; shorter hours of work, coupled with decentralisation of our industrial population; decasualisation of casual labour; compulsory training schools for unemployed boys between fourteen and nineteen; a national minimum wage founded on a sex basis; and a national ideal, "for a nation without ideals is doomed." He discusses the causes of industrial discontent, asks can industry support a higher wage, and replying in the affirmative he reminds us that "economists have long perceived that low wages do not pay the industrialist"; also, . . . "It is a general experience that the inventiveness of manufacturers increases pari passu with the price they have had to pay for labour." Besides, "taking any one industry as a whole, trade unions cannot force employers to pay workers more than they are worth. They can only urge their demand up to the point at which the investment of capital in the industry ceases to be attractive." Among other advantages of a shorter working day is the obvious one that the worker can live further from his work; with facilities of transit he might even have a cottage in the country and a plot of ground; a lower rent and healthier surroundings for his family.

In Belgium, the author points out, over a third of the industrial workers live in the country. "The Antwerp docker is indeed a man with two trades, a gardener and a docker," so he need rarely be really idle. The problem of casual labour Mr. Rowntree would solve by "co-ordinating the demand for workers, . . . shifting men from one department to another as they are needed," or from one employer to another. Already in the London and Liverpool docks a system is being evolved for decasualising dock labour. "National and Municipal enterprise undertaken at times of slack trade and suspended in trade activity" would also help the casual labourer. Recognising how often unemployables are created between fourteen and twenty years of age, the author suggests that adolescents under nineteen out of work should be compelled to attend training schools for six hours five days a week. The writer of this review would like three of these daily six hours spent on training out of doors, or at least elsewhere than in a class room; this to apply to girls as well as to boys.

The absolute minimum wage proposed for men where rents are as much as 5s. a week is £1 3s. 9d.—Mr. Rowntree considers the normal man should have a wife and at least three children, and the £1 3s. 9d. will enable him to keep them in "physical efficiency and pay an economic rent for a sanitary dwelling"—but for a mere woman no such liberal minimum wage; if she is normal she will have no one to keep but herself. Of course, among women wage-earners of the labouring and artisan class a large proportion have relatives dependent on them, but these the author is pleased to regard as abnormal cases, and "obviously the normal condition is the only one which legislation should consider," therefore the minimum wage for a woman should be such as would enable her to live independently in a state of physical efficiency." It would be interesting to know exactly what proportion of working women have only themselves to support.

Of co-operation and profit-sharing the author says little; of the churches he asks, "Are they prepared to recognise frankly and gladly the claim of the labouring classes to a larger share in the good things of life?" He considers three things should be done for the agricultural labourer, "He must have a living wage, . . . a good house, . . . and a prospect of rising to a position of independence"; the landlord as well as the farmer should share the burden of these improved conditions. Unemployment is costing this land in direct loss half-a-million pounds a week, and from this volume we also learn that at least half-a-million workers are unemployed on any given day. Mr. Rowntree will have us remember that a nation without ideals is doomed, but who can insinuate that England is without an ideal? Has she not for over a hundred years followed the ideal of "buying in the cheapest market and selling in the dearest"? It may not be quite a Christian ideal, but it is thoroughly British, and our present social problems are the outward and visible signs of the fidelity with which we have followed this ideal. G. A.

CLEAR GRIT. A Collection of Lectures, Addresses and Poems. By Robert Collyer. Edited by John Haynes Holmes. American Unitarian Association. $1.50.

LOVERS of Robert Collyer—and all who have heard him preach or read any of his books may be numbered among his lovers—will welcome and treasure this volume. It includes several of his "Lyceum" lectures, which, as Mr. Holmes tells us in his introduction, were delivered to enormous audiences in all parts of the United States. "Clear Grit," which is the title of the first of them, is a very fitting description of the character of Robert Collyer himself, the man who made his way from the smithy to a foremost place among American preachers, and it was the "grit" in men that he was ever on the search for both in life and literature, and which he enables us to see and appreciate, whether he is speaking of Luther or Washington, "Some Old Unitarian Worthies" or Robert Burns, Charles Lamb or Henry Thoreau, or any other subject of these charming talks. The lectures and addresses are full of his racy humour and large-hearted wisdom, and the few poems given at the end of the book are entirely characteristic of him.

LUTHER AND THE REFORMATION. By Leonard D. Agate, M.A. T. C. & E. C. Jack. 6d. net.

THIS is an excellent little volume. It is one of the "People's Books," and the common people will no doubt read it gladly; but it is at the same time a most scholarly production, and they who best know the ground it covers will be readiest to admire the skill with which Mr. Agate has accomplished his task. He shows a just appreciation of the various factors in the wonderfully complex movement which he describes, and of the personality of the man who dominated it so largely. It would be difficult to find elsewhere within so short a compass the amount of information that is here given on the subject, and given in so interesting and graceful a manner. We have pleasure in commending the volume, whether for private study or for use as a class book—a use for which it is admirably fitted.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. G. BELL & SONS, LTD.:—The Mystics of Islam: Reynold A. Nicholson. 2s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. A. & C. BLACK:—Can we Still be Christians?: Rudolf Eucken. 3s. 6d. net.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS:—The Divine Right of Kings: J. N. Figgis. 6s. net.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK:—Jesus in the Nineteenth Century: Heinrich Weinle and Alban G. Widgery. 10s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. DUCKWORTH & Co.:—Christianity and Ethics: A. B. D. Alexander. 2s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON:—The Ordinary Man and the Extraordinary Thing: Harold Begbie. 1s. net.

MESSRS. W. RIDER & SON, LTD.:—The Man of To-morrow: Floyd B. Wilson. 3s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. WATTS & Co.:—The Historical Christ: F. C. Conybeare. 3s. 6d. net. The Origin of the World: R. Macmillan. 2s. net. Christianity and Civilisation: C. T. Gorham. 9d. net. In Quest of Truth. 2d. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Cornhill, The Quest.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

"WESTWARD HO!"

III.

WE were sitting in a boat drawn up on the little quay at Portscatho, near Falmouth, watching the tide come slowly in; when we noticed that some ragged lines of blackish-brown seaweed on the flat rocks below us seemed to move, although the water had not yet reached them. There was little wind, yet the movement kept on. Our field glasses showed us the cause. Some ten or twelve birds, the colour of a dark tortoise-shell cat, were walking along the lines of weed, and turning it over with their bills, much as a farmer turns the long lines of half-dried hay with his fork; only he finds no dinner underneath, and they were finding a meal of marine insects, marine eggs, and small shelled and other creatures of the shore. Soon the belt of weed was crossed, and they began to work on a strip of coarse pebbles which did not so closely resemble their colouring, therefore we could see them better. They were about nine inches long, had plump bodies, with white underparts and orange-red legs and feet. As there was no weed to turn they now acted up to their own names, turnstones; for they walked rapidly to large pebbles, and putting their bills under one edge, gave a sharp jerk which sent the stone clean over; whereupon they snatched up the eatable thing which it had covered, and which they had either smelt, or in some way known to be there. Sometimes they used breast as well as bill to lever up an extra heavy stone. Nearer and nearer they came. We were so still as to remain unnoticed, although the actions of these bustling little birds were so amusing that we were put to it to smother our laughter. The boat, too, helped to hide us. Exactly in front of us was a patch of beach on which was a number of flat stones and some water-worn tiles that had been thrown away. As the birds turned these rapidly the noise they made in falling over was very much like the sound made by someone who is washing tea plates at a great rate and piling one against another to drain. "Klick, klack," went the pebbles as the turnstones stepped nimbly on with the air of not having a moment to lose. "This is piece work!" whispered one of us. By and by a dog alarmed them, when they flew along the tide line in the form of a horseshoe, showing long dark wings, like those of a swift, and white rumps which were very conspicuous. Sometimes two or more turnstones are said to help each other in turning a mud clod, dead bird, or any object too large for one to move alone. So far, I have not seen this done, but can readily believe it possible. These birds come to our coasts, chiefly the west and south coasts, as autumn and winter visitors, but a good many remain all winter on the Devonshire and Cornish shores. They belong to the order Limicolæ, or Waders.

We are now almost as far south as it is possible to get in England, for we came four days ago to the Lizard, which is, as you know, a rocky headland near and much like the one known as Land's End. The Lizard is more correctly a succession of headlands, some less than a quarter of a mile apart. They jut into the sea as tall cliffs, some if not all of which are a very hard kind of rock called serpentine, which shows its colours beautifully when polished. At the base of the cliffs, and running a long way into the sea, great masses of this rock, ranging in size from a cottage to a cathedral, are tumbled about in grand confusion. Some are flattish, many rise into the air like towers and spires. So far we have only seen them when the tide was up. The open sea was a brilliant blue, but about these rocks the water was lashed into snow-white foam, and great sheets of spray kept dashing over them and high into the air above them. The blue sea beyond was flecked with wave tips which children call sea horses, because the curling foam looks like the long tossing manes of beautiful white horses.

On some of the rocks cormorants sat. Every now and then one or other of them would stretch itself, and, opening its great dark wings, flap them violently to shake off the spray. Then one would fly over the water and disappear round a bend or dive into the sea after a fish. None which did this reappeared at or near the same spot. If it were the breeding season, it would be very interesting to watch the cormorants allowing the young to put their heads far down into the parents' bills to get the food which they supply. When we stood on the cliff and felt the force of the stormy wind it seemed that this was a wise arrangement; for had a parent bird to bring morsels of slippery fish between its mandible tips to feed the young there is a likelihood that they would be blown away while the baby cormorant was trying to secure them. The nests are placed on rocky ledges overlooking the sea.

The great force of the wind and the slight depth of soil on this part of the Cornish coast makes it impossible for trees to flourish. For miles around us there is not a tree to be seen except in a sheltered cove or behind a high garden wall, and then the tree is mostly a poor stunted affair, more curious than beautiful. There are not even hedges round the fields. Their place is taken by very thick walls made of loose stones kept together by soil being mixed with them. The base of the wall is sometimes six feet thick, and the flat top is wide enough to make a good footpath. In some places two could easily walk abreast. Short grass and low flowering plants clothe these walls and keep them green in winter and very bright in summer. Even now there is much colour on them. Perhaps the commonest wall plant in the West Country is the wall pennywort. Fortunately it abounds near the Lizard. It has fleshy, glossy leaves, quite round, with a dimple in the centre. The largest leaves are bigger than the dial of a large watch. Children call them penny pies. The young leaves are often russet-tinted, so look warm and cheerful. In summer these will be spikes of flowers, very stiff and upright. Danish scurvy grass, with its pale lilac flowers, is coming into abundant bloom on the walls, and even on the spray-washed cliffs. Celandine and dog violet, with daisies here and there, are brightening these green walls just as they are brightening the hedgebanks in other places. But the great brightener of walls—where it is allowed to stay—is the furze. It is in full bloom, and the golden masses make every bit of waste land, every patch of moor, a joy to behold. The furze evidently likes the Cornish soil. There is a little bird which likes the furze, and is rarely, if ever, seen away from it. This is the stonechat. The morning after our arrival I went to the first bit of gorse land to look for him. There he was with his mate, only a trifle less handsome in plumage than himself, but she has not a bright black velvet cap to set off the lovely browns, and chestnut reds, and white patches which are common to both, though slightly duller in the female. Once find your stonechats, and they are easy to keep sight of; for they love to be on the top spine of the furze bush, and if you come nearer than they approve of—they let you come fairly close—they just flit eight or ten yards further on; if you follow, they repeat the proceeding till the end of the furze patch is reached, when they fly round you to begin all over again; but leave their beloved furze? Never! they would not feel safe anywhere else.

EMILY NEWLING.

(To be continued.)

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

THE REV. J. WORSLEY AUSTIN.

It is with very deep regret, and a sense of personal loss which will be shared by a wide circle of our readers, that we have to announce the death of the Rev. J. Worsley Austin, Minister of the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham. He passed away after a serious illness on Thursday, March 19. John Worsley Austin was the second son of the Rev. Henry Austin, of Cirencester, where he was born in November, 1872. He was educated at the local Grammar School and Mason College, Birmingham, taking the B.A. degree of the London University in 1891. From 1892-95 he was a theological student at Manchester College, Oxford, and studied subsequently as a Hibbert Scholar at Leipsic, Berlin, and Harvard. While he was still a student at Harvard he accepted an invitation to the First Church at Dedham, Mass., U.S.A., where he remained for four years. Returning to England in 1902, he was appointed to the responsible position of minister of the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, in succession to Dr. L. P. Jacks, in 1903, and there he remained till his death, fulfilling all his duties with conspicuous faithfulness and self-devotion. "Apart from his work as a minister," says the Birmingham Daily Post, "which was very successful, Mr. Austin rendered useful service in other directions, outside the immediate sphere of his church. His work in connection with the Fazeley-street Mission was, naturally, closely related to the duties of his pastorate, and here again he achieved considerable success. He was one of the trustees of the Pargeter Trust, founded by Miss Pargeter many years ago for the benefit of spinster ladies of gentle birth; he was a director of the Ministers' Benevolent Society; he was an active supporter of the Midland Education League, and he served on the committee of the Midland Christian Union. He helped forward the movement inaugurated by Mr. A. N. Chance for the acquisition of Warley Woods by the city, he shared in the work of many philanthropic and charitable institutions, and at the University he was for a long period a vice-president of the Socratic Society. In all he did Mr. Austin was actuated by the desire to advance the interests of his congregation and the city, and his eleven years' pastorate will not readily be forgotten by the members of the Church of the Messiah." He was also a member of the Committee of the National Conference and of Manchester College, Oxford. In 1905 Mr. Austin married the only daughter of Mr. Priestley Smith, the eminent oculist of Birmingham. With her and her two little children, and the other relatives, there will be deep and widespread sympathy in their irreparable loss.

The funeral took place on Tuesday, March 24, the first part of the service being held at the Church of the Messiah. There was a very large congregation of sorrowing friends, many having travelled from distant parts of the country in order to be present, including the Revs. Joseph Wood, Dr. L. P. Jacks, Henry Gow, F. K. Freeston, W. C. Hall, Rudolf Davis, W. H. Drummond, and a numerous company of ministers from the Birmingham district. The service was conducted by the Rev. J. Wood, Dr. Jacks giving the address. Amid the universal sorrow the prevailing note was one of gratitude for the gift of a noble-hearted friend and a good soldier of Jesus Christ. Dr. Jacks referred to the faithfulness of Mr. Austin's ministry. The affection which he had inspired could not possibly have been greater had he lived to the full term of years. A minister, he said, must take his life in his hand; and all that their minister had done, even his early death, was in the terms of his service. Then in tones of stirring confidence he spoke of the immortal hope, and the cloud of witnesses in the unseen world. "There are no dead." The service closed with Gaskell's hymn, written for the burial of a minister, "Calmly, calmly, lay him down." Subsequently the interment took place at Quinton Cemetery. The Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, between whom and Mr. Austin there was a very strong and loyal friendship, officiated at the grave-side.

IN MEMORIAM.

J. W. A.

In the case of a man like John Worsley Austin the brief statement of outward events is more than usually inadequate. What drew his friends so closely to him was the charm of his personal qualities. He had quiet and deep affections, and a strong honesty of soul, which kept him from the snares of religious rhetoric and made him modest about his intellectual gifts. If his mind worked slowly, it was steady and sure in its conclusions. When he committed himself to a position, it was because he had weighed and tested its manifold implications and he felt certain of his ground. He never allowed himself to sink into conventional grooves of thought. He was growing all the time. Those who had the privilege of intimate talk with him recently knew that his religious experience was richer and deeper than formerly. He felt it himself. The loyalties of Christian discipleship came to him with a new strength of personal appeal. The critical individualism of the intellectual adventurer, which captures so many young ministers at the present time, had been left behind, and he stood closer than ever before to the common experiences of the human heart, with clearer insight into the range and depth of religious need, with more of the grace of the Gospel for the helping of other men in his soul. We know not what finer thing can be said of a spiritual leader of men than this, that he was more teachable at forty than at thirty, less concerned with theories and doctrines about religion because religion itself, the transfiguring light of Christian faith, had claimed him for its own. If he had lived he would have written about these things. He had promised to do it when he was ready. He was only waiting till he could do so with compelling conviction. Apart from the warm human ties it is this feeling of a life lost to us just when it was opening out into larger powers of faith and love which fills the hearts of his friends. We seemed to need the word so much which he by slow and sure steps had won the right to speak to us. With the affection for him, which will not soon grow dim, there will always be mingled a feeling of gratitude for the strong soul who lived for others and grew in wisdom and spiritual grace to the end.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

SIR OLIVER LODGE ON THE UNSEEN UNIVERSE.

THE PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY LECTURE IN LIVERPOOL.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

ONE proof of the vivid interest which is reviving in religion is the curious eagerness shown to hear a spiritual investigator who does not belong to the accredited ranks of theological exponents. With the latter, on the whole, the public shows itself more or less impatient, or at least indifferent. The prefix "Rev." seems to warn off many inquirers, unless some interest other than the professionally religious is added to it. But let a poet, an accepted essayist, a scientist, a dramatist or a novelist carry a recognised name into the regions of religion, and a good measure of attention is at once extended to him. In fact it might be rather cynically said that everywhere except in the pulpit (in the sense not of theological dogmatism but spiritual movement and affirmation) religion pays.

Sir Oliver Lodge, of course, always commands large numbers of hearers and readers on any subject; and that not least in Liverpool, which in the words of Mr. Sydney Jones regards him as "a Liverpool man lent for a season to Birmingham." But Sir Oliver Lodge announced to speak on "The Unseen Universe" proved an attraction so irresistible that the evening of March 19 saw the concert room at St. George's Hall fill rapidly to overflowing, and large numbers failed to obtain entrance at all. If any came with the hope of exciting revelations in occultism they were quickly disappointed, for the lecturer informed them at the outset that he did not intend to deal with the conditions of life on "the other side," and that for a very good reason. Having made this clear, his extraordinarily lucid and appealing exposition was followed with a markedly concentrated attention throughout.

Sir Oliver's lecture was a brilliant transposition of scientific statements into spiritual values. He regarded the unseen universe from the side of the physicist, for he was, he said, first and foremost a physicist. His theme was the many aspects of the universe of which our senses did not inform us directly, and of which we judged by reason, by inference, by hypothesis, by verification, by the coherence and self-consistency of the scheme of thought at which we arrived, by the satisfaction it afforded to our ideals, and to the conceptions which instinctively we were led to form concerning the probable nature of Reality. Taking the scientific hypothesis of the ether of space, which was intangible, invisible, intractable, and super-sensuous (because our senses are constructed only for change and contrast and modification, not for appreciation of that which is uniform in action, unchangeable and unalterable), the lecturer drew an analogy between this and the probable existence of a realm and scheme of things of which we have at present no tangible ocular and auditory demonstration. There were many who said there was no such existence at all, and who limited their conception of the universe to that of which they could have such demonstration. But the greatest things of all were not demonstrable in that way. If we were dependent on our senses only we could never know of the existence of God. We were not bodies only. We appealed not only to the material universe where we were aware of matter and hampered by matter. We had minds appealing to a higher, unseen universe, with which we were really more akin than to the other—a region of existence in which we should ultimately find ourselves more at home than in the region of the material; not, however, a future state, but existing here and now, if ever. The seen and unseen aspects of the universe were co-existent, and not dependent on such trivialities as birth and death. The continuity of existence was, as it were, demonstrated by the continuity observed to run through nature. We could abstract things from our attention, but never from existence. We were not only aware of matter; we were also aware of mind, though it was an unsolved mystery in itself and in its connection with matter. "We are also aware, some of us, of higher things. But whether we are aware of them or not they are there, in the present, all real, though invisible, though intangible, but in some sort of way accessible to our mental and spiritual apprehension, even now." The lecturer quoted, with immense effect, to emphasise his point that the unseen universe was not incomprehensible, though intangible, Francis Thompson's poem "In no Strange Land," beginning—

O world invisible, we view thee;
O world intangible, we touch thee;
O world unknowable, we know thee;
Inapprehensible, we clutch thee!

Mr. R. D. Holt, M.P., announced to take the chair, was unavoidably absent on Parliamentary duty, and his place was ably taken by Mr. C. S. Jones. The admirable arrangements were made by Mr. B. P. Burroughs, lay secretary of the Liverpool District Missionary Association.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT ASSOCIATION OF UNITARIAN AND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE strenuous efforts that have recently been made to strengthen our work in Manchester are bearing fruit. Larger numbers gathered at Cross-street Chapel, and at the Memorial Hall last Saturday, March 21. Dr. Stanley Mellor was the preacher. Taking for his text a passage from John Woolman's Journal, he preached a powerful sermon on "Liberal Religion" that was inspired, and inspired the hearers, by one of the conspicuous elements in the noble Quaker's life—the element of inwardness and sincerity. It was not, of course, a picture of the whole of Woolman, and did not profess to be. Rather, one would say, a Unitarianised Woolman for a twentieth century audience, with much stress upon religious individualism (some would say anarchy) and that much-discussed but little realised subject of modern books, mysticism. Perhaps we were left longing for a little more of the solid substance and body of Woolman's warm faith: for we are not much furthered by even the most praiseworthy and stolid negation of "creeds" and "ecclesiasticism," the denunciation of which was the main engine on which the preacher relied to stir his congregation. Stirred, however, they were, for he had a message. When Dr. Mellor spoke again in the evening at the Memorial Hall we were shown somewhat more in the concrete what his conception of religion was. ("Religion," by the way, is an ever-recurring subject of Unitarian preaching: what religion is, is not, its origin, its defence, &c. It is a rather general idea, and we should like more frequently to come to details.) It was plain that for the speaker the most salient manifestation of "religion" in the present-day world is to be found in the Labour Unrest and the groping towards a more humane state of society. There is a wide revolt against the practical materialism (just as in philosophy and in science there is a revolt against the theoretical materialism) of the last century. This causes large masses of people to be indifferent to organised religion because they suspect the latter to be allied with privilege and the maintenance of the offensive status quo. Men have not leisure to worship God and practise the religious life: and religion requires leisure. It was not clear how Dr. Mellor's latter statement agreed with the former position that the Unrest is religious. And we should be glad to believe that the large defections from religious worship of the Sunday tennis-playing and boating classes, whom Mr. Priestley Evans pertinently mentioned, were due to this "religious" Unrest, or that the defection of the working classes signifies a burning interest in social reform. Elections do not show it. Mr. Evans devoted his remarks to a vindication of the early Unitarians from the charge of illiberality and narrow credalism. He quoted Dr. Priestley to the effect that we must be faithful to free inquiry. As to people who want to change the denominational name, the speaker mentioned the case of a man who went to South Africa and changed his name, with the result that his character deteriorated! Verb. sap. Mr. Cyril Flower was welcomed to the fellowship of the district by the Chairman, and spoke of the recently revived interest in religion. But he wished, now that this new interest had been aroused, that we should make use of it. There was need of enterprise in religion. Let us cease from so much criticism. Let us use the instruments we have got. Here are churches in being, and men are waking up to religion. But they want a different expression for it from anything that has been afforded them by the churches in the past. The retiring President, Mr. George H. Leigh, was able to congratulate the Association on the healthy state of the churches of the district. The new President is the Rev. J. Morley Mills, and the secretaries are the Rev. E. W. Sealy and Mr. Gordon Rylands.

PRINCIPAL SELBIE AT ISLINGTON.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

DURING the interregnum at Union Chapel supplies are drawn from all quarters, and Principal Selbie, of Mansfield College, Oxford, has taken his turn. His sermon last Sunday evening was noteworthy, not for its erudition, which might have been expected from one holding such a position, but for its simplicity and the frank facing of modern difficulties. Taking for his text the words "Follow me," in Luke ix., he gave his hearers an extempore discourse in language which all could understand, in a style almost conversational, but it commanded the attention of the congregation throughout. After saying that it was an appeal of personality to personalities he continued that many raised the objection to-day, "How can we follow one who lived so long ago, under circumstances widely different from ours, about whom we know so little, and of whose historicity there are grave doubts?" He acknowledged the difficulty was a real one, that the old position of an infallible record had to be abandoned, but he contended that criticism had done its worst in this respect and the damage was not so great after all. He submitted that after eliminating the problematical in the Gospels there was quite enough left for the intelligent or even simple reader to build upon so that he could learn the mind of Christ. But there was still a greater difficulty. Many of the younger generation familiar with modern writers, Nietzsche and others, to-day say, "But I don't want to follow anyone, I want to live my own life and to express the powers I feel within me." But, he asked, what self was it they wished to express? Did they mean anything more than that they desired to have a good time, free from restraint? Jesus called them to live the higher life, and to those who had tried the other and become weary he said, "Come unto me!" To follow Jesus was no easy matter, but the reward was great.

The rest of the discourse was a commentary on the three difficult replies of Jesus which he made to those who expressed an ardent desire to follow him. Dealing with the saying, "Let the dead bury their dead," he frankly acknowledged there were many creeds that were dead, many church institutions that were obsolete; for his part he wished they were out of the way.

It will be remembered that Principal Selbie recently gave to the world a new study of Schleiermacher, and perhaps we may venture to say that his theology is of a similar hue, the person of Jesus Christ being the central thought; in this he appears to differ from Principal Forsyth, who has emphasised the doctrine of the Cross in so many brilliant phrases that both hearers and readers are confused as to his meaning. Principal Selbie, who is a younger man, we regard as more in sympathy with the tendency of Christian thought to-day, and this, combined with his broad outlook, makes him an acceptable teacher to many outside the bounds of ordinary Congregationalism. However, his name was not sufficient to draw a full congregation. It was lamentable to see the noble building so thinly occupied—it would have held five times the number present. The faithful congregation must have suffered a keen disappointment in the refusal of Dr. Jowett to leave New York to take charge, and it will require a man of rare personality or great preaching power to restore the former glories of Union Chapel.

THE Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A. (Newcastle-on-Tyne), will preach the anniversary sermon in connection with the Whit-Week Meetings of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association on Tuesday, June 2. The service will be held at Unity Church, Islington.

THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT.

WHY NOT A MINISTRY OF LABOUR?—MR. ROBERT HARCOURT'S BILL.—THE PROBLEM OF ABLE-BODIED UNEMPLOYMENT.

THE disinterested student of social questions might well ask what has become of the Report of the Poor Law Commission of 1909. Had the Government, after the publication of that momentous document, chosen to introduce a Bill embodying the very numerous points on which both the Majority and Minority sections of the Commission were agreed, it might have been passed by consent, and we should now have been in a fair way to the solution of some problems that are still with us and likely to remain with us for a long time to come. It is interesting to note, however, that a private Bill has been introduced by Mr. Robert Harcourt, supported by Mr. Chiozza Money, which gives effect to some suggestions of the Minority Report with regard to unemployment. As the preliminary memorandum to the Bill states quite briefly what its proposals are, we quote from it. It is well to remember that it has been previously introduced, in 1911, 1912 and 1913.

* * *

It is an attempt to embody in a measure of reasonable compass proposals for the prevention and treatment of destitution arising from able-bodied unemployment, chronic under-employment.

It establishes a national authority for able-bodied unemployment under a Minister of Labour, to whom are transferred the existing powers of boards of guardians in England and parish councils in Scotland, and of certain State Departments in this regard.

The Minister of Labour is to take steps to use the demands of public departments for works and services in order to regularise the total as between the different seasons of the year and the good and bad years of a trade cycle. . . . As a Development Commissioner ex-officio, he is to frame schemes for economic works in times of trade depression by engaging suitable workmen in the ordinary way. Provision is made for transferring to the Minister for Labour the whole responsibility for the prevention of vagrancy and the treatment of vagrants. Day and residential colonies and training establishments and reformatory detention colonies are to be maintained by him, and he is to supervise any scheme of insurance to be hereafter enacted.

The local authorities are wholly relieved from responsibility for providing for the unemployed able-bodied any form of public assistance, whether by relief works or otherwise.

* * *

THE suggestion to appoint a Minister of Labour is an attempt to introduce among us what is already in existence in some Continental countries. The United States also has a Department of Labour at Washington, which issues most admirable reports. These, when they become better known, and are thoroughly assimilated, are bound in the future to have great influence. The existence of a great mass of chronic under-employment may be said to be the great discovery of the 1909 Report. Considering that both sections agree on this point, it is remarkable that up to the present no thorough attempt has been made to grapple with this dangerous public evil. It is also well to remember that there is little or no difference of opinion among serious thinkers (1) as to the extent of vagrancy and the method of dealing with it, (2) as to the utter futility of relief works in time of slackness as a remedy for unemployment.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

British Women's League.—Miss Grace Mitchell has lately been addressing the League Branches at Birmingham on the subject of her visit to Australia and New Zealand. Mrs. Sharpe, wife of the Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe, late of Johannesburg, S.A., who is shortly going to take up the work in connection with the Unitarian Church in Vancouver, B.C., was present last week at the meeting of the Executive Committee, when Mrs. Alfred Wilson, chairman of the committee, extended a warm welcome to her, and asked her to convey the greetings of the Executive Committee to the women at Vancouver.

Canterbury.—The death of Mrs. Cross, of Canterbury, on the 21st inst., removes one of the few remaining members of the Old Blackfriars congregation. She came from an old Unitarian family at Battle. On the occasion of her first marriage to Mr. Edward Cowell, then secretary of the Blackfriars church, in 1863, she came to reside in Canterbury, and until the closing of the old church she was ever a loyal supporter of its efforts. A Nonconformist of the old type, and a staunch liberal in politics, she identified herself with every movement for the spread of liberal religion and the welfare of the people. Seldom an appeal for help was made to her in vain, and her varied interests in life and religion were often seen in help given to struggling ministers and missionaries outside of the Unitarian churches. In 1891, Mrs. Cross married the late Mr. Alderman Cross, and shared with him an active interest in municipal and educational work. The two great bereavements of her life left her only mellowed in character. Always of a cheerful disposition, she gave of her best to all who came in contact with her. The last survivor of her family, she gathered around her friends who revere her memory and are glad to have known a love and a friendship such as she could give. Mrs. Cross was in her 86th year. The funeral took place at Canterbury Cemetery on the 25th inst.

Cardiff.—On Thursday, March 12, at West Grove Unitarian Church, a congregational social gathering was held in the schoolroom to "bid farewell" to Mrs. Hobart Clark, who is returning to America after a visit to this country. A presentation of a pendant was made by the women of the congregation, as a souvenir of friendship, and, in responding to the appreciative words of the Rev. F. Blount Mott, the minister, Mrs. Clark referred to her connection with Cardiff when her late husband was minister of West Grove Church, twenty-five years ago.

Hinckley.—Mr. H. H. C. Jones, of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, Manchester has accepted a unanimous invitation to become minister of the Great Meeting, and will take up his duties on the expiration of the Summer term.

Holbeck.—The annual prize-giving in connection with the Unitarian church was recently held, when the opportunity was taken of presenting a set of five volumes to Mr. Charles Lambert, who has resigned the secretaryship of the school. Dr. S. Moore presided, and the prizes were presented by Mr. F. E. Kitchen, who was also the donor of the gift to the secretary.

Leeds.—Under the auspices of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union a conference was held at Holbeck on Saturday, March 21. The Rev. C. Hargrove presided, and friends were present from the congregations at Mill Hill, Hunslet, Pudsey, Idle, and Huddersfield. The Rev. R. N. Cross, M.A., gave an address on "Religion in the Life of To-day." The old authority of the church which had done much to give discipline to life, he said, notably in Geneva and Scotland, had passed away, and one of the results was the decay of public worship. The failure was not more a reflection upon the present than the past. Had the old authority been established upon more wisely selected foundations it might have endured. It had been planted upon the church; it should have been planted in the spirit. The sole authority left for the present age was that of the spiritual consciousness of mankind—to which Jesus himself had appealed—with its principles of justice and love. We could do nothing better than face the problems of our day with this inner authority and thus secure a new discipline of life. On the practical side of the subject, Mr. Cross claimed that we should not have done all when, as individuals, we had proclaimed and witnessed to our principles. The church, as a corporation, must raise its voice and set forth its vision. Because it had failed to do that in the past, men passed it by on the other side. Despite great differences of opinion among its members they could unite upon great principles. In the field of economics they could agree in a direct message. The first charge in all production should be a reasonable wage for the worker. His was the prior claim. Personality must come before capital. The church should make it known that it does not regard "sweating" as permissible in a Christian state. It should proclaim its faith in political equality. It should maintain the righteousness of Sunday closing of public houses, and boldly oppose the fearful waste on armaments. The way out of the vicious circle of naval extravagance was to make merchandise immune from capture. Mr. Cross concluded by suggesting that the churches of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union should hold meetings and pass resolutions on these and other matters. Among those who took part in the discussion were the Revs. Dr. Thackeray, J. S. Mather, W. R. Shanks, F. Coleman, and Messrs. Grosvenor Talbot and J. G. Jackson.

Leicester.—The annual meeting of the congregation of the Great Meeting chapel took place recently in the upper schoolroom, the chairman of the Vestry, Mr. H. T. Cooper, presiding. Mr. Cooper alluded to the death of Mr. William Raven, and paid an eloquent tribute to his character. Mr. Raven had served on the Vestry for thirty years, and was a regular attendant at the services almost to the last. It was announced that he had left to the Great Meeting a legacy of £500. Thanks for the services of the Minister and Mrs. Frupp were proposed and seconded in cordial terms, and carried by acclamation. In passing a vote of thanks to the organist and choir, it was pointed out that Mr. Cattell has attained his jubilee in the Great Meeting choir. A presentation of a silver salver was made by Mr. Franklin Cooper to Mr. S. J. Lilley, on his retirement from the wardenship, a post he has held for seventeen years, and the duties of which he has discharged with sustained zeal.

London: Essex Church.—At their meeting on Sunday last, the Committee of Essex Church received with very great regret the resignation of the Rev. H. E. B. Speight, M.A., the junior minister of the church, who was appointed in the autumn of 1912 for a period of three years. The resignation is necessitated by a serious breakdown in health, which obliges Mr. Speight to go immediately to a sanatorium in North Wales, and afterwards to leave England for a more suitable climate. Deep sympathy will be felt with Mr. and Mrs. Speight, not only by the whole congregation, but by many friends outside it, on the sudden and unexpected end of his ministry in London, on which so many hopes for the future had been based, and which had already more than justified these hopes; and the loss to Essex Church and all its institutions will be very great.

London: Stratford.—The annual meeting of the congregation of the Unitarian church was held on Wednesday, March 18, when the chair was taken by the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson. The Committee's report stated that since the retirement of the Rev. John Ellis some sixteen months ago the church had been under the ministerial supervision of Mr. Fred Cottier, of the Pioneer Preachers. During that period the church and institutions had maintained their position and in some respects had shown improvement. Hearty thanks were due to Mr. Cottier and the Pioneer Preachers for their valuable help. The visit of the Unitarian Van in July had attracted a large number of interested hearers. Sister Seymour, who was working under the London District Unitarian Society, had formed a sisterhood, and had arranged for other meetings at Stratford, and a branch of the British League of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Women held fortnightly and other meetings. It was recorded that the 4th West Ham troop of Boy Scouts had won in open competition the Ambulance Cup, presented by the West Ham Boy Scouts Association, and that the Sunday school numbers 180 scholars and 42 officers and teachers. The finances of the church showed a heavier balance due to the treasurer, which had been partly met by a generous donation forwarded through the chairman. The speakers included, in addition to the chairman, Mr. F. Cottier, Mr. A. Savage Cooper, and the Revs. W. H. Rose and John Ellis.

Southport: Welcome to the Rev. W. Jellie.—A warm welcome was given to the Rev. W. Jellie and Mrs. Jellie at a meeting held in the schoolroom of the Unitarian Church, Portland-street, on Wednesday, March 18. Mr. A. S. Thew, J.P., presided in the unavoidable absence of Mr. G. R. Kenyon, chairman of the congregation, and was supported by the Rev. W. Jellie, the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie (secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association), the Rev. J. Crowther Hirst (Gatacre), the Rev. H. W. Hawkes (Bootle), and Dr. Harris. Mr. Thew cordially welcomed the new minister, his words being endorsed by Mrs. Maccall, who spoke in place of her mother, Mrs. Tolmé, the oldest member of the congregation, and Mr. George Smith. The Rev. Copeland Bowie alluded in appreciative terms to Mr. and Mrs. Jellie, both of whom he had known for a great many years. He emphasised the fact, in the course of his remarks, that they did not have a Unitarian church in Southport because they entertained bitterness and anger towards the other churches, or because they were unfriendly towards them in the least. He was quite sure they respected every man and woman who was honest and sincere in his religious belief, whatever that belief might be. But in these days of changing thought and feeling, there were in every country large and growing numbers of men and women who needed the kind of religion which Unitarians had to offer. The Rev. H. W. Hawkes said he believed it was going to be possible—with all respect to the Bishop of Zanzibar—to have communion in the highest sense, not a theological sense, with all men who loved God and their fellow men, and Unitarian ministers stood in a peculiarly favourable position, he thought, for cementing and increasing that sense of unity on the basis of humanitarianism and reform of every possible kind. Mr. Jellie suitably responded on behalf of his wife and himself, and a vote of thanks to the visiting ministers, proposed by Dr. Harris and seconded by Mr. W. J. Worden, was cordially passed. A musical entertainment followed.

West Kirby.—The permanent address of the Rev. Charles Roper, who has recently settled at West Kirby, is 10, Marine Park, West Kirby.

Women's Social Club.—The fifth annual Girls' Drill Competition, organised by the Women's Social Club, took place at Caxton Hall, on Saturday evening, March 21, in the presence of a large audience, Lady Durning-Lawrence presiding. In the senior division five teams competed—from Bell-street Mission, Essex Church, Mansford-street Mission, Portland Institute, and Unity Club, Kilburn. In the junior division (girls under 14) there were six teams, the additional one coming from Durning Hall, Limehouse. In both divisions the competition was the closest yet held, all the teams reaching a high standard. The adjudicator, Miss Katherine Woodward, member of the Board of Examiners of the British College of Physical Education, awarded both Senior and Junior Shields to the Bell-street Mission teams. The second place was won by Essex Church (Seniors) and Unity Club, Kilburn (Juniors), each of which teams is to receive a medal kindly presented by Lady Durning-Lawrence. The display items of the different classes—skipping, country and fancy dances, fan drill, tambourine drill, wand and barbell exercises—made up a varied and interesting programme.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE SPIRIT OF GOODWILL IN IRISH AFFAIRS.

At this critical juncture in the history of Ireland it may not be out of place to quote a passage pleading for more sympathy and goodwill between Roman Catholics and Protestants, which occurs in "An Irish Gentleman: George Henry Moore," recently published. Mr. Moore belonged to a very old Roman Catholic family, who, as the owner of considerable property, spent most of his time in early years in steeplechasing; but in his 35th year, when the famine broke out, he sold all his horses and devoted himself to his people in Mayo. As the results of his efforts not one human being on his estate died of hunger; not only this, but the intimate knowledge of the people thus acquired, and the way England behaved in regard to the famine, converted him to Nationalism, and even, eventually, to Fenianism. He was the first man to talk of a Parliamentary party and get a nucleus together, and his attitude on questions of religion and the land breathe a fine spirit of generosity and goodwill.

* * *

MOORE hoped that the disestablishment of the Irish Church would remove a standing cause of quarrel and dislike between Catholics and Protestants, and that a Land Bill, by satisfying the tenants without robbing the landlords, would establish harmony between the different classes in Ireland. Mr. Gladstone had proposed that the glebes should be handed over to the clergy on payment, but Moore supported Disraeli's motion that this sum should be remitted in full, because he saw a distinct difference between these glebes and other endowments. "They are the old homes of the Protestant clergy of Ireland," he said, "and we ought to acknowledge the prescriptive right of occupation, though it be an occupation of only three hundred years, and even though these three hundred years may have been years of spoliation and oppression. The Catholics of Ireland have never been wanting in consideration and goodwill to the Protestant clergy whenever these have shown consideration and goodwill to the Catholics; now I hope my fellow-countrymen will show them consideration and goodwill in the period of their trial. If I have no consideration for the Protestant faith, I have every sympathy with the Protestants, and I intend to show it. Whatever Bills are passed the Protestant clergy will be richer than the Catholic priest, but if this concession would tend to produce an equality of charity towards each other, then it would be a great boon for Ireland. . . . It is said, and said truly, that the Irish Protestant clergy have no claim for consideration on their Catholic fellow-countrymen; they have certainly never shown consideration or justice to us. But there are higher considerations of justice than those that are based on the principle of an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth; and I think in such a case as this Irish Catholics would have shown a higher morality—a nobler equity, in returning good for evil, and in proving to the world that, like the negro girl whose story is told by Sterne, 'we have suffered and learnt mercy.'"

RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS IN CANADA.

The Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, in a report dealing with his recent visit to Canada, gives some interesting figures relating to religious denominations in Canada taken from the Census of June, 1911. The sects enumerated in that Census numbered seventy-nine, many of them of small importance. "There were," says Mr. Bowie, "1,115,324 Presbyterians, 1,079,892 Methodists, 1,043,017 Anglicans, 382,666 Baptists, 229,864 Lutherans, 34,054 Congregationalists. The Roman Catholics numbered 2,833,041. There were 88,507 belonging to the Greek Church, and 74,564 Jews. There were only 3,224 Unitarians; but while the increase, compared with the census of 1901, was for the Roman Catholics 27 per cent., the Presbyterians 32 per cent., the Methodists 17 per cent., the Anglicans 53 per cent., the Baptists and the Congregationalists 20 per cent., in the case of the Unitarians the increase was 66 per cent. It is satisfactory to learn that there was a decrease of 21 per cent. in the 'Pagans,' whoever they were; 'Daniel's Band' had 64 adherents, the 'Exclusive Brethren' 14, the 'Holy Rollers' 20, the 'Millennial Dawnites' 407, while the 'Saints of God' only mustered 39."

* * *

As an instance of the way cities grow in these new lands Mr. Bowie describes the rapid development of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. "This is the most wonderful city I have so far visited in Canada," he says. "It seems to have been created by miracle. Ten years ago there were just over a hundred people living for the most part in shacks; to-day there are some 30,000 residents, many of them living in well-built, comfortably furnished houses. There are wide streets, lighted by electricity, tramways, well-built substantial shops, stores, banks, schools, churches. The river Saskatchewan runs through the centre of the city, and both banks have already numerous houses, where a few years ago the prairie wolf wandered undisturbed by the foot of man. There are university buildings which would do credit to Leeds or Sheffield; the agricultural department of the University, with eighty acres of farming land; its cattle, horses, sheep, poultry, pigs, and mechanical appliances for farming surprised and delighted me on the occasion of my visit." There is not always any active demand in these new cities for liberal ideas in religion, but it is obvious that they are places where as much as possible should be made of whatever tendencies in that direction already exist, so that a foundation may be laid whereon future workers may securely build when the zest for purely material progress has slackened a little, and people have time to think.

THE CASE OF THE BLIND.

The question of the blind, to which we referred last week, is receiving a good deal of attention just now, and the opening of the new buildings of the National Institute for the Blind in Great Portland-street by the King, has given a great impetus to the work to which Mr. C. Arthur Pearson is devoting himself. Mr. Pearson himself, at the height of his activities as a leader of journalism and proprietor of newspapers, began to lose his eyesight, and now, in his days of darkness, he is making strenuous efforts to lift the burdens of others who are similarly afflicted. It is earnestly to be hoped that his appeal to rich benefactors to include the National Institute among their charities, and particularly to help the movement for providing more and better books in Braille for the use of blind people, will meet with a warm response. It is not at all necessary that people who have lost their sight should sit with folded hands, and contemplate a life of helplessness. As a writer in the Daily News and Leader has pointed out, hundreds of blind people can justify the expenditure on their education, and he describes the experiences of one who secured in 1882 a "Gardener Scholarship," valued at £40, entered the Royal Normal College, and subsequently maintained himself, wife and family as a dealer in pianos and other musical instruments, paying wages to ten employees.

DR. ELIOT AT EIGHTY.

On the 20th of this month, Dr. Eliot, the former President of Harvard, reaches his eightieth year, and, in the words of a writer in the Christian Register, "surely never before have eighty years beat so impotently against a human frame. . . . There he stands, the stalwart frame unbowed by weakness; tall, erect, free; the splendid heritage of strength unimpaired; the noble, severe brow; the clear eye; the firm-set mouth; every feature significant. In repose, quiet dignity; in action, clean-limbed and vigorous, with swinging strides; the voice so finely modulated that it touches the ear with just enough force to reach the mind; every word as finely chiselled and finely shaded as a cameo; and, behind all, mind and character—a superb mind that goes straight to the mark, and makes luminous the passage from thought to thought; a character that adds its golden weight to every word."

THE PRESERVATION OF CLIFF FOOTPATHS.

Those who have had any experience of the way in which some of the loveliest bits of cliff scenery around the Lizard, Falmouth, and other places on the Cornish coast are being encroached upon by people desirous of erecting bungalows in romantic spots, will be grateful to the members of the Penzance Chamber of Commerce, the National Society for the Preservation of Footpaths and Commons, and the Society for the Preservation of Natural Reserves, for the way they have taken this matter up. The demand for bungalows is steadily increasing, and cannot be arrested; but something may be done, at least, to secure the cliff footpaths, and many of the owners of land abutting on the cliffs are in sympathy with the scheme for dedicating a path-way round the coast to the public use. If the existing coastguard path could formally be secured as a highway a great boon would be conferred upon the public, and this, it is hoped, will eventually be done.

SOCIAL SERVICE IN ALL LANDS.

The Sixth International Congress of Social Work and Service will be held in London in 1915, and the following foreign Governments have already notified their intention of sending representatives to, or of supporting the Congress:—Belgium, Denmark, France, Greece, India, Italy, The Netherlands, Norway, South Australia, Tasmania, Turkey, Victoria, and Western Australia. Lord Avebury, Sir Edward Grey, Sir Alfred Mond, Mr. Herbert Samuel, M.P., and Mr. John Burns, M.P., are among the Vice-Presidents.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

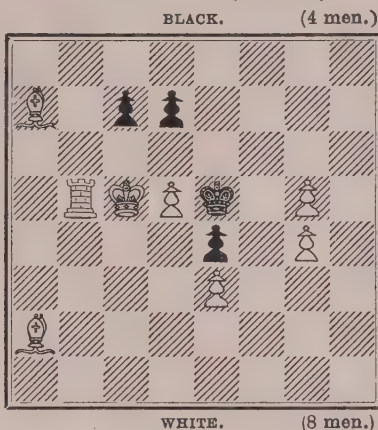

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED
BY PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

MARCH 28, 1914.

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 50.

By A. G. STUBBS (Hertford).

White to play and mate in three moves.

SOLUTION TO No. 48.

1. R. B2 (key-move).

Correct solutions have been received from W. T. M. (Sunderland), Geo. Ingledew (also No. 47), Dr. C. G. Higginson (also No. 47), W. E. Arkell (also No. 47), E. Wright, Rev. B. C. Constable, J. T. Lomax, R. B. D. (Edinburgh), D. Amos, A. J. Hamblin, Rev. I. Wrigley, J. Johnson (and No. 47), and E. C. (Highbury).

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. E. ARKELL.—Thank you for the useful references, which I will take up. I earnestly trust that the composer of "Machiavellian" can be revealed, since, if not, it must be omitted from my collection.

DR. HIGGINSON and others.—Your critique of No. 48 is justified.

CHAS. WILLING (U.S.A.).—Nos. 46 and 47 correct.

To several Correspondents.—A batch of solutions was mislaid last week, hence the omissions.

In reference to No. 48, M. Tschigorin actually specified the supposed cook to be 1. Kt. KB2, overlooking the defence 1... B. B4. The same error has been made by several of our solvers. All agree that it is a most elusive position. The oversight, as made by a typical chess-master, is easily explained. 1... B. B4 is a poor move in one sense, for it is only a useless sacrifice of force already sadly depleted. It happens, however, to defeat immediate mate. The typical player does not grasp these situations clearly, since, as a game-position, it can have no interest whatever; almost any move will win in a few moves. Even in the study of an end-game, no matter how beautiful a situation it may be, its merits become less apparent as its artificiality becomes more apparent—particularly on the score of equality of material. These misapprehensions will continue as long as the thought remains in some minds that no position at chess can be worth studying unless it approximates fairly closely to an actual game. I fully realise, however, that it is useless pointing this out to the hardened game-player. De gustibus non disputandum.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCs.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh-street, Tavistock-square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

SUNNY South Coast Health Resort.—Ideal Winter Boarding House, Central, Garden, near Sea. Hot and cold running water, lavatory basins, electric light, and penny in slot gas fire in each bedroom. Three good reception rooms. Food Reform and ordinary diet.—Tariff from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by
Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

SERVIETTES, Superior quality, all-linen Damask, slightly soiled. 20 inches square, 7s. 6d. per dozen; 22 inches, 7s. 9d.; 24 inches, 8s. 6d. Postage 4d. extra. Write for Free Catalogue.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

IRISH LINEN Fabric—"FLAX-ZELLA"—with new silky finish, makes ideal skirts and blouses. Washable, durable, delightful new shades; latest designs. Over 200 Patterns Free. Write to-day.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to offer and pay highest genuine prices. Note quotations: Up to 2s. 9d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 6s. 6d. on silver, 15s. on gold, 35s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel, post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Unquestionably the oldest and most reliable firm. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday March 28, 1914.

* Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3745.
NEW SERIES, No. 849.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.]

The Hibbert Journal.

A Quarterly Review of Religion,
Theology and Philosophy.
APRIL NUMBER READY ON THE FIRST.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

Kikiyu. Very Rev. H. HENSLEY HENSON, Dean of Durham.

Sacraments and Unity. Rev. R. H. COATS' M.A., B.D.

Inspiration. W. MACNEILE DIXON.

Where Faith and Morality Meet. JOHN JAY CHAPMAN.

The Middle Ages, the Renaissance, and the Modern Mind. Professor NORMAN K. SMITH.

Criticism of Public Schools: THE HEAD-MASTER OF ETON.

The Anthropological Point of View. ARCHIBALD WEIR.

The Twentieth-Century Christ. Professor BENJAMIN B. WARFIELD.

The Suffering of God. Rev. B. H. STREETER.
Mechanism, Intelligence, and Life. H. W. B. JOSEPH, M.A.

One Avenue to God: A Transcript of Experience. Rev. A. D. MARTIN.

The Great Alternative. Rev. CHARLES DOLE.

Order and Unrest. EDITH HUNTER.

Discussions, Surveys, Reviews, &c.

Super Royal 8vo. 2s. 6d. net; post free, 2s. 9d.

Subscription, which may commence with any Number, 10s. per annum, post free.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

14, Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

HOLY WEEK, 1914.

Services will be conducted by

REV. EDWARD LEWIS, M.A., B.D., at
THE KING'S WEIGH HOUSE CHURCH,
DUKE STREET, W., on

PALM SUNDAY, April 5, 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.

MONDAY " 6, 8 p.m.

TUESDAY " 7, 8 p.m.

WEDNESDAY " 8, 8 p.m.

THURSDAY " 9, 8 p.m.

GOOD FRIDAY " 10, 11 a.m.

EASTER SUNDAY " 12, 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.

The Church is 3 mins. from Bond St. (Tube) Station.

THE KING'S WEIGH HOUSE PULPIT, April Issue

THE HIDDEN ARK.

By EDWARD LEWIS.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

PEARL
ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

P. J. FOLEY, Esq., President.

Annual Income £3,340,000

Claims Paid exceed £15,000,000

Additional Representatives Wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing
G. SHRUBSALL, } Directors.

The Inquirer.

Among recent Articles are the following:—

God's Exile. By J. TYSSUL DAVIS. Mar. 28.

The Church of the Loyal. By L. P. JACKS, D.D. Mar. 21.

A National Christian Congress. By E. W. LEWIS, M.A. Mar. 14.

Church Membership. By THE EDITOR. Mar. 14.

Friedrich Wilhelm Foerster. By MEYRICK BOOTH. Mar. 7 and 14.

Any of the above issues may be obtained from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C., post free, 1½d.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.
April

5. Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.

12. Rev. J. EDWIN ODGERS, D.D. (of Manchester College, Oxford).
No Evening Service.

19. Morning, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D. (Late of Trinity Church, Glasgow, and King's Weigh House Church, London).
Evening, Mr. R. PHILIPSON, B.A. (of Manchester College, Oxford).

26. Morning, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.
Evening, Mr. W. HARRIS CROOK, B.A. (of Manchester College, Oxford).

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

THE Young People's Meeting

will be held at

Essex Hall, Essex Street, W.C.,
Saturday, April 25, 1914.

Speakers:

Mr. A. Savage Cooper, President; Miss Edith Wilson, Miss Grace Mitchell, Rev. A. H. Biggs, and Mr. T. M. Chalmers.

Tea and Coffee at 7 p.m.

Chair to be taken at 7.30.

J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

District Minister.

BOOKS

EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY,
TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE

And for all other Exams.

Second-Hand at Half Prices.

New at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogues post free and state wants. Books bought, BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,

121/123, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL,

BISHOP'S STORTFORD.

Head Mistress: Miss ESTHER CASE, M.A. Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress: Miss ESTERBROOK HICKS, B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.—

PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to

C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

Next Term begins May 5.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M.

Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH,

For the Worship of the One God only,

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church),
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for April 5:

Morning: Probation in all Lives.

Evening: From the Earthly to the Heavenly Father.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.

Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts.

Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON

Tariff and Guide on application to Frederick Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, April 5.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), 3, Rev. Dr. MORITZ WESTON.
 Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD (Confirmation Service); 12, Communion; 3.15, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON (School Anniversary); 7, Musical Service.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. R. W. SORESENSEN; 7, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES; 7, Address by Dr. LYNCH, M.P., on "Science and Religion."
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 & 7, Rev. T. B. SPEDDING.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Mr. VICTOR FOX.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.; Maunders' "Penitence, Pardon and Peace" (Parts 1 and 2) will be sung at evening service.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. F. W. G. FOAT, Litt.D., M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Mr. E. CAPELTON.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. STANLEY MOSSOP; 6.30, Mr. FRED. COTTIER.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSH, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODDLE SMITH.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 {DEAN Row, 10.45, and
 {STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle-terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, 11.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. HARWOOD, B.A.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. CYRIL FLOWER.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. L. P. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREAE, M.A.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

MARRIAGE.

MOTTRAM-ALLAN.—On March 28, at Edinburgh, Alfred Hugh Mottram, A.R.I.B.A., younger son of Mr. and Mrs. James Mottram, of Bracondale, Norwich, to Helen Mary Allen, M.A., eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Allen, of Longniddry, N.B.

DEATHS.

HARRISON.—On March 28, at Llandudno, of pneumonia, the Rev. William Harrison, of Brookfield-avenue, Timperley, aged 78 years.

POYNTING.—On March 30, at 10, Ampton-road, Edgbaston, John Henry Poynting, Sc.D., F.R.S., J.P., in his 62nd year.

VALLANCE.—On March 15, at Parkholm, Mansfield, Agnes Sophia Vallance, the beloved wife of William Austin Vallance, aged 71 years.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

COMPANION-HELP required for old Lady. Maid kept; salary £25.—Apply first, Mrs. NANSON, Endcliffe, Eccles.

LADY seeks re-engagement as Companion or Companion-Help to elderly or invalid Lady near London. Good needlewoman, domesticated; good references.—C. M. S., 43, Beckenham-road, Penge.

A YOUNG GERMAN LADY, musical, highly educated, daughter of a General in the German Army, seeks a post "Au pair" in an English family.—Apply in first place to Rev. GARDNER PRESTON, 36, Warwick-place, Leamington.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Rev. A. LANCASTER, c/o Mr. W. A. Glubb, 55, West-street, Tavistock.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s. d.
PER QUARTER	1 8
PER HALF-YEAR	3 4
PER YEAR	6 6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken. Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	211	Mr. Wilfrid Ward's Essays	217	Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel	220
VERSES :—The Way of Palms	213	The Practice of Christianity	218	Bristol Domestic Mission	221
THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN PULPIT :—		Vital Problems of Religion	218	The Criminal Law Amendment Act	221
Sacraments	213	FOR THE CHILDREN :—		Presentation to Mr. G. H. Leigh	221
THE SORBONNE	214	Westward Ho !—IV.	218	The New Hebrides Dilemma	222
LABOUR IN ACHILL	215	MEMORIAL NOTICES :—		Handsome Gift to Pargeter Trust	222
CORRESPONDENCE :—		The Rev. William Harrison	219	NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	222
Co-Education	216	The Rev. George Knight	219	NOTES AND JOTTINGS	223
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—		MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—		OUR CHESS COLUMN	224
The Stoic, the Sceptic, and the Modern Man 217		British and Foreign Unitarian Association 219

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

Owing to the Easter Holidays we shall go to press on Wednesday next week. News and advertisements must reach the office not later than the first post on Wednesday morning.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

In the turmoil of political change during the past week one fact must surely have upon it the seal of public approval. Lord Morley has not resigned. His withdrawal from the Cabinet would have inflicted upon it a serious loss of moral prestige. Though he has been engaged in many controversies, and has stood often both in thought and policy on the unpopular side, he occupies a position as rare as it is pre-eminent of commanding respect. Few men have entered the field of practical politics with a finer intellectual equipment, and no one in our time has done so much to vindicate the place of conscience in public affairs. It is a matter for general congratulation that a career of such lofty public spirit is to be continued a little longer, and that Lord Morley's retirement, when it comes, will not be in circumstances of controversy and strain, which might have hindered the full expression of national gratitude.

* * *

A SMALL deputation from the Committee for the Repeal of the Blasphemy Laws was received by the Prime Minister and the Home Secretary last week. The deputation was introduced by Mr. R. D. Holt, M.P., and included among others Sir William Byles, M.P., Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P., Mr. J. F. Brunner, M.P., Mr. Lowes Dickinson, and Mr. Silas Hocking. In his reply Mr. Asquith was unable to promise facilities for Mr. Holt's Bill, owing to the heavy cargo which was being carried already by the Government, but he confessed, speaking only for himself, that he was in sympathy with the deputation. The laws were partial, uncertain, and indifferently interpreted from generation to generation, and he was afraid there was a certain amount of truth in what had been said, that they were rarely enforced except in the case of comparatively ill-educated people and humble persons, which, of course, added a sense of injustice to a grievance which was already considerable. It was, of course, necessary to see that they did not lose any security which the law at present provided against breaches of the peace, and against violent or offensive language. That danger was not confined to religion. There were spheres of life with which some of them were more or less compulsorily cognisant in which offences of that kind were more frequent and which were rarely visited by any prosecution or penalty. He saw no reason for making any special category with regard to religion, as distinguished from other forms of culture, so long as the law was adequately defined and maintained against the use of any form of language which could be reasonably considered as calculated to cause a breach of the peace. Mr. Asquith added that he saw no reason to repent of the vote which he gave in favour of Mr. Bradlaugh's Bill many years ago, and if opportunity offered he would give a similar vote again.

* * *

THE exploitation of native races for commercial profit is one of the most terrible evils of which our civilisation is guilty. Wherever the white man goes in the tropics he is tempted to use native labour on harsh terms imposed by himself, and if he is lacking in humane feeling and unrestrained by adequate supervision there seem to be no limits to the intolerable injustice and cruelty of which he may be guilty. Facts which have come to light show that this story of outrage, and illegality is being repeated in the New Hebrides, the group of islands in the Pacific inseparably associated with the missionary labours of Dr. Paton. There cannot be the slightest doubt that the natives are virtually without legal protection, and that many of them are nothing better than helpless slaves. Women are kidnapped, and the liquor which is forced upon the people ruins their physique and reduces them, for the sake of illicit gain, to a condition of complete demoralization.

* * *

PART of the responsibility for this state of things rests upon ourselves, for we are partners in a system of government which has produced nothing but confusion. In an interview with Dr. Nicholson, which appeared in the Daily News and Leader on Wednesday, the reason for this is made plain. Dr. Nicholson is a medical missionary intimately acquainted with the facts on the spot.

"Under the joint English and French condominium," he said, "there is a perfectly chaotic system of administration. The officials of the Joint Court comprise English, Spanish, and French Judges, with officials of Dutch and other nationalities to assist them. The Court can pass sentence but not execute it, the latter function lying with the French and British Commissioners in the case of their respective subjects. What actually happens is that when British are concerned the sentences are rigidly carried out, while by the French Commissioner they are often openly flouted."

We may add that everything which was said at the private conference summoned by the Anti-Slavery Society last Tuesday confirmed the accuracy of this statement. What is needed is Parliamentary action, backed by a strong public opinion.

* * *

THE official difficulties which have to be overcome are undoubtedly very grave. Our Government is naturally unwilling to put any strain upon the Entente Cordiale. There is, however, some feeling in France that the present state of affairs is very discreditable and cannot be allowed to go on. If a severe check were placed by the home Government upon the depreciations of the low-grade Frenchman, sometimes little better than a criminal in disguise, some improvement might be effected. But the real remedy is to bring the condominium to an end, and put some uniform system of law and order in its place. Of the practical proposals which have been discussed partition is probably the worst, and British control, which would of course involve adequate compensation to France elsewhere, the most desirable in the interest of the natives. The latter would also satisfy Australian sentiment, which cannot be ignored owing to the proximity of the islands to the Australian coast.

* * *

WE regret to see the Dean of Durham, who has done such notable service in challenging the public conscience upon great issues of right and wrong, falling into the cynical depreciation of present-day politics which has become fashionable in some quarters. Preaching last Sunday in St. Paul's, he said, "Political parties, having lost value as methods of national service, survive as serving personal and sectional ambitions with which the country has little concern, and which are even opposed to the public welfare." According to this view politics is simply a gigantic game of hoodwinking the public by unscrupulous men for their own ends. No doubt there are men who adopt a political career in order to gratify selfish ambitions. There is also the serious danger in public life—in the Church as well as in Parliament—of carrying partizanship to a point where it ceases to be sincere. But the idea that many of the ablest men in the country devote themselves to guiding the ship of the State without any high regard for national ends and the welfare of the people will not bear serious examination. If it were true we should indeed be in a desperate case, with wholesale corruption preying upon our vitals. It is at least incumbent upon those who make these damaging charges to take care that they do not identify their own causes with patriotism, and those of their opponents with the unworthy partizanship of mere party obligation.

* * *

THE Dean of St. Paul's gave an original and challenging address on Progress in the Lecture Hall of the City Temple last week. He exposed once again the bankruptcy of any conception of progress which concentrated attention chiefly upon mechanical invention or the improvement of social arrangements on this earth. We were to regard this world, he said, as existing for the purpose of the making and moulding of souls and selves, to fit them for life in the eternal, and progress had its fulfilment in a higher spiritual sphere above this world. A progressive movement which would have no result whatever except to increase the expensiveness of the final smash would be felt by all as stultifying. Yet the typical modern man did not care for this spiritual world—it was one of the things which people assented to without believing. Modern man preferred to make large grants upon the future, and this reliance upon the future had become a disease in current thought.

* * *

PERSONALITY, he continued, was the object and end of civilisation, and if we kept this steadily before us we should reject spurious notions of progress which had no tendency to make man in himself a nobler animal, and we should be jealous of the extreme specialisation and differentiation which would be the right policy if the aim was to produce the greatest possible wealth and number of appliances. The greatest danger to progress was the almost universal tendency to parasitism. Economists who identified comfort with progress forgot that such comfort tends to be bought too dearly, and success in life often turned out to be the very reverse of success in living. Real, moral, and spiritual progress was, he believed, a fact and a possibility, but it was immeasurably slower and more precarious than was commonly believed. The truest progress was that of men and women themselves in what was most their own, and not in the mere apparatus of their lives.

* * *

IN a letter which appeared in our columns last week, the Rev. E. W. Lewis called attention to a series of evening services for quiet prayer and meditation to be held at the King's Weigh House during Holy Week. He acknowledges that it is an innovation upon Nonconformist tradition, but it is a very welcome one. It preserves days, rich in the world's most poignant and uplifting memories, for holy uses, and it recalls us to a deep and steady reliance upon the spiritual power of prayer and the "will to good" of the consecrated soul amid the distractions and anxieties of modern life. Churches are so much occupied with many things that they give themselves far too little to prayer with strong concentration of purpose and a real desire for guidance. They forget that their first business is not so much to do things themselves as to help men to practise the presence of God and to draw upon the inexhaustible sources of grace and renewal, without which all their doings will be of little worth.

* * *

THE religious work of the world owes more to the sustained effort of the good and faithful servant than it does to floods of oratory or deeds which are blazoned before the public eye. It is with gratitude and rejoicing that we give some account to-day of the presentation which has been made to Mr. G. H. Leigh on the completion of 40 years' service as superintendent of the Monton Sunday School. Those who know Mr. Leigh, his fine tastes, his loyal friendship, his quiet and penetrating goodness, will realise at once what his example and influence have meant to generations of teachers and scholars. It is a ministry of voluntary labour which dwarfs the efforts of most of us, while it gladdens our hearts to know that it has been accomplished. Mr. Leigh is the last man to look for praise or to care that much should be said about what he has done, but humble workers all over the country will thank God for it and take courage.

* * *

DR. JACKS, speaking the other night at the annual meeting of the Blackfriars Mission, laid it down in clear and emphatic language that it is mission work with its helpfulness and charity which more than anything else keeps liberal thinkers within the Christian tradition. The point of view is a helpful one when so much attention is concentrated upon critical thought, and many people are inclined to ask how attenuated their neighbour's theology may be before it ceases to be Christian. The saving truth is this, that orthodoxy carries no passport in the realm of the spirit, for Christianity is not primarily a matter of theology at all. It is a living tradition of holiness and power in the world, which challenges men, it is true, to interpret it, but which challenges them still more to do good; to live in love and to be conformed to the image of Christ. The world is full of the things which it has created—the mission in the slums with its wide range of redeeming activities is part of its beautiful handiwork; and it is still active wherever men are moved by the same desire to seek and save the lost, which has come to us through a long succession of simple and holy lives direct from Christ and his Apostles.

THE WAY OF PALMS.

"Who is this by crowds surrounded? Who is He that journeyeth Toward the winding vale of Kidron down the slopes from Bethany?"
"Know ye not that this is Jesus, Prophet out of Nazareth, Riding on to Zion City, riding on in majesty!"

Chorus of Children.

*Bring your palms, bring your palms,
Strew them o'er the way,
Past the dates of Bethany
For Jesus' Triumph-Day!*

"What the steed He rides in triumph? What his trappings? What his state?"
"Just a colt! And for a saddle just a coat! So lowly He!"
"Hark the pilgrims' loud Hosannahs! Will they crown Him at the Gate?"
Riding on to Zion City, riding on in majesty!

Chorus of Children.

*Bring your palms, bring your palms,
Strew them o'er the way,
Past the figs of Bethphage
For Jesus' Triumph-Day!*

Palms for victors! Crowns for monarchs! See the Son of God pass by!
Toward the winding vale of Kidron, past the dark Gethsemane!
They who shout to-day Hosannah, they shall clamour—Crucify!
Riding on to Zion City, riding on in majesty!

Chorus of Children.

*Bring your palms, bring your palms,
Strew them o'er the way!
One more hill to climb, and then
The dawn of Easter-Day!*

ANON.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN PULPIT.

SACRAMENTS.

BY THE LATE J. WORSLEY AUSTIN, M.A.

"For by grace have ye been saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God."—EPHESIANS II. 8.

THE religious movement to which we belong has always been more than a movement of theological revolt. It expresses to-day much more than a discontent with the Trinitarian conception of God. It is, and always has been, a kind of protest within Protestantism itself against a very powerful tendency in Christianity, and which may be described as the tendency in various ways to set limits to the action of the grace of God. Such limits became in the course of time clearly defined as the Christian Church built up its theory of the sacraments. And what in its view were the sacraments? They were the divinely appointed channels down which the divine grace flowed into the hearts of men, and so mingled with the energies of the world. In the right use of them God and man came into contact, and apart from their use man remained in darkness, estranged from God, and cut off from the blessings of this heavenly kingdom.

In the Roman Church the seven ancient sacraments are retained as such—Baptism, the Lord's Supper, Confirmation, Penance, Orders, Matrimony, and Extreme Unction. The Church of England, together with most Protestant bodies, acknowledges that sacramental efficacy attaches but to the first two.

Our forefathers of Presbyterian and early Unitarian days were far from denying a certain spiritual value belonging to such ordinances. But though they accounted them important aids to true life, they refused to believe or teach that the working of the Holy Spirit of God was limited by any practices that had grown up in society or in the Church. Channing, for instance, was never more effective than when inveighing passionately against those who set forth forms, creeds, or sacraments as essential to salvation, and preaching the boundless mercy of God and the glory of natural righteousness and purity as passports to the kingdom of heaven. And the essential spirit of our churches breathes in such a hymn as that of Miss Scudder—

Thou grace divine encircling all,
A shoreless, soundless sea,
Wherein at last our souls must fall,
O Love of God most free.

Like the sunshine, the mercy of God streams over all the world. To obtain access to Him we need to await no special act of the priest. To gain the gift of His grace every time and season is alike opportune. No special ordinances are necessary to bring Him near to us. The whole earth is His temple, and wherever the heart seeks Him it finds Him.

Not now in Zion's height alone
The favoured worshipper may dwell.
Not now in temples made with hands alone is His voice to be heard, the touch of His spirit to be felt.

From every place below the skies,
The grateful song, the fervent prayer,
The incense of the heart, may rise
To heaven and find acceptance there.

This is the spirit—this grand universalism—which is rising more or less in all Christian churches, and is the very breath of life in our own, that has checked at once the sacramental theory and the sacerdotal theory that underlies it, and given to man a new freedom in the culture of his spiritual life.

But the theory of the sacraments bears witness to something more than priestly pretensions and vain superstitions. Were there nothing more in it, it would have been cast aside long ere this as the product of an age of ignorance without meaning for our own. But in spite of the spread of the "larger thought of God," it is still tenaciously adhered to by thousands, and in some form still promulgated by practically the whole of orthodox Christendom. That there is a mysterious and inexplicable efficacy in certain ordinances of the Church, that a communion of the divine with the human spirit is thereby sealed, one that can be gained in no other way, that this is a part of the promise of God in Christianity, are still fundamental tenets with countless devout souls. And the more deeply we search into the reason of this, the less possible does it appear to explain it as due to the mere weakness or folly of human nature—the more I think we shall feel assured that there is some truth preserved there, however corrupted or overgrown it may be, and which may sometimes be obscured by a broader universalism. What this is we shall probably be led to discover if we inquire as to the way this universalism can find application to the practical needs of our spiritual life. A theory, though it be the theory of the boundless, freely operating grace of God, means little by itself. What the soul needs is some realisation of the way this power of God directly touches its own life, strengthening and blessing. And if there is no particular time, no particular place, no particular occasion of which it may be said, then or there I drew on a power that was more than my own, I rested in a peace that the world cannot give and cannot take away, I beheld the light that never was on sea or land, I felt that the grace divine encircling all encircled me—the theory or idea itself will soon dissolve, or be retained as a mere theory or idea to controvert others, but without any real efficacy in life itself. It will tend inevitably to be supplanted by a purely naturalistic view of life, which means that the whole world, mental and material, will be regarded as a stupendous chain of causes and effects, with no place anywhere for any further Power of God to break in, so that to talk of grace, freedom, or love becomes altogether meaningless. This is the dread spectre that men see awaiting them, and which makes them even in this age cling firmly in large numbers to the sacramental theory, to belief in miracles and much else. They see not the possibilities of a broader and deeper religion, but a Godless universe in which religion would be impossible, and the light of their own lives would be extinguished. And this is no idle fear. It is not everyone who, breaking away from the old thought and practice, has a rich and strong enough religious experience to carry him safely between the Scylla of Naturalism and the Charybdis of Sacramentalism. Yet it is down this narrow passage that the ship of our own enterprise travels. And if we ever wonder at its slow progress it is only because we do not understand fully the conditions under which we sail.

Involved in the sacramental theory there is something that is true for all religious experience, and for any religious outlook on life—our own as for any other. It is that man's life may be nourished directly from God—that in addition to all these earthly forces that impinge upon it, in addition to everything mental or material that we can measure and calculate and explain as parts of a known process, there is further a divine power to which the soul lies open, the touch of which means regeneration, a revitalising at its very centre. So far, so good. Can we follow its implication to a further stage? I think we can. It embodies the truth that in so far as this is accepted as a general theory it is valueless, that it must be realised to be truly known, and if it be realised it will be connected with a special endeavour, and with particular times and places.

There are occasions in every life in which the soul seems to put forth powers that are most generally dormant or unexperienced. There are times in which we all have been mystics, when the divine spirit was no longer wrapped in unreality, but was realised as closer to us than breathing, nearer than hands or feet. There are things that touch us with peculiar power, though what may move me most may not be what most moves you. Emotions, impulses, instincts which normally lie buried under the pressure of our practical interests, are constantly being roused into temporal activity, and as they are roused shed a new light on our pathway, on our whole world, create a new atmosphere in which we move with a sense of heightened or purified or intensified life. Whatever thus kindles and uplifts has become for the time being an agent of the divine spirit, a channel of divine grace. In other words it has become sacramental. And amidst all such chance or temporal circumstances there are others of a more permanent nature—the permanently sacred things or episodes of our lives, which we cannot come in touch with, cannot handle, cannot even think of, perhaps, without feeling some renewal in our souls of what gave them power originally. We explain, or think we explain, a lot of this by using the blessed word "association." But association explains nothing. It merely states the fact of the connection of a higher or a sacred order of experience with this or that.

And thus in sacramentalism there is an enduring truth. To deny special channels and special agencies utilised by the Divine Spirit for gaining access with the human would be to deny any effective contact between the two.

Let us now try to go yet a step further. Can there be anything truly sacramental, not simply for you or me as individuals, but for a community of men and women? If we answer that question in the affirmative, then there are developments of our individual nature of which you and I can know nothing except as we share in the communal experience. And I do not see how the question can be answered except in the affirmative. The bases of all enduring communities are essentially of this nature. The basis of the family, for instance, is not merely legal or social, but more deeply sacramental. The basis of a religious community is necessarily sacramental. The community is a means whereby the individual member attains an enlargement of life, a deepening of experience, and this is the fundamental reason for its existence. The arrangements a religious community makes to further this end, the instrumentalities it employs, are all, in so far as they are true, necessarily sacramental—its services and ordinances, its rites, the churches it builds. The church is a sacred place to the true worshipper within it—and in a special sense in virtue of the relationship in which it stands to his sacred experience. All places may be sacred, but they can only be so for the same reason, and any talk of general sanctity is quite meaningless and vain, except from one who has entered into the meaning of special sanctity.

The sacramental value of the religious community as such is indeed one of the points which in our own group of churches needs far more thought than has been given to it, and which if clearly realised would more than anything else have a marked effect on church attendance. By this I mean simply that the community itself is an agency that may be utilised, and is utilised, by the divine spirit to effect what it does not effect in any other way. We can certainly lay down no law, but rather should say with John Hamilton Thom: "If any man conscientiously holds that his life in God, his love for man burns purer and clearer without this there is no law or command that touches his liberty in such things; to his own Master he standeth or falleth." But with this proviso a church that is worth anything must stand firmly by its claim to sacramental efficacy—yea, though it be a free Unitarian Church and an upholder of the most universal ideas of the working of the Spirit of God. It must claim its special place in that working, and count itself more than a group of free-thinkers—claim to be an organ of the divine spirit and strive to substantiate that claim through its spiritual results.

We can put our finger now, I think, on the real fallacy of the old sacramental theory, the point that made it repulsive to the free souls of these free churches. It was not that it was sacramental, not that it asserted that there was a mystic nourishment of the soul by certain established agencies, but that it was narrow, that it was exclusive. It was not what it asserted that was objectionable, but what it denied. Even in the Roman mass Channing declared he saw nothing that struck at the essentials of the Christian religion. But what he did recoil from with horror was the supposition that here was the exclusive way of salvation—some thing which he must accept and participate in without question at the peril of his immortal life. Such judgments it is not for our fallible minds to pass. Rather is it for us to realise that the Holy Spirit of God is not bound. By innumerable channels it reaches the hearts of the children of men. It is for us to combine the largest sympathy with those who see not now as we, with a loyal and devoted persistence in pursuing our own way, which is for us the way where the light dwelleth.

THE SORBONNE.

THE Paris Sorbonne is one of the most ancient, as well as one of the most renowned seats of learning in the world. It was founded in 1257 by Robert le Sorbon, who created a sort of hall of residence for the divinity students who were flocking to the French capital in increasing numbers to hear the famous teachers there. This original Sorbonne did not comprise the whole of the University of Paris, which had been constituted a hundred years before. But the paramount importance of Theology in those days made it the chief department of University work up to the end of the seventeenth century. It was originally organised very much on the lines of an Oxford College, but it has by no means pursued its way with comparatively slight changes, as the English foundations have done. Cardinal Richelieu, who became principal of the Sorbonne in 1624, gave it a new building and completely reorganised it, radically changing its constitution. In spite of his fostering care and generous benefactions, its importance steadily diminished after his day until the time of the Revolution. Those stormy days, and the following period of the Empire, too, had their effect on French education. The whole of the universities in France were suppressed in 1793, and newly constituted by Napoleon in 1808.

In 1901 the New Sorbonne was opened, built partly on the site of the old, and introducing all modern improvements in equipment and accommodation. The old buildings were swept away, with the exception of the beautiful Church of the Sorbonne, built by Richelieu, and containing his tomb. No religious service is ever held in this church now; but its Sunday afternoon sacred concerts are renowned throughout Paris. In the Sorbonne building there is a "Grand Amphitheatre" seating 3,500, together with several smaller halls with a seating capacity of from two to five hundred students. All are decorated with magnificent wall paintings by Puvis de Chavannes, Weerts, and other artists. Then there are almost innumerable lecture rooms, class rooms, laboratories, studies, special reading rooms for professors and for research students, and a magnificent library where 650,000 books are available to the students, who are rapidly supplied with the volumes they need.

The separation of the Church and the State in 1906 had one important effect on the Sorbonne. The faculty of Theology ceased to be an integral part of the University of Paris. It has now its own building and is governed by its own authorities, independently of the control of the State. From this time the Sorbonne, quite changed from its original purpose, has been the home of the two faculties of Letters and Science. The other faculties, those of Law and Medicine, have their own buildings—they form part of the University, but not of the Sorbonne, where the students are all working either in Letters (Arts) or in Science. And even some of the work in these spheres is done in other buildings, as the Sorbonne proves too small for its increasing number of students. An Institute of Chemistry and a Department of Geography are now being built on a site a short distance away.

Every novel reader has his idea of the Paris "student." Every visitor to Paris has observed the weary, long-haired young men who waste the golden days of their lives in the "Latin Quarter." But the average Sorbonne student is by no means of this type. He is as a rule a keen, hard worker. He will not give up the afternoon to regular exercise as men do in the English Universities. If he is fond of "le sport," he will have an afternoon a week at football, tennis, swimming, or fencing, as the case may be. But as a rule, if there are no lectures in the afternoon, it is spent in the library, at work at home, in the National Library, or in one of the many other places available to the student in Paris. After lunch and dinner, he may take a short walk, a turn on the Boulevard, or in the Luxembourg Gardens—then back to work. For the French student thinks of his examinations and of his career, which depends so largely on the place he attains. He allows himself no times of lounging with chosen friends to discuss every question under the sun, as is the rule in English colleges. In Paris I have hardly heard religion discussed among any but theological students, or literature among any but those whose examinations will concern some of the books of which they speak. One subject of burning general interest there is—the three years' military service and its cause: the abominable ways of Germany. But there is very little social, literary, artistic, and general human enthusiasm among Paris students as a rule, in spite of the fact that their age is somewhat above that of the men at our English universities.

From every land the students come to the Sorbonne, women as well as men; for almost a third of the total number are women, and they take their work quite as seriously as the men do. A great proportion of the foreign students are Russians and Poles, but there are large numbers of Roumanians. Remote peoples like the Finns, the Peruvians, the Persians, and the Siamese are also represented. Perhaps it should be mentioned that the total number of students in all four faculties of the Paris University is over 17,000. Of the 4,500 who receive instruction at the Sorbonne some are the future teachers and University professors of their different lands. Future lawyers often take a course of general literature, and doctors take a course of science before entering on their legal and medical studies. Future priests and pastors come from their seminaries to hear the secular wisdom of some particularly famous lecturers. It is curious to see the members of some Catholic order, with neatly shaved tonsures, giving a mediæval touch to a room full of twentieth century men and women.

There are three methods of teaching in vogue at the Sorbonne. First there are the public lectures. Anyone may attend these, whether a member of the University or not. These are given, as a rule, by the most distinguished professors, and are frequented by numbers of leisured people among the residents of Paris, as well as by matriculated students. These outside hearers are able to choose a subject which interests them, and follow it year after year in different courses of lectures. Then there are lectures reserved to members of the University. Naturally, those on modern languages are so reserved, or too many of the students of the Berlitz Schools would crowd the lecture rooms. Some professors prefer not to speak to a crowd, for nervous, or perhaps vocal reasons. Such are assigned the smaller rooms, and the public is not permitted to enter. The third kind of teaching is perhaps the most important. It is the seminar, a favourite method of instruction in France. This takes the place that private tutorial instruction occupies with us in England. A number of students, varying from 5 to 50, assemble in one of the smaller rooms with a professor, who takes the work of several of them in turn and discusses it with them. In the semi-publicity of the class, they have to defend what they have done and answer the professor's questions, if they can. Certainly the students, especially the women, are much more ready to speak before others than is the case in England. The vigorous discussions between professors and students sometimes make one tremble for discipline. But one remembers the Gallic temperament; the storm soon clears, and both antagonist and protagonist are all smiles, apparently well satisfied with one another.

The method of recruiting the staff of the Sorbonne is entirely different from anything we have in England. It is exceedingly rare for a young man to be appointed to a tutorship, as happens in the case of our College fellows. The young Frenchman who has chosen the educational career in its higher branches usually stays at the University for three or four years' post graduate study. He then submits to a competitive examination, which gives him a place as a professor in a Lycée. This is practically the position of an English public schoolmaster, without the latter's supervision duties, which are carried out by a lesser order of teachers. If our budding professor follows up a brilliant University career by the publication of an important book on his subject, or by making a definite contribution to the advancement of learning, he may expect to be rewarded by a chair in a provincial University. Afterwards, another book, or some marked success in his lecturing work may bring him a call to the Paris faculty, which is the crown of all effort in the French professor's career. Sometimes an eminent scholar, a man who is not in the teaching profession at all, is appointed as "chargé de cours" at a university, to give a series of lectures on the subject in which he has specialised. If successful, his appointment is made permanent, and he may presently attain the full status of a professor. In this way the best brains of France, the most distinguished thinkers of the nation, are gathered together in Paris, and placed at the service of the younger generation.

ARTHUR HURN.

LABOUR ON ACHILL.

ACHILL ISLAND, west of Ireland, is so close to the mainland that a bridge has been thrown across, very convenient for its inhabitants as well as visitors. Is it captious to express the hope that this accessibility will not do away with its old-world characteristics?

At present such a fear seems groundless. Thus, we obtained the wherewithal for our trip thither after the following fashion. Following the direction of the friendly hotel people, we repaired to a certain cabin in the village. Before it lay a motor filled with turf. It recalled the Shavian Tom Broadbent and the pig. But it was an outside car we wanted. And while my more accustomed companion parleyed with a couple of men at the door, I, standing just inside, was aware of a second room beyond the kitchen, containing a very long table. Stretched upon this, dimly seen, for there was no window apparent, a man lay, one shirt-sleeved arm supporting a book, the other under his head. He betrayed no consciousness of our presence; we imitated his discretion. There was an aloofness, a mystery about the thing that forbade idle surmise.

The Unknown revealed itself the following morning, when the absorbed student presented himself at the appointed time as the driver of our car. I was named to him, and he raised his hat, and shook hands, saying in his musical Western sing-song, "I am very pleased to meet you!" with a half-shy glance from eyes as clear and brown as the innumerable streams that intersect the hills we were to cross. In truth he was as well-set-up and handsome a fellow as you could wish to see. We fancied that good looks were rather plenty about Achill. But you have only our word for this. The people have a decided objection to the camera, and not sharing the point of view that pronounces such scruples "so silly!" we were unable to amass photographic evidence of this fact. We had not gone far when we met a woman, barefoot, red-skirted, head-shawled. She was driving a dozen or so of cattle, and she gave a smiling look and called out some words in Irish. Our driver explained them to be, "You are very welcome here!" He understands his own as well as the English language, and this may explain his crisp intonation.

"How are the cattle and sheep fed here?" we asked, looking around on the desolate scene—rocks, black ooze and heather, across which the woman was driving her herd, stepping nimbly with her unshod feet from stone to stone.

"She will be bringing them up on the hill, where she has commonage, most likely. But they labour for what they eat, and their share is small!"

This describes very fairly the conditions of life at Achill, as well as along most of the western coast. The people labour and their share is small indeed. Their houses are of stone, for the most part dazzling with whitewash. The thatch is held in place against the fierce Atlantic storms by a criss-cross of ropes, weighted down by depending stones that fringe the eaves. In front would be a potato-patch; or at some distance, perhaps down near the shore, or far away on the hill-side, one saw tiny fields of grain, oats or rye or barley. These were separated from one another by walls of loose stones, innocent of mortar. You can see through them. They look "silly," too. But they have their raison d'être. Thus are collected, thus utilised, the stones that cover the face of the countryside, thick as leaves in Vallambrosa.

The weeds, too, that call forth the scornful comments of some tourists, are by no means as "silly" as they appear to the casual eye. They give protection from late frosts; they can be cut for feeding donkeys, as well as cattle. I saw women doing this with sickles. The weeds are chopped then. Heaps of this fodder lay at the cottage doors, ready for the donkeys as they came back from the bog with their panniers of turf. Girls drove them, or young boys, bare-legged and debonnair. We watched a young woman come out of her house, a child by her side. She seized a pannier (locally, a "cleave"), swung it on to her back with easy grace, and came stepping towards us. We asked the driver, and he said she was likely going to the shore for seaweed. It was a stiff climb down, but she made nothing of it.

"They manure the land with it," he explained; "we all have a right to a piece of the shore and, as well, we plant it. Do you see those stones laid down in squares on the sand? The people put them there, where the tide washes over them, and then they get more seed-weed by that means." These sea-weed plots reminded me of the oyster—"parcs"—of Cancale; but indeed the Breton folk have not such terrible conditions to contend with as have the Celts of the west of Ireland. It is marvellous, the unwearied patience, the energy, the labour, that wrests a living from soil so hopeless as that of Achill.

Not only Nature was against these people.

"Why are those little fields not cultivated?" we asked, pointing to where, on the heathery, stony side of a mountain a network of stone walls enclosed ground that still showed traces of having been tilled.

"Well, the people were 'lifted out' of them," was the reply. Evicted, this meant. Those who had by such means as have been indicated tamed the wild land and made it productive by cruelly hard labour of the "small share," which is all it will yield, were turned out, robbed of the fruit of their hands. But these things cannot be now, thank God! Only old habits of thought last long. The people still like to seem poorer than they are, for indications of prosperity often invited the robbery of the strong hand—the landlord's, to wit.

"Where are the men to-day. It's all women and children we see working," we said.

We were looking at a tiny meadow, stone-wall-encircled, surrounded by the wet, black, stony waste already described. In this surprising oasis a woman, red-skirted, a snowy white kerchief upon her head, was tossing hay to dry with her hands. Further off another woman was digging "the dinner," i.e., potatoes. Still another was spreading fleeces of wool to dry upon some sunny stones. It would then be carded, and spun and dyed with native dyes, and then woven into the grey and white and crimson stuffs where-with the people clothe themselves so self-respectingly; no shoddy or second-hand things here! "The men, is it? Sure won't they be at the fishing, any few of them, that is, that are not away in England for the harvest."

"Do they all go?"

"An' why wouldn't they? Six shillings a day they earn in the hay-month beyond. A man will be bringing back twelve or may be fourteen pounds with him. But as often as not, the weight of that will be 'strapped' (owing) at the shop."

But this aspect of affairs, necessitating a knowledge of the "gombeenism" or usury under which parts of rural Ireland groan, was beyond us. Besides, we had just come in sight of the wonderful Meenaun cliffs. No words are adequate to that wild, magnificent scene. Sheer below, two thousand feet, the Atlantic is ceaselessly running in against them. So, with a sigh, we sat upon the sunny heather and had lunch. Then we repeated to our young driver, Moira O'Neill's—

Over here in England I'm helpin' wid the hay.

And I wisht I was in Ireland the live-long day!

(With capricious ingratitude),

Weary's on the English hay, and sorra take the wheat!

Och! Corrymeala and the blue sky over it!

"They are good, pleasant words," said the Achill man; "but I'm thinking we'd do badly, wanting the English wages!"

K. F. PURDON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

CO-EDUCATION.

SIR,—It was with very great interest that I read the article in the current issue of your paper on the subject of "Co-education," a matter occupying a leading position among the educational problems of the day. I admit that from a purely theoretical point of view co-education sounds very plausible, but how does it work out in practice? Let me confine my remarks particularly to our public elementary schools. In Wallasey we have recently built three new council schools. The local education authority is fairly go-ahead, and, accordingly, these schools were planned so as to be organised on the lines set down by the principles of co-education. One of these schools was never opened as a "mixed school." It happened to be built in such a way that the old system whereby the boys and girls are separated could still be put in operation. The second, at the end of its second year, also returned to the old separation. Its building was of a plan similar to the first. Only the third is still working on the lines of co-education, and this is because the buildings are not adapted to separate departments for boys and girls. I may say that the boys and girls in the upper standards are also separated here. Now why is it that the efforts of the Wallasey Education Committee to establish schools of the "mixed" type have failed? I think the answer is to be found in the fact that the school is not identical with the home. Women teachers do manage big boys, it is true, but in so doing they put a great strain upon their health. Men do not know how to handle girls. Further, boys require an education of a type slightly different from that of girls, and vice versa.

Is it not possible to obtain the advantages claimed for co-education and, at the same time, those claimed by the advocates of separation through some sort of compromise? I think so. It can be found in the unmixed day school. Here the boy and the girl each receive instructions especially adapted to their needs, and each receives the right kind of influence from the man and the woman respectively. In this way also the strain on the teacher is lessened. At home the boy meets his sister and her friends, and obtains the guidance of his mother, and vice versa with the girl. Note that this home influence, the great advantage claimed for co-education, can only be obtained in small circles such as are impossible of attainment in our elementary or even in our secondary schools. The boarding school ought normally not to be allowed to exist. Either you have complete separation of the sexes, which no day school can possibly effect, or you have a "mixed" school which is unworkable, involving strain on the teachers even with small classes, and the home influence of this, too, is artificial. Education alone at home, of course, robs one of all the admitted advantages of school life.—Yours, &c.,

EDGAR HILL.

10, Longview-avenue, Wallasey,
March 30, 1914.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

THE STOIC, THE SCEPTIC, AND THE MODERN MAN.

Stoics and Sceptics. By Edwyn Bevan. Oxford, at the Clarendon Press. 4s. 6d. net.

IN this slender volume—it contains only four lectures—Mr. Bevan shows qualities of insight and sympathy which place him beside Professor Gilbert Murray as an interpreter of Greek thought to the modern mind. What Professor Murray has done for literature he attempts, with singular success, to do for some aspects of later Greek philosophy. We hope that he will not misunderstand us if we call his lectures lay-sermons, for we hardly know by what other term to convey the prevailing sense of the difficulties of the modern mind and the urgency of its religious need, which lie behind their large and accurate scholarship. Zeno, as he interprets him, was the real founder of the pragmatists, guided by practical need rather than intellectual curiosity. Even the Stoic passion for definition had a direct relation to popular need. "It is always the catch-words of a philosophical theory which lay hold of the general mind." The demand of the time, as Mr. Bevan points out, was for a dogmatic system on a level with ordinary intelligence to meet a desperate spiritual emergency. The attempt was made by one who aspired to be a true doctor of the soul, and he produced a school of disciplined virtue, based upon a dogma concerning the ultimate meaning of life, which must always be regarded as the finest product of the Greek spirit in the sphere of practical ethics. But it contained within itself the secret of its own frustration and decay.

"Where love is action cannot be without desire; the action of love has eminently regard to fruit, in the sense of some result beyond itself—the one thing that seems to matter is whether the loved person really is helped by your action. Of course, you run the risk of frustrated desire and disappointment. The Stoic sage was never frustrated and never disappointed. Gethsemane, looked at from his point of view, was a signal break-down. The Christian's Ideal Figure could never be accepted by the Stoic as an example of his typical Wise Man."

Scepticism on the other hand attacked the foundations of dogma and tried to deliver the mind from its bondage, but it was powerless to give practical guidance when men asked questions concerning their duty.

"It could not even effectually attack the superstition which dominated so much of the life of the ancient world, since while it was concerned to maintain that every dogma might be false it had to admit that any superstition might be true. . . . If you knew absolutely nothing about God, you had no right to say that the popular mythology was any worse representation of Him than the conceptions of the philosopher. We find, therefore, the whole religious tradition of the ancient state, as a system of ritual and mythological imagery, defended on Sceptical principles. 'The Sceptic,' says Sextus, 'will be found acknowledging the gods according to the customs of his country and the laws, and doing everything which tends to their proper worship and reverence, but in the region of philosophic inquiry he makes no rash assertion.'"

The parallel with our own time is obvious, where Catholic atheists and unbelieving conformists are not unknown. It leads Mr. Bevan to the fruitful suggestion that apart from dogmatism and scepticism there is another possible attitude, "which perhaps was implicit in Christianity from the beginning, though in the formulation of Christianity, the dogmatic, too exclusively intellectual, habit of the Greek world obscured and mistook it." It is what may be called moral assurance, the reciprocal play of sympathy and affection, which finds its best illustration in the loyal confidence of friendship. Here we have ceased to move in the region of logical proof or mathematical demonstration, and yet, "if in friendship we walked all through by sight, and never by faith, what scope would there be for trust? For that trust a friend could tolerate no weaker word than certainty." As soon as we try to prove these things we fall defenceless into the hand of the Sceptic. "And that mistake," such is Mr. Bevan's closing suggestion, "is just such a mistake as the ancient dogmatists made in defining their attitude to the great Friend behind the Universe, just such a mistake as was made by their successors whose task it was to formulate the faith of the Christian Church."

MR. WILFRID WARD'S ESSAYS.

Men and Matters. By Wilfrid Ward. London: Longmans, Green & Co. 12s. 6d. net.

MR. WILFRID WARD is one of the few contemporary writers who have learned to practise the art of biography in the grand manner, and his essays are just as carefully wrought as his work on a larger scale. A Catholic to the core of his being, he is none the less a humanist, with the humanist's intellectual curiosity and his tolerant human sympathy. Thus in the present volume we feel that John Stuart Mill enlists his sympathy as strongly as Cardinal Vaughan, and in the essay on George Wyndham he moves as easily in the world of politics and letters as in that other world of ecclesiastical debate which has been familiar to him from childhood. For insight and charm we are inclined to give the first place to these two essays on George Wyndham and Mill. The former is warm with personal admiration and perhaps a little too superlative in its estimate of literary gifts, which were hardly of the first order. The latter gives Mr. Ward a congenial opportunity for praising the moral virtues of the intellect, with its reliance upon candid, clear and penetrating thought as contrasted with the present mood of reverence for the obscure and the undefinable. He sees Mill's deficiencies, his lack of "buoyancy, richness, spontaneousness, creativeness of mind," but he pleads that what he sacrificed to the distinctiveness of his task need in no way detract from our admiration. "A certain narrowness of direction makes for effectiveness. And something akin to the sentiment of admiration we give to the persistent religious devotee will, I am convinced, be accorded by posterity to Mill, in spite of all he lacked whether by nature or in consequence of his early training."

It is, however, as an interpreter of the Catholic Church to the English mind that Mr. Ward has won a place of his own. The essay on Cardinal Vaughan in the present volume is a good illustration of his method. He writes about the great Churchman in terms of human fallibility, and in the end wins our admiration without any suspicion of special pleading. Quoting Bossuet's words to Abbé de Rancé, "A good intention with little enlightenment is a serious evil in high places," he applies them to Vaughan's lack of trained instinct in practical affairs and a certain impetuosity of temper which made him indifferent to the just claims of public opinion. Cardinal Vaughan was aware of these defects himself, and with a rare power of self-criticism he wrote to the Pope to urge reasons in his own character why he should not be appointed to the See of Westminster. Several of the other essays deal not with men but with questions of contemporary religious thought in relation to Catholic faith. Here Mr. Ward reveals himself once again as the advocate of a very temperate liberalism. He is too clear-sighted for the bold speculative flights of the modernist. He remains Ultramontane at heart, though not without some wistful regrets that the task of accommodation between mediævalism and the intellectual world of the modern man is so hard. "What is no irksome infringement," he writes, "of the liberty demanded for effectual action in a Spanish Catholic may be so for an educated Englishman or American. And general rules from headquarters which are obviously satisfactory in one case may be unsatisfactory in the other. In a vast empire like the Catholic Church this is at times inevitable." Is he not allowing himself to be misled by a political analogy, with its spurious appeals to an art of accommodation, which he would be the first to repudiate in other departments of the intellectual life? From the Catholic point of view repressive measures may be inexpedient as a matter of policy, but there can be no such thing as any real concession to liberty of thought. All we are permitted to do is to overhaul the traditional machinery, so that it may be employed to enforce foregone conclusions with a minimum of social friction or mental protest. There is no getting away from his own candid admission, "To try and liberalize the Catholic Church is to destroy its distinctive genius."

THE PRACTICE OF CHRISTIANITY.

The Practice of Christianity. By the Author of "Pro Christo et Ecclesia." London: Macmillan & Co. 4s. 6d. net.

THE secret of authorship in the case of the series of books by the writer of "Pro Christo et Ecclesia" has been well kept. It gives them a certain impersonal quality, a tone of aloofness from controversy, some of the interior quietness of the best Quaker writing in a world where even religion is made to serve the ends of literary fame. There is also in these volumes a remarkable evenness of workmanship, a refinement of style which has about it the monotony of excellence, with few lapses into the commonplace and no striving after startling effects. It is the right way to interpret the teaching of Christ, though few have the courage to practise it, for this evenness and collectedness of temper is one of the conditions of sustained spiritual insight. The writer has intellectual gifts, but they are the happy servants of his moral perceptions, and hardly seem to exist for ends divorced from character. All these qualities are present in "The Practice of Christianity," which deals first of all with the essential qualities of the love and goodness which are conformed to the spirit of Christ, and then applies them to the problems of the City of Destruction, the penal system, warfare, personal violence, poverty, competition, and material welfare. All these are handled with a genuine desire to bring them to the bar of an enlightened conscience, with no foregone conclusions save the duty of closer conformity with the Christian teaching and spirit. It is this moral freshness, the searching candour with which the conventionalities of religious judgment are faced, which gives the book its healthful savour.

"We are not yet Christ-like enough," the author says in criticism of the inclination to admire sincerity even in a bad cause, "to say that Christian persecutors were not good men—some of us think they were very holy men—but if our notion of admirable character does not include something which not only makes a man a good instrument, but makes him an instrument of good purpose only, it falls short of what is required for the world's salvation; and we Christians ought to ask ourselves whether it does not fall short of what is required for the practice of anything that may rightly be called Christianity, or for the formation of Christian character."

In a similar vein he points out that the main difference between Jesus Christ and many others, who may have been equally enthusiastic and loyal on inferior planes of goodness, lay in the difference between his insight into God's will and theirs. "I think it will be found," he says, "that the key to the difference between our Lord's insight into the will of God and all previous conceptions of Divine law is just the tenderness of heart, the constant impulse to lovingkindness, which is so obviously the basis of His thought and action." This quality he regards as ultimate, and his plea is that it should be regulative in Christian character over the entire field of its activity.

VITAL PROBLEMS OF RELIGION. By the Rev. J. R. Cohn. T. & T. Clark. 5s. net.

MR. COHN is keenly alive to present day tendencies of thought, and his treatment of the various problems under consideration is earnest and stimulating, even when it is not wholly convincing. He approaches theological questions from a Broad Church point of view; describes the Athanasian Creed as "a series of incomprehensible and debateable doctrinal propositions to be believed on pain of damnation," and, on the other hand, speaks of the Nicene Creed as "the most inspired piece of writing outside the Bible." He does not think that at our present stage of religious development we can do without dogmas. "The religion of the spirit is," he says, "a beautiful ideal; it is Christ's own, but for us ordinary men the time is not yet when 'neither in Jerusalem nor in Gerizim shall men worship . . . for God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.'" The writer, however, is mainly occupied in exposing the weakness and inadequacy of the materialistic interpretation of things, and this he does in a very effective manner. His chapters on the problem of evil, the meaning of personality, and the freedom of the will are especially deserving of attention.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. HEADLEY BROS.:—The Health of the State: Sir George Newman, M.D. 1s. 6d. net. Child Life and Labour: Margaret Alden, M.D. 1s. 6d. net.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS:—The Corner Stone of Education: Edward Lyttelton. 5s. net.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION:—The Larger Life: John Dendy. 2s. 6d. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Hibbert Journal, Contemporary Review, Nineteenth Century, The Vineyard.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

"WESTWARD HO!"

IV.

I HAD hoped to be able to go down among the rock pools at the foot of these cliffs, and find some uncommon sea creatures to tell you about; but the strong westerly winds have driven the water inshore, so that there has been little or no opportunity of safe clambering. But rough weather means fine wave effects, and as there have been no wrecks on this coast since we came to the Lizard we can fully enjoy the stormy tides that come in with a grand roar. There is a light-house with two towers. One holds the ordinary light, the other sends out white flashing light. Both lights are worked by electricity. The flashlight has the power of a million candles. It is fascinating to watch it at night, for it sends out a long arm of light every three seconds which flings itself right across Mount's Bay, and in clear weather can be seen for about sixty miles. There is also a fog horn to be sounded when the weather is thick, but there has been no fog since we came. The coastguards keep watch night and day for any vessel in distress.

To-day (March 26) as soon as it was light I saw from this house, 270 ft. above the sea level, that a gale was blowing from the west and making the sea very rough, so that from time to time the hulls of passing ships would disappear wholly in the trough made by the rising of huge waves, and for some seconds the masts alone could be seen. Then the hulls would slowly heave in sight again, and the ships plunge forward safely, but with sheets of spray dashing over them. I knew there was little danger in a sound, well-managed vessel merely sinking into a trough of the sea; but the thought arose anxiously, will they all be able to hold on their course in the teeth of this gale, or will any of them be blown on the terrible line of sunken and exposed rocks that run out from the foot of the cliffs? I knew that many a good ship had come to grief on them. The villagers have tales, thrilling tales, to tell us of the perils which beset those who go down to the sea in ships. Sometimes when everyone is going quietly about his business a rocket is sent high into the air above the rocket house, and bursts with a roar so loud that it seems to shake the houses. It does what it is meant to do, it rouses the brave Cornish men and women of the Lizard and the villages round. "A wreck! a wreck!" is the cry on every lip. At once the lifeboat crews hurry down the coves which have lifeboats, the men in charge of life-saving apparatus rush to their posts. The women make up their fires and put on their biggest kettles before they run out to watch the grand struggle that is being made to save life and property. The efforts are generally successful, and then it is the women's turn. Kind hands help a drenched and exhausted man, and, if it be a passenger ship, women and children too, up the rough cove paths and into the houses, where hot food and dry clothing are quickly supplied them. We are glad that though we have heard the wind blow "great guns," we have heard no danger gun. However, you will realise how wildly the waves have dashed against the rocks when I tell you that as we sat at breakfast this morning we saw lumps of creamy white foam, varying in size from a marble to a cocoanut, flying across the fields and over the houses in the village.

We were quickly on our way to one of the least muddy of the roads leading to the cliff edge. Arrived at a point where there was a view of the rocks, we had to be careful not to go too near precipices lest we should be carried off our feet by sudden gusts. We saw the waves break on lofty rocks, sending sheets of foam high into the air which were caught by the wind and rent into fragments such as we had seen scurrying by. At our feet lay acres on acres of foaming white water, with dark rocks rising from it on every hand. It is not in words to tell fully of the wild beauty of this rocky coastline. It must be seen to be realised.

As we cannot hunt for sea treasures we have time to bestow on the treasures of the thick Cornish walls. Our attention has been drawn to two flowering plants which grow on them, and are extreme opposites in size. The tiny one is not uncommon anywhere on dry banks. It is early field scorpion grass, one of the forget-me-not family. You may have passed it hundreds of times and overlooked it, because it is so minute. We have found several here which were so small that the whole plant, with its flat rosette of leaves, and a bright blue flower in the middle of them, could be completely hidden by laying a sixpence on it. This is no exaggeration, for we actually did it. If you want to find this plant as small as that, you must look out for it at once. In the mild climate of south Cornwall it flowers in March, but the botany books give April and May as its blossoming time. It is only on its first appearance that the tiny flower lies like a bead on the circle of leaves; as the plant grows older, the stems lengthen into clusters.

The plant at the other end of the scale is the sea tree mallow. It has a thick woody stem and soft downy, angular leaves, much like those of the common mallow, only larger. The flowers are a purplish pink, and not large, but the plant grows from 6 to 12 ft. high on some of these cliffs, and especially on isolated rocks surrounded by and high above the sea. We were told that the young herring gulls, which are reared in hundreds on some of these high rocks, sit on the thick leaf stalks, and are well protected from sun and wind, and from those birds of prey of the sea, the skua and the great black-backed gull, which are not as noble in habits as they are in appearance, for they will kill and eat young and weakly birds.

EMILY NEWLING.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

THE REV. WILLIAM HARRISON.

WE regret to announce the death of the Rev. William Harrison, formerly minister at Swinton, Glossop, and Stalybridge. Shortly after his retirement from the settled ministry he went to live at Timperley and became a member of the congregation of Dunham-road Chapel, Altrincham. He frequently visited Llandudno, where he died on Saturday, March 28.

Born in Liverpool in 1836, Mr. Harrison had to begin with some considerable business experience. He married early, and shortly after his marriage he and Mrs. Harrison were asked by Mr. George Hott and Mr. George Melly to undertake the care of a Home for poor boys, which, beginning in a modest way, was the pioneer of much larger institutions of the same kind. After some five years similar work for girls was undertaken at the request of the late Rev. S. A. Steinthal. Before long it seemed to Mr. Harrison's Liverpool friends that he would make a good minister. In the earlier years of the Unitarian Home Missionary Board several married men became students; and although Mr. Harrison had now three children, he entered the Board in 1867 for the three years' course. During the latter part of his time he took regular charge of the Swinton congregation. When, in 1888, he removed from Glossop to Stalybridge he found in the large Sunday school there an ample field for the exercise of his gifts as a teacher and organiser. He always took a keen interest in denominational work and seldom missed any annual or other gathering of any society with which he was connected. He filled the presidential chair of the Manchester District Sunday School Association, and after long service as a member of the Committee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College was made a vice-president, an honour bestowed but rarely on any but former officers of the College. He was for several years secretary of the East Cheshire Christian Union, in which capacity he rendered valuable service, and had also served on the Committee of the Widows' Fund.

Mr. Harrison had the pen of a ready writer and a strong sense of humour. He had travelled widely—his summer holiday was for many years spent abroad; and he recounted some of his foreign experiences in little books which had a considerable circulation. The last of these was issued in 1910, after the meetings of the International Congress at Berlin, and the further journey of many members to Oberammergau and Hungary. In 1903 appeared "Children: Their Thoughts, Words and Ways." The stories which form the bulk of the volume were the harvesting of many years.

It may be truly said of William Harrison that he loved his fellow-men. Although he had suffered in recent years from occasional and sometimes severe illness, he had much recuperative power, and his mental activity was unimpaired to the end. He carried lightly the burden of nearly eighty years, and to the end he was never happier than when he found himself once more in the society of brother ministers and intimate friends. His widow, three daughters, and three grandchildren remain to mourn his loss.

The funeral took place at the Manchester Crematorium on Wednesday, and was attended by the members of the family and a large number of personal friends and representatives of the congregations and societies with which Mr. Harrison had been connected. The service was conducted by the Rev. Dendy Agate.

THE REV. GEORGE KNIGHT.

WE regret to announce the death of the Rev. George Knight, which took place on March 29, at Scarborough, in the 73rd year of his age. Mr. Knight was trained for the ministry at Rawdon College, 1863-68. After a short period as a Baptist minister he became a Unitarian, and settled at Upperthorpe, Sheffield, in 1869. From 1880-83 he was minister at Gloucester. In 1885 he began his long ministry of 22 years at Dob-lane Chapel, Failsworth, where he worked with great energy and gathered around him a good congregation and a large and active Sunday school. After his retirement from Failsworth he held short pastorates at Blackpool and Whitby. He was minister of the Flowergate Chapel, Whitby, at the time of his death. His wife died before him, and he leaves a son and two daughters to mourn his loss. He served faithfully and well, and he leaves behind him a fragrant memory in the hearts of those who knew him as minister or friend. The funeral took place at the Failsworth Cemetery on Thursday.

THE Head Master of Willaston School writes:—

"Among the institutions which mourn the loss of Mr. Worsley Austin one was not mentioned in your memorial notice last week. He was elected a governor of Willaston School in 1911, and for the last two years had acted as hon. secretary to the Board. The connection was one that meant much to us; and I think I may venture to say that it was valued also by him."

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

COUNCIL MEETING.

A MEETING of the Council of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association was held on Tuesday afternoon, March 31. The chair was taken by the president, Mr. G. H. Leigh, and there was a fairly large and representative attendance. The minutes of the last meeting were read by the Rev. W. C. Bowie, who then presented the report which covered the usual field of Home missionary work, colonial and foreign work, publications, the McQuaker Trust, and Finance.

A brief discussion followed, in which Mr. Capleton, Mr. Percy Preston, and the Revs. W. G. Tarrant and T. P. Spedding took part, relating to the arrangements for the control of the Pioneer Preachers' movement, and the Rev. J. A. Pearson urged the desirability of publishing a new series of pamphlets dealing with Unitarianism and the various social problems of the day, such as sweated labour, civic life, &c. Mr. Spedding gave some details of the arrangements of the Van Mission for the coming season, which is to extend from May 18 to October 3. One of the vans is to tour in North Wales; the Rev. H. D. Roberts, missionary minister of the Liverpool Association, is co-operating in the arrangements, and his Association will make a grant in aid of expenses. Another van will start from South Wales and work towards Wolverhampton, perhaps reaching as far as Tamworth. The van which has been in Gainsborough during the winter will spend some time in that district, and then move towards the South Yorkshire coalfield, where there are rapid developments of population. The London route will include a number of places which have been previously visited, and some of which have requested a further mission, the Rev. J. A. Pearson, minister of the London District Unitarian Society, assisting in the arrangements. A good deal of new ground will be broken during the season, and as the population is less concentrated it is scarcely likely that the numerical results can be as large as in the last year or two, but each of the districts has been the subject of suggestions at one time or another, and if the ministers will volunteer in sufficient numbers it is hoped that the programme laid down for the season will be satisfactorily carried out.

The President, in moving the adoption of the report, made appreciative references to the late Rev. J. Worsley Austin, Mr. Stanton Preston, and Mrs. Rutt, by whose death the Association suffers a severe loss. A resolution of sympathy with the relations and friends of the deceased members was passed, all standing. Continuing, Mr. Leigh said he thought the report was a satisfactory one, and that no grave apprehensions need be entertained on the score of finance—urgent though it was that efforts should be made to increase the subscriptions—in view of the time rapidly approaching when they would receive direct benefit from the Sustentation Fund. It was one of the most important features of their work at the moment that they would be relieved by this means of many of the burdens pressing on them now, and enabled to extend their activities in other directions where the field was so wide and promising. The report of the Van Mission was also a satisfactory one, and he could testify from personal experience to the way in which the ideas of the liberal faith were presented by the Pioneer preachers. It was not, however, to be expected that the Mission should be equally successful in every place, and it had to be remembered that the work required special gifts which some ministers did not feel they possessed. In conclusion he voiced the feelings of those present in repeating the cordial welcome which had been given to Mr. Bowie on his return from Canada, and thanking him for the admirable report of his tour of investigation which they had now had an opportunity of reading. Mr. Chatfield Clarke urged that while congratulating themselves on the fact that their burdens would be substantially relieved when the new scheme in connection with the Sustentation Fund came into operation, they should not forget that the money thus released, and as much more as they could obtain by increased subscriptions, was needed to help on the work which had been cramped by the necessity for economy, as well as for new enterprises.

In connection with the arrangements for Whit-week it was announced that the Essex Hall lecture will be given on June 2, by the Dean of St. Paul's, the subject being "The Religious Philosophy of Plotinus, and some Modern Philosophies of Religion." On the same day Professor Eucken will give a lecture in German on "The Transient and the Permanent in Christianity," at Essex Hall. On Wednesday evening four addresses will be given on "Our Religious Outlook" as follows:—"Tradition and Inspiration," the Rev. R. N. Cross (Leeds); "The Foundation of Truth," the Rev. J. Cyril Flower (Sale); "Human Needs To-Day," the Rev. Lawrence Clare (Hull); and "The Gospel of a Free Faith," the Rev. E. Stanley Russell. It was also announced that Mr. J. F. L. Brunner, M.P., has consented to be nominated as President of the Association in succession to Mr. H. S. Leigh.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD STREET CHAPEL.

ADDRESS BY DR. L. P. JACKS.

THE sixteenth annual meeting of subscribers and friends of the Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel was held on Tuesday, March 31, at 7.45, Dr. L. P. Jacks presiding. The secretary, Mr. A. A. Tayler, read the report of the Committee, which referred to the settlement of the Rev. W. J. Piggott as successor to the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, and to the way in which both Mr. and Mrs. Piggott have realised the expectations of the workers at Stamford-street by the enthusiasm they have shown and their keen and practical interest in all the activities of the Mission. Reference was also made to the death of Miss Mary Bridgett, to whose unfailing interest and constant effort the Mission has owed so much. The report was supplemented by a cordial letter from the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, which was read to the meeting. The minister's report gave an account of the work of the Mission since Mr. Piggott entered upon his ministry in November last. A reference was made to the remarkable spirit of reverence which characterises all the services, and to the inauguration of a three months' Indoor Mission which will be followed by a series of open-air services in the summer. The financial statement showed that there is urgent need of new subscriptions in view of the heavy yearly deficit.

Dr. Jacks, in moving the adoption of the reports, said they had heard an excellent account of the work that is being done in connection with Stamford-street Chapel, especially among the young people, and it was evident that a high degree of confidence and affection existed between the minister and the congregation. He had received a most encouraging impression from those reports, because he could see they were not going to spend their time, as it was spent at so many of the meetings he attended, in discussing why they did not get on. They did get on, and they were filled with the consciousness that good work was being done without having the least misgiving as to the value of that work. He had had some experience of domestic missions, though it was his lasting regret that he had never actually been a missionary minister, and he believed that they represented quite the most important thing their churches were doing at the present day. He had found among missionaries the most devoted ministers he had ever known, and the most devout congregations he had ever seen in connection with the Unitarian body had been mission congregations. It had often been said that their message was a message primarily for cultivated and well-to-do people, "but I believe," said Dr. Jacks, "that there never was a more mistaken parrot-cry than that. The most successful work that I have seen done in the great cities in which I have lived has been down among the poor, and the impression which has been formed in my mind and deepened by association with these missions is that our message, so far from being unsuitable for the poor, is acceptable to them because they are the very people who are quickest to understand it, and the most ready to respond to it. I hope we shall soon hear the last of this quite absurd statement. The work of the mission churches is important, first because of its immediate effects as a civilising religious influence, but even more because by means of it we are forming a strong link between our churches and the great tradition of Christianity. It means that we are going after the lost sheep, and it is only by so doing that we can make good our claim to be a living factor in the Church of Christ. So long as we are engaged in this work we may be perfectly at ease as to the validity of our claim to be in the direct line of succession from Christ and his apostles." They were hearing a great deal about the problem of poverty at the present time, Dr. Jacks continued, but it must never be forgotten that while they were talking about it the misery was going on, the hungry were getting hungrier, the people to be helped more helpless. It had been said "the poor ye have always with you," but it was not the same poor that they had with them all the time. The poor of to-day would be beyond their reach in 20 years, and the need for immediate help was, therefore, urgent. Society had often been spoken of as if, like the wicked man who repents and turns over a new leaf towards the close of his life, it could go on in its evil ways and hope to put all right in the end, but that was not a very hopeful view to take of things, and it was not the attitude of Christian charity when confronted by miseries which it could relieve. Christian charity realised that there can be no such thing as standing still and letting things go from bad to worse. It acted with promptitude, like the Good Samaritan, who probably would have done nothing at all if he had sat down to think about it. As an old labourer who was rather tired of waiting for social reforms to come along had once expressed it, "there is a lot of righteousness in speed," and that was just where the distinction lay between the way science went about the work of improving mankind and the way the spirit of Christ set about it. It was the business of science to be slow, but it was the business of Christian love to be extraordinarily quick. That was the spirit which underlay all their mission work. If their achievements were to be judged by the standards of social science, they might not make a very splendid show, but so long as they could bear scrutiny in the light of the higher standard of love and sympathy, they might go on fully assured that it was the work of God and Jesus Christ.

The adoption of the reports was seconded by Mr. Savage Cooper, and carried. The committee and officers for the ensuing year were elected on the motion of the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, seconded by Mr. Alfred Wilson, and cordial wishes were tendered to the Rev. W. J. and Mrs. Piggott for the success and happiness of their work at Stamford-street by Mr. C. F. Pearson and Mr. A. W. Harris. The Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, in proposing a vote of thanks to all who had assisted in the work of the Mission and Chapel during the past year, dissented somewhat from the view taken by the Chairman in regard to the necessity of acting quickly when confronted with the misery caused by poverty. He felt that the improved conditions of a neighbourhood like Stamford-street and other similar districts had been brought about by the enormous amount of care, patience, and study which they had now learnt this sort of work required more than mere impulsive action. Dr. Moritz Weston, of Croydon, in seconding the resolution, said the workers were to be congratulated on being in the practical school of sociology. It was through their efforts that other people, who came among them ignorant of social conditions, learnt what these really were, so that their work had a wider scope than they realised. A vote of thanks to Dr. Jacks for presiding, proposed by Dr. Foster Morley, and seconded by the Rev. H. Gow, brought the proceedings to a close.

BRISTOL DOMESTIC MISSION. ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting of the Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission, Lower Montague-street, Bristol, was held on March 24, Mr. P. J. Worsley presiding. The Rev. Thomas Graham, in presenting his seventh annual report, said the results of the work during the past twelve months had certainly been encouraging. The Sunday school was in a very satisfactory condition, there being a staff of 21 teachers, with 146 scholars, at the beginning of January last. The committee's report, in which much regret was expressed at losing Mr. Graham, who is leaving Bristol to take up other mission work at Birmingham, was read by Mr. E. Sibree, hon. secretary, and the financial statement by Mr. J. Kenrick Champion. The Rev. A. N. Blatchford, in moving the adoption of the reports and accounts, said the thought of Mr. Graham's leaving was uppermost in their minds. Mr. Graham had, in his report, made a very satisfactory conclusion to the self-denying work which he had carried on with such good effect at the Mission. It was first and before all a domestic mission, and it was in that branch of the work that Mr. Graham would be most warmly remembered by those to whom he had ministered. The resolution was seconded by Mr. W. Norgrove, and carried. The Chairman then moved a resolution of warm thanks to the Rev. Thomas Graham and his sister, Miss Graham, for their zealous and loyal services to the Mission during the past year, expressing deep regret at losing their services, coupled with best wishes for their success in their new work. The resolution was seconded by Mr. C. Cole, and cordially adopted. A resolution of welcome to Mr. Thomas Gaylard, Mr. Graham's successor, was also proposed by the Chairman, Dr. Beckh seconding, the Mission workers were thanked for their efforts, and the committee re-elected, with Mr. Worsley again as President. In the course of the evening a presentation was made to Mr. and Miss Graham on behalf of the friends and supporters of the Mission. On Wednesday evening a gathering of the congregation, workers, and elder scholars was held to bid farewell to Mr. Graham, and a presentation was made by Mr. Thomas Gaylard, one of the oldest workers at the Mission, who is to succeed Mr. Graham, on behalf of the workers and scholars.

THE CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT.

CONFERENCE AT LINDSEY HALL.

MISS CATHERINE GITTINS writes from 6, Salisbury-road, Leicester:—"I have been asked by the Editor to give some account of the Conference held at Lindsey Hall on March 25. It was a deeply interesting and memorable occasion for the few who were present. It had been arranged with difficulty, owing to the sudden and lamentable breakdown in health of the Rev. Harold Speight, who had undertaken to summon it, and it was held on an evening of political crisis when it seemed almost impossible to think of anything else. But this was soon forgotten when Mr. Wicksteed, who was in the chair, began to speak on the subject we were met to discuss, viz., the need for rousing public opinion on the grave evils of the present Criminal Law. He emphasised the necessity for a wise reticence in dealing with these painful matters, and said it was laid on but few to bear open testimony, but none the less, the educating of public opinion on these subjects was a duty that could not be shirked, and our Churches must do their part, whether by silence or by speech, to raise the tone of public morality and create an ideal of conduct which should lead to the establishment of purer and juster laws.

"Lady Bunting explained very clearly the provisions of the Acts in question and the pressing need for their amendment, and pointed out that nothing could avail to place them on the Statute Book but the constant and insistent pressure of public opinion. She spoke also of the lax administration of the Law as it stands, and gave instances of gross cruelty and injustice which had resulted. One practical measure to work for, besides the raising of the 'age of consent,' was the appointment of women police for the protection of women and children, and the taking down of their depositions in the Courts, a measure which had been adopted in several American cities with good effect and had lately proved very efficacious in Berlin, where the prejudice against it had been entirely overcome. Some discussion ensued, and a few suggestions were made for the consideration of the Committee of the Union for Social Service, under whose auspices the meeting was held.

"May I take this opportunity of asking the officials of any Churches which have passed the resolution on raising the age of consent recommended in a recent circular letter issued by the Committee to report the fact to me if they have not already done so? The following Churches have considered and passed it: Darlington, at the meeting of the Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Association; South Shields, the Old Meeting (Birmingham), Flowery Field, Essex Church, the congregation at University Hall, and Cross-street, Manchester. A new leaflet on the subject, clearing up some of the technical points which were considered doubtful in the last one, has been issued by the Criminal Law Amendment Committee and can be had from their office, 19, Totill-street, Westminster."

PRESENTATION TO MR. G. H. LEIGH SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT FOR FORTY YEARS.

ON Saturday, March 28, a meeting was held at Monton to recognise the completion by Mr. George H. Leigh, J.P., C.C., of forty years' service as superintendent of the Sunday school, and to present him with an illuminated address to mark the occasion. The Rev. N. Anderton was in the chair, and, after a short speech in which he paid both a general and a personal tribute to Mr. Leigh, he called on Mr. John Dendy to make the presentation. Mr. Dendy disavowed all flattery; and if his praises were not extravagant they were at least subject to no deductions. Mr. Leigh had shown himself in numerous outside activities emphatically a good citizen, and in particular he had shown himself an indefatigable supporter of Sunday school institutions. As a business man and as a man of leisure he had equally resisted the temptation to mere relaxation or the personal satisfaction of the pursuit of beauty. An exceptionally long career had been marked by loyalty to family tradition and to the personal call. The address was then handed to Mr. Leigh. Mr. H. J. Broadbent spoke next. He mentioned that he was present at the meeting forty years ago at which Mr. Leigh was elected superintendent. Since then he had been re-elected annually without question, and the present occasion was not a leave-taking, but a recognition of duty well done and an anticipation of its continuance. Mr. W. G. Nanson also spoke briefly, and Miss Alice Leigh unveiled a portrait of Mr. Leigh hung on the school wall, a replica being presented to him.

Mr. Leigh then responded. He reviewed the history of the church and school during the period of his activity, and sufficiently showed the truth of a remark made earlier in the evening that he had not only inherited but enriched tradition. His work had been its own reward, but the form in which the appreciation of friends had expressed itself made this the crowning event of his life.

The evening was begun with songs from Miss Swindells and Mr. A. C. Vallance, and when the main business was at an end the gathering took on the social character of a re-union of past and present teachers and scholars.

THE NEW HEBRIDES DILEMMA.

AN important private conference to consider the situation which has arisen in the New Hebrides was held on Tuesday at the Whitehall Rooms. The conference was called by the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society, and largely attended by members of Parliament and representatives of missionary and other societies. Sir T. Fowell Buxton, Bt., President of the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society, was in the chair, supported by Admirals Sir Geo. King Hall, the Hon. Sir E. R. Fremantle, Sir Wilmot H. Fawkes, the Dean of Durham, Sir Geo. Toulmin, M.P., Rt. Hon. J. W. Wilson, M.P., Mr. Douglas Hall, M.P., Mr. Joynson-Hicks, M.P., Sir Mackworth Young, Surgeon-General Evatt, &c.

Mr. Travers Buxton, the secretary, informed the conference of the steps taken by the Society to secure reform, whilst the Rev. J. H. Harris dealt with the different solutions of the problem which had been proposed.

It was unanimously decided to ask Sir Edward Grey to receive a deputation after Easter with the object of urging an Anglo-French Commission of Inquiry.

HANDSOME GIFT TO THE PARGETER TRUST.

WE are informed that a generous donation of £2,500 has been made to the Pargeter Trust by a friend who desires to remain anonymous. The number of applicants for annuities always far exceeds the vacancies. The additional income will be most useful in extending the beneficent operations of the charity, and will doubtless encourage others to be generous. Annuities are given out of the trust to deserving unmarried women of 55 years or upwards. The trustees are to be influenced in their selection "by the previous as well as the then present position of the recipient; to wit, as one who has been reduced by misfortune, or who has had a strenuous but unsuccessful effort to support herself, and wholly irrespective and without regard to the religious persuasion or doctrines held by the recipient." The Secretary is Mr. E. Copeley Harding, 32, Waterloo-street, Birmingham.

A SERIES of devotional services will be held in the King's Weigh House Church (Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, W.) on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday in Holy Week, commencing each evening at 8 o'clock. The services will be conducted by the Rev. E. W. Lewis, and the Choir Master will be grateful to receive offers of voluntary assistance from any members of other choirs who may be free to attend any or all of them. Such offers may be addressed to Mr. Lewis, or to Mr. T. M. Baker at the King's Weigh House.

WE have been asked to state that copies of "The Poem of Job," by the late Miss Marian Pritchard, may be had by school teachers and others on application (enclosing 2d. for postage) to Mr. Hale, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Bedfield.—The annual Sunday-school party in connection with the Suffolk Village Mission took place on March 23. The chair was taken by Mr. W. H. Sands, the newly appointed missionary, who spoke a few kind and encouraging words to the Sunday scholars and their parents, many of whom were present. Miss Florence Hill presented the prizes, and a short programme of hymns, songs, and recitations followed.

Blackpool.—The South Shore Unitarian Free Church (minister, the Rev. H. Bodell Smith) has just ended a programme of satisfactory winter's work. The Sunday services have been securing increased attendances. On Sunday evening last a presentation of a music cabinet was made to Mr. John Cunliffe, who has just retired from the post of organist after 14 years' voluntary service.

Bury St. Edmunds.—The quarterly meeting of the Eastern Union of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches was held in the Churchgate-street Chapel, on March 26, the Rev. E. W. Lummis (Cambridge) presiding. It was announced that the Rev. W. G. Tarrant would preach the Union annual sermon at Friars-street Chapel, Ipswich, on Thursday, June 18. Mr. Robert Hamblyn (Ipswich) was elected as hon. secretary pro tem., in succession to the Rev. A. Golland, who has resigned owing to his approaching removal to London.

Doncaster.—In connection with the Free Christian Church, Doncaster, there is a women's organisation entitled the Pleasant Monday Evenings. Anniversary services were held on Sunday, March 22, when Miss A. H. Allayne, hon. secretary of the Liberal Christian League, was the invited speaker. The Doncaster Chronicle says: "The services were not only a great success in the best sense of the term, but afforded a convincing testimony to the church and the town of what a really live up-to-date women's institution can achieve in the cause of religion and social uplifting. The institution has won a new place for good during the few years of its existence, and Miss Allayne, who is a quiet, restrained, and exceedingly thoughtful speaker, struck the right note on Sunday afternoon when she chose as her theme 'The building of the Temple.' The evening discourse, delivered before a crowded congregation (600), was heard intently to the end. From the words, 'I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life,' the preacher made an incontrovertible defence of spiritual power as the only dynamic that would save the individual and society." On the following Sunday Miss Allayne addressed the Free Christian congregation at Shildon, Durham, and has held week-night meetings at Darlington, Leeds, and Birmingham.

Glasgow.—Mr. Barrett Ayres, one of the Pioneer Preachers, has concluded a five months' engagement at the Unitarian Church, Ross-street, and at a farewell social gathering held on Friday, March 27, he was cordially thanked for his services which have been much appreciated by the congregation.

Liverpool: British Women's League.—A large and successful gathering was held in the Ullet-road Church Hall on March 26, to meet Mrs. W. Blake Odgers, of London, the president of the League. There was an attendance of about 200, eight Unitarian churches being represented. Mrs. Roberts, the president of the Liverpool branch, presided. The theme of Mrs. Odgers' address was "Fellowship," and she emphasised the importance of the strengthening and deepening of the religious life of the League's members. Whilst civic work claimed its quota of service, and women of varying religious creeds worked together for the good of the community, the opportunities for the upholders of a liberal faith to join with their co-workers in religious fellowship were few, and therefore any movement for the deepening of the spiritual life of members of the League must come within its borders. The objects held in view were these:—To create a living sympathy among their own members; to welcome lonely women who came timidly among them as strangers; to introduce those who leave our shores for America, Canada, Australia, and put them in connection with League members there; to be always ready to join in helping a weaker church. The League was wholly democratic, and members met as women drawn together in one common bond. The Postal Mission might be regarded as opening the door to strangers, the Women's League as playing the hostess and welcoming those who entered. The Fellowship Section of the League was world-wide, and aimed at keeping in touch with all its members, whether in the British Isles or in distant lands. Mrs. Odgers encouraged all members to take an imperial view, and stretch their imagination "to look beyond Beachy Head." Extracts were read from reports of other branches, and from letters sent by solitary members who had found friends and religious fellowship as a result of the good offices of the League. In the discussion that followed, Mrs. Billinge gave an account of a recent visit to the branch of the League at Padiham. A vote of thanks to Mrs. W. B. Odgers was proposed by Mrs. Lloyd Jones, and seconded by Mrs. A. W. Wilmer.

London: Hackney.—During the Sundays in March special addresses were given at the New Gravel Pit Church by the Revs. W. J. Piggott, Bertram Lister, J. Arthur Pearson, A. H. Biggs, E. Stanley Russell, Joseph Wilson, and W. G. Tarrant, the general subject in the mornings being "Religion and Modern Problems," and in the evenings "The Unitarian View." At the annual meeting of the Sunday School, which was held on March 26, a resolution was passed thanking all who had contributed to the building fund for Aspland Hall.

London: Hampstead.—On Monday, March 30, the first annual meeting was held of the subscribers to the Rosslyn-hill Vigilance Fund, a fund which is raised by the members of Rosslyn-hill Chapel, Hampstead, to provide the salary of an additional station-worker for the National Vigilance Association. The meeting was a public one, many members of other churches and chapels in the neighbourhood being present. After the formal business the Rev. Henry Gow moved a resolution urging the Government to amend the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1912 by raising the age of consent to 18 years. This was seconded by Mrs. James Gow, of Westminster, who emphasised the curious attitude of the English law, which holds that until the age of 21 neither girls nor boys are competent to deal with property in any way, but yet considers that at 16 a girl is fully qualified to give away her greatest treasure, herself, and the man who has wronged her must not be touched in any way. Mrs. Gow then gave a clear and inspiring address on the white slave traffic, dealing with it from 1879, when a few philanthropic workers suspected the existence of a highly organised system of commercialised vice, to the present day, when all civilised countries are united in an international agreement for its suppression. In England the Act of 1912 has very greatly remedied the defects of the Act of 1885, and the raising of the age of consent would very largely affect the white slave traffic; but, besides urging the importance of new laws, we need to watch more carefully how the present law is administered. Those who have felt it their painful duty to study the cases of crimes against women, and especially those against children, have been appalled at the inadequacy of the sentences frequently given, showing that these offences are lightly regarded by many of those who administer the law as being of much less importance than offences against property. The law is strong enough, the sentences can be heavy, but they are not given. Mrs. Gow then spoke of an experiment now being made by the Home Office and the National Vigilance Association in dealing with foreign women in London sentenced to deportation. Formerly they were swept from our shores helpless, friendless, with no prospect of a better life before them; now every such woman is visited in prison by a worker from the N.V.A., who comes as a friend, endeavours to win her confidence, and to find out where her home is, and what chance there is of helping her. In the case of those who are willing the expulsion order is served, not by the police, but by the lady, who takes her from the prison, travels with her to her destination—it may be to Berlin or further still—and leaves her with friends who will help her to a new life. During its six months' trial this humane method of treating the women of other nations has marvellously strengthened the international bond, and the information gained from them as to how and why they came to this life will prove invaluable in future efforts for prevention. The resolution was supported by the Ven. A. F. Sharp (vicar of St. Stephen's, Hampstead), and was carried unanimously. In moving the vote of thanks to Mrs. Gow, Mr. Grundy spoke of their deep feeling of thankfulness that Rosslyn-hill Chapel had been able to join so earnestly in the fight for the cause of purity.

London: Kilburn.—The Rev. T. P. Spedding, who preached at the Unitarian Church, Quex-road, last Sunday, is taking the services for another five weeks pending the appointment of a regular minister.

London Lay Preachers' Union.—The monthly meeting of the Union was held at Essex Hall on Monday, March 30. Service was conducted by Mr. A. G. Tarrant. Subsequently analyses were read by members of Channing's discourse on "The Imitableness of Christ's Character."

Manchester: Failsforth.—On Saturday last a Sale of Work was held to raise funds to pay some remaining accounts for the recent extensive alterations, and other purposes. The opening ceremony was performed by Mrs. Edward Whitehead, and the chair occupied by Mrs. Henry Shepherd—both members of the congregation. Nearly £130 was raised.

Mountain Ash.—On Thursday, March 26, the Brotherhood Church entertained the members of the Guilds connected with the Unitarian churches of Pontypridd, Aberdare, and Treecynon, when an excellent musical programme was given, and short addresses were delivered by representatives of each church, including Mr. John Lewis (Pontypridd), president of the South East Wales Society.

York.—Upon the last three Sunday evenings very interesting conferences have been held at St. Saviourgate Chapel following special addresses by the minister, the Rev. J. Tyssul Davis. These addresses were based on a number of statements of belief and difficulties of belief presented by men and women, most of whom are out of sympathy with any religious organisation. It was a local application of the experiment made not long ago by the Christian Commonwealth of ascertaining the "Faith by which they live" of a typical group of thoughtful people. The three discourses dealt with such topics as "In what way are we to regard the reality of the universe, is it purposive and is it personal?" "How reconcile the 'cruelty of nature' with the doctrine of providential care?" "What is the nature of man; is there anything independent of a physical organism, &c.?" The experiment created considerable interest and is offered as a suggestion to sister churches. The discussions were characterised throughout by fine courtesy, united with frank candour and good temper wedded to earnest desire for truth.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE WOMEN'S LOCAL GOVERNMENT SOCIETY.

The Women's Local Government Society held its annual meeting on Wednesday, March 25, at the Caxton Hall, the Lady Emmott presiding. The annual report showed that the work in relation to Parliamentary Bills and to the formation of local associations in different parts of the country had gone on actively throughout the year. Dr. Shipman, formerly M.P. for Northampton, introduced the following motion for the incorporation of the Society in pursuance of the resolution adopted a year ago:—"This meeting resolves that the Women's Local Government Society be incorporated as an association not for profit with liability limited by guarantee, and adopts the memorandum and articles of association submitted by the committee, subject to modification to be made at the request of the Board of Trade." Lady Lockyer, hon. treasurer, seconded the motion, and explanations having been given by the solicitor, Mr. W. Arthur Sharpe, and questions having been answered, it was carried unanimously. Mrs. Vince, ex-Poor Law Guardian (Birmingham) voiced the satisfaction which was felt owing to the fact that the County and Borough Councils (Qualification) Bill, originally introduced by Dr. Shipman in 1908, has now been introduced as a Government measure by the President of the Local Government Board, and said their thanks were due to the Prime Minister and the Government, and in particular Mr. Herbert Samuel and Mr. John Burns."

THE WEEKLY HALF-HOLIDAY.

It is over seventy years since thirteen young men met at the Commercial Tavern in High Holborn to discuss what measures could be adopted to secure for themselves and their colleagues some weekly opportunity for rest and recreation in addition to that provided by Sunday. The Early Closing Association, which was then started, and which, we are reminded by the Times, received strong support from such men as Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Brougham, Lord John Russell, Mr. (afterwards Sir) Arthur James Tennent, and Mr. Samuel Morley, had twenty years of hard work before it could convince the adversaries of the movement that long working hours and restricted leisure were detrimental alike to health of body and mind. At last, in the early sixties, the coveted concession was secured, though it would probably have been delayed longer had it not been for the revival of the Volunteer movement, and the urgent necessity for time to participate in it. This only ensured the Saturday half-holiday, however, to a number of employees in London, and it was not till the eighties that a plan for securing a mid-week early closing day and developing the half-holiday into a national institution was carried through. This year the jubilee of the setting apart to a large section of the community of Saturday afternoon as a regular holiday is to be celebrated, and an appeal is being made for funds to further the objects of the Early Closing Association at the present time.

SMOKE ABATEMENT.

Lord Newton, who has been described as "a determined rooter out of various pestilences and scourges, human or otherwise," moved the second reading of the Smoke Abatement Bill in the House of Lords this week, and in view of the fact that there did not seem the remotest chance of the Bill becoming law this year, asked the Government to institute an inquiry. He urged that in the interests of public health the purification of the atmosphere was quite as important as the purification of water and food. As a result the Government has promised to appoint a strong Departmental Committee to go into the whole question, and to make proposals for the consideration of Parliament. The Bill has the support of various smoke-abatement societies and municipalities, and cannot be said to deal with a matter of small importance when we remember that 200,000 tons of sulphur are poured out by our chimneys annually, and that 76,000 tons of soot descend from the sky in London alone.

EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS IN INDIA.

According to the latest returns quoted in the Times, the knowledge of English is spreading very rapidly in India, the total number of persons possessing it—1·7 million—being nearly 50 per cent. greater than at the beginning of the century. Among the influential Parsis of the Western Presidency, one person in every three knows the English language. In regard to general literacy, the level attained is not very high, naturally, and the disproportion between the two sexes is still enormous, for while 106 out of every thousand of the male population are able to read and write, only 10 per thousand of the female population are able to do so. The census does not take account of the large number who can decipher the pages of a printed book—popular Hindu epics, or the Koran—with more or less difficulty. In Burma, where alone Buddhism prevails, and there is a system of free instruction in the monasteries, the percentage of literate individuals rises to 222 per thousand. Generally, education is more widely diffused in British areas than in the native states, and, although the Indian converts to Christianity are recruited mainly from the lowest castes, who are almost wholly illiterate, they have, in proportion to their numbers, three times as many literate persons as the Hindus, and more than four times as many as the Mahomedans. The overwhelming dependence of the people on the cultivation of the soil is one of the most striking facts brought out by the census, which states that more than 72 per cent. are supported by "the exploitation of the surface of the earth." The extremely primitive character of the general functional distribution of employments in India is revealed by a table showing that nine-tenths of the population are still supported by the simple occupations commonly followed by the village communities.

HYDON HEATH AND HYDON'S BALL.

Hydon's Ball is the name of a hill-crest in Surrey, about three miles south of Godalming, which the National Trust are hoping to secure, and which, it has been suggested, would constitute a fitting memorial to Miss Octavia Hill. It rises to a height of nearly 600 ft. above sea level, and the track to the summit leads through a wilderness of juniper, heather, gorse, and bracken, the latter growing to the height of six or seven, or even occasionally twelve feet. The origin of the name is uncertain. In recent issues of the Ordnance Survey maps the place is spelt Highdown, but it has for many years been known locally as "Hydon," and there is a curious and unexplained rhyme connected with it which runs:—

On Hydon's top there is a cup,
And in that cup there is a drop;
Take up the cup and drink the drop,
And place the cup on Hydon's top.

Nothing appears to be known as to what will happen when this command is obeyed. The National Trust has decided to take up a six months' option of purchase on what are regarded as exceptionally favourable terms. It is proposed to acquire an area of some 92 acres. The price is £5,000, but an appeal is made for £5,500, as in addition to the purchase money provision must be made for the erection of a caretaker's cottage, and for legal and other necessary expenses. Subscriptions may be sent to Mr. S. H. Hamer, secretary, "The National Trust," 25, Victoria-street, S.W.

HOSPITALITY FOR INDIAN STUDENTS.

The arrangements made by the Secretary of State for India and by the various organisations working at 21, Cromwell-road, for the benefit of Indian students in this country, are being supplemented by the formation of an unofficial committee of English people designed to show these young men friendly hospitality. Lord Haldane has accepted the presidency, and Sir Frederick A. Robertson, late Chief Judge of the Punjab Chief Court, is chairman. It is felt that there are many English people in London who would like to have opportunities to meet Indian visitors and make them welcome in English homes, and many residents at holiday centres willing to co-operate in offering to the students opportunities of joining in English society there.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

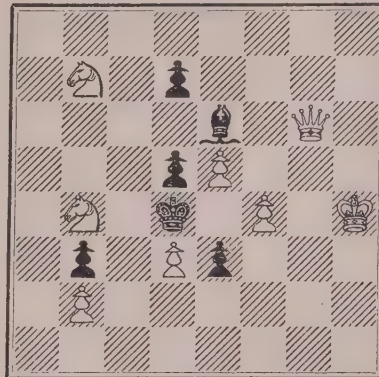

APRIL 4, 1914.

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 51.

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS (Hampstead).

BLACK. (6 men.)

WHITE. (8 men.)

White to play and mate in two moves.

SOLUTION OF No. 49.

1. Kt. R7 (key-move).

SOLUTION OF No. 49A.—1. Kt. Kt5 (key-move).

Correct solutions have been received from E. C. (Highbury), W. T. M. (Sunderland), W. Williams, F. S. M. (Mayfield), D. Amos, A. S. Rodgers (also No. 47), O. Lupton, W. B., A. Mielziner, John White, Rev. B. C. Constable, E. Wright, W. E. Arkell, Dr. Higginson, Geo. Ingledew, Rev. I. Wrigley, and one unsigned from Manchester.

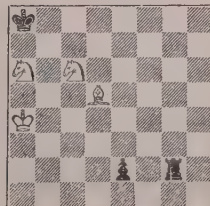

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. T. M.—I should prefer the earlier dates.

E. C. (Highbury).—I can only repeat that the key to No. 48 is 1. R. B2. If White plays 1. Kt. KB2, Black replies 1... B. B4, and there is no mate. You suggest 2. Q takes B, but this is not mate.

Now and then there appear new problems which play havoc with the reputation of accomplished solvers. I quote herewith a problem by a young composer which led a

No. 51A.
By C. S. KIPPING.
BLACK (3 men.)

WHITE (4 men).
White mates in 3 moves.

(1912) as one of the famous problems of that year. It is not so much the discovery of the key that is the point, as the fact that there is only one correct key. There are, I believe, some who still think it is cooked. The scheme is worthy of Loyd himself. The strategy is of a very high order, though some of the variations are uninteresting.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCs.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh-street, Tavistock-square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

BRIGHTON AND HOVE.—Summer School and Holiday Recreative Party (3rd year) will be held in a mansion standing in beautifully wooded grounds, approached by Lodge entrance and carriage drive, through an avenue of trees. Centrally and charmingly situated near sea.—Prospectus from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, Food Reform Guest House 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by
Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

TABLE CLOTHS FROM IRELAND.

White All-Linen Damask, superior quality. Pretty Floral Designs. 2 yards square 6s. 6d., postage 4d. extra. Amazing Bargain offer. Catalogue free.—Write now, HUTTON's, 5, Larne, Ireland.

BREAKFAST CLOTHS OF Genuine

Irish Cream Damask, with pretty Shamrock centre; 40 inches square, only 1s. Postage 3d. extra. Extraordinary Bargain. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue.—HUTTON's, 5, Larne, Ireland.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

Any condition. We are the first and only firm to offer and pay highest genuine prices. Note quotations: Up to 2s. 9d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 6s. 6d. on silver, 15s. on gold, 35s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel, post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Unquestionably the oldest and most reliable firm. Bankers, Parrs.—S. CANN & Co. (Dept. 444), 69a, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the O.B. 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. March 27 (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday April 4, 1914.

Regarding Advertisement Rates see inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3746.
NEW SERIES, No. 850.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1914.

[ONE PENNY.

Now Ready for April. Price One Penny.

"YOUNG DAYS."

Edited by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT.

CONTENTS.

The Winds, the Birds, and the Telegraph Wires.
The Unknown Sculptor.
"Such Lovely Photographs!" (Full-page Picture.)
Spring. (Poetry.)
The Juggler. (Poetry.)
Bessie's Wonder-Morning.
Fruit-Blossom. (Picture Pages.)
The Lost Hair of Mound Hall.
Young Days' Guild Work.
Mother Nature's Children. (Illustrated.)
How the Pussy Willows Came. (Poetry.)
Temperance Ideas.
The Best Drink.
Why April Weeps.
In Early Spring.
April.
Puzzles and Puzzlers:
Editor's Chat, &c.

Published by

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

SERVICES will be conducted by
REV. EDWARD LEWIS, M.A., B.D., at
THE KING'S WEIGH HOUSE CHURCH,
DUKE STREET, W., on
GOOD FRIDAY " 10, 11 a.m.
EASTER SUNDAY " 12, 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.
The Church is 3 mins. from Bond St. (Tube) Station.

THE KING'S WEIGH HOUSE PULPIT, April Issue
THE HIDDEN ARK.
By EDWARD LEWIS.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

PEARL
ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.
P. J. FOLEY, Esq., President.

Annual Income £3,340,000
Claims Paid exceed £15,000,000

Additional Representatives Wanted.

F. D. BOWLES, } Managing
G. SHRUBSALL, } Directors.

BOOKS
EDUCATIONAL, LITERARY,
TECHNICAL, CIVIL SERVICE
And for all other Exams.
Second-Hand at Half Prices.
New at 25 per cent. Discount. Send for Catalogues post free and state wants. Books bought.
BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL.

W. & G. FOYLE,
121/123, Charing Cross Road, LONDON, W.C.

The Inquirer.

Among recent Articles are the following :—
Sacraments. By Rev. J. WORSLEY AUSTIN, M.A. April 4.
Labour on Achill. By K. F. PURDON. April 4.
God's Exile. By J. TYSSUL DAVIS. Mar. 28.
The Church of the Loyal. By L. P. JACKS, D.D. Mar. 21.
A National Christian Congress. By E. W. LEWIS, M.A. Mar. 14.

Any of the above issues may be obtained from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C., post free, 1½d.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, 11.15. Evening, 7.
April
12. Rev. J. EDWIN ODGERS, D.D. (of Manchester College, Oxford).
No Evening Service.
19. Morning, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D. (Late of Trinity Church, Glasgow, and King's Weigh House Church, London).
Evening, Mr. R. PHILIPSON, B.A. (of Manchester College, Oxford).
26. Morning, Rev. JOHN HUNTER, D.D.
Evening, Mr. W. HARRIS CROOK, B.A. (of Manchester College, Oxford).

GRESHAM LECTURES.

DR. BLAKE ODGERS, K.C., will deliver Four Lectures on the "Law of Libel," with special reference to "Newspapers" on April 21, 22, 23, and 24, at 6 p.m., in Gresham College, Basinghall Street, E.C. Admission Free to Men and Women.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

THE Young People's Meeting
will be held at
Essex Hall, Essex Street, W.C.,
Saturday, April 25, 1914.

Speakers :
Mr. A. Savage Cooper, President; Miss Edith Wilson, Miss Grace Mitchell, Rev. A. H. Biggs, and Mr. T. M. Chalmers.
Tea and Coffee at 7 p.m. Chair to be taken at 7.30.
J. ARTHUR PEARSON.
District Minister

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines with a Preparatory Department. Inclusive Fee, 20 Guineas per Term.

Headmaster : H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.
Full Prospectus on application.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress : Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

CHANTRY MOUNT SCHOOL, BISHOP'S STORTFORD.

Head Mistress : Miss ESTHER CASE, M.A. Dublin (Classical Tripos, Cambridge).

Second Mistress : Miss ESTHERBROOK HICKS B.Sc. Lond.

A sound education for Girls from 7 to 18 years of age.

TAN - Y - BRYN, LLANDUDNO.— PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to
C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.
Next Term begins May 5.

Miss MAUD STREET, L.R.A.M. Contralto.

(Daughter of the late Rev. Jas. C. Street.)

Teacher of Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c.—Apply for terms to 11A, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH, For the Worship of the One God only,

SWALLOW ST. (opposite St. James's Church),
PICCADILLY, W.

REV. WALTER WALSH, D.D.

Sundays at 11 and 7.

SUBJECTS for April 12 :
Morning : The Ethical Motive in Religion.
Evening : Doing the Beautiful.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL
A First-Class Hotel for Ladies and Gentlemen.
Pronounced by the Press to be the Best Temperance Hotel in United Kingdom. Highly commended by thousands of Guests from all parts of the World. Passenger Lifts, Apartments, Service, and Table d'Hôte Breakfast from 5/-
SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON
Tariff and Guide on application to Frederic Smith & Sons.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted, unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday morning before the date of issue.

SUNDAY, April 12.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. A. C. HOLDEN, M.A.
 Balham Assembly Rooms (Small Hall), No service.
 Brompton, Fort-road, 7, Mr. H. N. CALEY.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. MAURICE ELLIOTT.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. MORITZ WESTON, D.D.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON; 7, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND. Good Friday, 11, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND.
 Finchley, Granville-road, Ballards-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.
 Forest Gate, Upton-lane, 11, Mr. A. J. HEALE; 7, Mr. F. G. BARRETT-AYRES.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
 Highgate-hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
 Ilford, High-road, 11 and 7, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. TUDOR JONES.
 Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 and 7, Rev. F. HANKINSON.
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 & 7, Rev. T. B. SPEDDING.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
 Leytonstone, 632, High-road, 6.30, Rev. W. R. CLARK LEWIS.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. W. ROBSON, B.D.
 Richmond Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Dr. C. L. RUDRAM, M.A.
 South Norwood League House, 141, Portland-road, 7, Mr. E. CALETON.
 Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. J. LIONEL TAYLER.
 Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. F. G. BARRETT-AYRES; 7, Mr. A. J. HEALE.
 The Theistic Church, Swallow-street, W., 11 and 7, Rev. WALTER WALSE, D.D.
 University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., 11.15 Rev. J. EDWIN ODGERS, D.D. No evening service.
 Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 West Hampstead, All Souls', Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
 Wimbledon, Smaller Worple Hall, 7, Mr. W. LEE, B.A.
 Wood Green Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON.
 Woolwich, Carmel Chapel, Anglesea-road, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERSTWYTH, New-street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.
 BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ARTHUR C. FOX, B.A.
 BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. R. ANDREAE.
 BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.
 BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Free Church, Lytham-road South, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
 BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New-road, 11 and 7, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.
 CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond-hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN.
 CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS.
 CLIFTON, Oakfield-road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.
 {DEAN Row, 10.45, and
 {STYAL, 6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER.
 DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
 EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle-terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.
 EXETER, George's Chapel, South-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
 GEE CROSS, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HEMING VAUGHAN.
 HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR LOCKETT.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.
 HULL, Park-street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. R. NICOL CROSS, M.A.
 LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.
 LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.
 LISCARD-WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. PARRY.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. CRADDOCK.
 LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WALTER SHORT, B.A.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D. Good Friday, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.
 MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.
 MANCHESTER, Cross-street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11, Rev. J. CYRIL FLOWER; 6.30, Rev. J. EDWARD FLOWER, M.A.
 MANCHESTER, Upper Brook-street, Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. W. SEALEY, M.A.
 NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.
 NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. L. P. JACKS.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.
 PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.
 SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. COCK.
 SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM AGAR.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.
 SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London-road, 11 and 6.30.
 TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, DUDLEY INSTITUTE, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. B. STALLWORTHY.
 WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield-street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins-street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Unitarian Church, Eagles Hall, 1319, Government-street, Sundays, 7.30 p.m.

MARRIAGE.

WATSON—KIMPSTER.—On April 4, at the Royal Chapel of the Savoy, London, Foster Watson, son of the late Thomas and Ann Watson, of Lincoln, to Amy, daughter of the late Samuel L. Kimpster, of Nasborough, and of Mrs. Kimpster, of Cartref, Aberystwyth.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

LADY seeks re-engagement as Companion or Companion-Help to elderly or invalid Lady near London. Good needlewoman, domesticated; good references.—C. M. S., 43, Beckenham-road, Penge.

DUTCH Qualified LADY TEACHER, elementary education, French, German, desires situation Family or School.—Address to R. M. SMITS, Bookseller, Middelburg, Holland.

INVALID or Elderly Lady would find a comfortable Home, with every care and attention, in the house of married Lady-Nurse.—Mrs. G., 37, Halford-road, Richmond Surrey.

LIVERPOOL NURSERY TRAINING COLLEGE.

LADIES trained as Children's Nurses. Fee, £25 for six months' course. Children in residence.—For particulars apply to HON. SEC., LIVERPOOL LADIES' SANITARY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED, 19, Beaumont-street, Liverpool.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 3, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	227
LEAVES FROM A NOTE-BOOK	229
ST. AUGUSTINE	230
THE PILGRIMAGE	231
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—
Tyrrell's Last Essays.	232
Two New Books by Eucken	233
Moral Education	233
Publications Received	233

FOR THE CHILDREN :—
The Parthenon at Athens.	234
MEMORIAL NOTICES :—
The Hon. Rollo Russell	234
Professor Peypnting	235
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
The Humanitarian League	236

British and Foreign Unitarian Association	236
Liverpool Domestic Mission	237
Vacation Term for Biblical Study	237
The Social Movement	238
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES	238
NOTES AND JOTTINGS	239
OUR CHESS COLUMN	240

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23, Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

WE are glad to see that amid all its other excitements the House of Commons has found time to pass the second reading of the Exportation of Horses Bill. It was moved by a Conservative, seconded by a Liberal, and carried without a division. Speaking on behalf of the Government, Mr. Runciman referred to the great improvements which had been introduced since 1910: The returns, he said, showed that the loss on the voyage across the North-Sea had gone down year after year, until last year it was, in percentages, actually half the loss in the carriage of horses across from Ireland to England. When all had been said, however, there was no doubt that a large amount of that traffic was in horses which were unfit to be put to any hardship whatever on the other side. Last year he came to the conclusion that, although under the 1910 Act the inspectors appeared to have been acting fully up to the powers given to them in the interests of the humane treatment of these animals, they might go beyond that, and since last September a higher standard had been adopted. They had, in fact, been acting outside the powers of the Act, but no action had been taken against them. The Bill would give them powers which they did not at present possess. The 1910 Act only gave them powers to prevent animals being put on board ship which were unable to make the voyage. It was quite clear that that did not cover the whole case, and that a great deal of harm might be done after the animal had completed the voyage.

The Bill would give power to prevent the shipment of animals which might suffer not only while making the voyage but on the other side. That was an improvement in the law, and he would be glad to see it placed on the Statute-book.

* * *

ANOTHER non-contentious measure, of special interest to Nonconformists, obtained a second reading the same evening. The aim of the Places of Worship (Enfranchisement) Bill is to give security of tenure where land for church buildings has been granted under lease. Sir Norval Hill, in moving the second reading, pointed out that the Calvinistic Methodist Church in Wales had no fewer than 405 places of worship where the terms of lease secured them for less than 100 years. In the Wesleyan Methodist Church there were 318 places of worship on land leased for less than 100 years. In the course of the debate Mr. Herbert Lewis said the grievance was not a diminishing grievance, but a growing one. He knew of one denomination in Wales which obtained statistics in 1883 that showed there were 347 chapels belonging to the denomination under leasehold tenure, and the value of those places of worship was £355,000. Statistics were presented to the Royal Commission 27 years later, and the chapels had then grown to over 400, while their value had risen from £355,000 to £731,000. Those were facts which showed that the grievance was growing, and that the necessity for the Bill was urgent.

* * *

LORD SHEFFIELD made an important speech on education at the annual meeting of the Manchester and Salford District Education Association last week. He referred specially to the evils of child labour and the need of raising the school age. "I must say, as a neighbour of yours," he said, "and as one interested in the good name of Lancashire, that it is to me very mortifying to see that whenever there is a step forward in education the voice of Lancashire is heard in opposition to it. Now, East Lancashire is the stronghold of the opposition to doing away with child labour, which is so injurious both to the physical health and the mental welfare of the child. When I sat about three or four years ago on a Departmental Committee on the half-time system we had no doubt the system was injurious to the children. People who had the best opportunity of observing told us so. We had not then the system of medical inspection of children which has been now adopted, and which enables local authorities to make reports. The medical reports confirm what we believed, that the half-time system is not good for the health of the children."

* * *

THE Bill at present before Parliament, he continued, in addition to abolishing half-time would accomplish something else which was very important. A very mischievous by-law had been adopted in many towns allowing exemption at thirteen if the child had made a certain number of attendances. That exemption was most mischievous. In some towns which posed as having a great educational reputation, such as Leeds, the great mass left school at thirteen, because they took advantage of their miserable attendance certificate. Among the things proposed was the abolition of this, and we should get what was essential, the uniform attendance of all children up to fourteen. He admitted that there were special cases of hardship where a sensible local authority might give a dispensation. It was a different thing, however, to leave a local authority on the spot a certain discretion to waive the strictness of the law, and to make it a commonplace assumption that everyone had the right to claim exemption at an early age.

* * *

THE members of the Irish Literary Society in London were well employed last Saturday in commemorating one of the most precious gifts which one country can make to another. It is 140 years since Oliver Goldsmith died in a Fleet-street garret, leaving an imperishable name. Many people if they had the choice of taking six of the world's most companionable books with them into exile would choose "The Vicar of Wakefield" among them. It is a story which its lovers read again and again, finding in it every time fresh felicities of language, a humour both rich and kindly, and a pathos too simple for artifice. Even the frailties of Goldsmith's character are more loveable than those of other men, while his miseries were the price of a prodigal generosity to the weak and the friendless. His body lies in an unknown grave outside the Temple Church, but his true resting place is in the hearts of his readers. At the commemorative luncheon on Saturday Professor Ashe King recalled the tributes of Scott and Thackeray. Scott wrote, "We honour Goldsmith because he so contrived to reconcile us to human nature." "He's the most loved of all authors," said Thackeray, "because he loved most." Words like these, in their unpremeditated simplicity, reveal more than the ornate Johnsonian epitaph.

* * *

IN the article on the Free Churches in the Manchester Guardian last week the plea is advanced once again for a separation between preacher and pastor. "The mood and temperament of the preacher," it is stated, "are quite different from the mood and temperament of the successful visitor, and many men who could do either alone are confronted with an impossible task when they are asked to do both. Visiting requires a large expenditure of sympathy. The successful visitor must give his whole mind to each person with whom he comes in contact in turn. The net result is a dissipation of mental energy over a number of personal problems, which leaves him too limp for concentration when it comes to dealing with some spiritual or exegetical theme. . . . If congregations want both preaching and visiting they must make up their minds to a double ministry. A vicar with several curates is in a position to specialise in different branches of the ministry. If the Free Churches mean business they will work towards the same state of efficiency, and give their preaching minister one or two assistants to overtake the pastoral work, which is often more important than preaching."

* * *

ON the surface there seems to be a good deal of common-sense in this contention, but it has in it more of the delicate flavour of the academic mind than of the spiritual passion of the lover of souls. This is why it strikes us as so radically wrong. Here and there we find men of quite exceptional powers, who may be set apart for preaching alone, just as there are others abounding in sympathy in the privacy of the home who are halting and ineffective in public speech. But to apply this rule of separation between the two functions to the average man would be disastrous. The preacher needs the discipline of contact with the realities of human life. He is remote from the business world. He is sheltered from some of the cruder experiences of the workshop and the mill. Where is he to get this contact, if not in his parish, with its daily calls upon his sympathy and insight? So far from leaving him limp and robbing him of power through the dissipation of energy, work of this kind makes him a true preacher, with the note of tenderness and compassion and bracing moral appeal in all that he says. It saves him from pre-occupation with ideas instead of men, and gives him a sure instinct for the things which minister not to intellectual curiosity, but to spiritual needs. Only let his sphere of labour be within the compass of his powers, and let it not be serving tables or sitting on committees, but a real ministry of friendship and succour, fulfilled with the same ardour and self-devotion with which he gives himself to the work of the pulpit.

* * *

MR. NEVINSON grows quite lyrical in the Nation last week in praise of beautiful soldiers. He confesses that his heart leaps up at the sound of a trumpet or the sight of a uniform, though his mother was not a nursemaid. But having conciliated our love of pageantry and having offered his own libation to the "unchristian delight in soldier men," he goes on to insinuate the suspicion that all is not right with a system which rests upon standards of such inordinate pride. "Isolation and self-centred sufficiency," he writes, "combine to breed a kind of pride which may be necessary 'pour se faire tuer,' to use Napoleon's phrase, but can be offensive to the outside world and has often made me hesitate to address a cavalry officer or even a sergeant. . . . Lord Wolseley encouraged the feeling in his 'Pocket Book,' when he said: 'A soldier must believe that his duties are the noblest that fall to man's lot. He must be taught to despise all those of civil life.' In the first edition, if I remember, Wolseley added: 'Though, no doubt, some civil employments are useful'; but afterwards he left out that admission."

* * *

ALL this is false and unhealthy—it means living in a small segment of humanity instead of in the whole—just as it is false and unhealthy for the ordinary officer to believe that "other people may possibly value their honour in a sort of a way, but an officer's honour is a peculiarly precious and sensitive thing." It is the survival of the manners and habits of a military caste in a democratic community where they have begun to look absurd. The task that lies before us is to assimilate what are called military virtues to ordinary human standards, and to discourage the hypnotism of military pageantry so far as it tends to confuse moral judgment or to secure for the army a monopoly of the admiration which should be given on equal terms to all dutiful public servants.

* * *

The Rev. Hubert Handley makes a strong protest in the Contemporary Review against the growing love of pleasure and luxury which is sapping the strength of the nation, but he does not content himself, as so many do, with merely calling attention to a patent fact without hinting at some methods of reform which the Church might put forward if it possessed more faith and courage. He proposes that a Daily Bread Mission to the rich should be held in every well-to-do parish or congregation, and offers a few samples of the resolutions which might be shaped for this specific end as follows:—(1) I, a baptized member of the Church of Christ, recognising the grand and simple petition in the Prayer of the Faithful for 'Daily Bread,' renounce for myself luxury, extravagance, waste and display. (2) I hold my property as a trust from God; and in my outlay I will endeavour (a) not to favour unproductive expenditure (e.g., for purposes of pride, vanity, or self-indulgence) which uses up labour for barren ends, leaving behind no abiding good; (b) to favour productive expenditure (e.g., for purposes of health, religion, education, art, or national honour) which directs labour along fruitful channels for the permanent and common welfare. (3) I believe idleness to be a sin, and avow that God has sent me into the world to do some definite and life-long work for him and for my brethren. (4) I will support all manly and womanly sports, pastimes and amusements which may bring joy and renewal to the toiling lives of the nation; but I will set my face as a flint against that selfish abandonment to pleasure, that voluptuousness which eats like a canker into the heart of great peoples. (5) Believing that my beloved England is now being urgently beset with these said temptations and perils, I join the Crusade for her protection as a humble soldier of the Cross of Christ."

LEAVES FROM A NOTE-BOOK.

WITH hearts set on an earthly paradise it is difficult even to dream of the heavenly Jerusalem. The one attracts us by its promise of happiness; the other woos us with the vision of blessedness, coming to us from afar as from some homeland of the spirit. In the contrast between these two words, in all that they imply for the spiritual mind, we have set plainly before us two schemes of life, which separate men into opposite camps. Happiness comes to us as something which we can contrive by our own cleverness. It means an abundance of pleasures. It means the absence of pain. It is connected with well-oiled machinery, and a pleasant place for ourselves and all the comforts which money can buy. But blessedness means conformity with the Will of God and fellowship with his perfect goodness and the joy of working with Him for the redeeming of men, and in the thought of it which comes to us in moments of meditation there is mingled the sense of something deeply interfused, against which the natural man rebels,—a way of purgation through sorrow, a cleansing fire of discipline, a crown of thorns and a cross borne for the sake of love, and peace which is only found on the further side of pain. Here is the essential difference between terrestrial happiness and the triumphant joy of the saints. We can do much to promote the first by legislation and the application of scientific remedies to social ills; but the other is a grace reserved for those who accept the via dolorosa, not in bitterness or rebellion, but as part of the veiled mystery of love; without which we can have no fellowship with CHRIST.

When men are judging things by a purely human standard, and giving free rein to personal inclination, they often speak against what they describe as the harsh and morbid teaching about suffering in the New Testament. They call it ascetic, and asceticism is one of the fine words which is in bad odour at the present time. They remind us that there is no virtue in being miserable. They tell us that what men need is a cheerful religion. We wonder sometimes whether those who talk in this vein have any close acquaintance with the New Testament, or are they simply repeating something which they have heard? Morbidity of feeling is the last thing which we should ever associate with it. It is stern in places, terribly stern. Even the radiant message of Galilee issues in the command, "Take up thy cross and follow me." But it is all so simple, so direct, so inevitable. There is not a shadow of sentimentalism about it. It is a strong word to strong men. The heart is exhilarated when it responds to its appeal, no matter how heavy the cost may be.

Suffering, for the Christian, must never become a form of self-culture. It is not something which we are to seek or to cultivate for its own sake. It has no inherent blessing apart from the love with which it is borne, the good for the sake of which it is endured. We are not thinking simply of privation, which is often a blessing in disguise. It is good for us to detach ourselves, to lay aside every weight, as the Apostle says, not to be encumbered with the cares of this world. ST. FRANCIS knew this, when he took the Lady Poverty for his bride. With her he entered into his kingdom. But suffering, the bitter pains of the tortured nerve and the travailing soul, these things are only good when we pass beyond them, now accepting them as Love's purifying fire, or again using them as healing grace for other lives. We have seen this strange purification through pain in some, whose lives are closely joined to ours, and the result has been so fine that we have ceased to rebel at the mystery which surrounds it. But this is not the central meaning of the Cross. Here suffering is used in triumph for the redeeming of men. Love which gives all even unto death penetrates to depths in the human spirit where the keenest thought cannot follow it. How vain are all our explanations. "With his stripes we are healed." No other words are so deeply satisfying. They explain nothing, but they express everything.

That word "explanations" arouses much misgiving. There are some moods in which we openly dislike it. What a fruitful source it has been of hesitation and lost opportunities in the spiritual life. Are we not all of us far too fond of studying the life of religion from the outside? We take the figure of CHRIST, or the Idea of God, and submit it to critical analysis. Assuming the attitude of the detached spectator or the cautious thinker, we fancy that with a skilful use of our intellectual categories we can frame a suitable theory which will explain the meaning of religion to other people. Is it any wonder that so many remain stolid and indifferent, failing to find either guidance or inspiration in it? ST. AUGUSTINE said, Non cognoscitur nisi amando—God is only known through loving Him. Here is the final word on the subject. And it is equally true that the heart of CHRIST is only revealed to the disciple. The appetite for explanations has many snares for the soul unless it is corrected by the habit of quiet and deep meditation. The great commemorative days of our Christian faith invite us to the mood in which we desire simply to learn in the spiritual sense, and to use the methods of religious sympathy and discernment without which in spite of all our knowledge the New Testament will remain a sealed book, and the Cross a dim historical event instead of the power of God in our souls.

Nowhere has the appetite for explanations been keener than in regard to the Resurrection of CHRIST. The Gospel narratives have been sifted and analysed; every possible discrepancy has been pointed out; theories have been propounded and modified till it seems impossible to say any new thing upon the subject. There they stand upon our shelves, a goodly row of critical volumes dealing with the difficulties and their solution, useful in their way, not without the dry light of intellectual illumination, raising a strong and needful protest against the prophets of ignorance and incompetence. And yet, in a religious sense how little they have succeeded in doing. Their theories are no part of our Easter joy. It is not to them that the heart of faith turns for strength and hope and renewal, but to the assurance, the deeply realised fact of religious experience, that the Cross is the symbol of victory. The Lord of life dies, and behold he lives, no longer in bodily presence, but as creative love in the great world and in the hearts of men. What happened long ago, when as in a twinkling of an eye the cloud of despondency was lifted and his disciples knew that he was alive for evermore, is of small importance compared with what has been happening ever since. For those who cannot accept the picture language of the Gospels there is no other to put in its place. But the theme of our Easter meditation is not an empty tomb, but the Risen CHRIST.

How quick the disciples were to seize upon the spiritual significance of the Resurrection. It is a lesson which many of us need to lay to heart. For them history, however firmly grounded it might be in their own observation and memory, was being continually acted over again in their own lives. The cross was set up not only on Calvary, but in their own hearts. As CHRIST died, so they were to die daily to sin and every evil thing. As he had been raised from the dead, so they were to live as children of the resurrection. This is the interior life of the Christian soul, firmly rooted in history and in affection for a real person who lived and died and is alive for evermore, but continued as love is quickened by love, as life is created by life. It is the real triumph of the resurrection, this deathless life lived in our mortal flesh. We cannot explain it. But we can accept it and rejoice in it; and we can turn it to practical account, as the Apostle did, in our long warfare against sin and whatever debases our lives. "If ye then be risen with CHRIST, seek those things which are above." It is always so. The highest mysteries of our religion go hand in hand with the rule of conscience, and find their ultimate valuation in the love and duty of daily life.

ST. AUGUSTINE.

By A. L. LILLEY.

M. BERTRAND's book on St. Augustine has been an enormous success in the country of its origin. It has raced through a bewildering number of editions in a very few months. There is nothing to surprise us, perhaps, in all this. M. Bertrand is a novelist, if not hitherto a very famous one. And assuredly his Life of St. Augustine is his greatest romance. He is a student of Flaubert; and no one, strange as the juxtaposition may seem, is more likely to understand the essential features of the background against which Augustine's life was cast than he who has breathed the atmosphere of Salamambo. His study of the great African convert has the qualities and the defects which such a literary training and equipment suggest. Numidia, Carthage, Rome, Milan deliver up their secret to us in these pages. The Numidia is the unchanging Numidia of all time, the Numidia which under the French occupation keeps the essential soul of its conflict between Fourth Century Catholics and Donatists or of the age of Marius and Jugurtha. The Carthage of Augustine is also the Carthage of Salamambo. The Eternal City reveals her sombre dignity through a veil of almost official excitement under Symmachus, the pagan prefect of a Christian Emperor, as under Signor Nathan, the Jewish Mayor of the Papal City. Milan alone, even the Milan of Ambrose and Theodosius, has somehow escaped the meshes of M. Bertrand's imaginative net. But it matters little, for the magic atmosphere of Cassiciacum is here as an enchantment to every sense, and not least to the mystic sense. The mysticism in which M. Bertrand revels is indeed essentially sensuous, and its appeal is concentrated in his pictures of Cassiciacum and Ostia.

So we have here the physical background of Augustine's career humanised and spiritualised as perhaps it never has been before. And equally we have its historical background painted with that romantic realism which is the paradox of our modern literary methods. We have, too, something of the man himself—all of him, indeed, and that is not a little, that lends itself to the deft handling of the skilled romancist. But there is, alas! a something wanting, the something which makes the Augustine we know, or rather long, so often in vain, to know. The man whom M. Bertrand so skilfully limns may, and I think can in very large measure, help us to the knowledge of the theologian. But without that knowledge the real Augustine is not ours, in spite of the most learned and sympathetic treatment of his surroundings, and of the elements of his own character. The theologian in Augustine's case was the whole man, the final living harmony of the forces, whether external or internal, which made him.

And yet, who can unravel the mystery of Augustine the theologian, so as to present it again in its essential unity? It is that labour of analysis and synthesis which is necessary to his understanding, and which is so much more difficult in his case than in any other master of his craft known to history. Everything that was of the surface in him was fused in that wholeness, but it is the process of fusion which escapes us. We see clearly enough the separate working of the various elements that went to make the complete man, and we hazily divine the result. But it is so difficult to detect, and still more difficult to describe, the mystery of transformation. Augustine was a dialectician. He was not only a greater dialectician, but, which is something different, more of a dialectician, than any other of the Latin Fathers. For him religion was knowledge, truth. It was to be achieved by the reason, that reason which alone among the constructive elements of man could bare itself immediately to the healing touch of the Divine. Faith might come before reason in time, but reason was first in the reality of things. And never to the end did he rid himself, or consciously desire to rid himself, of this intellectual bias. Yet Augustine, more than any other theologian, carried religion into the very heart of life, and placed it there as on its only secure and immovable foundation.

He was the great protagonist of religion as authority, as the immediate unescapable authority of God. That authority was no external force which a man might resist if he chose. It was the internal constraint of a Love which took complete possession of a soul and made it, from its first movement towards the Divine till its ultimate oneness with It, Its very own. In order to exalt the absoluteness of that authority he depressed man into a mere impotence for good. He did not hesitate even to leave God face to face with the mundus damnatus, with the world which He had not chosen to constrain with the irresistible power of His Love. Logic had its perfect and its very fierce and terrible way with this heart, which burned with unquenchable adoration of the mysteries of Divine Power. But then, at least for the elect, he secured a freedom which had no trace of fear, of selfish desire, which was pure fire of love for ultimate perfection.

He gave the Church of mere authority its theoretic charter. He identified absolutely, in spite of all the confusions to which the identification committed him, the visible Catholic Church with the Communion of Saints. He might have to admit that "many who seemed to be without were really within, and many who seemed to be within were really without." He might even vehemently assert that many were in the Church who did not belong to it. But outside that visible Catholic society there was no salvation. The secret sinner or the secret heretic were at least within the pale of salvation, within the authentic circle of life. But the schismatic, however holy he might appear to be, however free from heresy in matters of faith, had automatically lost the Divine grace of the Church's sacramental life the moment he disrupted its unity. And as automatically that grace would begin to operate anew if the errant member returned to the visible unity of the Church. It would seem impossible for a perverse logic to go further. And yet, somehow, all that logic was working on behalf of the very conception it seemed to exclude. No Christian teacher has ever felt more strongly, or witnessed more consistently to the reality of the Christian life as a life motivated and sustained by the Christ-spirit, by the spirit of faith, hope, and love. More than any other he gave to the sacraments a real and vital, instead of a magical and merely mysterious, character and effect. He distinguishes continually between those who are in mere outward communion with the Church, in communion with her sacraments, and those who are in real and vital communion with her, in communion with her living spirit of faith, hope, and love. But he had started with a fixed idea, in itself a great and true idea, but which he insisted on applying where the facts demonstrated that it could not be legitimately applied. For him the Church was no creature of history. It had been founded not by the historical Jesus in time, but in the eternities by the Eternal Christ. There in the eternities it was already with Him, the one perfect man. It had appeared in history with Abel, and had continued its uninterrupted course through Noah and Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, and the rest, till it was universalised through Jesus. The visible Christian Church was no new fact of history. It was but the universal extension of a fact as old as history itself, and even at the beginnings of history old with the age of the eternities. It was the Kingdom of Heaven emerging with human history from Heaven, and gathering up here those predestined to share in its accomplished fullness in the eternities on the other side of time. From this point of view it was inevitable that Augustine should subordinate the instrumental and preparatory character of the visible Church to its character as the communion of the predestined. For us, with our more intimate sense of history and fact, the Church of history assumes predominantly an instrumental character, but the character of a living instrument, which, however imperfect, is one with its perfected growth. "The visible Church," as Father Tyrrell reminded us, "is not the Kingdom of Heaven, but only its herald and servant." For us, too, there may be many such heralds and servants, all contributory in their different measure to making effective among the lives of earth the same supreme announcement, and all conveying it in terms of life through the inspiration of the same eternal life. And here at least Augustine is the master of us all. He exalted the Church, not that men might find in it an ark of safety from their fears, but that they might be delivered into all the arduousness and the ardour of a life that knew not fear.

Saint Augustin. Par Louis Bertrand. Paris: Fayard et cie. Fr. 3.50.

Saint Augustin. By Louis Bertrand. Translated by Vincent O'Sullivan. London: Constable & Co. 7s. 6d. net.

These are some of the contradictions of that great spirit and servant of God. Who will ever adequately resolve them? Perhaps his real weakness was that for him Jesus disappeared in God instead of God appearing in Jesus. But, again, was that a weakness or a strength? It is the question which is always at issue when we try to assess the comparative worth of a social and a mystical, a humanising and a divinising, religion. And perhaps Augustine himself had already answered it when he suggests, as he does more than once, that the social is the needed preparation of the mystical.

THE PILGRIMAGE.

By ERIC HAMMOND.

WHERE is the promise of the coming of the Spirit? Whither shall man wend in search of the Star? Our answer to this two-fold question is two-fold also, and lies, happily, close at hand. God has not forgotten to be gracious, nor can He so forget. First, then, God is, and, in the most dear name of Love, is becoming manifest on earth, in this very world of ours and throughout the universe of His ordering. The Will of the Beloved is being accomplished despite friction and turmoil, despite the clashing of the wills of men. His will is perfecting the divine plan, and none can stay it. The promise is apparent to the sight of the seer in the passages of its fulfilment. The vision may be hidden from those who, because impatience dims their outlook, clamour for an articulate assurance. We dwell in the perpetual presence and our God is immediate. His sign "is near, even at the doors."

Man's search for the Star, to take our second point, continues nevertheless, impelled by the human desire to worship some conception of "the highest" that appeals to him and, generally, in some sanctuary, hallowed by association, or reputation. That inner light which borrows its shining from the undying pillar of fire is often insufficiently regarded. A prophet preaches, "Lo, here!"; a priest, "Lo there!"; and each call collects adherents who hear and follow one or the other, although the Scriptures of the world agree that Milton gave true testimony when he sang:

Virtue could see to do what Virtue would
By her own radiant light; though sun and moon

Were in the flat sea sunk.

History, dealing with the rise and progress of religious movements, has to employ many chapters for its narration of wayfarers, individual and collective, who have sought some centre "starred" by the habitation, past or present, of a presumable incarnation of divinity. To-day has its shrines, its holy places, towards which press crowds of anxious inquirers eager to worship. Danger and difficulty contribute stirring stimulus to the great adventure. To this mountain, to that tomb or tabernacle, men and women swarm at certain intervals ear-marked by the heads of their profession or by the force of legendary piety. Each wanderer seeks the star of his salvation, nor, considering the make-up of humanity and remembering its irrepressible urge God-ward, can we wonder at the various ways and means of his wandering.

The author of "A Tramp's Sketches,"* begins another and a beautiful book of his with a sentence overflowing in knowledge and wisdom, "Whoever has wished to go has already started on the pilgrimage." Listen to him again; "The pilgrim's discovery is when he looks into his own heart and finds the picture of a city there. . . . The procession to the altar is a rite in the church; the pilgrimage is a rite in the larger church of the world; life itself, the pilgrimage of pilgrimages, is a rite in the larger church of the universe—we complete in a symbolic act an eternal journey."

Mr. Stephen Graham, understanding all this and the implication of all this, so subtly and sympathetically entered into the soul of the Russian peasant that, with the peasant, in a close-packed crowd of 560, he carries us towards Jaffa on board an ugly ship, black as a collier, aptly named the Lazarus. So admirable a Russian was he to outward and inward seeming, that his companions readily adopted him as one of themselves on their pilgrimage for Eastertide. He wore an ancient blue blouse. All his luggage was on his back. "All about me clustered and chattered village men and women, grey-bearded grandfathers and wizened old grandmothers. They looked as if they had left their fields and hurried to the boat without changing a garment or washing a limb." Four hundred shared the hold with cargo. Taken down into the dark bowels of the boat we are shown the crush there, the foulness. We see a wilderness of linen packs embroidered with crosses or the word Jerusalem. Men and women lie bundled together with their bundles. Little lighted candles gleam before holy pictures. The ill or blind or maimed occupy the most noisome recesses. Our pilgrim is compelled to leave the condition of that hold to our imagination when consequent upon "not a bad storm," 80 per cent. of his fellows succumbed to sea-sickness. Beads were thumbed, and fervent prayers uplifted. A perfect calm followed, hailed by the ejaculation "God has saved us!" Who and whence were these? Peasant folk, we learn, come from the ends of the Russian earth, bound for the Heavenly City. Scarcely two from one province of that widely-swelling land; "All the Russias were represented." Tramping, many of them, thousands of miles to the place of embarkation, relying on charity for shelter and food. Such aid was cheerfully bestowed. "They lived night by night in hundreds of peasant homes, and prayed day by day in hundreds of little churches." Villagers slipped tiny coins in their hands accompanied sometimes by names on bits of paper, praying to be "remembered in the land where God walked." The journey was hard, but not unhappy. "Very sweet it was to sit in the strange man's home, to be blessed by him and his wife, and sleep under the village ikons." The pilgrim saw strange happenings in obscure little villages, little pictures and great pageants. He knelt in little wooden churches and in great cathedrals. "And I brought," he says, "all that I met and all that I had experienced to Jerusalem, so that when the chorus of thanksgiving went up in the monastery on the day when we arrived, all my world was singing with it." We get a touching glimpse of that arrival. Bystanders, tourists, maybe, watched the weary wanderers toil up the hilly road from Jaffa, wondering at Russian winter garb worn beneath the heat of the desert sun. They tramped along procession-wise, "in one sense scarcely worth looking at, yet in another the most significant spectacle of the day or of the time. We were—religious Europe just arrived at the Holy City." Each pilgrim had been possessed by a persistent desire, a masterful impulse. Village priests had not encouraged but rather dissuaded. Man and woman, in the solitariness of his or her own soul, decided on the tramp to their Star. Now, when the radiance of that Star shone round about them, they experienced an uplifting delight. The cross they had carried through toil and danger forgotten, their brows bore the joyous weight of a crown of glory. "We went forward unconscious of our own significance, indifferent to the gaze of the curious. There was one thought in our minds; that we had actually arrived at Jerusalem, and were walking the last few miles to the Holy of Holies."

Poor these pilgrims in the extreme, unlettered, ignorant, superstitious if you will, but inspired by the love of the all-loving Father and His Christ. A painful pilgrimage theirs, borne with that patience which hath her perfect work, through many months and sometimes years; a patience that bids one wonder and admire. "They came as the Kings, saw the shepherds and their flocks, and went in to do homage." They crept along the passage way to the inmost shrine of Christendom. "Only music could tell what the peasant realised in that chamber as he knelt where the sacred Body lay, and kissed the hollow in the stone." During the night in the sepulchre they "saw their own death in a picture." "Night grew quiet all around, and the Syrian stars looked over us, so that centuries and ages passed away." So they had reached their desired haven. Jerusalem, externally materialised, commercialised, might have disconcerted them. Traders took advantage of them. Priestly vestments sometimes hid hard hearts. The church above the sepulchre seemed "strange and ugly." Still, "Jerusalem the symbol and Jerusalem the symbolised were one," for them. Their tramp continued to the Jordan, and, draped in their death-shrouds, they were baptised anew at Bethabara. Here and there they tramped further, visiting Nazareth, Jericho, and the rest; the culmination of all desire coming down into their hearts on Easter Day. "It seemed when we all kissed one another on Easter Morning that we had outlived everything, our own life, our own death; we were in heaven . . . We had caught the gleam of the sun of another universe."

* With the Russian Pilgrims to Jerusalem. By Stephen Graham. London: Macmillan & Co.

They had sought and found their Star, and they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.

One ancient pilgrim "passed away" almost within touch of the goal of his desire. He had cherished that desire from boyhood onward, and, in reality, had started then on his search "for whenever you begin to wish, you begin the pilgrimage." "See! the river is flowing to the sea. But it began to go to the sea long ago." Sometimes helped by a friendly lift on the way he had journeyed four thousand versts. "And now," said one, old, placid, wise, gentle, and very frail, "he is where he wished to be, in the Holy City. He had got very tired, and God had mercy on him. God gave him his last lift." He, and the rest, each after his own fashion, had sought with tears and toil and found with the gladness of fulfilment.

"Seek, and ye shall find." That saying rings true from the very beginning of things to the very end, if, indeed, there be end or beginning. "I am That I am," is. The Creator summons the created in this way and in that. One of Sir Rider Haggard's recently constructed characters, Freydisa, a virgin of Odin, utters some memorable sentences:—"As regards these gods, well, whatever they may or may not be, at least they are the voices that in our day speak to us from that land whence we come and whither we go. The world has known millions of days, and each day has its god—or its voice—and all the voices speak truth to those who can hear them."

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

TYRRELL'S LAST ESSAYS.

Essays on Faith and Immortality. By George Tyrrell. Arranged by M. D. Petre. London: Edward Arnold. 6s. net.

LIKE all Tyrrell's writings these essays display real genius, metaphysical acuteness, and power. The loss of such an original thinker was irreparable. He had traversed many realms of speculation, psychology and theology, and found no rest for the sole of his foot anywhere. Like the dove sent forth from the Ark, he kept perpetually returning to its shelter, but never had the courage to enter in and rest. But that was eminently characteristic of him. He was just the kind of man who would have discovered Paradise for others and yet refuse to accept it for himself. Ever to remain outside the peace and the joy he communicated to others was his sad destiny. When the present writer asked him once if he should go to Canossa, he replied that it was too early then to think of that step. But, evidently, he considered it a possibility. And in his last published book, reading between the lines we can easily see the beginning of a new curve of thought, a faint and feeble return on his pathway, a homeward and Romeward direction. It was the very catholicity of his beautiful soul that led him astray and afar, and the same catholicity was impelling him back again. Nothing short of universality could content such a mind. Unus Pellæo juveni non sufficit orbis, was as true of him as of Alexander—he could never have been satisfied with a single world. He was, like Byron, the Pilgrim of Eternity.

In the first part of the book, the "Essays on Faith," we find much that is helpful, subtle and penetrating suggestions, invaluable criticisms, exquisite fancies and distinctions beyond mere refinements of empty reasoning. And yet too much of the book remains in the air, academic, fine-drawn, unfruitful. As the prophet of pessimism, he expected no end, he could reach no final results. But he has left us weighty words on "God and Nature," "The Church," "Dogma," "Religion and Truth," "God and Man," and "Christ." Always daring to the extreme limit he will seem to some readers, and occasionally almost profane in some of his speculations. And yet a more humble and reverent soul never lived. His most adventurous flights were rather those of an innocent child, frank, audacious, with a lovely and loveable naturalness, which still kept one foot (shall we rather say one toe?) on earth in a desperate faith. Teachers and preachers will discover real semina æternitatis, as Leibniz expressed it, in the jewels scattered about his almost lyrical excursions of thought and imagination.

But we may fairly doubt if Miss Petre was well advised in publishing Tyrrell's "Divine Fecundity," in its unfinished state—as we see from the author's own note at the end. As it stands it is the Gospel of Pessimism, the glorification of failure, the good news of eternal despair. God seems accused and convicted of impotence. He is the slave of his own fecundity. Tyrrell practically reverts to the obsolete metaphysics of Hamilton and Mansel, the fallacy exploded by J. S. Mill, that God and Man have no common measure. An improvident Providence may be an interesting thesis for a philosopher, but cannot be respected or worshipped. The writer's own life was set to a minor key and closed on a note of utter hopelessness, and this may well account for such irresponsible conjectures. Hence this message, not of mercy, but of Divine limitation and stupidity. This essay makes painful reading. "Evil is the all but inevitable result of His inevitable fecundity. His whole effort is to circumvent and minimise the result." Pure simple Fatalism. "He is on the side of the cat and on the side of the mouse, of the oppressor and the oppressed." "He does not will, but He cannot help the conflict and agony" we see and feel around. There is no progress and no end, and no happy expectation. "Death is but an economy of life in its higher forms." "Nature (i.e., God) is on both sides at once, she pounces with the cat and runs with the mouse." "She takes not fifty but fifty thousand seeds in her careless hand and flings them into space, on the chance that just one may realise some little part of that infinite potentiality with which she has endowed it." "We look upon the midnight sky white with star dust, and we recognise her wasteful hand once more." In Memoriam gives a far better and truer version of this fact:—

That nothing walks with aimless feet;
That not one life shall be destroy'd,
Or cast as rubbish to the void
When God hath made the pile complete;

That not a worm is cloven in vain;
That not a moth with vain desire
Is shrivel'd in a fruitless fire,
Or but subserves another's gain.

According to Tyrrell in this essay, all the great early civilisations existed for nothing, as S. T. Coleridge in his "Table Talk" jokingly alleged that the millions of heavenly bodies were created only "to make dirt cheap." Tyrrell declares it is "unhistorical" to imagine Assyria or Egypt or Greece contributing anything important or lasting to the sum total of human happiness. "They have not lived on in us, but have died that we might live." "Let us not forget that, save for some scanty traces, the vast history of man's earliest religious efforts is mere waste, as far as we are concerned." "Nature is not working to one end, but has just as many ends as there are living individuals." "In each of these the Divine seeks a new self expression." We are allowed a sort of Atomic Providence, but no General Providence to maintain unity. And yet what is the world but a cosmos? Tyrrell's universe has no end and no particular meaning, except that of endless failure and strife. The multitudinous clash of competing organisms is its "play." "To each microbe He says, Increase, multiply, replenish the earth and subdue it." "There is no sign of a general plan, no order but that which results from the very conflict of utterances—no arrangement." "He cares not which prevails, balked in one outlet He seeks another."

We cannot but believe that, had Tyrrell been spared, he would have mercilessly pruned this extravaganza and toned it down to something more scientific and philosophical and devout. For the God he describes is much more like most persons' devil. His psychology is bold, and not without interest, but it seems only a variant of Myers', and he acknowledges obligation to Nettleship. And the shadowy immortality we are, grudgingly offered would not content an amoeba, though this perhaps has one of its own, as have all unicellular organisms in a way, and that worth little or nothing.

F. W. ORDE WARD.

TWO NEW BOOKS BY EUCKEN.

Present Day Ethics. By Rudolf Eucken. Translated by Margaret von Legdewitz. London: Williams & Norgate. 3s. net.

Knowledge and Life. By Rudolf Eucken. Translated by W. T. Jones. London: Williams & Norgate. 5s. net.

THE impression grows upon one that there is no way of translating the more constructive part of Professor Eucken's work into an interesting and readable English form. It is otherwise with the historical and explanatory part of his writings—those parts in which he details the growth of great philosophical ideas, or criticises the developments of contemporary society and thought. His analytical penetration into the heart of the main systems and the great thinkers is delightful to follow. But when he comes to the building up of his own system we feel the change. It is as though he has in mind, as a permanent background of his thought, to which he is always implicitly referring, but to which the reader is not introduced, a set of contemporary German prepossessions and objections and difficulties, which are not the same as our English prepossessions. The consequence is that half the time the English reader is wondering "what Eucken is driving at," and the other half he suspects that he is reading very commonplace platitudes. Probably there is no way out of the difficulty, except the reproduction of Eucken's ideas by English writers in their own native way, and apart from translations. In the two volumes now before us, these characteristics of his work are sufficiently conspicuous. Confining our attention to the historical and descriptive side of his work, we find in "Present Day Ethics" very little of this, except in the remarks upon the broad features of the moral life in America and Germany and England; and most readers are fairly familiar with Eucken's pronounced attitude on the subject. Expansion has taken place in modern times at the expense of concentration, and this threatens the moral life with degradation. "Knowledge and Life" suffers, as a separate work, from the fact that it is only the introduction to a proposed larger work, and does not of itself carry us very far. But it contains some excellent criticism of Pragmatism, and there is ripe reflection as well as wide learning in passages like this: "Plato possessed more of the Greek spirit than Aristotle, and hence he was obliged to come into a sharper opposition to his environment than his great pupil. Voltaire was a truer expression of his age than almost any of his contemporaries, and yet he passed away with his age leaving no deep footprints behind him. Spinoza was, in a large measure, an alien to his age, but out of his work permanent results have gone forth." It is interesting to see the notion of progress as incessant change and becoming (to the extrusion of all ideas of Permanence or Finality) which has become such a plague to modern minds, and which we usually associate with Lessing and his preference for the Search for Truth, rather than the Truth itself—it is interesting to see this traced to Nicholas of Cusa, who has been called the first modern thinker. These occasional remarks on history are always notable. But upon the whole the reader is led to welcome the growth of a number of interpreters of Eucken, like Mr. Boyce Gibson, Mr. Tudor Jones and Mr. Meyrick Booth, who will re-cast the new philosophy in independent English form.

W. W.

MORAL EDUCATION.

Conduct and Character. By J. H. Wicksteed. Moral Education Series. London: Nelson & Co. 1s. 6d. net.

THIS interesting book supplies a comprehensive course of lessons, for children and young people, on ethical and social subjects. The introduction informs us that the volume is intended for the teacher's use, that the scheme itself has been formed by the Moral Education League, and that the author has supplied detail and illustrative material. Judged by the standards of its promoters, the book may be at once described as excellent. The whole range of social duty is covered in a series of admirably clear and interesting chapters, each intended to serve as a separate lesson. Criticism here would be confined to detail, and based on individual taste alone. The illustrative incidents are usually arresting and very much to the point. But reference to a few of these illustrations may indicate the temper which, in the present reviewer's judgment, constitutes the grave defect of the whole book. On page 23 the ennobling influence of one earnest character upon many people is exemplified by Telemachus, whose martyrdom availed in the end to stop the gladiatorial shows at Rome. Not a word is said of the Master in whose name and in whose spirit the protest was made. On the next page, Augustine's Confessions are alluded to as the record of his struggle to "be always his own best self." In a very fine section on "Patriotism," King Alfred's desire for three kinds of men to aid him—"working men, fighting men, and praying men"—is aptly introduced (page 96). A detailed analysis of these three types of duty follows, in which (page 101), without any warning, the "praying men" suddenly become "thinking men," Alfred's own name for them being casually recalled at the end of the section. In a lesson on "Justice," tracing the development of this conception from the "lex talionis" to the Golden Rule, we find allusions (page 141 ff.) to Nathan, Elijah, Confucius, and Socrates; the only mention of Jesus in the chapter, if mention it may be called, consists in the phrase "before Christ" twice used in giving a date. The burning of witches by Christian people is referred to (page 187) as an instance of superstition due to error; in the subsequent advance of truth the Christian Church seems to be given no part or lot at all, though science has full justice done to it.

Further instances might be given, but they would be unnecessary to show that there is, throughout the book, a steady ignoring of the element of personal religion; allusions to it are kept out, where they would come most naturally to the average person. The extraordinary omission of any reference to Jesus as a moral teacher (not only in the chapter already cited, but, so far as we have found, throughout the book) can hardly be explained unless by the author's disbelief in his historicity. But far more vital and, many will agree, deplorable is the omission of any recognition of God Himself as a factor in human affairs, or of obedience to a Divine Will as an ethical force in the world. We are accustomed to meet with this attitude in the word and work of the Moral Education League. It would be grossly unfair to refuse our tribute to the excellent and much-needed work which the League is doing towards establishing a sound and reasonable method of moral teaching. But it would also be unfair, to parents and teachers who do recognise a religious basis and sanction for such teaching, if we did not point out that a book like this is for their purposes incomplete. It is incomplete at its most vital point; reaction against the foolish old "proof-text" method has carried it to an extreme more dangerous still; and only in careful hands and with the systematic addition of what it lacks in itself, can it become an instrument of the morality which most of us desire our children to learn—a morality based upon loving obedience to a Heavenly Father, and supported by His sufficient help.

D. T.

OF the new series of Modern Handbooks of Religion, illustrative of the principles and religious faith of Unitarians, three volumes will be issued, it is hoped, by the Lindsey Press before Whitsuntide:—"Religion as Affected by Modern Science and Philosophy," by the Rev. Stanley A. Mellor, B.A., Ph.D.; "Religion in Personal and in National Life," by the Rev. H. D. Roberts; and "The New Testament in the Light of Modern Knowledge," by the Rev. Herbert McLachlan, M.A., B.D.

MR. RONALD P. JONES has published through the Lindsey Press his essays on "Nonconformist Church Architecture," which appeared recently in our columns, with illustrations of several typical chapel buildings.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS:—The Bible of To-day: The Rev. Alban Blakiston, M.A. 5s. net.

THE LINDSEY PRESS:—Nonconformist Church Architecture: Ronald P. Jones. 2s. net.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co.:—The Golden Bough, Part IV., 2 vols.: J. G. Frazer. 20s. net.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS:—Truths and Truisms, Part III.: William Stebbing. 4s. net.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

THE PARTHENON AT ATHENS.

I.—THE TEMPLE OF WISDOM.

ATHENS is one of the most interesting of all the cities of the world. Not only is it beautiful of situation, but it forms the scene of action for many of the stories of ancient heroes. Whether seen by the silvery moonlight or in the noonday sunshine, it looks lovely by reason of the rocky hills that tower immediately above the business part of the place, and seem to keep guard over all that is done there. On the top of the most prominent hill, called the Acropolis, there is a beautiful temple known as the Parthenon, which, in spite of its ruined condition, still looks lovely in almost every possible aspect. This temple makes the view appear more like a fairy scene than a place of rock and stone. You might easily imagine that behind its white columns there lived a dream-goddess who kept watch from her lofty pinnacle over all the doings of the busy city. And this is the impression the ancient builders wished it to give, as you will presently see.

This temple has a wonderful history. It was built by order of the great statesman Pericles, whose chief work was the rebuilding of Athens after its destruction at the hands of her Persian enemies. The Acropolis was sacked and its beautiful buildings and statues destroyed in 480 B.C., but the Athenians set to work almost immediately to make their city more beautiful than ever. Pericles gave the work of building the Parthenon into the hands of Ictinos and Callicrates, the two best architects of their time, and its decoration in charge of the greatest sculptor, Pheidias. Their work was well done, for the temple has been acknowledged to be one of the most beautiful buildings of the world. It was the Temple of Wisdom; and for nearly a thousand years Wisdom was worshipped within those white columns. As late as the year 343 A.D. the statue of Athene, the symbol of Wisdom, still occupied its original place, but soon after that date the Parthenon was converted into a Christian church, and Athene was worshipped as St. Sophia, Divine Wisdom. St. Sophia was afterwards removed and a statue of the Virgin Mary put in her place.

In 1460 the Turks took possession of Athens and converted this temple into a mosque, adding a minaret to its shape. In the seventeenth century we find this sacred building used as a gunpowder magazine, and, to our great sorrow, read that on September 26, 1687, a shell was thrown into it, and in a moment the beautiful temple was destroyed.

But I want you to understand the thoughts that the ancient Greeks had in its erection and decoration, and the use they made of it; for although they were what we call Pagans they had ideas which are worth considering. I wonder if we could use our imagination sufficiently to fancy ourselves in Athens, paying a visit to the Acropolis, with the hope that we might find in what remains of their temple the religious ideas of the ancient Greeks.

As we are in the town and look up to the hill which is our destination, we are struck first with the elevation of the sacred spot. We can see the hill and its temple from every point of view. Their emblem of highest wisdom would be ever before them, reminding them in the midst of their State concerns and business affairs to carry them on with the loftiest possible idealism. Their religion must dominate all their undertakings, and so it was made to tower up above them on the highest ground they could find.

We leave the town with its shops and markets, and start to climb the hill. Our way leads us over the remains of ancient steps up which priests used to lead processions of citizens to worship. As we pass along we notice broken and crumbling statues of gods and goddesses, each of which suggested some thought leading to Divine wisdom. Arrived at the top we note there are remains of several temples; but, as the great one known as the Parthenon is the object of our visit, we pass the lesser ones till we get close to the beautiful group of white columns that look so lovely in the clear air and bright sunshine. But we cannot avoid a pang of sorrow when we see that scattered all about it are a number of broken pieces of masonry, and the central part of the temple is wrecked. However, we can see where these broken columns were originally placed, and thus reconstruct for ourselves the whole temple.

On the rocky ground the ancient builders placed a solid platform forming two or three steps. Then they placed a number of beautiful and graceful columns near to the edge of this platform on each of its four sides. They were, of course, made the same height, so that they could place along the tops of these columns a straight line of blocks to hold them in their places. At each end they added a sort of long triangle which gave the temple its crowning touch of beauty. In the triangular panel of these pediments Pheidias carved some beautiful figures of men and women, which, though now looking broken and very dilapidated, still show that they were once wonderful works of art. Many of the heroic figures that once stood here are now in the British Museum, and we can easily ascertain what they were originally intended to represent. Within the enclosure made by these columns a chamber was constructed in which they placed the figure of the deity whom they worshipped.

So this ancient and beautiful structure was quite simple. It was just a solid platform with forty-six columns enclosing a small chamber containing the goddess. There were seventeen columns on either side, and eight at each end; that is, counting the corner columns twice. Though not a large building, it is considered by every competent judge as perfect in proportions and design. It was erected during the best period of Greek art, and, although that was so far back as 440 years before Christ, it has not been surpassed since for its simple grace and beauty.

The fact that it was not large suggests a great difference between the Greek form of worship and our own. We build our places of worship as large as we can afford, so as to accommodate as many people as possible; and we try to assemble in crowds to sing our united praises, and offer our mingled prayers; but the Greeks made no provision for worshipping crowds. They looked upon their temples as earthly homes for their gods rather than as places in which worshippers might assemble. Every worshipper had to come individually and offer his own gift and pay his own devotion; and every respectable citizen was expected to acknowledge the supremacy of his religion over all the affairs of his life. Business concerns, domestic life, sports, and state considerations were consecrated to the highest wisdom. Before any sports were entered upon the competitors had to pay their respects at the sacred shrine, so that they should be actuated by the best motives in whatever they were doing; and when a youth had been victor in a race, or a wrestler had overcome his competitor, or a girl had secured a prize in the dance, these each had to go in procession to the accompaniment of music and the waving of palms to the temple, and receive their laurels at the foot of the altar of the god.

We are so many centuries in advance of these ancient worshippers that we shall expect to disapprove of some of their practices; but you can see that their intentions were good, and that there are many things that even we can learn of them. Next week we shall try to read their sacred symbols so as to understand their religious thoughts. In the meantime let us note:—

(1) The individuality of their worship is something to be admired. Each person was expected to do everything with the highest possible motive, and to avoid everything mean. All duties and all games were to be undertaken as under the eye of the gods.

(2) To secure this they placed their symbol of wisdom on the place where it could be seen by all at all times, so that the loftiest motives should always be before them.

(3) They devoted the best they possessed to their religion. Their finest material and their highest art were at the service of their temple. While to-day there is sometimes a temptation to think that any building will do for the worship of God, and that the smallest amount of sacrifice made and the shortest amount of time during the week will be sufficient for his service, the Greeks have set us a better example in making their buildings the most beautiful possible, and trying never to be a moment without some reference to the highest thought, offering their best gifts for the service of the temple.

LUCKING TAVENER.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

THE HON. ROLLO RUSSELL.

THE death of the Hon. Rollo Russell occurred on March 30 at 43, Holland-street, Kensington, in his 65th year. The third son of the first Earl Russell, he was educated at Harrow, and was an M.A., Oxon, Fellow of the Royal Meteorlogical Society, and the author of several works on meteorology. His range of interests was a wide one, and he has left behind him works dealing with a variety of subjects, scientific, economic, political, medical, social, and religious, including "Psalms of the West," "Religion and Life," "Epidemics, Plagues, and Fevers, their Cause and Prevention," "The Distribution of Land," and "The Early Correspondence of Lord John Russell"—the latter an invaluable contribution to the literature of biography and early Victorian political history.

Mr. Russell was twice married, firstly to Alice, daughter of Mr. T. S. Godfrey, of Balderston Hall, Nottinghamshire, and secondly to Gertrude, daughter of Mr. Henry Joachim, of Haslemere, who survives him. He leaves two sons and a daughter.

To those who have read "The Early Correspondence of Lord John Russell," and the very interesting memoir of "Lady John Russell," edited by her daughter, Lady Agatha Russell and Mr. Desmond MacCarthy, the picture there given of the home life in which Mr. Russell grew to manhood will explain much of that which was so worthy of love and admiration in his nature and character. It was inevitable that one thus reared should regard life, its duties and possibilities, from no ordinary standpoint.

An air of Paradise did fan the house,
And angels officed all, might well have been written of that beautiful home of his childhood and early manhood, Pembroke Lodge, in Richmond Park. What wonder, then, that the tender blossom there unfolded should become, in due time, "the white flower of a blameless life?" A blameless life! No words could more fitly describe the record of that rare spirit whose influence for good made itself so strongly felt by all who had the privilege of his friendship. Never, surely, did a heart respond more quickly to the simple joys of daily life than his! The singing of the birds, the verdure of the spring, the scent of the heather, the blue carpet of wild hyacinths which made his childhood's home a blaze of glorious colour every spring—these things were to him as the very breath of life. Sorrow, also, played its part in his life, but for him sorrow came—as it only can come to great natures—as a recognised blessing. His mother, writing to him in 1892, said: "Nobody has shown more than you do in 'Psalms of the West' that sorrow is not all sorrow, but has a heavenly sacredness that gives strength to bear its burden 'in quietness and confidence' to the end." His intellectual grasp of the most abstruse ideas was a joy to his mental equals, whilst the young and diffident found in him a patient and sympathetic listener; he was, in fact, so truly great that he could always stoop without appearing to do so. The whole bent of his singularly pure and upright mind was toward the elevation of humanity, physical, moral, mental, and spiritual. "We needs must love the highest when we see it," and that he saw it and followed, ever upward, is well known to all those who knew and loved him best. Even those who differed from him on many vital points of belief were able to count themselves amongst his warmest friends, for he was too generous ever to emphasise the points of difference; too ready to see and appreciate all that was good in the belief of others, however divergent from his own, to be other than wholly kind. Up to the very last he was strenuous in all good work, keen as to the issue of all great causes, while his fortitude and courage under weakness and great bodily suffering were an example not to be easily forgotten. What more fitting epitaph could be found for him than these words of his own, from "Psalms of the West"?—"He that humbleth himself and liveth righteously . . . who restraineth his desires by will . . . who crusheth luxury in the generosity of his charity . . . Such a man shall bring happiness to the world and shall build firmly on the rock of righteousness."

L. P.

Another friend writes:—

"To those who knew Rollo Russell intimately his death will bring an irreparable loss. But his example will live as long as memory remains, and although the bodily presence has vanished from among us, the spiritual presence can never fade away. Such supreme unselfishness and tenderness of heart as his are seldom seen, but owing to a shy and reserved exterior, few could know all the depths of his noble nature. His sufferings were borne with splendid courage, and a rare spiritual power and strength enabled him, through all trial, to find true happiness in work for others and in the high aims and ideals which were his throughout life. His mental activity and bright hopefulness brought sunshine to others, and the memory of him must ever be an inspiration to aim unflinchingly and unswervingly at the best and highest in thought and life."

A large company of friends gathered for the funeral service, which was held at Essex Church, Notting Hill Gate, on Thursday, April 2. The service was conducted by the Rev. F. K. Freeston, the address being given by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie. Speaking of Mr. Russell's religious position, Mr. Bowie said:—

"There are many men in the present day who are keenly interested in religion. They read about it; they discuss its vexed problems; but they are not moved by it. The glow of faith, hope, and love is not theirs. Interest begins and ends in intellectual curiosity, not in moral and spiritual stimulus. Mr. Rollo Russell was profoundly interested in religious questions. He had read deeply and widely in the literature of religion. But his interest was much more than intellectual. His manhood was steeped in religion; his thought and feeling and aspiration were touched and moulded and inspired by a living conviction of the reality of religion. He had renounced the creeds and ceremonial observances of the Churches—Anglican and Nonconformist. 'Christian Theist,' would, I imagine, best describe his position, if description be needed. His essay on 'Religion and Life,' published in 1900, occupied his thoughts at intervals for a period of 27 years. This is his confession of faith, and a remarkable and stimulating confession it is. He bids us rid our minds of all unworthy ideas of God, who, he declares, is better than the best, kinder than the kindest. Again and again he insists that the first duty of a religious man is to find true principles, and then to act up to them. To become faint-hearted or despondent in the midst of life's perplexities or disappointments is not the part a truly religious man should play. Religion, he urges, does not depend on a halo of miracle and supernaturalism; manifestations of the Divine abound in nature and in humanity; in the common round of daily duty and daily cares; and in the inner witness of God in the soul of man. 'Love is the supreme cause, the supreme purpose, the life, the way, the explainer of truth, who makes the human spirit to be at one with God, and brings the human family into divine kinship, and gives rest to each soul.'"

PROFESSOR POYNTING.

WE regret to announce the death of Professor J. H. Poynting, F.R.S., which took place on March '30 at his home in Birmingham.

A native of Lancashire, says a notice in the Manchester Guardian, Professor Poynting was the son of the late Rev. T. Elford Poynting, minister of the Unitarian Church at Monton, near Manchester. Born in 1852, Professor Poynting was educated at Owens College, Manchester, and Trinity College, Cambridge. At Cambridge, in 1876, he was placed third Wrangler in the Mathematical Tripos. In the same year he received the appointment of demonstrator in the physical laboratory at Owens College, Manchester, and while there he began the researches into the mean density of the earth for which he has since been known. In 1878 he was elected a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and in the following year he left Manchester to return to Cambridge to continue his gravitation experiments at the Cavendish Laboratory. He remained at Cambridge for a year, and in 1880 was appointed Professor of Physics at Mason College, Birmingham, now part of the Birmingham University. He contributed a number of papers to scientific journals about this time. In 1888 he became a Fellow of the Royal Society, and two years later published an essay on "The Mean Density of the Earth," for which, in 1891, he was awarded the Adams Prize in the University of Cambridge. He stated that the weight of the earth was 12,500,000,000,000,000,000,000 lbs. For his work in the domain of radiation and the pressure of light he was awarded in 1905 the Royal Medal of the Royal Society. Professor Poynting was a Justice of the Peace for Birmingham, and for a time was a member of the Licensing Committee. He married in 1880 Miss Marie Adney Cropper, daughter of the Rev. J. Cropper, of Stand, near Manchester.

To this notice may be added the following appreciation of his gifts by Professor Arthur Schuster:—"Poynting's natural modesty and retiring temperament prevented his name being known as widely as on the merits of his scientific work it deserved to be, but physicists throughout the world recognised and appreciated his eminence. He was certainly one of the most distinguished pupils of Owens College, where, in the old buildings in Quay-street, he was the first student who attended the Physical Laboratory newly established under Balfour Stewart. Poynting combined great mathematical ability with exceptional experimental skill and soundness of judgment. Though his scientific publications may not be very numerous, they range over a wide field, and nearly every one of them is a landmark in the progress of science. That can be said with truth only of a few men. Had better health been vouchsafed to him, there is not a position in the scientific world that he could not have occupied worthily."

The funeral service, which was conducted by the Rev. Henry Gow, of Hampstead, was held in the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, on Thursday, April 2.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

THE HUMANITARIAN LEAGUE.

ADDRESS BY SIR SYDNEY OLIVIER.

THE annual meeting of the Humanitarian League was held at the Westminster Palace Hotel on Thursday, April 2, at 7.30. Mr. Ernest Bell presiding, when an address was given by Sir Sydney Olivier, K.C.M.G. Mr. Bell drew attention once again to the position which the League holds in regard to the treatment of animals. It was, as the report pointed out, no part of their purpose to duplicate the work of societies which exist for the suppression of some particular form of cruelty, and such organisations are far more numerous now than they were when the League was founded; their object was rather to vindicate the principle of animals' rights as a whole, inasmuch as a clear recognition of rights must precede any comprehensive redressing of wrongs. In regard to blood sports, however, the League has taken a more definite line, because there is no society which deals specially with this subject, and it will issue shortly an important volume of essays entitled "Killing for Sport," with a preface by Mr. Bernard Shaw, in which the subject of blood sports will, for the first time, be fully treated from the ethical and social standpoint. It was sometimes asked why the League devoted so much time and attention to the matter of corporal punishment. The answer was that in the domain of criminal law and prison questions, where much has been done, and is being done, to bring about needful reforms, there are now only two absolutely savage practices surviving from a barbarous past, viz., hanging and flogging, and for that reason the opposition to these forms of punishment is, from the humanitarian's point of view, far more important than anything else.

Sir Sydney Olivier, in moving the adoption of the report, said that anyone who attempted to speak on the general subject of humanitarianism must feel conscious of being somewhat Pharisaical, because civilised people were responsible, directly or indirectly, for so many acts that involve cruelty, and it was not always easy to discard them even when one was convinced that they were wrong. In his work of administering the criminal law, for instance, as a Governor of colonies where he had power over life and death, he had the greatest desire to carry out his duties in the most humane manner, and he was served by intelligent officers who shared that desire to the full; yet the whole method of criminal discipline which had grown up was so difficult to alter that he had felt more despair in regard to that branch of the British public service than almost any other. The only thing which made it possible to change the old routine methods that were carried out so mechanically, was to create some new censorium such as had been created by the conviction and punishment of many individuals in connection with the suffrage movement of late, for whom the criminal law was never intended. Society now had the advantage of fresh criticism applied to the criminal law and its workings which could never have come from what are called the criminal classes. The latter had learned to adapt themselves to it, escaping it as long as they could, submitting to it when they were not clever enough to keep outside it. They "played the game" as they understood it, and made no complaints. This new criticism was showing us that the criminal law was futile and absurd, a statement that he himself endorsed as an accomplice of society in administering it. Speaking of blood sports, Sir Sydney Olivier said that there again he alluded to a subject on which it was impossible for some of them to speak without a sense of hypocrisy, especially if they had been brought up, as he had been, among people for whom sport was one of the chief occupations of life. And here they were bound to go slowly and sympathetically, because they were dealing with practices which were followed by many whom they regarded as their intimate friends, and who were by no means of a naturally cruel disposition. The fact was that those who indulged in sports which his hearers had learnt to look upon with disgust, because of the suffering they caused, were in much the same mental state as the ordinary boy, who passed through a phase corresponding to a phase in the evolution of the race, when he was indifferent to suffering and quite callous about inflicting it. They had remained at this stage of arrested development, and were to be regarded as more childish than cruel. For this reason it was only possible to treat them as children, and work upon them gradually. They had to approach the subject in a round-about way, and by taking as an argument some form of sport involving cruelty which these people did not particularly care for, and which, therefore, they were ready enough to denounce, lead them on to a repudiation for the same reasons of the forms of sport to which they were addicted. In his own case conversion had come early, and brought about a complete and lasting revulsion of feeling, but they had to deal sympathetically with those who were quite unable as yet to see all the suffering that their perpetual shooting and hunting caused. Then again it was easy to forget the beam in our own eye in regard to the horrors of the slaughterhouses in which we were involved as meat-eaters. This was brought home to them particularly when they came to the question of the old horse traffic, which was arousing so much feeling in England, and which they all hoped was about to be checked. It was comparatively easy to wax indignant over what went on in foreign countries, and forget what was being done in order to supply animals for our own market. For instance, there were just as many casualties among the cattle exported from Ireland as among the decrepit horses exported for the consumption of Belgians. In conclusion, Sir Sydney Olivier said that all our social habits involved us in aiding and abetting an enormous amount of cruelty, and the way of reform meant, for some people, standing aside from a great many things to which they, their families and friends had always been accustomed, in order to try and create a public opinion in favour of humaner ideas.

Miss Edith Ward, in seconding the adoption of the report, spoke of the old horse traffic, and urged that every support should be given to those who were trying to abolish this national disgrace. Mr. H. S. Salt, referring to a suggestion of Sir Sydney Olivier's that the League should do something more than it was already doing in the direction of prison reform, said that they would be very glad to extend their activities on these lines, but it was simply a matter of economy of time and money. It must be remembered, also, that the Penal Reform League was in existence and doing good work. Captain St. John, the hon. secretary, was a member of their executive committee, and the two Leagues worked in harmony. It was, therefore, essential that they should concentrate on those evils which no other society was directly dealing with, such as blood sports, flogging, &c. The report was unanimously adopted.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE report presented to the Council meeting of the Unitarian Association last week dealt in some detail with the arrangements which are in progress with the Sustentation Fund for taking over congregations which have been aided hitherto by the Association.

Representatives of the Association and of the Sustentation Fund have met in conference, and careful consideration has been given to every congregation seeking aid. It is the desire of the Committee that in no case where a transference is made shall the minister be worse off than before; and the managers of the Sustentation Fund have expressed their cordial agreement with this view. For a time difficulties and even misunderstandings may arise in administration; but all concerned may rest assured that the Association and the Sustentation Fund will do everything in their power to encourage congregations and ministers in their work.

That the members of our churches will regard the additional financial resources of the Sustentation Fund as an incentive to further effort on their own part is, the Committee believe, the sincere wish and hope of all who have so generously contributed towards the new fund which it is hoped may reach £50,000 before Whitsuntide.

In view of the forthcoming transference of a number of the grant-aided congregations from the Association to the Sustentation Fund, it is hoped that money may be available for new and enlarged missionary work. Provided the necessary financial aid is furnished, there are many ways in which the principles and religious faith of Unitarians might be made more widely known; opportunities abound to-day, but a greater spirit of adventure is needed in order to take advantage of them. The various district societies and unions have been invited to submit suggestions to the Committee of the Association for new missionary work in different parts of the country.

Special reference was also made in the report to the success of the work of the Pioneer Preachers.

The experiment of the Pioneer Preachers' Movement has now been carried on under the general auspices of the Association for sixteen months. During the year ending December 31, 1913, the Pioneer Preachers conducted 400 Sunday services and 73 Sunday-school services. They held 999 week-day meetings of various kinds, and, in addition, 240 open-air services and meetings. This gives a total of nearly 2,000 services and meetings held during the year. They paid 1,120 home visits among members of their congregations, and 300 homes outside the congregations were systematically visited, while every fortnight church notices were distributed from house to house in their district.

The lease of the hostel in King-square expired March 25, 1914, and the generosity of Sir John T. Brunner, Mr. Charles Hawksley, Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence, Mr. Edwin Tate, Mr. C. F. Pearson, Mr. Ronald P. Jones, Mrs. George Holt, and Miss Holt, has enabled the Committee to purchase the freehold of 23, Highbury-place, which, when altered, will make an admirable hostel. The property has been conveyed, in accordance with the expressed wish of the donors, to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. A grant of £50 was made by the Committee towards the purchase of the property. The public opening of "Unity House," by which name the new hostel had been christened, will be held in the course of a few weeks.

Those who have visited the Book Room during the last week or two will have observed that alterations and additions are in progress. These have been rendered necessary in order to provide an office for the hon. secretary of the Sunday School Association, Mr. T. M. Chalmers, M.A., who recently succeeded Mr. Ion Pritchard, who for a long period was the devoted hon. secretary. Mr. Chalmers intends to give practically his whole time to educational and social work, and it therefore became necessary to discover, or rather to carve out, a room in which he could do his secretarial work and interview his co-workers. The Council will desire to express its congratulations to the Sunday School Association on its rare good fortune in securing such an admirable executive officer.

LIVERPOOL DOMESTIC MISSION. ANNUAL MEETING.

The seventy-seventh annual meeting of the Liverpool Domestic Mission Society, which was held at Mill-street, Toxteth, on Friday, April 3, was marked by the opening of the new buildings which have been erected through the generosity of Mr. Walter Holland, Mr. C. Sydney Jones, and Mr. Lawrence D. Holt, the ceremony being performed by the Lord Mayor of Liverpool, Councillor Herbert R. Rathbone, J.P. The additional accommodation embraces a new storey to the existing building and a large ground-floor classroom, a gymnasium for girls, a drill room for the Boys' Brigade Company, dressing-rooms, &c. The proceedings began with a reception of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress by the president of the society, Mr. F. C. Bowring, and the committee, after which the Lord Mayor, who was presented with a key by Mr. Dobie, the architect, opened the door of the extension and wished success to the work to be carried out in it. The annual meeting, which took place in the major hall of the Mission, followed. Mr. F. C. Bowring occupied the chair, and amongst others supporting him were the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, Sir Benjamin Johnson, Messrs. H. Wade Deacon, Cecil H. Brunner, Arnold Rathbone, R. H. Armstrong (hon. secretary), the Rev. J. Collins Odgers, and the Rev. T. Lloyd Jones, Mr. Joseph Anderton, and the Rev. J. W. Saunders (missioners). In the course of a letter written from Bournemouth, Mr. Walter Holland said he deeply regretted being far too incapacitated to be present at the meeting, especially as he would have liked to join in thanking the Lord Mayor for showing by his presence a civic appreciation of the work being done. "I was assisted," he continued, "by my life-long friend, the late Mr. Charles Jones, many years ago in the joint purchase of the land, and now his son, Mr. Sydney Jones and my co-treasurer, Mr. Lawrence Holt, have helped me in the final cost of the building. After an experience of over 40 years on the committee, and of more than 30 years as treasurer, having taken over the office from your relative, Sir William, in 1883, I am firmly convinced that, notwithstanding the general improvement in the conditions and lives of the poor, there is as much need now for the work of this Mission as there has ever been at any previous time. It is a work which is the practical outcome of the lessons taught from many of the pulpits in our city, and if we could imagine more of such institutions established throughout the city, I feel satisfied that not only would the distress and misery be largely lessened, but that the poverty, pauperism, and poor rates would also be considerably reduced. But the difficulty is, and always will be, to find the men, such as our friends Mr. Lloyd Jones and Mr. Anderton, who are born to such work, to carry it on. How I could have wished to have been present to have joined once more in a tribute of admiration to them and their band of loyal workers, for their so zealously and enthusiastically devoting themselves to the work." The President, at the outset, cordially welcomed the Lord Mayor, who was, he reminded the meeting, the grandson of one of the founders of the Mission, and the first president elected in 1836. Mr. R. H. Armstrong (hon. secretary) then presented the annual report and financial statement. The Chairman, in moving their adoption, proposed that thanks be accorded to Mr. Walter Holland for his generosity in providing the greater part of the cost of the extension of the north wing, and to Mr. C. Sydney Jones and Mr. Lawrence D. Holt for enabling the extension to be completed in accordance with the designs. The best thanks and appreciation these gentlemen could receive, however, was to see that the buildings were used to their utmost capacity. He hoped that those connected with the Mission would determine that no work could be too good for the splendid gift which had been presented to them. The motion was cordially seconded by the President and carried. A resolution assuring the Rev. T. Lloyd Jones, Mr. Joseph Anderton, and the many workers at the Mission of the warm sympathy of the meeting with them in their unselfish labours among the poor, was proposed by Mr. H. Wade Deacon, seconded by Sir Benjamin Johnson, who spoke optimistically of the work the Domestic Mission Society was doing towards making the world around them a better place, supported by Mr. Arnold R. Rathbone, and carried. The Rev. T. Lloyd Jones, Mr. Joseph Anderton, and the Rev. J. W. Saunders responded. The President, Mr. F. C. Bowring, was afterwards re-elected, also Mr. Walter Holland, hon. treasurer, Mr. Lawrence D. Holt, hon. deputy treasurer, and Mr. R. H. Armstrong, hon. secretary.

VACATION TERM FOR BIBLICAL STUDY.

THE twelfth Vacation Term for Biblical Study will be held this year at Oxford from July 25 to August 15. The object of the term is to give to students of the Bible, who feel the need of more scientific and intelligent study, a special opportunity of becoming acquainted with the results of modern Biblical scholarship and of receiving systematic instruction on academic lines. The scheme is on a Christian basis, and lecturers are invited without respect to their denomination. The idea which has been chosen this year for illustration by the entire series of lectures is that of "The Vital Relation of Personal Religion to the Corporate Life of the Church." The inaugural lecture will be given by Dr. Holland, Regius Professor of Divinity, Oxford, and the following courses of four lectures have been promised:—First week: The Book of Ezekiel, by the Rev. W. F. Lofthouse, Handsworth College, Birmingham; and The Development of Personal Religion in the Old Testament and the Gospels, by Dr. McNeile, Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. Second week: Religious Experience of St. Paul, by Dr. Anderson Scott, Westminster College, Cambridge; and Life within the Christian Community in the First and Second Centuries, by Professor Kirsopp Lake, of the University of Leiden. Third week: The Relation of the Individual to the Community, by Clement Webb, Esq., M.A., Magdalen College, Oxford; and 1 and 2 Corinthians, by the Rev. S. Kirshbaum, B.D., King's College, London. Single lectures have been promised by Stanley A. Cook, Esq., M.A., Dr. Neville Figgis, C.R., Dr. Oesterley, the Rev. R. G. Parsons, and Evelyn Underhill (Mrs. Stuart Moore). Hebrew and Greek Testament readings will be held throughout the three weeks. The total cost to students, including lecture tickets, will not exceed £2 a week. Further particulars may be had on application to Miss E. Lawder (secretary), 21, Richmond-road, Cambridge.

THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT.

THE "TIMES" EDUCATIONAL SUPPLEMENT.

THE monthly Educational Supplements issued by the Times are by far the most valuable production of their kind in English. They provide the average thoughtful citizen with a carefully digested and readable array of accurate and impartial information on educational subjects. Their general outlook is broad, independent, and as progressive as any practical person could desire. For instance, commenting on the visit of the President of the Board of Education to Germany and France to investigate educational experiments there, the leading article in last Tuesday's Supplement says:

"The interest he has taken in our educational medical service is well known, and he has done much to extend and improve it. It is becoming more generally recognised on all sides to-day that the educational administrator must take a wide view of his responsibilities, and that questions of malnutrition and the proper feeding of school children are necessarily included in his scope. The support given both by Mr. Pease and by members of all parties to the Bill, the second reading of which was moved in the Commons on March 27, is a proof of the growing acknowledgment that the question of health, of the physical capacity of the child to profit by the instruction provided for it, precedes and is vital to the success of elementary instruction. It is not merely unprofitable, but wasteful, to instruct ailing or ill-fed children, and, in addition, it is upon the health of the children that the life of the nation obviously depends. As Mrs. Despard remarks in the letter we publish to-day on the defective administration of the Children's Meals Act in London, 'Let us care wisely for our school children if we desire to raise the standard of health throughout the nation.'"

* * * * *

The same issue of the Supplement contains a summary of a valuable report on "Trade and Technical Education in France and Germany" (King: 1s. net) by

Mr. J. C. Smail, the organiser of trade schools for boys. The main differences between the German practice and the British is that the former has been so adjusted to modern conditions that the pupils who come within the scope of continuation schools feel from the first that there is a definite career ahead, and that they are being fitted for it. Germany aims at "benefiting the nation by training properly all the workers through definitely specialised courses. Britain has organised so that individuals may secure what they think best for their own advancement. . . . Germany aims at making good citizens and has realised that a good citizen must be a good workman. . . . Citizenship must be taught to enable the worker to recognise his individual position in the State, his position with respect to his employer and his fellow workmen, his family and social duties, the relative position of his trade in his own country and in the world's commerce and industry." In Germany the whole nation is being consciously trained for definite objects, believes in and is willing to pay for education. In England it cannot be said that there is any national enthusiasm or willingness to pay for education, a state of affairs which unless it is speedily altered is bound to have serious consequences.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Special Notice to Correspondents.—Items of news for this column should be sent immediately after the event, and should reach the editor on Wednesday, except in the case of meetings held too late in the week to make this possible.

Belfast: Ulster Unitarian Christian Association.—The annual meeting in connection with the Ulster Unitarian Christian Association was held in the Central Hall on Monday, April 6. On the previous day the annual sermons were preached in the First Presbyterian Church, Rosemary-street, by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, who took for his subject in the morning, "The Religious Message of Unitarians," and in the evening, "The Christianity of Jesus." The chair was taken at the meeting by the Rev. H. J. Rossington, and among those present were the Revs. W. Copeland Bowie, G. J. Slipper, E. H. Pickering, T. Dunkerley, W. E. Weatherall, J. McCleery, M. S. Dunbar, G. V. Crook, F. Woolley, E. Thompson, M. Watkins, G. L. Phelps, J. Worthington, A. O. Ashworth, H. A. Magowan, S. E. Bowen and D. J. Williams. The annual report, which was read by the Rev. G. J. Slipper, the hon. secretary, recorded a general improvement in the condition of the Association, the financial statement showing a balance on the credit side. The committee expressed regret at the retirement from membership of Mr. John Rogers and Mr. George G. Ward—the former through ill-health, the latter owing to removal from the city. The adoption of the reports was moved by the Chairman, who specially referred to the admirable work done for the Association by their agent, Mr. Eustace Gordon, who had effected considerable improvements in regard to the book depository. The Rev. E. H. Pickering seconded, and the motion was passed. The committee was elected for the ensuing year, Mr. Charles McKisack being re-elected hon. treasurer, and the Revs. J. A. Kelly and George J. Slipper secretaries. A vote of thanks to the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie for his sermons in aid of the Association was proposed by Mr. B. Malcolm, seconded by Mr. H. B. Hunter, and passed unanimously. Mr. Bowie, in reply, said he was glad to note the hopeful and confident spirit of the report. Unitarians were linked up now all over the world, and at a conference held in London recently it had been most interesting to hear accounts of the progress made in distant lands. They were taking part in a world-wide movement of freedom of thought and reverence for all that was truest and best in religion. That was an encouragement to them when they felt shut up in their own little world. He was persuaded himself more and more that if they ceased to believe enough or to care enough for their religion, if they thought that it was not worth while handing it on to anyone else—when that time came they would soon discover that their religion would cease to be of much use to themselves. The more precious the things of life were to oneself the more important and urgent was the necessity for handing them on to others. And that was the best way to keep their own religion fresh and alive, when a broad, generous missionary spirit accompanied it. There was great breadth and variety of views in the Unitarian churches, and he hoped that would continue so long as absolute sincerity lay at the root of it. The Rev. M. S. Dunbar moved a resolution of renewed adherence to the principles and objects of the Association, which was seconded by the Rev. D. J. Williams, and passed. The proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman, proposed by the Rev. M. Watkins, seconded by Mr. J. McWilliam.

Huddersfield.—The diamond jubilee of the opening of the Fitzwilliam-street Church was celebrated on April 1 and 4 by a special effort to raise enough to defray the cost of cleaning and decorating. There were nine stalls in charge of 69 members of the congregation and Sunday school. Generous donations were received from distant sympathisers, including members of the Halifax, Lydgate and Dewsbury churches. The sale, which realised £150, was opened by Mrs. J. Sagar, of Halifax.

Halifax.—After paying all expenses connected with the erection of a tablet to the memory of the Rev. F. E. Millson, in the Northgate End Chapel, a sum of £23 remains. The committee has decided to found a prize to be won by students of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, but to make the offer to the College worthy of the name to be perpetuated they confidently appeal for further subscriptions whereby the amount at their disposal may be raised to £50 at least. Contributions will be received by the minister, the Rev. W. Lawrence Schroeder, Rosthwaite, 40, Clifton-road, Skircot, Halifax.

London: Stepney.—The Band of Hope at College Chapel, Stepney Green, has recently affiliated with the local Band of Hope Union, and at the spring council meeting the chairman extended a welcome to the members. The pledge which the children take and recite at the quarterly devotional service is as follows:—"I promise with God's help to abstain from all intoxicating liquors as beverages, living a pure and temperate life; to be merciful and kind to all living things, and, as far as lies in my power, to advance the cause of peace and goodwill towards men."

Manchester, Failsforth.—A memorial service was held in Dob-lane Chapel on Sunday evening last in memory of the late Rev. George Knight, who was minister here from 1885 to 1907. The service was conducted by the present minister, the Rev. J. Morley Mills, and in the course of his address he said: For twenty-two years the Rev. George Knight went in and out among this congregation as a good servant of Jesus Christ, faithfully performing the work of the ministry, preaching the word of grace from this pulpit, christening your children, marrying your young people, saying words of hope over the bodies of your dead. It is but seven years since he left, and this last week a number of us foregathered in the cemetery to pay the last tokens of respect to his earthly remains, which were buried in peace, and in the sure and certain hope that his spirit had been called to the greater life. After referring to biographical details which have already appeared in the Obituary Notice of last week, Mr. Mills continued: He came to this congregation preaching the Gospel of his Master—Jesus—even the good news of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. He had known mental bondage to creeds and doctrines other than those set forth by the great teacher of Galilee. He had forged his way by earnest thought into the liberty wherewith Christ sought to make men free, both mentally and spiritually, and had, therefore, the new-born zeal and deep earnestness of a convert. His message in consequence was one of directness, breadth, inspiration, and power. The ear that heard him was blessed. He stood boldly for righteousness and moral progress of life in the individual and in the affairs of the community and the State. In no uncertain voice he reproved the unrighteous; not only in humble circumstances but in high places. In his pulpit and on public platforms was his word uttered against all forms of evil and oppression, and in favour of goodness, mercy, and truth. Unto him men gave ear, and waited and kept silence for his counsel. Thus his influence spread far and wide, and lives on in hundreds of lives, not only of this congregation, but of all sections of the community. While his body lies buried in peace his name liveth for evermore. He was devoted to his congregation, the Sunday school, the day school, and connected institutions. On his settlement a scheme for building the new school was on foot. He threw himself heartily into the work, labouring diligently with others in raising necessary funds—the amount which he collected personally being no small part of the total sum. As a pastor he was truly a good shepherd. He delivered the poor that cried unto him; the fatherless also and him that had none to help; the blessing of him that was ready to perish was his; he caused the widow's heart to sing for joy. I often hear when going among you the specially effective way he had of ministering to those in trouble and difficulty. Many remember him with heartfelt gratitude for his kind, brotherly spirit, and ready help in periods of sorrow and distress.

Pudsey.—Mr. Joshua Lord, of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, Manchester, has received and accepted a unanimous invitation to undertake the ministry of the Unitarian Church, Pudsey, Yorkshire, on the completion of his college course at the end of June next.

Stalybridge.—A memorial service was held on Sunday morning at the Unitarian Church, Stalybridge, in grateful remembrance of the life and work of the late Rev. William Harrison, who, previous to his retirement, was minister of the church for a period of sixteen years. In the course of his sermon the Rev. John Ellis said:—"When it was intimated, last Sunday, that the Rev. William Harrison had 'finished his earthly course' and had 'won the crown of life,' your feelings were of mingled sorrow and gratitude, sorrow that you will look upon his face no more, gratitude for a life well spent in the service of humanity. . . For sixteen years he went in and out among you as a kindly cultured influence. He cared greatly for the Sunday school, and many of you, no doubt, can trace some of the best things in your experience to his thought and suggestion. He was deeply interested in temperance, education, and all movements for social betterment. He was intimate in the councils of the denomination, and served on various committees with exemplary zeal.

There was no more familiar figure at the meetings of the Manchester District Sunday School Union, on the Committees of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, the East Cheshire Christian Union, the North Cheshire Sunday School Union, and at the general meetings of the denomination, than his. His retirement from the active ministry, ten years ago, did not cause him to relax his interest in the work of our churches and Sunday schools. To the last he was true to his high calling. We are poorer for his departure. We are grateful for his long and faithful service so cheerfully and ungrudgingly rendered."

Stockton-on-Tees.—On Monday, April 6, the Rev. Arthur Scruton delivered the last of a series of eight lectures on "Common Sense Religion," his subject being "The Individual and the Race." A discussion followed, and thanks were given to Mr. Scruton for the great help received by those who have regularly attended the lectures. As a result of this series many strangers have attended recent Sunday services at the Unitarian Church, and the morning congregation especially has increased. Mr. Scruton proposes to give some open-air addresses at an early date, and a further course of lectures next winter.

Wigan, Park-lane.—As part of an effort to raise £300 for much-needed school extensions, the Ladies' Society held a successful sale of work on Wednesday, April 1. Mrs. H. Fisher Short presided and Mrs. Percy Taylor, of Bolton, kindly acted as opener. The amount realised was over £120.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

THE APPROACH OF EASTER.

A writer in the Contemporary Review recalls some of the curious ceremonies and practices which, in days when life was simpler and symbolism played a real part in the inner life of the English people, marked the latter half of Lent. Many of these still remain, after three and a half centuries of Protestantism in England, and the suggestion is made that our Government should follow the wise example of the United States Government and appoint a Royal Commission to collect, before it is too late, the remnants that remain. In Shakespeare's time the Paschal Tapers were lit on Easter Even, a practice which long survived the Reformation. "Were these significant of the darkness of the world in the absence of Christ preaching to the spirits in prison? In Dorsetshire—that home of traditional practices—an eighteenth century custom among the schoolboys seems to suggest such an origin. On Easter Even the boys formed a procession carrying rough torches and a little black flag, singing:

We fasted in the Light
For this is the Night.

A mystic couplet, but not without significance.

* * *

"So we are led by the way of penance and fear and doubt to the wonderful Easter morning, the morning on which, according to the children of the Middle Ages, the sun danced. It was not an unnatural belief that the sunlight on Easter morning was fresher and brighter than that of any other day. It was Goddes Sondag. It was the day—always fourteen days later in the year than with us—when the hall, the living room, appeared well-cleaned after the winter. All signs of firing were removed, and the fireplace filled with fair flowers and the floor covered with fresh green rushes. The church was decorated with flowers to indicate the Resurrection, and jollity began anew. But not too swiftly. On the Continent it was usual to forbid the eating of flesh meat on Easter Sunday, under fear of fever in the coming year. Even more strange than this, we find instances, as at Berkely, near Frome, in Somersetshire, where the church was decorated with yew on Easter Day. Yew, the symbol of death and the churchyard, was used as the sign of resurrection. Again a mystic sign, but not without significance. The death and life that Good Friday and Easter commemorate are eternally interwoven."

VILLAGE DRAMA.

The Repertory Theatre movement has stimulated an interest in the drama which may have far-reaching results, and one of the most promising signs of the times is the effort being made to brighten the life of the villager and quicken his national consciousness by the performance of historical plays. The Welsh National Drama Society is now preparing to tour in Wales with a portable theatre capable of holding 800, to present plays in English and Welsh for the inhabitants of the rural districts. At Winchelsea the Village Children's Historical Play Society has already done excellent work, and a play entitled "Ludlow Castle," dealing with the times of Sir Philip Sidney, is now being rehearsed. A spirit of friendly rivalry has evidently been aroused in the neighbourhood, for no less than forty-one villages have availed themselves of the opportunity of hiring the costumes and properties used for previous plays at a moderate sum, and the enterprise has the warm support of many well-known people—Mr. Walter Crane, Sir Philip Burne-Jones, Sir William Richmond, Mr. William Poel, and Mr. Cecil Sharp being among the members of the council.

OLD AGE HOMES IN AUSTRIA AND DENMARK.

Mrs. Bruce Glasier, drawing attention to a book by Miss Edith Sellers on "Foreign Solutions of Poor Law Problems," in the Labour Woman, gives a glowing account of the Old Age Homes in Vienna and Copenhagen, reserved for men and women who have established an honest claim on the community after a life of hard work. In both countries these veterans of labour are happily quite ignorant of that feeling of shame which is so painfully evident among the inmates of our own work-houses; their rooms are comfortably and prettily furnished; their meals are of the best quality and beautifully cooked; they live surrounded by lovely gardens, and they have a few pence every week for pocket money, which they often supplement by what they can earn by knitting, sewing, or housework. "The finest Old Age Home in the world is in Vienna, sharing the prettiest suburb with the Emperor's Palace and his Zoological Garden"; the full cost per head for sick and hale, officials' salaries and inmates' pocket-money included, with 5d. for interest on the capital expenditure, is only 1s. 5½d. a day. "The average cost in London in our hideous, prison-disciplined Bastilles where the worn-out workers just wait wearily for death is 2s." At Copenhagen "the old men keep their votes as all their rights—even to marry—and are keen politicians. The rival parties supply them with newspapers, and send carriages to take them to the polling booths."

THE TYRANNY OF ALCOHOL.

Sir Harry Johnston contributes a vigorous article on "The Tyranny of Alcohol" to the Nineteenth Century for April in which temperance reformers will find much useful information. Sir Harry Johnston was himself, to use his own expression, "born to be a teetotaler," as wine and stronger drinks have always had the most deleterious effects upon his health whenever he has partaken of them. He knows "by a ramification of inquiries that in this direction, so far from standing alone, he is a type of at least a million or two of men and women in the British Islands, and a greater number still in North America," and he gives it as his opinion that "the Anglo-Saxon race of man has been evolving in the direction which makes alcohol more and more poisonous to the constitution." It is possible that the people of Russia, Germany, Scandinavia, France, Spain and Italy can eliminate alcoholic poisoning better than the English-speaking people, but in regard to the three last named and Portugal it must be remembered that the wines drunk there are unfortified, and that a great deal of water is drunk as well as wine in the daily round of life. Nevertheless, the ravages of alcohol are spreading terribly, and Dr. Legrain, one of the leading French experts in mind-disease, plainly says that "there is no means of general safety of greater value than the entire prohibition of the liquor traffic. United efforts are justly directed against such poisons as lead and phosphorus, substances far less dangerous, with a view to their prohibition. With far more reason should similar efforts be put forth against alcohol."

A COLLEGE FOR WORKING WOMEN.

The first residential college for working women will soon be opened at Cheshunt in Hertfordshire. Here women will have an opportunity of equipping themselves for their manifold duties, domestic and public, by the study of history, literature, domestic economy, hygiene, care of children, gardening, poultry-keeping, and other subjects of a practical and useful nature. The course will occupy a year, though students will be welcomed for shorter periods, and the life will be a simple, healthy one, regular time being given to physical exercise and games. The cost for residence and teaching for a year for each student will be £40. It is hoped that employers of labour and Women's Guilds and societies may provide bursaries of this amount for individual students. In the meantime, the Labour Woman urges all working women to accustom themselves to the idea of going to college, and prepare to sacrifice one year's wages for what will be a boon to them for the rest of their life.

OUR CHESS COLUMN.

SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED

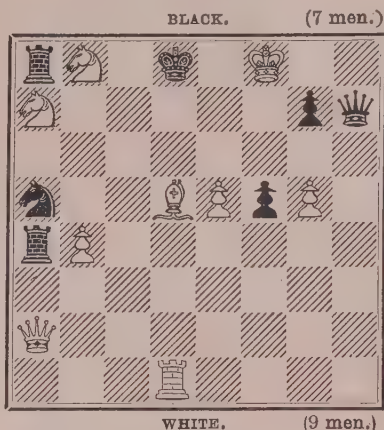

By PHILIP H. WILLIAMS, F.C.A.

APRIL 11, 1914.

All communications for this department must be addressed to the office of THE INQUIRER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., marked "Chess." Criticisms and solutions will be acknowledged, and should be received the Saturday following publication.

PROBLEM No. 52.

By A. C. CHALLENGER.

White to play and mate in two moves.

SOLUTION of No. 50.

1. B. Kt 8 (Author's key-move)
but cooked by 1. R. Kt 7 or 8.

Correct solutions have been received from F. S. M. (Mayfield), Dr. Higginson, Rev. B. C. Constable, R. B. D. (Edinburgh), W. E. Arkell, Rev. I. Wrigley, A. S. Rodgers, E. Wright (and probably others, but the column has to be passed for press unusually early this week).

Our No. 52 is quoted from a book published in Paris by Mr. A. C. White, the distinguished authority on problems. It is a collection of what he calls "Tours de force" on the chess-board. It will be found that the white bishop is forced to every possible square in order to shut out the attack of the black forces, and according to the latter's play. When such tasks are attempted, there is frequently some little difficulty in securing a good key. In this case, the first move is by no means difficult to find, but the constructional complications are well managed, and the variety secured is quite remarkable. It is a well-known fact that to appreciate a problem to the full, it is not enough merely to discover the key. There are always other points which merit study, and call for praise. Many of these feats of construction do not permit of much point in the key-move, whereas in others, the key may be excessively hard to find, and, when found, the rest may be of small account. It is only the splendid minority which comprise merit in every particular. In other words, it is by no means fair to stigmatise a composition simply because it is easy to solve. The composer frequently has to deal with difficulties of construction which preclude the arrangement of an elusive first move. It is only a careful analysis on the solver's part which will clearly elucidate the nice points of adroit construction. Problems have even won prizes, though the initial move is admittedly very weak. Yet they have been honoured for other reasons, such as purity, sacrificial play, variety, and so on.

Board and Residence, &c.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS, LANCs.—Miss ALICE E. PASSAVANT receives Paying Guests at 2, Newlands. Terms on application.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh-street, Tavistock-square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

BRIGHTON AND HOVE.—Summer School and Holiday Recreative Party (3rd year) will be held in a mansion standing in beautifully wooded grounds, approached by Lodge entrance and carriage drive, through an avenue of trees. Centrally and charmingly situated near sea.—Prospectus from Mr. and Mrs. MASSINGHAM, Food Reform Guest House 17, Norfolk-terrace, Brighton.

19th CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable at any time on short notice.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

WHAT ARE WE?

A Question never yet Answered by Christian Scientists

PRICE 1d., Post Free.

From the Author,

EDWARD A. SUTTON, 4, South Cliff, Eastbourne.

"A Masterpiece of Brevity and Clearness."

FREE! 200 PATTERNS genuine Irish Linen Fabric—"FLAXELLA"—new silky finish, beautiful for skirts and blouses. Delightful new shades, washable, durable, drapes exceptionally well.—Write to-day, HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

HANDKERCHIEFS FROM IRELAND. Ladies' fine All-Linen hem-stitched Handkerchiefs. Size 12½ by 13 inches. 3/- per dozen; narrow hem. Postage 3d. Send for Free Catalogue. Catch the next post.—HUTTON'S, 5, Larne, Ireland.

OLD ARTIFICIAL TEETH BOUGHT

